POST ISLAND CELEBRATES

Annual Illumination and Sports

Prizes for Boys and Girls

The annual illumination and float night under the auspices of the Post Island Improvement association was held Saturday evening and Labor Day and was the most successful of any similar celebrations held at this popular summer resort.

The celebration commenced Saturday evening which was float night. The cottages along the shore front were gaily decorated with bunting and Japanese lanterns, the whole shore front being one long row of bright color.

Soon after dark the yachts, belonging to the Post Island Yacht club began to put on their holiday dress of many Japanese lanterns for the parade. There were three lines of yachts in the parade, each being drawn by a motor boat. This parade viewed from the shore made a pretty sight. Up and down in front of Post Island went the three lines of decorated yachts passing and repassing in such a manner as to make almost an endless stream,

After the parade the ladies served light refreshments on the lawns in front of the cottages.

The prize for the best decorated motor boat and the best line was awarded to J. L. MacLary.

Second, Clinton B. Nash. The prize for the best decorated yacht went to F. W. Nightingale, whose yacht was decorated to represent an old windmill. The second prize went to Arthur Garrod, the third to John Harpan, fourth to Mr. Kimball whose yacht represented Boston light, and the fifth to James Shriber.

The celebration was continued on the holiday when there was a series of field and water sports that consumed the greater part of the day. Not the least of these sports was a game of base ball between nines representing the Post Island cottagers and a nine representing the Adams Shore residents. The Post Island boys won by a score of 8 to 6. The result of the other sports was as follows:

50 yards swim for girls, won by Mildred Vanpel, Elizabeth Shriber, second Ladies 100 yard swim won by Pauline Shriber, Mildred Vanpel, second.

50 yards dash for gils, won by Milded Vanpel, Elizabeth Shriber, second.

100 yards dash for boys, won by John Vanpel, Philip Nichols, second.

Valuable prizes were given for each event, fully $100 being contributed by the summer cottagers for this purpose. In addition to the annual float night and Labor Day sports everybody kept open house and there was hardly a cottager along the shore front but did not entertain parties.

The celebration was in charge of the Post Island Improvement Association, of which Edwin S. Bennett is chairman and J. L. MacLeary, secretary.

ANNUAL FEAST OF THE ELKS

Go to Elcock Grove For Their Clambake and Good Time

The annual clam-feast of Quincy lodge of Elks was held Sunday at Elcock's grove, Braintree, and as anticipated proved to be one good time. The clam feast was served under the direction of Mike Shea, which in itself is a sufficient guarantee of its quality. The party left Quincy in the early forenoon in special cars and on their arrival at the grove had hot clam chowder which served to stand by the party until the bake was served. The bake itself came later in the day, the menu including all of the things usually found in a genuine Rhode Island bake. That it was good was evident from the way the party made it disappear. Before and after dinner there was a series of field sports. The party returned to Quincy in the late afternoon.

ARRESTED IN MAINE

Second Offense of Domestic for Larceny in Quincy

Chief of Police Burrell and Inspector Goodhue arrived back Monday night from Rockland, Me.; having in custody Matilda Halme, the domestic who was arrested in that city for the Quincy police by whom she was wanted for the larceny of a diamond ring and other jewelry from Mrs. E. C. Ranagan of Billings road. The girl readily agreed to accompany the officers back to Quincy without the formality of requisition papers. She was arraigned in court this morning and the case continued until Wednesday morning for hearing.

The girl first came into prominence early in the spring when she was arrested at a house on Clark street for the larceny of clothing to the value of $200 from Mrs. Edward J. Murphy of Russell Park.

It is alleged by the police that the girl later entered the employ of Mrs. E. B. Ranagan at Norfolk Downs where she stole a diamond ring and other jewelry. It is also alleged that she stole a set of furs from another woman by whom she had been employed.

Inspector Goodhue has been trailing the girl for several weeks and finally located her at Thomaston, Me. From there she went to Vinelhaven, Me., and suspecting that she was headed for Rockland, Me., the police of that city were notified to be on the lookout for her. True enough she showed up in Rockland, Me., and her arrest followed.

CHIMNEY SMOKED.

The alarm from Box 39 at 9.50 this morning was for a smoking chimney of a house at 64 Trafford street. There are several families occupying the house and this morning one of the families started a fire in the cook stove which had not been in use for some weeks. The result was that the chimney smoked so bad that it was thought there was a fire in progress. The firemen however were unable to find any fire save that in the stove.

KILLED BY AUTO ACCIDENT

Two Quincy Girls in Maine Party

Loretta M. Lowe the Victim

The body of Miss Loretta M. Lowe who was killed in an automobile accident at Camden, Me., Saturday, arrived in Quincy late Monday evening. Miss Mabel Tripp, who was with her was injured and is now at her home in Wollaston, suffering from a broken wrist and other bruises.

A coroners jury exonerated W. J. Neal of Philadelphia, the chauffeur of the wrecked machine, by a vote of 4 to 2 after testimony showed that the machine was travelling between 30 and 35 miles an hour, and after his employer, Mrs. Mayo of Springfield, Mass. appeared in behalf of his family.

The verdict read "accidental death" and no further action is likely to be taken.

The accident occurred on Ogiers hill, while the party of four were enjoying themselves between the hours off duty. Mrs. Mayo, had placed the machine at their disposal and the trip had been prolonged until speed was necessary in order to return to the Rockland hotel for the girls to report for duty where they were employed as waitresses.

Reaching the top of the hill, with the car travelling between 30 and 35 miles an hour they came suddenly upon a pool of water left by the heavy storm of the morning. Chauffeur Neal altered his course so as to avoid the pool.

The machine skidded almost at right angles and struck a grassy banking on the edge of the road. It turned a complete somersault and landed about 30 feet from the point from where the course had been altered.

The four occupants lay in the debris which was scattered about for a wide area. Miss Lowe never moved from the position she landed in.

The coroner was summoned and he found her head had been crushed in. He immediately empanel a jury to sit and determine the cause of the accident.

Miss Lowe was the oldest daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Edward H. Lowe of 495 Washington street. She was 24 years of age and was born in Quincy. She attended the Washington school and was graduated from the Woodward Institute in 1906. Since that time she has had charge of the store of her father at the corner of North street.

Early this spring, Miss Lowe, desiring a few months outing, secured employment as a waitress in a Rockland Hotel. While there she gained many friends, among them Mrs. Mayo, who quite often placed her automobile at her disposal.

After the opening of the public bath house at Quincy Point Miss Lowe took to swimming and soon after was in the fore of local swimmers, but a few of the male swimmers being able to out-distance her. Of charming personality and a happy disposition Miss Lowe gathered friends to her side wherever she went and many Quincy young men and girls expressed sadness when the news of her sudden death was received.

This morning Miss Tripp had the break in her wrist reset at the Quincy City Hospital and an examination showed that she had escaped from more serious injuries. She is the daughter of Mrs. George B. Tripp of Wollaston and is well known in that ward.

Chauffeur Neil received minor cuts and bruises and was able to give his version of the accident before the coroner's jury. He confessed to having had two drinks o fwhiskey before starting the ride and to having drank beer while in Camden. He is married and is the father of three children.

Two of the jurymen held out against a verdict of accidental death, believing that he was guilty of criminal carelessness.

The car was built by Mr. Mayo late husband of the owner and was high powered. Chauffeur Neal was thoroughly familar with the machine and has been in the employ of Mrs. Mayo for nine years.

Saves a Drowning Man an Also His Friend

Dr. Isaih W. Sneath, pastor of the Wollaston Congregational church, and his wife will return this week from their vacation at Mountain View farm, Lakeport, N. H. Dr. Sneath rescued a young man from drowning in Lake Winnepesaukee. George Brenan of Chelsea, not being an expert swimmer, attempted to dive and lost control. On the float at the time were Dr. Sneath and Frank Ritterhaus of Chelset, Brennans friend. OPENING OF THE SCHOOLS

Large Attendance at High and Woodward

Other Schools Crowded

The public schools of the city opened today after the long summer vacation and the school army of upwards of 6,000 0trugged along towards school with well browned faces. While it is impossible at the present time to tell just what the conditions of the schools will be, the indications this morning were that several of the buildings would be crowde.

At the Woodward Institute the entering class this morning numbered between 50 and 60 and the total attendance was 193. As there are but 192 seats provided in the building, coupled with the fact that many of the older pupils have not as yet returned from their vacations, it will be seen that many additional seats

The government still refuses to permit the shipment of arms and ammunition to the Mexican rebels and New York's belligerent governors.

There is a general feeling among the drummers that those Bibles that the Gideons are placing in the hotel rooms won't help them sell any more goods.

If a ball team will only win every game, it can be sure of cordial support from the crowd on the home bleachers.

Now that the children will soon be fitted up with new school suits and shoes, there will be some satisfaction in rolling in the dirt.

There doesn't seem to be any reason why the city of Sherbrooke, P. Q. should erect a triumphal arch in honor of their visitor, Harry Thaw.

In spite of the demand that popular heroes be commemorated by suitable memorials, no movement has yet been made to place a statue of Walter Johnson on the streets of Washington.

In view of the fact that Thaw certainly ought to go back to New York, it is not likely that the lawyers will let him do so.

GO TO SCHOOL OR WORK.

In the talk about the new employment of minors law and its tendency to throw out of employment a large number of children between the ages of fourteen and sixteen years, the general impression seems to prevail that those unemployed boys and girls may become loafers if they please.

As a matter of fact, the law specifically states that they must either work or go to school. It is not left for them to go to school of they please, or if their parents compel them, or to roam the streets if they please, or worse.

In the complexities of the law, and in the absence of easy access to its phraseology, it is not strange that the provision has been overlooked. But in Section One, the provision is made, not only that every child under sixteen who can not meet the educational test as to reading and writing, but that every child under sixteen who "is not engaged in some regular employment or business for at least six hours per day, or has not the written permission of the superintendent of schools of the city or town in which he resides to engage in profitable employment at home, shall attend a public day school in said city or town or some other day school approved by the school committee, during the entire time the public schools are in session." The exception is made of children not physically or mentally fit and of those who are being otherwise instructed in a manner approved in advance by the superintendent of schools.

The age under which a child not conforming to the school law is rated a truant has been raised to sixteen,—so that hereafter a child between seven and sixteen found wandering about in the streets or public places, having no lawful occupation, habitually not attending school and growing up in idleness and ignorance, becomes a subject for the application of the truant law.

Any tendency on the part of those children between the ages of fourteen and sixteen who have been forced back into school by the new law, to misbehave will put them into the class of school offenders, with the danger of being committed to a county training school.

So nothing remains optional in the case of the former workers under sixteen who get forced out of employment. They must either work or go to school, and if they choose to go to the public schools, the authorities must make place for them.

It may be well to state in this connection that the phrase profitable employment, in connection with home work, has no reference to work valuable in itself, like helping with the housework, but to work done for regular wages.—New Bedford Standard.

MAKES PLEA FOR NATIONAL UNITY

Haldane's Speech Before American Bar Association

IS CONSIDERED EPOCH-MAKING

Deals With Relationships of Three Great Nations Whose Policies May Yet Be Governed by Public Opinion—Possible to Establish True Unison Between Sovereign States

Montreal, Sept. 2.—The address delivered by the lord high chancellor of England, Viscount Haldane of Cloan, formed the principal feature of the opening meeting of the American Bar association.

Haldane had an audience which completely filled the Princess theatre, and which included many of the great legal lights of the western continent and several from Europe. His theme was "Higher Nationality—A Study in Law and Ethics."

It was in many ways an epoch-making speech, dealing as it did with the relationships of three great nationalities.

Haldane told how British law in the early days was largely vested in the sovereign of the realm who had associated with him the lord high chancellor as the executive of the king's justice. That ancient law was based upon experience rather than logic, he said, and this fact had influenced the law and the constitutions of the three great nations, England, France and America.

The speaker argued that the great force that actuated mankind in observing the law was not fear of the officers of justice, but fear of public opinion, and that therefore, public opinion tended more than the arbitrary execution of justice to restrain men from law breaking.

Developing this argument, Haldane proceeded to suggest that the same policy might possibly be adopted by nations and that the time had come when nations might be as much ashamed to follow the ancient methods of settling differences and disputes as individuals had become in late years.

"Canada and Great Britain on the one hand and the United States on the other, with their common language, their common interests and their common ends, form something resembling a single society," said the lord chancellor. "If there be such a society it may develop within itself a foundation for intenational faith of a kind that is new in the history of the world.

"Without interfering with the freedom of action of these great countries," continued the lord chancellor, "or the independence of their constitutions, it may be possible to establish a true unison between sovereign states.

"This union will doubtless, if it ever comes into complete being, have its witness in treaties and written agreements. But such documents can never in themselves constitute it. Its substance, if it is to be realized, must be sought for deeper down in an an intimate social life."

The English visitor urged lawyers to assist in the freshening of the conventional atmosphere which surrounds men in public life by omitting no opportunity to think rightfully and to contribute to the fashioning of a more hopeful and resolute kind of public opinion.

OLD MAN'S LONG FAST

Pennsylvanian, at 95, Has Eaten Nothing For Fifty-Two Days

Harrisburg, Sept. 2.—Animated by no desire for notoriety, but merely preferring not to eat, William Beidleman of this city, up to today, had eaten nothing except two small bits of toasted bread for fifty-two days. He gives no signs of intending to break his fast.

When abstaining from food Beidleman has drunk quantities of ice water. Today he is 95 years 9 months and 7 days old.

Beidleman is the grandfather of State Senator Beidleman of this city. The death of a sister-in-law grieved him deeply, and his fast dates from that. He seems to suffer no ill effects.

No Autos For Secretary Wilson

Washington, Sept. 2.—Secretary Wilson will not get a limousine and an electric runabout from congress. The house sub-committee, handling appropriations for the department of labor, cut out automobiles and provided horses.

GUESTS ARE LOSERS

Servant In Roosevelt Home Gets Away With Valuables

Oyster Bay, N. Y., Sept. 2.—Theodore Roosevelt's guests at Sagamore Hill suffered more loss than their host and his family, is the belief of the squads of detectives seeking to find the unrecovered part of the loot taken by a thief who carried off, among other things, a fob which was one of the owner's most highly prized possessions.

The gold fob, worth $1600 and bearing the Roosevelt coat of arms, is the most eagerly sought of the missing articles. The fob had been in the possession of the Roosevelt family so long that its early history is not obtainable.

Under arrest, charged with grand larceny, George R. Parker, a negro who had been employed as a handy man around the Roosevelt residence, was lodged in the Nassau county jail. There he will remain until his case is presented to the grand jury.

AMERICAN YACHTS OUTDRIFT GERMAN

Marblehead, Mass., Sept. 2.—All three of the American yachts crossed the finish line ahead of their three German competitors in the first of the international sonderklasse races here.

Most of the yachting sharps had picked the American yacht Ellen as the best drifter in the fleet, with the Wittelsbach as the German boat most to be feared in very light airs.

It was the Cima, least fancied of any of the American defenders, that showed the way home, and the Wittelsbach brought up in the rear.

The Cima was followed by the Sprig, which nosed out the Ellen at the finish line, winning by less than one second. The three German boats, the Angela, the Serum and the Wittelsbach followed the Americans across the finish line in the order named.

LABOR DAY AT BOSTON

Ten Thousand Union Toilers Take Part In Parade

Boston, Sept. 2.—Labor's hosts, favored by smiling skies, turned out 10,000 strong in the big parade that formed the principal feature of yesterday's celebration, and half a million Bostonians cheered them as they marched.

During the afternoon many athletic events scheduled in and about Boston were run off under conditions that enabled the contestants to put forth their best efforts.

River regattas, carnivals and fairs furnished added attractions, and trips to seaside or country were even more enjoyable than they would have been in mid-summer.

In the evening an elaborate display of fireworks on the common attracted thousands.

SHRINERS AT BIG CANAL

Goat Assists 170 Candidates Across the Burning Sands

Panama, Sept. 2.—An initiation ceremony was conducted on the upper lock of the canal at Miraflores under the auspices of the visiting Shriners of Osman temple, St. Paul.

It was the most elaborate affair of the kind ever seen on the isthmus. A complete temple setting was arranged in the lock chamber and 170 local candidates were made "to cross the burning sands."

The weather was perfect. Following the ceremony a bronze tablet in commemoration of the event was placed on the wall.

The Shriners were entertained at a banquet last night at Colon and left for home today.

CHAMPIONSHIP TO PHELAN

Defeats Kingsbury in Run at Hebrew Picnic

Fay Phelan, settled for time being, his claim to the 440 yard championship of Quincy by defeating Fred Kingsbury at the Young Men's Hebrew Association picnic at New Downer Landing on the holiday. The race was witnessed by 2,000 people.

Kingsbury took the gun and Phelan trailed two yards behind until about 20 yards from the finish when he closed up the gap and finished a good two yards to the good. The race was prettily run on the part of both men, Phelan showing the better judgment and apparently winning without much exertion.

Another attraction was the Fore River Apprentice defeat of the Colonials in which strong hitting and fielding brought the Apprentices from behind and gave them a 6 to 4 victory.

Dancing was enjoyed in the pavilion and music was by Wilson's orchestra. The summary of the sports:

100 yd. dash—won by R. Prout, F. S. Donahue, second. Time 10 2-5s.

CLAMBAKE OF THE EAGLES

Base Ball and Other Sports and Addresses

John Adams Aerie of Eagles held their annual clambake at Squantum, Labor Day and maintained their high standard for entertainment. The gathering was large and the day was passed in a series of athletic sports and ball games in which all of the members participated.

A general invitation had been extended to all political candidates to attend and Councilman Frank J. Duffy, vice president, presided. Speeches were delivered by Deputy Worthy Grand President, Bernard Duffy of Hyde Park, David I. Murray of Hyde Park, Louis L. F. Langelier and Michael T. Sullivan, both of Quincy.

The officers read their annual statement which showed a large increase in membership, a small disbursement of funds and a large financial balance. The triumps of the Aerie during the year and a resume of the contests with an exhibition of flags and cups won was one of the pleasantest parts of the day.

The bake was prepared by B. J. Walsh and Thomas Kilroy of Bristol, R. I., both members of the Providence Aerie, and they repeated their success of a year ago when they made their bake debut in Quincy.

In the base ball game the married men defeated the single men 5 to 9, although it was ages sinces some of the oaters had swung a hickory. The Riveters beat the Holders On 8 to 0, for the championship of that department at the Fore River yard, and the degree staff won a three cornered quoit tournament from the officers and entertainment committee.

Worthy President John J. Feeley and Past Worthy President James J. Mellen were in charge of the grounds. The committee in charge of the outing was William McEwan, Phillips Pitts, Thomas Sloane, O. Show, W. Child, Andrew Boyle, Angus McArthur and William Allen.

COUNTRY FAIR.

A mass meeting of the members and friends of the Wollaston Unitarian church will be held in the vestry on Wednesday evening, at 7.30, to make final arrangements for the Wollaston Country week.

The Country Fair will be held upon the grounds of the church, Friday and Saturday Sept. 11 and 12, afternoon and evening promises to be a notable event. There is nothing more enjoyable or instructive than a country fair, especially with Frederick H. Bishop as chairman, and Arthur Rohn as manager of exhibits. There will be a fine display of flowers, fruits, vegetables, poultry, arts and crafts, assorted candies, fancy articles, delicatessen, preserves, ice cream and other things too numerous to mention.

HARSH NOISES.

The automobile writer of the New Bedford Standard aells attention to the law of the commonwealth which says that no automobile horn shall be sounded in the thickly settled parts of a community in such a way as to make a harsh noise. If any one hears much of anything else hereabouts he is lucky. The increase of "harsh," and still harsher, noises on automobiles has been something fierce this season. A real auto horn is becoming a thing of the past.

In New Bedford a demand has been made to have these discordant noises checked on the ground that they are a menace rather than a help to the public in keeping from under the machines, because they make such a babel of sound. This is the only country where such a variety of sounds is permitted.

Mayor Ashley of New Bedford is asked to see that some uniform alarm is used by automobiles, but he does not seem to have power to designate the kind of noise, only to direct the police to prohibit "unnecessarily harsh noises." The Standard says much of the noise in that city is occasioned by drivers seeking to outstrip each other in excess of noise.—Salem News.

CLUB ROOMS ENTERED.

The rooms of the Granite City club on the top floor of the Savings Bank building were entered between Sunday afternoon and Monday morning and the cigar drawers burst open and what cigars and money they contained was carried off. The burglars gained entrance by climbing over the partition between the corridor and the kitchen. Once inside they had free run of the rooms. One box of cigars of a special shape and band was not taken as the parties evidently thought possession of this cigar might lead to their capture. They vented their spite however by throwing them about the rooms. Just what the value of the money and cigars taken was is not known, but it is not thought to have been very large.

LEG FOR THE YARITA.

The second race in the series for the cup offered by John L. Ayer was sailed Saturday off the Quincy Yacht clubhouse over a nine mile course. The course was a triangular one giving the boats two runs, two reaches, two heats. The race was won by the Yarita, owned and sailed by a son of the donor of the cup. The Yarita finished in fourth position on alapsed time but corrected timt gave her the race. The first race was won by the Hush sailed by John Kitson and an exciting race is assured for the third race in the series.

SUMNER STREET RAID.

Inspector Goodhue and Officer Dhooge raided the house at 129 Sumner street at 2 o'clock Sunday morning and arrested five men on the charge of gaming on the Lord's Day. The men arrested gave the following names: James DiFrancis, Saverio Centi, Luigi Sanzi, Nicola Lidbech and Lorenzo Arquiria. They were bailed later in the morning and were arraigned in court this morning.

ANOTHER CASE.

One new case of infantile paralysis in Atlantic, bringing the total number of cases to six, was reported to the Board of Health this morning. Although the board has been conducting an investigation it has not as yet been able to determine the carrier. As far as is known the quarantine recommended by the board is being rigidly observed and the patients have been isolated. This morning a persistent rumor mentions a flagrant violation of the quarantine by a family which is affected but as yet no foundation for the report has been found.

AUTOMOBILE TAKES FIRE

Fire Department Summoned to Independence Avenue

The alarm from Box 332 at 10.25 Labor Day morning was for a fire in the automobile of John Ford at the corner of Bennington street and Independence avenue. Mr. Ford had just received his car from the garage where he had laid out $100 in repairs, and was at work on the car preparatory to going for a ride when it burst into flames. The Central station apparatus was summoned by telephone, but before they arrived an alarm was sounded. The firemen hauled the car into the street and extinguished the flames. The body of the car was badly burned and it will probably cost another $100 to put it in shape again. The car however was insured.

HOLIDAY AT THEATRE.

Labor Day's attendance of patrons at both afternoon and evening performances was a magnificent tribute to the popularity of Kincaide's beautiful Theatre, and to the Gorman's Musical Company of pleasing refined artists in the Musical Farce entitled, "The Refining of Father."

A bevy of handsome young ladies in beautiful dances and frivolitying with popular songs, assisted ably by the male members of the company in the Refining of Father, and from the many puzzling situations and predicaments, the "Father" kept himself and also the household was a great source of merriment and applause for those in attendance, who kept up a continual uproar of applause and laughter, until the final explanations, which brought the company and "Father" out of chaos and put the last touches of refinement on """Father."

It is strong evidence from the large enthusiastic houses Labor Day that the Gorman Musical Company have made their appearance a successful one, and from now on until their engagement is closed, large audiences will be in attendance, and why not, as the entire show is laughable from a comedy standpoint, and enjoyable for its musical and speciality of individual participants.

GAME WITH MANY RUNS

In the second game of the series the South Quincy beat the Braintree A. A. on the Old Colony grounds Labor Day morning, 11 to 10. The game was listless and most of the players acted as though they were on a holiday picnic, caring neither for friend nor foe. The spectators, few in number watched the game until several of the Southies left to go to Winthrop where they were scheduled to play with another team. Duggan was obliged to leave early and Gillis finished the mound work. The Southies secured 14 hits and made three errors, against eight hits and six errors for the visitors.

The score by innings:

ORIENTS WIN FROM RED MEN

For three solid hours the Orients and the Redmen A. C. slowly struggled for the amateur championship of the city on the Ward Three playground on the holiday and the Orients defended their title, 9 to 7.

The largest crowd of spectators that have appeared this season were on hand and from the sixth innings on they hugged the base line in the old fashioned way of trying to rattle the pitchers. Bradley and Carlson both maintained their grip on the situation and at the time the fans realized that their efforts had been fruitless.

Carlson, started out to take plenty of time between deliveries and Bradley followed suit. This give and take way prevailed and with the long wait for balls that went across to private property the game stretched to a period long enough for a double header.

Beyond all doubt, Ciardi, the Orients short, played the best ball. He secured five putouts, many of them of the difficult order, and he and "Tiz" Carlson divided the honors for making the prettiest catch. Ciardi chased one into the left field territory and retired the Red Men at a critical moment; and "Tiz" Carlson netted a high fly in back of third that had all the sensational elements, and likewise retired the Orients when runs were staring him in the face.

Carlson came across with 10 strike outs, two more than Bradley secured and he passed two men while Bradley issued no walks. None of the Reds hit Bradley for extra bases, while Ciardi and Bradley doubled, and Bull Moose" Brown tripled on Carlson.

Bradley, aside from pitching good ball, swung his wagon tongue with marked effect and dumped two sacrifices into the infield that advanced his runners. He opened up a short dump for a pretty squeeze play which in reality loosened the spirits of the Orients and from then out, nothing could stop them.

The game was played with the usual base ball rivalry evident and for a few moments it looked as though some of the boys would mix up after the game, but the cooler judgment of older heads prevailed and all left the field arm in arm.

CAMBRIDGE MUST PRODUCE SWIMMERS

Mayor's Edict to Policemen and Public School Children

Boston, Sept. 2.—Every policeman in Cambridge, as well as every child in a public school, must learn to swim, according to an edict of Mayor Barry.

The Y. M. C. A. swimming tank will be used for the lessons, and the Massachusetts Humane society will supply an instructor. Barry said:

"Swimming is becoming one of the leading sports. It is a healthful exercise, and with a knowledge of swimming I am sure there will be fewer drownings in Cambridge. We are going to begin by having the policemen take a swimming lesson at least once a week."

Thought Policeman a Robber

Sacramento, Cal., Sept 2.—Motorcycle Policeman Brown chased a couple on another motorcycle eighteen miles. When Brown overtook them and began a lecture on the evils of speeding, the man pulled out a pad and wrote: "We are deaf mutes, and thought you were a robber."

Broker Robbed as He Sleeps

Hyannis, Mass., Sept. 2.—Burglars broke into the home of James B. Wainwright, a New York broker, at Craigville, and stole $6000 in jewelry and money. Although $600 in cash was taken from under Wainwright's pillow, he did not awake.

IRIS WON BY A SECOND

Hush Defeats the Gleamer in Class C---Cinderella Wins

A race for class D, C and F of the Quincy Yacht club was sailed off the clubhouse Saturday afternoon in a stiff southwest breeze. All of the old rivals were entered in class D and it looked for a time as if the Dartwell would add another win to her long list of firsts this year. She did finish first one second separating her from the Iris, the second boat in. Corrected time however placed the Dartwell in third position and gave the race to the Iris by one second over the Clara.

In class C the Gleamer which has captured about everything this season in her class was defeated by the Hush by a lead of 34 seconds corrected time. The Cinderella won in class F.

POINTS THE WAY

The Statement of This Wollaston Resident Will Interest Our Readers.

Our neighboring town, Wollaston points the way in the words of one of its most respected residents:

A. T. Preston, 33 Park street, Wollaston, Mass., says: "Jumping on and off a wagon a good deal weakened my back and caused kidney trouble. Some years ago I had to give up that business and was in pretty bad shape. The kidney secretions were discolored and caused much pain in passage. I tried remedy after remedy, but got no relief. I was discouraged; suffered awfully at times and did not know what to do. Finally, I read in the Quincy paper an advertisement for Doan's Kidney Pills, telling of what they had done for a man I knew. I got a box and began taking them. I noticed a change at once. The passages of the kidney secretions became less frequent at night and caused less pain. I passed two gravel stones; one of them as large as a pea. I kept on taking Doan's Kidney Pills and I can now sleep better at night and am improved in every way."

For sale by all dealers. Price 50 cents. Foster-Milburn Co., Buffalo, New York sole agents for the United States.

THOMAS GAMMON, Superintendent.

WHAT PAULINE LEARNED

She Was an Apt Pupil

By CLARISSA MACKIE

Waving aside an obsequious attendant Pauline Fenn passed between rows of glass inclosed desks to her father's private office. She tapped before opening the heavy door and found him sitting in grave meditation before a wood fire on the hearth.

He turned his head as his youngest daughter entered and sat down in the opposite chair.

"I've done it at last, father," she said, rather breathlessly.

"Done what?" he asked in a startled tone.

"Broken my engagement to Roger."

"My dear!" He jumped up and paced the floor thoughtfully, now and then

HE VOWED REVENGE WHEN SHE SHOULD BECOME HIS COUNTESS.

his keen eyes searching her young face. "Are you wise?"

"It is best."

"I thought you were fond of Roger—loved him, in fact."

"I—I did." She was speaking nervously now. "But you know he is in no position to marry now; the doctor has ordered him to go west and live in the open for five years, otherwise he predicts a total nervous breakdown. I had a note from him this morning. He has sold his seat on the exchange and is going to buy a ranch in Montana. He wanted me to marry him at once and go with him."

"And you have seen him?"

"I went to his office. I told him what you said—that if he must give up business, why, you would back him with money to any extent and when we were married we could live in the same style to which I am accustomed. I could go with the same people and enjoy the same amusements of my set. I simply couldn't give up all those things and sort of grub along, now, could I, father?"

He frowned thoughtfully.

"I thought you could, Polly, but it seems I am mistaken. Roger Dale went into Wall street when he was nineteen. For fifteen years he has worked like a steam engine, but the engine has been overworked; it is a fine piece of mechanism, and if it continues to work without rest and repair, why, it will go snap some day and one of the cleanest and squarest men I know will spend the remainder of his days in the madhouse."

"Father!"

"Ah! That is the plain truth. I had Roger here yesterday and offered to do anything for him that money and friendship can do; he was engaged to my daughter and I wanted to help him for that reason, as well as because I admire his pluck. He refused point blank to accept any help. Said the sale of his exchange seat would set him up on a paying sheep ranch in the west, and he also declared that he had an old fashioned notion that he wanted to provide a home for his wife with his own hands."

Pauline was silent for a moment. Her cheeks were burning now.

"But mother would be broken hearted if I married Roger now and went on to a ranch. It is a primitive life at the best, and I would be shut out of the society of my friends, and the other girls would be so mortified. They have married so well, you know. Mother never did approve of my engagement to Roger," she explained hurriedly.

"No, she did not approve of it," he returned coldly. "Your mother and I began life humbly; your mother worked in a millinery store and never had a pair of kid gloves until she was married. Now she has married three of her daughters to penniless but titled foreigners, and the fourth she with holds from an honest American. I should think two countesses and a princess quite enough glory for one plain American family to acquire and quite all I can afford," he added grimly.

"I thought you'd be rather glad," said Pauline uneasily as she arose to go. "Under the circumstances, I wonder if you care if I go abroad with Helen."

"Just as you please, Polly," he said sadly. "All I live for is to make you happy."

When he was alone John Fenn drew his chair to the hearth and gazed long into the fire of apple tree wood. A close observer might have noticed that something very like tears glittered in his fine blue eyes.

* * * * * * * *

Six months afterward Pauline Fenn stood on the steamer at Southampton and watched the passengers coming aboard for the homeward voyage. Her lovely face was a trifle thinner and there was an air of restlessness about her that disconcerted the dark little monkey-like man who stood at her elbow, chattering.

"Mademoiselle, ah, yes, tees a gay scene—like Cherbourg—but England ees what you call tame, dead!"

"Do you think so, count?" murmured Pauline indifferently.

"Ha! There is no country like France, no city like Paris!"

"You have never seen America or New York," said Pauline over her shoulder.

"I go the happiest of men now to interview mademoiselle's papa," grinned the count delightedly, for it was quite true that Pauline's sister, the Countess de Laon, had arranged a match between her beautiful sister and a money hunting little patrician, Count Servan Lagres. Helen was accompanying her sister to New York, and Lagres had taken passage on the same steamer.

She tried not to regret the step she had taken in breaking her engagement, but every hour of her stay abroad had been spent to the accompaniment of burning remorse and useless regret. She had not given her promise to Lagres. She had not even encouraged him, but Helen was pushing the affair in her high handed way, and Pauline was meekly being led. She blushed when she thought of what her father would say when he saw this fourth foreigner presented as a possible son-in-law.

"Mademoiselle is weary. Come and sit down and I will send a cup of tea," twittered the count at her elbow.

"Please go away!" cried Pauline crossly.

Pauline moved slowly along the rail until she could look down upon a little group of second cabin passengers.

Two were separated from the others, a pale, anaemic looking man and a little pink and white roly poly woman. The woman was speaking despairingly.

"George, I don't know 'ow it 'appened; I 'ad the purse sewed tight in my skirt and now it's gone, every shillin' that I've scraped and saved for this goin'!" Her voice broke suddenly and the man's thin hand gripped her shoulder.

"Cheer up, Sally, old girl; maybe Joe 'll 'elp us out; 'e promised to meet us, you know."

One day during the voyage Pauline found them out and heard their story. It was a simple one. They had been engaged for many years. George Marston was butler and Sally was upper housemaid in the same noble family. George's health had deserted him, and a brother in Canada had offered him land on which to build a home and plenty of work if he would come to the northwest.

When Pauline left them they were riotously happy. Her generous pocketbook had replaced the contents of Sally's wallet, and they were to repay her when they could. They were independent.

The remainder of the voyage Pauline went about with shining eyes. Helen could not understand the new mood, and the count broke through his conventionality and proposed outright and was refused.

He proposed again and was refused, and yet again with kindly but monotonous regularity. When they reached quarantine he borrowed funds from Helen and morosely decided to take the next boat home without that important interview with John Fenn.

* * * * * * * *

Roger Gale stood on the veranda of his ranch house and looked away over the slopes where his sheep were crowded, huddled flocks of dusty gray against the green grass. From the flocks and the rippling hills his eyes turned to the winding trail that led from town.

A light buckboard was approaching the ranch, and he saw that while the outfit was his own and one of his men was driving there were two passengers in the rear seat. One was a citified looking man; the other was a girl dressed in blue. Now, Roger Dale was not in the habit of receiving girl visitors, and his interest was quickened at the sight of the newcomers. He stepped into the house to make anxious inquiries of the Chinese cook.

When he passed through his sitting room to the front porch Pauline Fenn was standing there looking at him with wet, wistful eyes.

"Polly!" he cried, with unbelieving eyes.

She nodded. "Roger, I have come. Father came with me. I cannot be happy without you. I want to be a rancher's wife"— She never finished her confession, for Roger's arms were around her and his bronzed cheek was against hers.

"You are sure, sure you won't regret it, love?" he asked over and over again.

And Pauline clung closer to him and whispered softly what George and Sally had awakened in her heart.

"I won't regret anything so long as we are together," she said

MEXICANS NOW STAND UNITED

Wave of Patriotism Is Sweeping Over the Republic

MEN VOLUNTEER FOR SERVICE

Army Division Headquarters Shifted From Interior Points to Coasts and Frontier—Departure of Americans Hampered—Huerta Does Not Believe Story of American Plot

Mexico City, Sept. 2.—That the germs of grave trouble lie in the waves of patriotism now sweeping over Mexico, causing the organization of military companies in all ranks and classes and a general movement toward solidification, even at a sacrifice of partisan principles, is the comment of many Americans here. Anti-American disorders on an extensive scale are feared, especially on Sept. 16, the Mexican Independence day. It is believed the federal government will not long hold the populace in leash, even if it desires to do so.

While Ministers Gamboa and Urrutia have officially denied that the present shifting of army division headquarters from interior points to the coasts and frontier means arrangements to prevent invasion, their protestations have little effect with military experts.

The war department has been asked to furnish military instructions for a dozen cities. Tens of thousands are petitioning to be drilled.

Americans are leaving slowly, principally through an apparently well founded belief that on arrival in Vera Cruz it will be found that there is no available transportation to the United States. Church organizations and business concerns are cabling members of congress, demanding information as to how refugees will be taken home. Many call President Wilson's advice to leave their posts here impracticable.

Several towns are in danger of being thrown into darkness by the closing of American electric plants. The leaving of American engineers will throw the companies into bankruptcy and result in the forfeiture of municipal franchises, it is expected.

John Lind, President Wilson's special representative, will stay at the plantation of a friend, near Tierra Blanca, until tomorrow, when he will return to Vera Cruz.

President Huerta is almost convinced that the report of a conspiracy of Americans to overthrow him is groundless. He has been assured by both Foreign Minister Gamboa and Secretary O'Shaughnessy of the American legation there is nothing in the charges of that nature that have been made, and he has accepted that assurance.

These charges were contained in an unsigned communication which reached Huerta, it is said, through the medium of a Mexican lawyer who is one of the secretaries of Minister of War Blanquet. The lawyer in question is also acting as one of the attorneys for L. R. Willey, who formerly was conspicuous because of his close confidential relations with Ambassador Henry L. Wilson.

MELLEN LOST HEAVILY

Made Adviser to New Management to Get Repaid

New Haven, Sept. 2.—Charles S. Mellen, former president of the New Haven railroad, was offered the position of adviser to the present management at a salary of $30,000 a year for five years, because he had lost a great part of his personal fortune by the decline of the road's stock.

When the directors of the road asked his resignation, he pointed out to them that he had been one of the chief sufferers by the trouble that had afflicted the New Haven. His contract, which is for five years, and the lump sum of $70,000, which he is to receive in addition—$220,000 in all—will partly reimburse him for his losses.

DETECTIVE'S QUEER ACT

Holds Up Five Railroad Men In Real Wild West Fashion

Hartford, Sept. 2.—A bit of wild west near-tragedy was enacted in the railroad yards here when Isadore Broder, a railroad detective, held up five railroad men in a switchman's shanty.

When all had their hands uplifted, palms outward, he began firing. Of five bullets two wounded J. J. Donlin and F. B. West.

Broder backed out and officers later arrested him. He was held in heavy bonds for the superior court. Donlin and West were able to appear in court with their arms in slings. Broder has not explained his action.

CHAPTER XI.

Other Relations.

It is but natural to presume after the foregoing that the affairs of the Medcrofts were under close and careful scrutiny from that confidential hour. The Odell-Carneys were conspicuously nice and agreeable to the Medcrofts and Miss Fowler. It may be said indeed that Mr. Odell-Carney went considerably out of his way to be agreeable to Mrs. Medcroft—so much so, in fact, that she made it a point to have some one else with her whenever she seemed likely to be left alone with him. The Rodneys struggled bravely and no doubt conscientiously to emulate the example set by the Odell-Carneys, but it was hardly to be expected that they could see new things through old world eyes. They grew very stiff and ceremonious—that is, the Rodney ladies did. It was their prerogative, of course. Were they not cousins of the Medcrofts?

Four or five days of uneasy pretense passed with a swiftness that irritated certain members of the party and a slowness that distressed the others. Days never were so short as those which the now recklessly infatuated Brock was spending. He was valiantly earning his way into the heart of Constance, a process that tried his patience exceedingly, for she was blithely unimpressionable if one were to judge by the calmness with which she fended off the inevitable though tardy assault. She kept him at arm's length. Appearances demanded a discreetness no matter how she may secretly have felt toward the good looking husband of her sister. To say that she was enjoying herself would be putting it much too tamely. She was reveling in the fun of the thing. It mattered little to her that people, her own cousins in particular, were looking upon her with cold and critical eyes. She knew down in her heart that she could throw a bomb among them at any time by the mere utterance of a single word. It mattered as little that Edith was beginning to chafe miserably under the strain of waiting and deception. The novelty had worn off for the wife of Roxbury. She was despairingly in love, and she was pining for the day to come when she could laugh again with real instead of simulated joyousness.

"Connie, dear," she would lament a dozen times a day, "it's growing unbearable. Oh, how I wish the three weeks were ended. Then I could have my Roxbury, and you could have my other Roxbury, and everbody wouldn't be pitying me and cavilling at you because I'm unhappily married."

"Why do you say I could have your other Roxbury?" demanded her sister on one occasion. "You forget father expects me to marry the viscount. I"—

"You are so tiresome, Connie. Don't worry me with your love affairs—I don't want to hear them. There's Mr. Brock waiting for you in the garden."

"I know it, my dear. He's been waiting for an hour. I think it is good for him to wait," said the other, with airy confidence. "What does Roxy say in his letter this morning?"

"He says it will all be over in a day or two. Dear me, how I wish it were over now! I can't endure Cousin Mary's snippishness much longer, and as for Katherine! My dear, I hate that girl!"

"She's been very nice lately, Edith—ever since Freddie dropped me so completely. By the way, Burton was telling me today that Odell-Carney had been asking her some very curious and staggering questions about Tootles and your most private affairs."

"I know, my dear," groaned Edith. "He very politely remarked to me last night that Tootles made him think very strangely of a friend of his in London. He wouldn't mention the fellow's name. He only smiled and said, 'Nevah mind, my dear, he's a c'nfended handsome dog.' I daresay he meant that as a compliment for Tootles. She is pretty, don't you think so, dear?"

"She's just like you, Edith," said Constance, who understood things quite clearly.

"Then, in heaven's name, Connie, why are they staring at her so impolitely—all of them?"

"It's because she is so pretty. Goodness, Edith, don't let every little thing worry you. You'll have wrinkles and gray hairs soon enough."

"It's all very nice for you to talk," grumbled Edith. "I'm going mad with loneliness. You have a lover near you all the time—he's mad about you. What have I? I'm utterly alone. No one loves me—no, not a soul"—

"You won't let them love you, Edith," said Constance jauntily. "They all want to love you, all of them."

"I hate men," announced Mrs. Medcroft retrospectively.

Developments of a most refractory character swooped down upon them at the very end of the sojourn in Innsbruck. Every one had begun to rejoice that the fortnight was almost over and that they could go their different ways without having anything really regrettable to carry away with them. The Rodneys were going to Paris, the Medcrofts to London, the Odell-Carneys (after finding out where the others were bent) to Ostend. Freddie Ulstervelt suddenly announced his determination to remain at the Tirol for a week or two longer. That very day he had been introduced to a Mlle. Le Brun, a fascinating young Parisian stopping at the Tirol with her mother.

All might have ended well had it not been for the unfortunate circumstance of Odell-Carney's making a purchase of the London Standard instead of the Times, as was his custom. His lamentations over this piece of stupidity were cut short by the discovery of an astonishing article upon the editorial page of the paper—an article which created within him a sense of grave perplexity. He read the headlines thrice and glanced through the text twice, neither time with any very definite idea of what he was reading. His fingers shook as he held the sheet nearer the window for a final effort to untangle the incredible thing that lay before him in simple, unimpeachable black and white.

"'Pon me word," he kept repeating to himself feebly. Then he got up and went off in extreme haste to find his wife.

"My dear," he said to her in the carriageway, "I must speak with you alone." She was just starting off for a drive with Mrs. Rodney.

"Bad news, Carney?" she demanded, struck by his expression. She was following him toward a remote corner of the approach. He did not reply until they were seated much nearer to each other than was their wont.

"Read that," he said, slipping the Standard into her hands. "Wot do you think of it?"

"My dear Carney, I don't know. Would you mind telling me what I am to read?"

"The Medcroft thing. Right there."

There is more Catarrh in this section of the country than all other diseases put together, and until the last few years was supposed to be incurable. For a great many years doctors pronounced it a local disease and prescribed local remedies, and by constantly failing to cure local treatment, pronounced it incurable. Science has proven catarrh to be a constitutional disease and therefore requires constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, Ohio, is the only constitutional cure on the market. It is taken internally in doses from 10 drops to a teaspoonful. It acts directly on the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. They offer one hundred dollars for any case it fails to cure. Send for circulars and testimonials.

OPENING OF THE SCHOOLS

will be required.. When the Physical Training four year course was dropped it was thought that it would lessen the attendance so that the building would be able to accommodate all who desired to attend. It proved just the contrary however for the entering class was just about the same as last year.

At the High school, Head Master Collins said this noon that the school was comfortably crowded. Just how large the entering class would be he could not tell until night, for the reason that the entering class did not report until this afternoon. The upper classes reported and were assigned their rooms and dismissed at noon. The new pupils began to gather a little after noon but it was not until 1 o'clock that they began to enter the building. It will take nearly all the afternoon to register the new class so that school work in all classes may commence Wednesday morning. Regular school work however was commeiced with the upper classes.

At the Cranch school the approximate total is 320 with 28 beginners.

At the Lincoln the actual total is 425 with 40 beginners.

Fully a week will elapse before the actual figures can be compiled.

An air of sadness pervaded the Willard school this morning, due to the recent death of Principal Upton who suddenly passed away at Waltham last week. Mr. Upton was the friend of all the pupils and injected a spirit of manliness and fairplay into the sports which he fathered and developed. His executive ability was general and the feeling was deeply shown by the conversation of the pupils. Mr. Perkins will take charge of the building, pending the appointment of his successor.

At the St. John's parish school there were several new pupils and the school term opened with the celebration of mass at St. John's church by Rev. Fr. Walter Quinlan which was attended by all the pupils.

Keith was also arraigned for drunkenness and on this complaint he was fined $5.

William J. Dunn was fined $10, William C. Conway $5, for drunkenness at Quincy and Archibald Evans $5 for drunkenness at Milton.

George H. Mahler was arraigned for disorderly conduct on a public conveyance at Weymouth. Case dismissed on payment of $2.10 costs.

Savris Centi, Loring Arguire, Luigi Sanzi, James DiFrancis, Nicola Sidbach, and James Selviggs were arraigned for gaming on the Lord's day at Quincy and were fined $10 each.

ATLANTIC A. A. WIN.

Th Atlantic A. A. won the championship of Ward Six on the holiday afternoon by defeating the Walnut A. C. 11 to 8. In the morning they beat the South Boston A. C. 11 to 2. The stick work of John Duffy is responsible for the downfall of the Walnuts. With three men on in the ninth he smashed out a triple and cleared the bases. Excitement ran high and he was carried from the field on his teammates shoulders. The winning battery was Curtin and O'Connell while Pitts and Haynes performed for the losers.

MAY BE FORCED OUT BY SCANDAL

Thaw Cannot Hide in Canadian Jail, Asserts Jerome

EXPECTS PRISONER'S RELEASE

Does Not Think Case Can Be Delayed Much More by Technicalities—Lawyers Not In Accord In Analyzing Situation—Thaw Expects to Remain In Canada For Some Time

Sherbrooke, Que., Sept. 2.—"If Harry Thaw tries to hide in jail here," William T. Jerome declared, "there will be such a public scandal that the dominion authorities will demand his release and turn him over to the immigration authorities. Harry Thaw will go back to Matteawan, and that soon."

Hector Verret, the Canadian lawyer retained by the New York authorities, did not appear as sanguine as Jerome. He said he was afraid Thaw might be able to remain in jail until October, when the higher courts will convene.

Jerome, expecting that the writ of habeas corpus will be sustained by Justice Hutchinson today, is keeping Dr. Kieb, superintendent of Matteawan, here to testify before the immigration board regarding Thaw's sanity. Jerome does not believe Thaw' counsel will be able to delay his case much more by technicalities.

If Judge Hutchinson sustains the writ of habeas corpus sent out by John Boudreau, the chief of police at Coaticook, who made out the faulty commitment on which Thaw is now held, said Verret, the prisoner's counsel can halt further action by notice of appeal. This would operate to keep Thaw in jail until the matter comes before the court of king's bench in October.

Several Canadian barristers took issue with Verrit's analysis of the situation. They said the writ of habeas corpus could not be perverted from its original purpose to be made to serve as a means of holding a man in jail. Such a course would be a debauchery of legal forms, they declared.

The counsel for those who would put Thaw back in Matteawan have two cards up their sleeve. One is the intervention by Lomer Gouin, premier and attorney general of the province of Quebec, and the other is action by Magistrate Dupuis, who committed Thaw to jail, calling him back for trial.

Thaw says he will be in Canada until October, if not longer. He seems to know almost as much about Canadian law as any one else here. He pores over law books constantly.

Roger Thampson, the chauffeur who drove for Thaw on the trip from Matteawan, has gone to Montreal. Although he had disclaimed any intention of jumping the $500 bail on which he was held here on the charge of aiding Thaw, a lunatic, to cross the border, the state of New York is taking no chance.

Thompson is under indictment in Dutchess county, N. Y., for conspiring, with Thaw and five others, to bring about Thaw's release, and detectives under Captain Lanyon, who accompanied Jerome here, followed him on his journeyings. His case comes up here tomorrow.

Judge Hutchinson late yesterday sprung a surprise on the newspaper men, New York officials and the townspeople, when he announced that the hearing for the release of Thaw on habeas corpus proceedings would be held in camera in his chambers, instead of a public court in the large courtroom. Even Jerome, it was declared, is included in this order of exclusion, the court taking the stand that Jerome is not involved in the legal proceedings in Canada.

FAMILY REUNION.

Mr. and Mrs. Herbert R. Holmes of Post Island and about forty relatives held a family reunion at their home on Sea street on the holiday which was successful from all angles. At mid-afternoon a shore dinner was served which received the hearty attention of those preesnt and their praises. The affair was strictly informal and pleasure reigned. Many took a dip in the briny deep in the afternoon while others contented themselves with the fanning of the cooling breezes. The gathering adjourned about 8 o'clock.

TOWN RIVER ILLUMINATION.

Two postponements and a late tide interfered with the plans of many who intended to participate in the fleet review, held in connection with the annual illumination of the Town River Yacht club and consequently the parade on Monday night was not as attractive as it might have been. However, a small fleet of illuminated boats floated up and down the river. No prizes were awarded. Dancing was enjoyed in the clubhouse and refreshments were served. There was a large attendance.

Hundreds from Quincy attended the Scottish games at Calidonian grove on the holiday. Thomas Johnstone, Norman Ross and J. C. Murray were judges.

RECOGNIZES SON-IN-LAW

Mother of Heiress Bride, When Injured, Said to Be Reconciled

Boston, Sept. 2.—At the Hotel Touraine Mrs. Stuyvesant Le Roy and her daughter, Mrs. Amos T. French, both of Newport, are recovering from serious injuries received in an automobile accident in the Blue Hills parkway on Sunday.

The accident was due to the breaking of a spring, which let the weight of the body of the automobile down upon the machinery. The motor car ran up a slight embankment and struck a tree, throwing Mrs. French and her mother out.

When the members of the family were summoned from Newport, New York, Providence and elsewhere, word was sent to the Geraghtys in Woburn. This was the first recognition of them as a family.

It is believed the long-delayed reconciliation was accomplished when Mrs. French feared she was seriously hurt. When the baby was born a year ago at Newport, Mrs. French forgave her daughter, but refused to welcome her chauffeur son-in-law. She has seen the child several times since.

FOUR RACERS KILLED

Autos In Smashup While Going at Rate of Sixty Miles an Hour

Nashville, Sept. 2.—Death claimed a heavy toll in the Labor day automobile speed races at the state fair grounds when four of the six high-powered cars entered in the twenty-five-mile free-for-all were reduced to a mass of twisted steel and splintered wood on the far side of the mile track opposite the big grandstand, wherein were packed 5000 people.

Four of the dare-devil racers were killed, two sustained minor injuries, while four escaped without injury. Two of the cars with their drivers and mechanicians flashed through the tangled wreckage of broken cars and maimed bodies at a speed of sixty miles an hour, escaping injury.

The dead are John W. Sherrill, driver of Buick car No. 3; Thomas P. Bridges, mechanician of Buick car No. 3; William Sherrod, driver of Stutz car No. 8, and "Gooch" Brown, mechanician of Stutz car No. 8.

FLIES HEAD DOWN FOR QUARTER MILE

Aviator "Loops the Loop" at Height of 3000 Feet

Juvisy, France., Sept. 2.—Pegoud, the reckless French aviator, performed the most remarkable feat in the history of aviation when, at a height of more than 3000 feet, he flew, head downward, for a quarter of a mile in "looping the loop," or describing a gigantic letter S in midair.

Although spectators regarded the flight as a new attempt to create thrills, experts say the experiment is epoch-making in the attainment of safety in the air.

Pegoud recently caused a sensation by dropping safely from an aeroplane with a parachute.

DEATH PACT REVEALED

Brother and Sister Feared Poverty Would Overtake Them

Philadelphia, Sept. 2.—The mystery surrounding the death of Miss Jane Jamison, who, with her brother, George Jamison, who found by servants lying unconscious in their home in Radnor, near here, was cleared up when the police got possession of a letter written by Miss Jamison to a woman relative in Philadelphia, informing her that her brother had declared his intention of committing suicide, and that she had not the courage to live alone and would therefore join him in death.

Miss Jamison was 60 and her brother 62. The woman died soon after removal to a hospital, but the man is recovering.

The Jamisons had been well to do, but had recently lost some money, and the fear of poverty is said to have caused the man to decide upon suicide.

FRITZI SCHEFF BANKRUPT

Has but $74,923 to Settle Debts Reaching $149,856

New York, Sept. 2.—The United States district court is getting to be a popular resort for actresses who wish to be acquitted of their debts.

Following in the footsteps of Mrs. Evelyn Thaw, Fritzi Scheff filed voluntary petition in bankruptcy, timing the filing of her petition before her appearance in vaudeville. But here the parallel between Mrs. Thaw and Fritzi Scheff ends, for the schedule of the comic opera prima donna's tangled finances makes Mrs. Thaw's liabilities seem paltry.

It appears that she has $75,000 less than she owes; liabilities footing up up $149,856.51, and her assets of only $74,923.76.

VACANCY IN CITY COUNCIL

Resignation of James H. Cunningham

Has Moved from City

James H. Cunningham, councilman from Ward Six, in the City Council of 1913, has tendered his resignation, to take effect immediately. The resignation came Tuesday in a letter to President Whiton of the Council and will be presented to the City Council at its meeting next Monday evening.

While the resignation of Councilman Cunningham will occasion some surprise at this time, it was not entirely unexpected as it was a well known fact that Councilman Cunningham purchased a residence at Dracut some months ago, and that he has been residing there since that time, although still claiming Quincy as his residence, which entitled him to retain his seat in the City Council.

It was understood by some that it was the intention of Councilman Cunningham to make Dracut his summer home and that he would continue his residence in Quincy, during the winter months. Evidently he has changed his mind and intends to make Dracut his future residence.

Councilman Cunningham has been prominently identified with the official affairs of Quincy for many years. Originally a Democrat under whose banner he was first elected as a member of the City Council in 1892. He served as an inspector of the Board of Health under Mayor Fairbanks, but went out of office with the advent of Mayor Hodges. It was not long after this that he laid aside the Democratic cloak and put on the Republican garment.

When Mayor Bryant came into office in 1902 he was appointed as Overseer of the Poor which office he held during the three years of Mayor Bryant's administration. When Mayor Thompson came into office Mr. Cunningham was appointed Tax Collector and served during the years 1905, 1906 and 1907. It was during his service as Tax Collector that County Treasurer Charles H. Smith. passed away and Mr. Cunningham was elected to fill that office for the balance of the year. He was a candidate for the position at the next election but was defeated. Shortly after he receivd an appointment on the State Board of Charity, which position he has since held. Although always retaininge an active interest in local affairs he did not again take office until the year 1912 when he served as a member of the City Council from Ward Six, being re-elected for the year 1913.

Without question Councilman Cunningham was one of the best informed men on city affairs in the City Council. He was also well up on parliamentary procedure as must have been evident to all who have followed the proceedings of the City Council during the present year. To many his attitude this year has been thought to have been antagonistic, while to others it has been like the man from Missouri, he wanted to be shown.

Some months ago, as noted above he purchased a residence in Dracut and it is here that he will make his future home.

If the City Charter is carried out strictly to the letter a special election will be necessary, which would mean an expense of $700 or more. It is doubtful if an election is ordered, in view of the lateness of the year, coupled with the fact that the chances are not very promising for much more important business this year.

CHILD HIT BY AUTO

Thomas McGourty Now at the Quincy Hospital

Thomas McGourty, the three year old son of Mr. and Mrs. Patrick McGourty of 16 Cherry street, was struck and injured by an automobile while at play at Pray and Washington street, Tuesday evening. He was taken to the Quincy City Hospital where his name was placed on the dangerous list. He is doing well today.

FUNERAL OF PATRICK SWEENEY.

The funeral of Patrick Sweeney, who died in his 75th year, was held Tuesday morning from his home on Bryant avenue where he has lived since coming to Quincy many years ago. A high mass of requiem was celebrated at St. Mary's church by Rev. Fr. Henry T. Grady. The Gregorian chant was sung by the regular choir, under the direction of Miss Frances Cronin, organist. Burial was in St. Mary's cemetery. Mr Sweeney was born in Ireland and was one of the first of his countrymen to settle in West Quincy. He leaves a widow, two daughters, Mrs, John Hoey of Randolph and Miss May Sweeney, and one son, James Sweeney, engineer of the Granite Railway Co. shipping station at the West Quincy freight yard.

WATER RECEIPTS DROP

Lower Than in 1912, 1911, or 1910

Tax Collections Better

City Auditor Henry O. Fairbanks reports the receipts for the eight months of 1913 from Jan. 1, to Sept. 1, to have been as follows, the figures being given in comparison for the same months in 1910, 1911 and 1912:

TAXES.
1911	225,477.83
1912	231,135.13
1913	330,322.87
WATER
1910	$102,204.23
1911	105,148.50
1912	107,672.26
1913	98,839.03
SEWER ASSESSMENTS.
1910	$9,651.06
1911	10,575.68
1912	11,039.35
1913	11,516.89
PARTICULAR SEWER.
1910	$3,848.28
1911	3,625.20
1912	4,521.93

The tax collections make a much better showing than usual, being nearly $100,000.00 more for the nine months of 1913 than in the same months of 1912, which were but little more than in 1911 or 1910. With the exception of a few poll taxes of 1913 all these taxes are for years previous to 1913.

City Auditor Fairbanks in his annual report for 1912 showed uncollected taxes due the city Dec. 31, 1912, amounting to $454,434.04. On Dec. 31, 1911, the balance due was $361,760.19, and on Dec. 31, 1910, the balance due was $369,720.84.

The water receipts are a disappointment although there are many new takers, being nearly $9,000.00 less than in 1912, which showed a gain over 1911 and 1910.

The receipts from sewer assessments were a few hundred larger and from particular sewer a few hundred less.

WHITE LINE SUGGESTED

On Washington Street at Junction of Hancock Street

In view of the heavy automobile traffic on Washington street at its junction with Hancock street, not only on Sundays and holidays but week days as well, together with the crowds of people boarding and alighting from electric cars, it has been suggested that the Commissioner would receive a vote of thanks from those not fortunate enough to own an automobile, if he would cause a well defined white line to be marked on the street at this point as a guiding line for the automobiles so that all automobiles passing down Washington street should keep to the right of the line and those coming up should also keep to the right. As it is now automobile drivers keep on all sides of the streets, in spite of the efforts of Officer Murray to keep them straight, at this dangerous corner. That there has not been a bad accident at this point is a wonder.

WARD ONE REPUBLICANS

Candidate Benton and Others Expected to Speak

A notable array of speakers have been secured by the Ward One Republican Committee for the outing at Houghs Neck Thursday evening. In fact at this outing the first gun of the primary campaign in Quincy will be fired. The program as arranged promises to make the evening an enjoyable one. Special cars will leave City Square at 5.40 for Houghs Neck, and those who are unable to take these cars may take any of the regular cars which follow at intervals of fifteen minutes until 7 o'clock.

From 6 to 6.30 there will be a social hour, during which music will be furnished by Provost's orchestra. This social hour will afford an opportunity to renew old friendships and make new acquaintances. Dinner will be served promptly at 6.30 and an hour and fifteen minutes has been allotted to this pleasant duty.

Then there will come the after-dinner speaking. In addition to local candidates to be voted for at the State primaries and others, the following well known speakers will address the gathering. Hon. Everett C. Benton, Republican candidate for Governor; Hon. Channing Cox, Republican House leader of the 1913 legislature; Hon. J. Stearns Cushing, a prominent Republican and ex-member of the Governor's Council and Hon. Maurice Kane, Republican candidate for State Treasurer.

The outing in no way has anything to do with municipal politics, but is being held to create enthusiasm among the younger voters on Ward One in the coming State election. It was decided some time ago to hold the outing, and it is probable that a similar outing will be held previous to the municipal election. The Ward Committee who have the affair in charge fully understand that there are many from other wards of the city who would be glad of an opportunity to attend but the committee decided that the affair should be confined strictly to Ward One.

HIS 78th BIRTHDAY

Friends Congratulate Adolph F. Gustafson

The home of Adolph F. Gustafson, 207 Granite street, was the scene of a merry gathering Tuesday afternoon and evening, the occasion being the 78th birthday of Mr. Gustafson. Relatives and friends called during the afternoon and congratulated him, and in the evening the rooms were crowded again, all giving him the glad hand, and indulging in a general good time. He was the recipient of many gifts. Mr. Gustafson, although 78 years old, is as smart and lively as many a man half his age. He can be found at his work for the city every day rain or shine, and there is no complaint relative to the City Square crossings. He is a faithful employe. He is a veteran of the Civil war, and it is interesting to hear him tell of those days. He is a member of the Swedish M. E. church and in his day has preached many a sermon. He is also a member of the G. A. R. At about 10 o'clock the party broke up. Mr. Gustafson was ably assisted in receiving by his estimable wife and daughter Selma.

FOR COUNCILLOR.

Charles W. Guy, of Rose Lawn fame, the Democratic candidate for nomination as councillor from the second district, says that he feels not only confident of the nomination but also believes that he will poll a large vote. He says that his brother-in-law is an own cousin to Charles Sumner Bird, the Progressive candidate for Governor, which he believes should be of some help to him in getting votes.

CONTAGIOUS HOSPITAL

Doctors Invited to Meet With Board of Health

A general invitation has been extended to the physicians of the city to meet with the Board of Health Thursday evening for the purpose of considering the location and plans for a new contagious hospital in Quincy. The meeting will take place in the Council chamber.

The rapid growth of the city and the corresponding increase of contagious diseases, particularly in children, is a strong factor in favor of evolving some way in which the general public can be guarded from patients.

Most of the physicians of the city have had wide and varied experience in these epidemics and some time ago announcd their interest when a contagious hospital was proposed. The Board of Health seeks to gain the benefit of their information and counsel and have made preparations for a large attendance.

—The new Unitarian church at Aububon circle, Boston, will be the first in this country to have an elevator. The parish house will be three stories high. The society erecting this new house of worship and services, is the Second Church in Boston founded in 1649.

GAY--DONAHUE WEDDING

East Weymouth Young Man Comes to Quincy for Bride

Miss Nellie Donahue, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Dennis Donahue of South Quincy and Ernest Gay, son of Mr. and Mrs. Albert Gay of East Weymouth were married Tuesday evening at the St. John's rectory. The ceremony was performed by Rev. Fr. Walter Quinlan.

Miss Isabel Donahue, a sister of the bride, was bridesmaid. John Nash of Hingham, a personal friend of the groom, was the best man.

The bride was dressed in white ivory satin with pearl trimmings and carried bridal roses. The bridesmaid wore white messaline and carried pink carnations.

After the ceremony Mr. and Mrs. Gay returned to the home of the bride's parents, 92 Phipps street where a reception was held. They were assisted in receiving by Mr. and Mrs. Dennis Donahue, Mr. and Mrs. Albert Gay and Mr. and Mrs. Peter O'Neil.

Following the reception a buffet luncheon was served, after which the younger folks enjoyed dancing on the lawn. Music was furnished by the Stetson band of Weymouth and the program of dance music consisted mainly of popular song hits.

Mr. and Mrs. Gay left for a honeymoon trip along the Atlantic sea board, taking in Atlantic City, Washington and other places. They will reside at High street, East Weymouth.

NO EXHIBITION.

Uncertainty prevailing among the manufacturing interests of the eastern states is the reason given why the New England Educational and Industrial exposition, scheduled to be held in the Mechanics building, Boston, in October, has been postponed until some time next year. The Quincy Board of Trade was interested.

EPIDEMIC CAUSING ALARM

One Death Reported at Atlantic

From Infantile Paralysis

The epidemic of infantile paralysis in Atlantic is a matter of grave concern to the members of the Board of Health and although they have spent hours trying to determine they way by which the disease has been transmitted they have been unable to positively discover any clue which will aid them in bringing about a prevention of further spreading.

The first death resulted Monday evening in the family of Mr. and Mrs. William Mullan of 97 Appleton street when their five year old son William succumbed to the dread dicease after a few days illness. The ordinary symptons were noticeable Friday, and Monday Dr. D. A. Bruce was called. He found a fully developed case. He immediately mailed a report to the Board of Health and by Tuesday evening the child died.

The question now being considered is whether or not the Atlantic and possibly the Montclair grammar school should be closed and it was stated at the office of the board this morning that this will be done if another case appears.

At present there are five cases

Canada's new industry—Thaw litigation.

It is claimed that the Highways of Missouri are no worse after 400,000 men have been digging at them.

VEGETABLE DIET.

Formerly the avoidance of meat was regarded as a sign of advanced mental eccentricity. The neighbors watched to see if one did not decline in health, and his children were expected to be anaemic or defective.

Recent events have greatly increased the number of people who eat little or no meat. Revelations regarding dirt in the packing industry made many vegetarians. People of sensitive imagination saw the whole sale heaps of gore every time a juicy joint was brought on the table.

The steadily rising price of all forms of meat tends in the same direction. The partial failure of the corn crop owing to the recent drought means higher prices at the butchers and fewer meat eaters.

Elaborate plans are under way for development of beef industries in Australia. But the public views the tender mercies of the trusts and the apparent competition of new industries with suspicion.

There are a growing number of advanced humanitarians who entertain almost Oriental views about animals. To them the beast and the fish have the same right to enjoy life as man. He can not with a clear conscience add to his own material comfort, by interfering with the rights of a coordinate branch of creation.

Meanwhile science does not seem to favor vegetarianism much. The possession of tearing and biting teeth is still considered an indication of a natural adaptation to a mixed diet. The races that live wholly on either vegetable or on animal food are not considered by scientists to have the best physical development.

For the average man then the growing scarcity of meat seems a calamity of primary importance, to receive the most earnest attention of scientists and legislators, with the consideration of immediate measures to preserve the substantial backbone of the dinner table.

FINE BALANCING FEAT.

The Dancing Glass on the Knives on the Bottles.

Take two bottles of the same height. Insert in each a cork, the top of which has been cut into wedge or gable shape. Place the bottles on the table, the cut edges of the corks parallel to each other. Put the blade of a table knife on each cork, their points almost but not quite meeting in the middle and their handles projecting on the opposite sides. Holding the blades with the thumb and forefinger, take a small wine or liquor glass half full of water and balance it upon the points of the two knives.

This will require a little adjusting of the distance between the bottles or of the quantity of water in the glass, but after a few attempts you will find that the weight of the glass just balances that of the knife handles.

By drawing a few drops of water from the glass this will rise a little with the knife blades. If now you take a thread with a metal button or a small piece of lead tied to it and lower this into the water the glass and the knife blades will descend. They rise again as you withdraw the weight. The glass behaves as if drawn by the thread, and you can make it dance up and down like a marionette.—New York World.

A WABBLY COMPLIMENT.

It Came While the Comedian Was Working the Dignity Act.

Francis Wilson, the actor, always a collector of Napoleonic relics, had played at a town in northern New York state, and on the morning following his performance, while on the way to his train, he passed an antique shop and saw in the show window a cameo with the head of the great Corsican upon it. He went in to dicker for it.

The deal was about closed when the shopkeeper, a nearsighted, elderly man, squinted at Wilson and said:

"Look here, ain't you an actor?"

Wilson drew himself up.

"I am a clergyman," he said in an offended tone.

"I beg your pardon," said the dealer. "You see, I thought you looked something like that singing fellow, Francis Wilson."

"I hope," said Wilson with great dignity, "that you would not liken me to a mere comic opera comedian."

"Well," said the shopkeeper with a superior air, "I seen him at the opera house last night, and to tell you the truth he wasn't so awful rotten."—Saturday Evening Post.

Listen: "It consists of the definite combinations of heterogeneous changes, but simultaneous and successive, in combination with external coexistences and sequences."

"Why, John, what in the world is the man talking about?"

"I am astonished at you, Jane. Why, this is the work of the great English scientist."

"Yes, I know, but what is he writing about?"

"He is defining life, I told you. What did you suppose he was writing about?"

Birds Shot With Water.

Shooting a humming bird with the smallest bird shot made is out of the question, for the tiniest seeds of lead would destroy his coat. The only way in which the bird can be captured for commercial purposes is to shoot him with a drop of water from a blowgun or a fine jet from a small syringe. Skillfully directed, the water stuns him. He falls into a silken net and before he recovers consciousness is suspended over a cyanide jar. This must be done quickly, for if he comes to his senses before the cyanide whiff snuffs out his life he is sure to ruin his plumage in his struggles to escape. Humming birds vary in size from specimens perhaps half as large as a sparrow to those scarcely bigger than a bee.

Rifled Firearms.

In the South Kensington museum are several wheel lock muskets with rifled barrels made during the reign of Charles I., if not earlier. Such barrels were then usually called "screwed." Zachary Grey in a note on "Hudibras," part 1, canto 3, line 533, says that Prince Rupert showed his skill as a marksman by hitting twice in succession the vane on St. Mary's Stafford at sixty yards with a "screwed" pistol.—London—Notes and Queries.

BODIES HURLED THROUGH AIR

Twenty-Six Lives Lost In New Haven Road Wreck

FIFTY PERSONS ARE INJURED

Two Pullman Cars Literally Reduced to Merest Kindling Wood as White Mountain Express Plunges Into Second Section of Bar Harbor Express—Antiquated Cars and Equipment Figure In Latest Disaster In Connecticut, Which Occurs During Fog—Sombre Greeting to Elliott on First Working Day as President of the System

New Haven, Sept. 3.—Twentysix persons are dead and fifty injured in the most terrible of the long series of wrecks on the New Haven—a wreck, like so many of the others, due to faulty and antiquated equipment and to failure to obey the direct orders of the government.

Wooden cars, condemned signals and careless operation again plunged many souls into eternity when the first section of the White Mountain express, plunging through the fog at forty miles an hour, ripped through two sleeping cars of the second section of the Bar Harbor express at Miller's crossing, near North Haven.

Those killed in the wreck were: William Altschul, Norfolk; Harold Avery, New York; Miss Margaret Armstrong, Washington; Miss Marie L. Bullitt, Philadelphia; Albert Green, New York; Royal W. Hotchkiss, New Haven; Miss Merritt, Philadelphia; Miss Harriet Biddle, Torresdale, Pa.; Miss Murphy, New York; H. F. Martin, Byrn Mawr, Pa.; Daniel L. McQuillen, Jr., Philadelphia; Miss Stoddard, New York; S. Crozier Fox, Elkins Park, Pa.; Frank B. Rutter, Scranton, Pa.; Miss Emilie K. Davis, Philadelphia; Miss Agnes White, Boston; Robert N. Yahn, Philadelphia.

Five of the dead, three women and two men, have not yet been identified.

A Terrible Scene

Frightful screams arose from the dying, pinned in the wreckage. Bodies were hurled more than 100 feet through the air by the force of the collision. Pushed on by the weight of seven heavy coaches, the locomotive of the White Mountain express crashed through the rear cars of the other train as though they were pasteboard and tilted the third sleeper until it fell upon its side.

Fog spread like a pall over Long Island sound and rolled inland for miles. Yet the White Mountain express tore on at forty miles an hour, until it was within 100 feet of the Bar Harbor train. New Haven officials say that at the speed the train was making it could not have been stopped within 1500 feet.

Engineer Miller of the White Mountain express and Rear Brakeman Murray of the wrecked train were ordered held without bail by Coroner Mix late last night.

Third Wreck In a Year

It was the third serious wreck which the New Haven has suffered within a year, and inaugurated the first day of the regime of Howard Elliott, the newly elected head of the road. Elliott, returning from his summer home in New Hampshire to assume his duties, passed over the scene of the wreck on an earlier train, less than an hour before.

The New Haven officials admitted that the so-called "banjo" block signal service, which on this part of the line has not yet been replaced by the semaphore system, recommended by the public utilities commission of Connecticut last December, was, in a measure, responsible for the wreck, although the question as to whether Engineer Miller was making too much speed under the weather conditions is under investigation.

Both more than an hour late, the two trains passed Wallingford, three miles north of the scene of the accident, eight minutes apart. Eight minutes ahead of them was the first section of the Bar Harbor express, and a local train, due to stop at North Haven, three miles south of the wreck, led them all.

Under the rules of the road, according to the officials, an engineer may pass a "banjo" signal set at red after he has brought his train to a stop. This, according to the railroad officials, the engineer of the Bar Harbor express did, and then came to another stop about 100 feet on the other side of the signal, a mile north of North Haven.

Disaster on Straight Track

This opened the signal in the previous block, a mile away, and down a stretch of track, straight as an arrow, plunging through the thick fog, came the White Mountain express, with the impetus of seven cars, baggage, day-coach and five sleepers behind the engine. Meantime Flagman Murray of the Bar Harbor train had gone back with the torpedoes, a distance, it was said, of 400 feet. The torpedoes went off, according to the officials of the road and some of the train crew. Then came the crash.

According to Vice President Whaley of the New Haven, it would not have been possible at the speed the train was making for Miller to have stopped his train within 1500 feet after he saw the signal. The engineer did not see it, he says, until he was almost upon it, or scarcely more than 100 feet from the rear of the Bar Harbor express, and at the same moment heard the torpedoes. Had the semaphore system been in operation, Whaley said, Miller would have got a "caution signal" in the previous block, a mile away, and the wreck would have been avoided.

"I do not wish to place any blame on the engineer," said Whaley, "but in view of the foggy conditions a question to be determined is whether he was running too fast under the circumstances. There is no rule of the road which would require him to make up time and take a risk while running in a fog, and as far as I know he received no instructions to make up time."

Chief Engineer Elwell said the New Haven had been twice advised by the public utilities commission to abolish the "banjo" system, once last December and again in March, following minor wrecks, in both of which the blame was laid at the door of the "banjo" system.

Passengers Were Asleep

Passengers in both trains were asleep when the collision occurred. The White Mountain engine, No. 1337, twin of the new Pacific superheated locomotive that figured in the Stamford wreck of last June, plowed through the two sleepers of the Bar Harbor as if they had been as much papier mache. In the forward cars of the Bar Harbor train, which consisted of eleven sleepers, there was panic among the passengers, but the White Mountain came to a stop so gradually, comparatively speaking, that many of its passengers scarcely realized that anything serious had happened.

For several minutes after the first shock there was silence, the passengers said, and then sounded the screams of the wounded. Passengers from both trains turned out to the work of rescue. They found most of the dead and injured strewn on both sides of the track; there were few in the wreckage.

The terrific force of the engine had literally reduced the two Pullmans to the merest kindling wood, and the bodies of the passengers, instead of being buried in the wreckage, fell upon it or were hurled entirely clear of it, over a fence into a watermelon patch. The vestibule of one Pullman, sitting beside the pilot of the locomotive, and the vestibule of the other, tossed into the ditch, were the only parts of the two cars not completely demolished. Last night the wreckage was burned by the railroad company.

Cars Used as Ambulances

Trolley cars were pressed into service to bring to New Haven both the dead and dying. A part of the White Mountain train took some of the injured to Meriden, and the undamaged cars of the Bar Harbor train were used to take others of the injured to this city, where they were placed in hospitals. There are eighteen here in all and some are in such serious condition that the death list may increase. Some of the less seri-

Death List Doubles

The death list grew from thirteen to exactly twice that number during the afternoon and evening. Several of those badly injured died on their way to the hospitals or after reaching there. An actual count of the bodies showed that twenty-six had perished.

First steps to determine who, if anyone, was to blame, were taken in secret. The public was not represented, nor will it be at the inquest, if Coroner Mix adheres to his announced plan. The hearing preliminary to the inquest was held in the office of the New Haven general manager. Trainmen of the two trains were examined.

After the last witness had been examined, what purported to be a synopsis of the testimony was given out to newspaper men by the press agent of the New Haven road.

According to this recital every possible precaution was taken. The flagman of the Bar Harbor express went back when his train stopped, placed torpedoes on the track and stood ready to stop any train that might be following. He was recalled by an engine whistle. His train started but stopped within a short distance to permit him catching up. The engineer of the oncoming train saw him, heard the torpedoes explode and saw the red bulls-eye of the "banjo" signal leap out of the fog—but saw and heard too late to stop.

Will Be Thoroughly Probed

Washington, Sept. 3.—Just how deep a probe the interstate commerce commission will make of the latest catastrophe on the New Haven railroad and the significant turn which that investigation may take was indicated by Commissioner McChord.

The commissioner pointed out significant phases of his recent opinion on the Stamford wreck on the same railroad—particularly those which told of the New Haven's persistent use of antiquated wooden cars.

"I can only say we are going into a most thorough and efficient probe of the latest New Haven disaster," he declared. "Manifestly it would be improper for me to discuss the Wallingford wreck in advance of its being officially before me. But I call attention to the commission's report on the Stamford wreck."

Three Killed In Iowa Wreck

FIELD DAY AT BRAINTREE

Base Ball, Sports, Dancing and a Good Dinner

The fourth annual clam bake and field day of the Pond Street Social and Athletic Association, South Braintree, was held at Sampson's field, off Pond street, Labor day and was a grand success. The weather conditions were all that could be desired, there was something doing every minute and the big crowd spent money freely at the various attractions such as the wheel of fortune, cane-board, hoop la, refreshment booths etc.

In the forenoon, there was a ball game between the Heights, champions of the Sunset league and the Aero Club of East Braintree, the former winning by the score of 17 to 3. The feature of the game was the pitching of Fahy for the Heights. The batteries wer: Fahy and Keith for the Heights and Scollard and Delory for the Aero team.

The great attraction of the day was the clam bake served in the big tent at 12.30 o'clock. The "bake" was fine, with plenty of "fixings" and the waiters were kept busy serving the hungry ones. After dinner came the field events with the following results:

100 yd. dash for boys over 14—Clifton Thayer 1st, Paulo Venuti 2nd.

50 yd. dash for girls over 10—won by Josephine Morwick.

50 yd. dash for girls under 10—won by Bertha Eagle.

Shoe Race—won by Howard Dunkerley.

Running high jump for men—won by C. Williamson.

There was a lively ball game between two teams of youngsters, one representing Pond street and the other the Square. The contest was declared a tie and called off to make room for the above mentioned events.

At 3.45 o'clock there was another ball game, this time for a purse of fifty dollars played by the Braintree White Sox and the Braintree Athletic Association teams. Carson was on the mound for the B. A. A. and Mack was the slab artist for the Sox. The game was a fairly good one but was marred by the frequent" kicks" by the B. A. A. and some weird fielding and throwing by the Sox. The latter were shut out 6 to 0. In the seventh inning, Burrell, catcher for White Sox was hit in the head by a pitched ball while taking a turn at the bat and rendered unconscious. He was attended by Dr. C. A. Sullivan who was on the field and was rushed in the doctor's automobile to his home where he was reported to be in a dangerous condition.

The accident cast a gloom over all and the remaining field events were not run off.

About sunset, the brass band reported for duty and there was fun at the dance-board for the rest of the evening.

PROUD OF HIS PIGEONS

Jo'n Minihan Will Fly Some from Washington

Fall air, according to John Minihan of Furnace Brook Parkway, is necessary for carrier pigeons to maintain a constant fast speed, and to bear out his assertions he is training several birds with the intention of flying them from Wtshington, D. C.

The past summer has been one of rare pleasure to Mr. Minihan and several other young men who have associated themselves with him in the training of the birds. Weekly they were taken to distant points by boat or train and invariably they returned in record time, although one received a wing injury in flight a few weeks ago and did not reach home for two days.

I have one, says John, that will fly from Frisco, and no offer would be tempting enough to cause me to part with him. The bird in question is a strong flier, with all the homing instincts developed to the furthest possibility and possesses unusual speed. In a recent flight from Plymouth Rock it reached home over five minutees before the other birds, although not librated until two minutes later.

Mr. Minihan, is one of the most popular members of Ave Maria council, Knights of Columbus, is a devotee to whist and checkers, and takes an active interest in affairs of the council. His four homers are now receiving his attention but with the advent of cooler weather he will step into his accustomed place unless interrupted by fire alarms which he answers as one of the Central Station call men.

WHAT THE WHISTLE WAS FOR.

"I was counsel for a railway company in the West," says a prominent New York lawyer to Harpers' Weekly "in whose employ a section hand had been killed by an express train. His widow, of course, sued for damages. The principal witness swore positively that the locomotive whistle had not sounded until after the entire train had passed over his departed friend.

"'You admit that the whistle blew?' I sternly demanded of the witness.

"'Oh, yes, it blew.'"

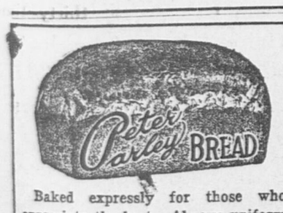

"'Now', I added, impressively, 'if that whistle sounded in time to give Morgan warning, the fact would be in favor of the company, wouldn't it?'

"'I suppose so,' said the witness.

"'Very well. Now, for what earthly purpose would the engineer blow his whistle after the man had been struck?'

"'I presume,' replied the witness, with great deliberation, 'that the whistle was for the next man on the track.'"

FINDS PIRATES IN GUISE OF MONKS

"Brothers" From Holy Mount Athos Ex-Mutineers.

ONCE TERRORIZED COASTS.

Vanished With Cash on Russian Warship, Kniaz Potemkin, Eight Years Ago and Led Pious Lives Till Balkan War Roused Them—Odessa Policeman Discovers the Imposture.

A story as strange as any in fiction has just come to light in Odessa, Russia's principal port on the Black sea.

After eight years of immunity from the wrath of Russia the mutineers of the Russian battleship Kniaz Potemkin, who killed their officers, bombarded Odessa and for a month defied the authorities, eventually surrendering themselves to the Roumanian government and then vanishing, no one knew where, have now been discovered. For eight years eighty of these mutineers have been living as monks on holy Mount Athos, where, perched upon the heights, are twenty-one monasteries, founded by Russians, Greeks and Bulgarians in the thirteenth century.

Warlike Spirit Kindled.

For some time there had been factional quarrels among the monks. Recently 1,800 Russian monks, headed by an ex-hussar officer of the Russian army, stormed the Greek monasteries because of a difference of opinion upon certain new dogmas. These fights became so serious that the Russian government was compelled to send a ship to bring home the trouble makers.

On the arrival of the monks in Odessa they were met by a police official. Instantly he recognized in a monk's habit one of the seamen he wanted to arrest in July, 1905, for mutiny on board the Kniaz Potemkin. He continued his investigations, and to his amazement he discovered no less than eighty mutineers, all garbed as monks, among the peace breakers of the holy mount.

The mutineers have now confessed their participation in the mutiny, admitting that they surrendered to the Roumanian authorities at Costanza, on the Black sea, on condition that they should not be handed over to Russia. From that time they vanished from sight. They say they removed from the battleship her treasure and with it made their way to Mount Athos, where they entered one of the Russian monasteries. Afterward they were joined by a Russian hussar officer, whom debts had driven from St. Petersburg.

Greek Monks Conquered.

The news of the Balkan war engendered in the mutineers the idea of conquering Mount Athos for Russia, but the Greeks outwitted them by sending for help to the exarch at Constantinople, who in turn notified the Russian government. From the precipitous heights, 6,000 feet above sea level, the troublesome monks were let down in baskets and hauled over the rocks which guard the foot of the holy mount. There is no other means of embarking from the mountain.

When the identity of the monks was first established they were put in irons amid the greatest excitement. The monkish habits were stripped from them, and they were hurried away to prison pending their trial, which will probably end in banishment to the Siberian mines.

Their leader, the ex-hussar, was not on board, and it is supposed that at the last moment he made his peace with the Greek monks and was allowed to stay among them.

TOBACCO WAR AHEAD.

American Company About to Enter British Field.

A great tobacco war between the principal British and American companies may begin in London at any moment as the outcome of the threatened "invasion" of England and other European countries by the Tobacco Products Corporation of America. One of the heads of a big British concern said recently:

"I believe it is a fact that an American corporation intends to attempt to enter the English field and open up depots on a large scale in rivalry with the Imperial Tobacco company. Whether the enterprise contemplated will succeed or not is another matter. One of many factors that will have to be reckoned with is the conservatism of the English tobacco consumer."

WOMEN NOT GOOD RISKS.

Feminine Intuition Gives Death Warning, Say Insurance Officials.

Women's intuition informs them of approaching death, for which reason they seek life insurance and are undesirable risks, according to delegates at the medical section meeting of the American Life Insurance association in St. Paul.

The matter was debated without definite conclusion as to the stand to be taken. It was asserted by several speakers that spinsters are better risks than married women.

Bereaved, Loses His Voice.

The news that his wife, Mrs. Lucy Marquette, died at the Kane Summit hospital, in Kane, Pa., caused James Marquette of that town to lose his voice completely.

which have extended over a short period. The Mullan boy was the last one reported to the board.

In connection with an investigation of his case the board learned that the family formerly resided in Worcester which is at present the seat of a sharp epidemic. However the family resided there previous to its appearance.

Dr. Pembroke of the State Board of Health has been in Quincy assisting the local board in determining the cause. The cases are scattered throughout various parts of Ward Six and as far as investigation goes shows that there is hardly an error in perfect sanitation.

Situated within 200 yards of each case however are stables and it is known that the stable fly transmits the sickness. It has also been determined that animals are carriers as well as being subject to the disease, but the baccili is so small that is defies a microscopic analysis.

Several days elapse from the time the ordinary symptons appear until the paralysis sets in, and a physician can be absolutely positive in diagnosing the case. This is a severe handicap to prevention, because it is not known whether or not the disease can be transmitted during this period.

Dr. Fred E. Jones of the board has been devoting much time in tracing the origin of the Atlantic epidemic, and is apprehensive of the appearance of more cases. He states that as far as is known the families infected are observing a rigid quarantine and the houses have been placarded. The history of cases have shown nothing in common between the patients, and despite all efforts the seat of the epidemic defies recognition.

A letter containing the recommendation required by the board has been addressed to all families having patients, as follows:

Quincy, Mass., August 26, 1913.

To the Parents or Guardians of a child sick with Anterior Polio Myelitis or Infantile Paralysis.

"You are hereby ordered to isolate the child sick with this desease from all other children and from flies, insects and animals of all sorts. Your child is sick with a communicable desease. The manner in which this disease is transmissable is at present not absolutely known, but the serious results which of time follow should be incentive enough for you to use every method possible within reason to prevent this disease being communicated to another child.

"It is already known to be contagious by secretions from the nose and mouth and through the medium of the stable fly, and you should be exceedingly careful that it is not transmitted by the common use of cups, knives, forks, spoons, towels, sponges, handkerchiefs or any other article that may come in contact with the child's nose or mouth.

"It is reasonable to assume that the urine and fasces of this sick child may be also a source by which this disease may be transmitted. Unless therefor all such secretions empty into the public sewerage system they must be rendered inocuous by the use of a solution of one half pound good chloride of lime to two gallons of water, made freshly every day, or of a solution of carbolic acid one part to nineteen parts of water, or of a solution of formalin, one part to nine parts of water. The stools and urine should be thoroughly mixed with one of these solutions before being put into any watercloset or privy vault.

"It is particularly required that your child be absolutely isolated from any other child in your household. This can only be done by confining him and screening him from flies, in one room which is not accessible to the other children, and by his having separate toilet and eating and drinking facilities.

"This is also desirous because during the active stages of the disease physicians generally require that the paralyzed limbs be kept absolutely at rest. Such linen and clothing which comes in contact with him should be sterilized by boiling before is comes in contact with the other children. As this disease is known to be communicable for some period of time it will be necessary for this child to be kept in absolute quarantine for at least four weeks and then shall be released only on recommendation of your family physician."

RAMBLER AGENTS.

Temple A. Winsloe of the Wollaston Centre garage, and all the other New England agents of the Rambler automobiles, have been invited by the manufacturers of the cars to visit the factory at Kenosha, Wis., and inspect the new models for 1914. The trip will be made in Rambler cars, and will be a notable one. Mr. Winsloe is known as the banner agent in New England, having sold 67 Ramblers this season. He hopes to mabe it 70 before he starts next week.

DAHLIAS GROW FOR MR. ELCOCK

Thousands in Bloom in All Varieties and Colors

While with many this year dahlias have been a failure, George F. Elcock of Copeland street is having his usual success. The lawn in front of his house does not indicate this, for he has reserved that for his late varieties and they are not yet in full bloom. But in the rear of his house he devotes a larger and larger space each year, and there is where dahlias in all their beauty may be seen, for he has 10,000 or more blooms in all varieties and colors.

As a school teacher knows every one of her boys and girls by name, so Mr. Elcock knows all his numerour varities by name, and can describe their coloring better than most ladies could. One is sure to become interested in dahlias after a vist to Mr. Elcock's and a talk with him.

The American Flag is one of his favorites, a red and white striped. Then there is the Frank Smith, a red shaded; the Bride; the Jack Rose; the English Penelope; the Imperial, a rich magenta; the Dr. Kirkman, a deep maroon; the Countess of Lonsdale, a cactus variety of the apricot shade; the ponpons, both French and German; etc, etc.

One plot is reserved for white bloom and many of these are the most beautiful, but all are beautiful and it is difficult to make a choise. Among the varities is the Gus Duzon, the largest dahlia which often measures eight inches in diameter; also the Lirantha; one of the wonders, it is imported from Holland and resembles the peony family, and is the only scented dahlia.

Unless nipped by frost, Mr. Elcock will have a wealth of bloom until the middle of October, and he is always pleased to have visitors.

A CLOAK-ROOM STORY.

One of the congressmen who had just returned from Europe remarked that this story reminded him of a scene on the banks of the Serpentine in London, when a lady and gentleman paused beside a stylishly clad nurse in bonnet and floating veil, and the lady exclaimed, looking at the children of two and four who accompanied the girl:

"What charming children. Are they not lovely, Edward?"

Edward replied that they were all that the heart of man could desire.

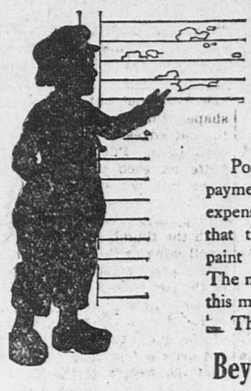

"Will you kiss me?" said the lady.

"They don't usually kiss people, madam," said the nurse, "but of course they will you."

The kissing ceremony completed, the woman of fashion asked:

"And whose dear children are they?" as she looked admiringly at the rosy cheeks and bright eyes of the little ones.

"Madam," said the girl in amazement, "they are your own. They know you because they have often watched you from the nursery window, as you passed to and from your carriage."—"Affairs at Washington," Joe Mitchell Chapple, in the Nationol Magazine for August.

Don't Wait for the Wood to Show Before You Paint!

Postponing painting is like putting off payment of taxes. You are only piling up expense. The wise man paints often, so that there is always a protecting film of paint between his house and the elements. The more durable the paint, the less often this must be done.

The most durable paint in the world is

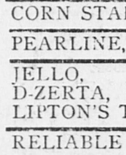

Beymer-Bauman White Lead

(Dutch Boy Painter Trade Mark)

and Pure Linseed Oil

when mixed to suit the conditions of the wood. All good painters do it this way. Make sure that yours does it, too, and that he uses Dutch Boy white lead and linseed oil.

Harrison will have an interview with Secretary Garrison in New York today to talk over the general policy in regard to government of the islands. Tomorrow he will leave New York, preparatory to sailing from San Francisco Sept. 10.

FIGHTING PARDON GRANTED BY SULZER

Case of Bank Wrecker to Test Governor's Status

Kingston, N. Y., Sept. 3.—The securing of a judicial ruling on the legal status of Governor Sulzer before the convening of the court of impeachment in Albany on Sept. 18 is believed to be the purpose of habeas corpus proceedings begun here by William S. Bennett of New York city, before Supreme Court Justice Hasbrouck, on behalf of Joseph G. Robin, the New York banker convict.

Justice Hasbrouck, on Bennett's application, granted a writ directing Robin to appear before him on Thursday.

Robin has received pardon papers from Sulzer which are in the possession of Bennett, although the granting was not announced by Sulzer until after Bennett's appearance here. It is assumed that Bennett is seeking an early decision from the appellate division on the power of the governor to issue the pardon as an impeached executive.

CHILDREN LOSE JOBS

Thousands Thrown Out of Employment of New Law

Boston, Sept. 3.—Massachusetts has started with the enforcement of the drastic child labor law passed at the last session of the legislature, and there is much speculation regarding the provisions of the law, its enforcement and its effect.

In New Bedford it is stated that between 1500 and 2000 employes will be discharged. In Taunton persons under 16 will be temporarily employed on an eight-hour schedule until their places can be filled.

The Lawrence mill officials say they cannot adjust their schedules to an eight-hour basis and must discharge possibly 2000 boys and girls. In Lowell many children have been discharged and 800 are reported out at Worcester. At Fall River mills most of the minors must be discharged. In Fitchburg the Pitts mill will be closed until an adjustment to the schedule can be made. In Haverhill about 300 minors are thrown out of employment.

Chicopee and Ludlow manufacturers will adjust their mills to the new conditions, but believe the law will be repealed on account of the hardships it will work on families.

His Cleverness.

"Don't be so lazy. There's plenty of room at the top, and you're clever enough to get there."

"But," replied the lazy genius, "think how clever it is of me to find a place at the bottom, where there isn't so much room."

REPUGNANT TO BAY STATE

Practices of "Healers" Are Discountenanced by Court

HE FINDS THEM NOT GUILTY

Refers to "Overworked District Attorney" In Explaining Why He Does Not Adopt Advice of Government Prosecutor—Pentacostal Evangelists Celebrate With Big Praise Service

Framingham, Mass., Sept. 3.—With a warning to the defendants that some of their practices were opposed to the general sentiment of the people of this state, and that the grand jury might, on its own initiative, see fit to investigate their meetings, Judge Kingsbury, in the district court, dismissed the complaints against Mrs. M. B. Woodworth-Etter, Cyrus B. Fockler and Earl W. Clark, her assistants, who were charged with obtaining money under false pretenses in connection with evangelistic work at Montwait.

The complaints were brought by Chief of Police Holbrook of Framingham, and grew out of alleged "healings" and "cures" by Mrs. Etter. The trial lasted four days. Kingsbury's decision was read by him from a manuscript and was part of a lengthy statement in which he defended the chief of police, admonished the defendants, praised counsel for both sides, and explained why he did not turn the case over to the county prosecutor.

When the decision was announced, the three defendants first congratulated each other, then went to a room in the courthouse set aside for lawyers, where they sang hymns of thanksgiving.

The Pentecostal evangelists left Montwait today for Indianapolis, but last night a big "praise service" was held in observance of the favorable verdict. Kingsbury's decision, as read by him, said in part:

"It is to be remembered that all these defendants are residents of states remote from us and that they have been in this commonwealth but a few days—unacquainted with our laws and with the customs of our people.

"There are sections of the country, perhaps, where the laying out in straw, on or near a public platform, of half a dozen or more persons of both sexes and of all ages in an unconscious state might pass as one of the usual and proper incidents of a meeting intended for the worship of God, but is repugnant to the general public sentiment of this commonwealth, and these defendants will be wise if they recognize the fact.

"It has been said during the progress of these hearings that this court could take final jurisdiction in these cases, and, after a good deal of deliberation on this point, I have concluded to do so.

"I might adopt the advice given by the attorney for the government, find probable cause to believe the defendants guilty, which the evidence warrants, and transfer the burden to the shoulders of the overworked district attorney.

"It requires some degree of self-denial on the part of the court not to follow this suggestion. But there are some objections to this course which have become evident on reflection, and my judgment is that the complaints should be dismissed."

LAWYERS IN COUNCIL

The association adopted a resolution indorsing President Wilson's action in regard to Mexico. Ex-President Taft addressed the members last night, advocating greater independence of the judiciary.

Alton B. Parker, Democratic candidate for president in 1904, proposed the resolution, unanimously adopted, for the approval of the celebration of a century of peace between the United States and Great Britain.

PEGOUD REPEATS DARE-DEVIL FEAT

Performance For Benefit of French Army Officers

Juvisy, France, Sept. 3.—Aviator Pegoud repeated his dare-devil feat of looping the loop in a monoplane. This time his exhibition was for the benefit of a commission of army officers belonging to the aviation corps and again Pegoud flew for an eighth of a mile with his machine turned turtle, his head hanging down.

As on the first occasion, Pegoud ascended to a height of about 3500 feet and then pointed his monoplane straight to the earth.

Darting down like a hawk, with his engine going full speed, he dropped to an altitude of 1300 feet and then steered a sudden upward course. The machine turned over and flew along upside down for a few seconds, when Pegoud righted the plane and landed. He was warmly congratulated by the army men.

Rutland, Vt., Sept. 3.—One man is dead and another is feared to be dying as the result of an aeroplane accident at the Rutland fair.

Five hundred men and women at the fair saw the biplane of George Schmidt, carrying J. D. Spellman, assistant judge of the municipal court, as a passenger, turn turtle 200 feet in the air and fall like a plummet to the ground.

As a result of his injuries, Schmidt, who was 23 years of age, died at the local hospital. Spellman is so badly burned it is feared he may die.

Objection to Use of Canadian Jail as Shield For Fugitive From Insane Asylum—Arguments Made and Decision Reserved—Jerome Considers He Has Won His Case

Sherbrooke, Que., Sept. 3.—Superior Justice Hutchinson reserved his decision as to the release of Harry K. Thaw on a writ of habeas corpus, following arguments. William T. Jerome declared he was now absolutely confident Thaw would be set at liberty within forty-eight hours. Hutchinson will deliver his decision Thursday.

Harry Thaw came face to face with a new force in the province of Quebec and the days before his return to the United States are numbered.

Sir Lomer Gouin, attorney general and premier, intervened in the case through Aime Geoffrion, as special representative, and demanded that steps be taken at once to bring about Thaw's liberation from the Sherbrooke jail, where for two weeks he has defied deportation.

Geoffrion and Samuel Jacobs, representing the state of New York, pressed an immediate hearing on the writ of habeas corpus obtained last week. The court conceded their point and arguments were begun.

Over the violent objection of Thaw's counsel, Hutchinson ordered that the proceedings go on. Geoffrion, personally representing Gouin, then announced that the attorney general had intervened and that this matter must be decided at once.

"If he is not liberated on the writ," Geoffrion said, "other means will be taken. Thaw must not be harbored in a Canadian jail."

Thaw's face fell, and his lawyers, declaring that the writ was irregular, spoke in turn, pleading for adjournment until Friday.

"We must go on," said the court.

"I represent the attorney general," said Geoffrion, "and it is of paramount importance that justice in this case move swiftly. Our jails are not public boarding houses. It is the attorney general's desire that this matter be settled instanter by the liberation of Thaw. The prisons of the province cannot be used to shield a man from the federal law."

Samuel Jacobs, appearing directly for Police Chief Boudreau and indirectly for Jerome, supplemented Geoffrion's remarks. He denounced the case as a scandal to the dominion.

McKeown tried to open the preliminary arguments again, but the court directed that he desist and arguments to sustain the writ were begun by Jacobs.

Thaw sat on a lounge, nervously taking notes. There was such a crush outside that men's coats were torn, hats were smashed and collars twisted. In the courthouse yard a man harangued the crowd, and at intervals there were roars of "Three cheers for Thaw."

At times the din grew so loud that it was difficult to hear the counsel speak.

TRAIN WRECK AND FIRE

Thirteen Persons Killed and Seven Fatally Hurt In England

Derby, Eng., Sept. 3.—Thirteen persons were killed, seven were fatally hurt and many others were injured in a rear-end collision between two famous North England express trains on the Midland railroad near Aisgille.

Both trains were en route from Carlisle to London when one overtook the other. The accident was due to a mistaken signal in the fog. Several coaches in the forward train were telescoped and the wreckage caught fire.

There were frightful scenes while the mutilated passengers were being removed. Some of the bodies taken from the debris were almost completely incinerated.

American Boat Ellen Winner In Second Sonder Race

Marblehead, Mass., Sept. 3.—The American sonder Ellen won the second international sonder boat race in a drifting match.

The scow shaped German, Wittelbach, supposed to be a light weather boat, never had a chance. This boat was ever beaten out by its companions.

THOMAS GAMMON, Superintendent

Tabitha Interferes

"Things Are Not What They Seem"

By ADELAIDE BURNHAM

From her seat behind the parlor curtains Tabitha Campbell listened shamelessly to the words that young Frederick Lee was murmuring to pretty Agatha, her niece.

"It's my duty by a motherless girl," said Tabitha defiantly to her conscience, and she turned her good ear close to the curtains sagging against the open window.

"Tomorrow night, then," said Frederick with a long sigh of relief.

"Yes," assented Agatha timorously.

"At 11 o'clock. Surely?"

"Yes."

"I'll drive you to Milton, and the minister there will"— His words drifted into an indistinct murmur as the wind rushed through the garden and stirred the syringa bushes.

Tabitha arose and went into the sitting room, where she blinked at the lighted lamp. She was a little, hard featured, black eyed woman with white hair and sprightly movements that made her appear even younger than her fifty years. Now her black eyes snapped with anger as she sat down in a rocking chair and picked up some knitting.

Agatha came in and locked the front door. When she appeared in the sitting room her blue eyes were very bright and a pink flush stained her usually pale cheeks.

"I thought I told you I wouldn't have Jacob Lee's boy running here," snapped Tabitha.

Agatha was silent.

"Has he got a job?" pursued Tabitha.

"Yes. I told you his father had taken him into the bank," replied Agatha spiritedly. "Frederick is—is—nice. I don't see why you dis-dislike him so, Aunt Tab."

"I have my reasons."

"If you would only tell me, just tell me what it is you have against him, Aunt Tab, I might understand."

"It's all in the past," murmured Tabitha somewhat vaguely. Her cheeks reddened as if at some unpleasant memory.

"It's not fair to keep me in the dark, and I shall never believe one word against him unless you prove it, so there!" Agatha whirled out of the room and up the stairs into her own little room overhead.

What Agatha did not know was that once upon a time Tabitha had been a black eyed beauty engaged to marry Jacob Lee. But Jacob had proved a fickle lover, and when he took a bride to his home it was a handsome girl from Milton who had money in her own right. That Jacob's wife died and left him with little Frederick three years after the marriage did not move Tabitha Campbell to pity. In the meantime her hair had whitened and her face grown sharp and peaked. Now she became the village dressmaker, and when Agatha came to live with her every one said how nice it was that Tabitha would not be alone.

Tabitha's eyes burned strangely in the darkness as she thought of these things.

The next day passed quietly, as usual. Tabitha sewed busily in her sharp, jerky way in the room devoted to her work. Several customers came and tried on garments and looked over the pile of fashion books on the table or examined the tissue paper patterns pinned on a tape along the wall. Agatha did the housework deftly and between whiles stitched on the sewing machine in the corner.

As evening drew near the two women became distinctly nervous. Tabitha cut Mrs. Demmet's gray cashmere into a three piece skirt by a twenty-two inch waist pattern when Mrs. Demmet measured thirty-four inches and was proportionately massive. It was characteristic of Tabitha's mood that she first threw the mangled cashmere across the room with the scissors flying in its wake. Then she picked them up and, tucking the cashmere under her arm, went grimly forth to interview Mrs. Demmet.

When bedtime came Agatha came and placed her arms around Tabitha's neck. The astonished spinster did not move, but silently endured the embrace, and if there were tears in her hard eyes the girl did not see them. She went to the door and turned a wistful gaze on the older woman.

"I'm sorry you don't like him," she said painfully, and went slowly upstairs.

Tabitha put out the light and went silently about her preparations. She went upstairs and closed the door of her bedroom and then returned to the sitting room to envelop herself in a long gray cloak and tie a white chiffon veil over her face and hair. She slipped out of the side door and went across the grass to an opening in the boxwood hedge that bordered the garden. Standing outside there on the path in the shadow of the maple trees, she awaited the coming of Agatha's lover.

Clouds were drifting overhead, and now and then the moon peeped out. The little house lay in deep shadow.

Presently the church clock struck 11, and at the same instant came the sound of hoofs on the sandy road. A covered buggy came slowly along, and the horse stopped in front of Tabitha's gate.

In an instant she had reached the vehicle and had climbed into its dark interior. A man's startled voice uttered a sharp exclamation of surprise.

"Hurry!" whispered Tabitha. "Get away as fast as you can. She is coming after me."

"But"— began the familiar voice of Frederick Lee, and Tabitha hushed him desperately.

"Hurry, please hurry, or I shall go back!"

"All right. I suppose you know where you're going," said the man grimly.

"Milton, of course," snapped Tabitha so sharply that he leaned down and tried to look into her face, but it was too dark to distinguish anything except the pale, cloudy outline of her veil.

He clucked to the horse, and they went noiselessly down the road on rubber tired wheels. At the crossing they turned into the Milton highway.

Tabitha was somewhat disturbed at the success of her maneuver. She had planned to elope with Frederick Lee and at a convenient opportunity, perhaps in the very presence of the waiting minister, she would disclose her identity and "give Frederick a piece of her mind." Yet, somehow, in spite of her disguise and the darkness of the night, Frederick seemed suspicious of her. If he had been sure it was Agatha, the girl so soon to become his wife, would he not, being an ordinary young man, have placed his arm about her or at least saluted her with a kiss?

Out of the fullness of her own past romance Tabitha told herself he would have done all these things, yet there they sat speechless, slowly driving into Milton to be married, or at least Frederick expected to be.

"Where are we going?" asked the man suddenly as they turned into a sparsely settled section on the outskirts of Milton.

"Do you mean to say you don't know?" shrilled Tabitha through the folds of white chiffon.

"Of course not." His voice was indignant. "You're Tabitha Campbell's niece, aren't you?"

"I'm Miss Campbell," whispered Tabitha, a great fear clutching at her heart, for the voice was that of Frederick Lee, but it held deeper, richer notes. Perhaps Frederick's would reach that pitch some day if he lived long enough. There was only one other who could have spoken with that same intonation, and that other was Frederick's father.

"Well, Agatha Campbell," said Jacob Lee kindly, "what do you want? You asked me to carry you to Milton, and when we arrive you will not tell me where you want to go. Now, there is something queer about this, and I'm going to take you back to Farmdale and straight to your aunt." He spoke with an air of authority and at the same moment turned the horse about and went back over the road they had traveled.

Tabitha sat crushed and stunned in the corner, shrinking away from her old lover. What would he say if he knew she—Tabitha—was there beside him? They rode together twenty-five years ago, and since then they had passed each other with averted faces. Swiftly they rolled along through the wooded way until a carriage approaching from the opposite direction caused them to turn aside into the thicket to permit the other vehicle to pass.

The other carriage struck a "Thank you ma'am," and a girlish shriek startled them. "Don't be afraid, Agatha," said Frederick's tender voice. Then they were gone.

After awhile Tabitha's companion spoke:

"That was my son's voice, and he was talking to Agatha Campbell," he said sternly. "Now, who are you?"

Tabitha stiffened. "I am Tabitha Campbell," she said haughtily.

"Good heavens!" exclaimed the man.

They rode on in silence. When they were in front of Tabitha's cottage the driver let down the buggy top so that the moonlight fell on Tabitha's face. Gently he untied the white veil while she sat in frozen silence. When it had fallen about her shoulders in a swirling cloud he leaned forward, and she saw that it was indeed Jacob Lee.

"Tell me all about it, Tabitha," he said gently. "You are in trouble."

Tabitha caught her breath—why, it was all just as though the dreary years had not come between them. Jacob was speaking in his old authoritative tone.

She told him the story of the projected elopement.

"You mean—you mean that you were set against my boy?" he asked in a stunned tone.

Tabitha was silent.

"Well," he drew a deep breath, "if you've held resentment all these years, Tab, why, you must have cared, although somebody told me that you were tired of me. Well, that doesn't excuse me for what I did, but I've had years enough to think it all over and to be ashamed of the part I played."

Still Tabitha was silent.

"If you—why, perhaps you—Tabitha, do you still care after all these years?" How wonderfully tender was his voice!

"I don't know," quavered Tabitha, "but I've been so lonely, and it seems good for you to be here."

"Then it is all right, Tab," he cried gayly. His arm slipped around her, and she fell naturally into the curve of it. "We will have some happy years yet if God is willing. I guess we met Fred and Agatha in the woods. They must be married by this time. Shall we drive on to meet them and tell Fred how near he came to eloping with you?" He laughed softly.

"Yes, do," whispered Tabitha meekly. "And you can tell him I decided to elope with his father instead."

THE HUSBANDS OF EDITH

By GEORGE BARR M'CUTCHEON

Copyright by Dodd, Mead & Co.

Chapter 1 of this story appeared in the Daily Ledger of Aug. 12. Back numbers can be obtained at Ledger office.

She read the article, her husband watching her face the while. Surprise, incredulity, dismay, succeeded each other in rapid changes. She was reading in sheer amazement of the doings of Roxbury Medcroft in connection with the county council's subcommittee —in London! The story went on to relate how Medcroft, implacable leader of the opposition to the "grafters," suddenly had appeared before the committee with the most astounding figures and facts to support his charges of rottenness on the part of the "clique;" his unexpected descent upon the scene had thrown the opposing leaders into a panic; every one had been led to believe that he was sojourning in the east. As a matter of fact, it was soon revealed, he had been in London secretly working on the problem for nearly three weeks, keeping discreetly under cover in order that his influence might not be thwarted. His array of facts, his bitter arraignment of the men who were trying to force the building bill through the council, staggered the whole city of London. At that writing it looked as though the bill would be overthrown, its promoters had been so completely put to rout. The committee would be compelled to take cognizance of the startling exposure. The people would demand a full thrashing out of the obnoxious deal. Roxbury Medcroft's name was on every one's lip. The Standard had profited by securing a great "beat."

The Odell-Carneys looked at each other in wonder and perplexity. "What does it mean?" asked the lady, her eyes narrowing.

"Look here, Agatha, this paper's at least two days old. Now, how the devil can Medcroft be in London and Innsbruck at the same time. He was here day before yesterday, wasn't he? I'm so confounded unobserving"—

"Yes, yes, he was here. And this paper"— She paused irresolutely.

"Says he was there. 'Pon my word, it's most uncanny. There's some mystery here."

"I've got it, Carney! This is not Roxbury Medcroft."

"Good Gawd!"

"This explains everything. Heavens, Carney! This fellow is—is her lover! She's running about the country with him. She's"—

"Her lover? 'Gad, my dear, he may have been so at one time, but he's the other one's lover now, take my word for it. I say, 'pon my soul, this is a charming game your friends the Rodneys have let us into. They"—

"My friends! Yours, you mean!" she retorted.

"Oh, come now! But let it go at that. They know, of course that this fellow isn't her husband, and yet, by gad, Agatha, they've gone about deliberately palming him off on us as the real article. They are actually sanctioning the whole"—

"Stop a moment, Carney," interrupted his wife. "The London chap may be the fraud. Let us go slow, my dear."

"Slow? How the devil can we go slow in such fast company? No! This fellow is the fraud. And they knew it too. They all know it. They"—

"Rubbish! You forget that the whole Rodney tribe is up in arms because Medcroft is making love to his wife's sister. They're not assuming anything there, let me tell you. And he's not Edith's lover. If he's not her husband, he's playing a part that she understands and approves. And this—this, my dear Carney, may account for the imaginary orphanage of Tootles. Dear me, it's quite a tangle."

"I shall telegraph my solicitors at once for definite news. They'll know whether the real Medcroft is in London, and then—well, by Jove, Agatha, I can't tell just wot steps I'll take in regard to these Rodneys."

He went into a long tirade against the unfortunate Seattleites, as he called them. "Understand me, Agatha, I don't blame Mrs. Medcroft. If she's having an affair with this chap and can pull the wool"—

"But she isn't having an affair with this chap," cried Mrs. Odell-Carney, her patience exhausted. "She's having an affair with a chap in London, the one who writes. Good gracious! Of course! Why, what fools we are. The real Medcroft is in London, and it is he who is writing the letters. How stupid of me!"

"Aha!" exclaimed he triumphantly. "Of course, she's getting letters from her husband. Why not? That's to be expected. But, by the everlasting shagpat, do you suppose that her husband knows she's off here with another fellow who masquerades as her husband? No!" He almost shouted it. "I've never heard of anything so brazen. 'Gad, what nerve these Americans have! Just to think of it!"

"I don't believe she is anything of the sort," declared his wife. "She's as good as gold. You can't fool me, Carney. I know women."

"Deuce take it, Agatha, so do I. And wot's more, I know men."

"They're a poor lot, the kind you know. This pseudo Medcroft is not your kind. He's a very clever chap and a gentleman."

"Now, look here, Agatha, don't imagine that I'm going to be such a cad as to turn against 'em in their hour of trial. Not I. I'm more their friend than ever. I'll help 'em to get away from here, and I'll bulldoze these Rodneys into holding their peace forever after. It's the Rodney duplicity that I can't stand."

"Shall we stay here, or shall we find an excuse to leave?" she asked pointedly.

"We'll stay long enough for me to tell the Rodneys wot I think of 'em. I'll have an answer to my dispatch by night. Then I should advise you to have a talk with Mrs. Medcroft. You've invited her to the house, you know. Tell her there can't be two Medcrofts. See wot I mean? We'll see 'em through this, but—well, you understand."

CHAPTER XII.

"I do love you."

MEANTIME a telegram had preceded a lengthy letter into the department of the police, both directed to Herr Bauer, who in reality was James Githens of Scotland Yard. The telegram had said: "Why do you say M. is there? He is in London. Explain. Letter tomorrow." The letter had come, and Mr. Githens as well as the local police office was "bowled over," to express it in Scotland Yard English. He had wired his employers that "M. is still in Innsbruck. Cannot be in London." It was very clearly set forth in the letter that Roxbury Medcroft was in London and that Mr. Githens of Scotland Yard had betrayed his trust. He was virtually charged with playing into the hands of the enemy—"selling out," as it were. It readily may be expected that Mr. Githens was accused of being in the employ of the "opposition." Moreover, it is but reasonable to assume that he took vigorous steps at once to vindicate himself, which accounts for the woe that lurked close behind the heels of a man named Brock.

Brock and Constance had ridden off that afternoon to visit the historic Schloss Ambras. The great castle had been saved for the very last of their explorations. He had just been able to secure permission to visit that part of the duke's residence open on certain occasions to the curious public. Edith had declined to accompany them. In the first place, she was expecting the all important message from her husband. She was "on nettles," to quote her plaintive eagerness. In the second place, she realized that as the crisis was at hand in the affairs of Brock and Constance her presence was not a necessary adjunct. Not only was she expecting a message from Roxbury, but eagerly anticipating an outburst of joyous news from the two who had, it seemed, very gladly left her behind.

There is more Catarrh in this section of the country than all other diseases put together, and until the last few years was supposed to be incurable. For a great many years doctors pronounced it a local disease and prescribed local remedies, and by constantly failing to cure local treatment, pronounced it incurable. Science has proven catarrh to be a constitutional disease and therefore requires constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, Ohio, is the only constitutional cure on the market. It is taken internally in doses from 10 drops to a teaspoonful. It acts directly on the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. They offer one hundred dollars for any case it fails to cure. Send for circulars and testimonials.

SUCCESSFULL LAUNCHING

Submarine Christened by Mrs. Mabel Marshall

The submarine, officially known as K 1 was successfully launched at the Fore River Shipyard at 1 o'clock this afternoon. The launching was private one and was witnessed only by officials of the government and employees at the yard. The new addition to the navy was christened by Mrs. Mabel Marshall, wife of Lt. Commander Albert Ware Marshall, assistant inspector of machinery stationed at the yards.

For well known reasons the general dimensions of the submarine are not made public. The vessel however is said to be one of the most powerful under water craft of any navy of the world.

She is one of the fleet of nine similar boats to be built at Quincy. The remainder of the fleet will be officially known as K 2, K 5, K 6, L 1, L 2, L 3, L 4, and M 1.

It was but a few minutes past the appointed hour when the blocking beneath the submarine was knocked away and the sole pieces sawed through and the cigar shaped vessel slid gracefully into the water. She was immediately taken in tow by tugs and taken to the fitting out dock.

GIRL SENTENCED.

The case of Matilda Helma, the domestic who was arrested at Rockland, Me., for the larceny of jewelry from Mrs. E. C. Ranagan at Norfolk Downs, was heard before Judge Avery in the district court this morning. The girl was represented by counsel and stoutly denied taking the jewelry, even when confronted with almost absolute evidence of her guilt.

Mrs. Ranagan testified that on returning home one evening in the latter part of June she found that supper had not been prepared as was expected and that a search revealed the fact that Matilda was gone. Later it developed that her diamond and wedding ring were gone, also a stick pin belonging to one of the boarders in the house.

A few days later one of the rings was recovered from the driver of a laundry wagon, to whom it had been given by the girl. This driver testified that Matilda told him that she had brought the ring with her from the old country and that the wedding ring she wore was her sister's. She was also very careful to impress upon the laundry man that she was not married.,

Inspector Goodhue told of the girl's previous record in the case for larceny of clothing from Mrs. E. J. Murphy, and of tracing her from place to place until her arrest. During all of his conversation with the girl she stoutly denied stealing the jewelry.

Previous to the case being called, Mrs. Ranagan had a talk with her in one of the side rooms but was unable to get any satisfaction from the girl as to the whereabouts of the remainder of the jewelry.

After hearing the evidence the court found her guilty and seutenced her to three months in the house of correction.

Mrs. Matheson left immediately to attend the funeral which will take place at his home at Germantown, Philadelphia, Pa.

Harry Burrell, the catcher, who was injured in the ball game at Braintree on the holiday is doing well, and will probably recover within two months. His condition Tuesday was not altogether promising but his temperature is nearly normal, while his pulse is about 45. Every half hour bulletins were put out in South Braintree Monday and Tuesday evenings, and the accident is of great interest to the general public because of the popularity of Burrell as a ball player. Day Is Advertised Better Than Night

By HOLLAND.

THE day is a more popular time than night. Most of the work of the world is done while the sun shines, and only that which can't be done at other hours is performed while darkness reigns.

The day is the more popular and the more fully utilized because it is better advertised. The sun is the great publicity agent. It forces all to see and to remember. If it were possible to advertise any product of man as well as sunlight is advertised that particular product would drive all competitors from the field. Any breakfast food, baking powder, brand of shoes, style of furniture, cough drop, patent medicine, or what not, if it were only as well known as daylight, would have a monopoly of trade that would defy all rivals.

Such successful advertising of the works of man is not possible, but it can be followed at a distance. Successful manufacturers and merchants do follow it, and as a result the best advertised articles are the most widely sold. This is due to the fact that advertising makes the name of an article known, and it also insures its quality. Goods must be of superior merit to make it profitable to advertise them.

ADVERTISING MEANS RELIABILITY.

FELL OVERBOARD.

What might have been a serious accident happened on Saturday afternoon to one of the painters working at one of the trawlers that is to be handed over this week. It seems that two painters, C. Best and T. Arnold, were removing their staging after finishing their work. Just as Arnold was reaching over the side of the vessel to lift the last plank, the engines of the Standard oil ship Richmond which was lying nearby were started and the rush of water from the propeller caused a movement of the trawler which threw Arnold off his balance and caused him to topple over the side and fall a distance of 20 feet into the water, striking a punt that was lying about 2 feet from the side of the vessel. Had it not been for the presence of mind and quickness of his partnes Best, the accident might have ended fatally as Arnold is not able to swim. He was assisted to his home on School street by Best, as the yard was practically empty at the time of the accident.

BIRD CLUB OUTING.

The Bird club, that famous organization composed largely of ex-presidents of the Board of Trade and a few congenial spirits are planning for their annual outing. The date for the affair has been fixed for Thursday, Sept. 11. While none of the members of the club are prone to sea sickness they are hoping for a quiet sea as the finny tribe, upon which they will depend largely for their dinner will more readily snap at the tempting bait which will be fastened to their fish lines. However, if the fish fail there will be plenty of other good things in the eatable line so that none of the party will need fear of going hungry.

PROSPERITY IN NOVA SCOTIA.

J. B. Sutherland has returned from a nine weeks' vacation which he spent with his wife and little boy at Barney River, Nova Scotia, where he owns a farm and summer cottage. He will resume work at once in the building line and hopes to develop and sell the remainder of his real estate in South Quincy before the end of the year.

Mr. Sutherland reports excellent crops in Nova Scotia and general prosperity among the people. The resources of the province are being developed as never before, and that brings settlers from other places, but for every man gained in this way it would seem that at least one native son leaves for the Canadian West, and as a result no net gain is being made in population by Nova Scotia. This conditional he thinks, will continue until the lure of the West ceases to be felt by the younger element.

Mr. Sutherland thinks the wave of Canadian jingoism which secured the defeat of the Reciprocity treaty two years ago is receding fast and that the desire for larger markets for Canadian products will before long lead to a change of government in the Dominion.

TENNIS AT SQUANTUM.

G. Chester Young won the tennis tournament of the Squantum Tennis club on John R. Nelson's courts on Labor day. The semi-finals and finals developed the best tennis that has been seen at Squantum this year. Quite a gallery of spectators saw Chet Young defeat his brother, Dr. William Young of Dorchester in the finals. Before defeating his brother, Young had to eliminate John Jepson, Jr., who had qualified for the finals.

The scores were:

Jepson beat W. N. Kenyon 8-6, 4-6, 8-6.

G. Chester Young beat H. A. Smith 6-1, 6-4.

Dr. Young beat John R. Nelson, 5-7, 6-2, 9-7.

G. C. Young beat Jepson 6-1, 6-2.

FINALS.

SHE WANTED MORE.

"You have never told me anything about your past," she said timidly.

A troubled look came over him. He realized that, although they had been engaged nearly a month, he had certainly been negligent in that direction.

"I suppose I ought to say something about it," he said.

"Promise—to tell me all."

"Do you mean that?"

"Everything."

He clasped her hands. The crisis had come.

"Dearest," he said, "I'll make a clean breast of it. Of course, I realized that it had to come. Still—"

"Go on!"

"I've led a pretty hard life I guess. In college there was a time when I didn't do much else but buck the tiger."

"What's that?"

"Well, it's playing poker mostly. I got in the hole pretty deep. Then, of course, I had my fill of drinking, carousing, late hours. I broke loose at last. You see, I had to, but it was pretty fierce."

"Did you stop?"

"Well, partly. Then I had love affairs—there were so many of 'em, you know, that it didn't matter. I was dropped once—then I braced up—got through. I spun around a little after that until I got to playing the ponies."

"Playing the ponies!"

"Yes—race track, you know. Betting on horses. But, thank heaven, I saw the folly of that."

"And you stopped?"

"Absolutely. You see, I came to myself. My character asserted itself. It was a hard fight, but I won. I wish I wasn't there, dear. But I was bound to tell the truth. Tell me that it's all right. Tell me you will forget it."

"Have you told me all?"

"Everything. Tell me it's all right."

She looked at him with a troubled look.

"I suppose I shall have to," she said "But—I thought you were a good deal worse than that."—Lippincott's Magazine.

BOARD OF TRADE RESUMES MEETINGS

Public Service Corporations Subject of Considerable Complaint--Committees Appointed

President Hamilton Tells of visit to Panama

While there was no general subject assigned for discussion at the meeting of the Board of Trade on Wednesday evening, several matters of local import were taken up and discussed at length. These included the poor telephone service which Quincy subscribers are receiving and the question of a comfort station in City Square.

NEW MEMBERS.

The first business was the election of new members. Nine applications were received and the following were elected. George F. Spooner, Philip Kelley, Albert S. Vail, Gilbert C. Shunk, A. P. Homer, Henry C. Smalley, Rev. Benjamin A. Willmott, William F. Hodgkinson and M. Markin. This brings the membership up to 356 an increase of 118 this year. The Board is now striving for the 400 mark which it is expected will be reached before the end of the year.

CAR SERVICE.

A communication was received from the Boston Transit and the Public Service commissions stating that a two days hearing would be held by the joint commissions Sept. 4 and 5, to hear complaints as to street car and steam car service. This brought up a short discussion on local street car service. Secretary Hall spoke of the poor service on the Quincy Point line, which was a car every half hour. When the Nantasket cars were run there was an extra car but two cars would run ten minutes apart and then there would be a wait of twenty minutes. He believed that Quincy Point was entitled to fifteen minute cars. He also spoke of the service on the Houghs Neck line which he said was worse than before the new turnouts were put in. That there was but little attempt to run cars on schedule time and that they ran at any old time.

After some little discussion the secretary was directed to write the commission complaining of these matters.

TELEPHONE SERVICE.

Chairman Richards of the Public Service committee then spoke of the poor telephone service that Quincy subscribers were getting. As soon as he started the subject several spoke of annoyances that they had experienced. These consisted of long waits for central to answer their calls. Their trouble in getting central to anwer after the first call had been completed. Of repeatedly being called to the telephone only to be told that they had been called by mistake.

Still another complaint and one that several had experienced was that of being called up late in the afternoon and told by the party calling them that they had tried sevral times to get them and had been told by the operator that they did not answer. One gentleman said that on one occasion that he was close to his telephone all day and not once did the bell ring, but that late in the day he had been told by a friend that the operator had told him several times that the party called did not answer. Representative Leslie told of an experience he had in trying to get a party at Norfolk Downs and that it took twenty minutes to get the connection.

After the question had been thoroughly aired, the secretary was instructed to communicate with the officials at Milk street and ask that an investigation of the Quincy service should be made.

ELECTRIC LIGHT RATES.

It was announced that a hearing would soon be held by the Gas and Electric Light Commission on the complaint of the Board of Trade, and the secretary was instructed to call a meeting of the committee for Saturday evening that it might prepare its case for presentation to the Commissioners when the hearing was held.

VOTE OF THANKS.

A communication was received from the Granite Manufacturers Association thanking the Board for the entertainment which it had given the granite convention delegates. Placed on file.

QUINCY BILLS.

Representattve Leslie told of what had been done in the legislature this year for Quincy. There had been twenty Quincy bills presented and the Board of Trade had two. One of these was the bath house at the Quincy Shore Reservation which had been canned, and the new bridge over Neponset river at Granite avenue which had passed. He also spoke of the appropriation of a million dollars for boulevards of which sum $200,000 was to be expended each year. Quincy would get $100,000 of this sum but when it would be expended was wholly within the scope of the commission.

GRADE CROSSINGS.

A communication was received from the Public Service Commission relative to the abolition of grade crossings in Quincy. The communication stated that if another hearing or conference was held the Board would be notified.

DUST NUISANCE.

The secretary reported that in reply to the request made by the Board to the railroad that the dust nuisance at the Quincy stations be abated by rock ballasting at stations, the railroad said that it was doing all it could in this line. That when the four tracks were built the road would be rock ballasted.

SMOKE NUISANCE.

A communication was received from the Wollaston Improvement association relative to the smoke nuisance. After some little discussion the secretary was instructed to write the railroad to see what it could do toward eliminating the nuisance.

THE NEW INDUSTRIAL SCHOOL

Students Must be 16 Years of Age

Will Use Adams School

The industrial shcool will open its session on Monday, Sept. 15. For a few weeks, or until it is possible to move to the old Adams school building, the work will be carried on in the High school hall. After that time, two rooms in the Adams building will be utilized.

While the school opened last year with a registration of 32, the enrollment for the present is already 76 or more than double. Additional trades have been added and one new instructor, Roland Linfield of Quincy, has been appointed.

Many boys cannot enter this year because they have not attained their 16th year. Under the new labor law, boys below that age are not allowed to work near certain machines that would be used in this department. Many of the boys have gone to High school to await a transfer.

The Advisory Committee on Industrail Education will soon recommend to the School Committee and to the city, the introduction of a new all-day industrial course, to precede the half time course. Such a course will have the following advantages; It will give the waiting boys work in accord with their tastes, thereby keeping them in line for a vocation such as they desire, it will relieve the threatened congestion at the High school by utilizing the old Adams school to its full capacity, and it will be less expensive than the High school and more economical for the city because the state will bear half the expense.

ELLIS—WILBUR.

MINISTER ASSAULTED

Rev. J. E. Lillback Roughly Handled by Fanatic

A fanatic, shouting at the top of his voice that he would rid the earth of all ministers, assaulted Rev. John E. Lillback of Quincy at the home of his mother at Worcester on Wednesday evening. The assault occurred about 11 o'clock in the kitchen, and followed the statement of the infuriated fanatic that he was willing to determine religious issues by debate or fight.

When the man entered the home, which is on the third floor, he asked for a drink of water. Mrs. Lillback gladly complied with his request and after he had quaffed it he turned in the direction of Rev. Mr. Lillback and hurled verbal abuse at him in showers. Others in the house remonstrated and escorted him to the street floor.

Believing however that he had a message from God to exterpate ministers in general he re-entered the home by the back stairs and immediately grappled with Rev. Mr. Lillback. To protect himself Mr. Lillback retaliated and after several minutes rough and tumble fighting the man ran to the street. Mr. Lillback was uninjured but his clothing was ripped and his shirt almost torn off his back.

While the police were being summoned the man dissappeared, but a good description has been furnished and his apprehension is expected hourly.

The assault caused much excitement in the neighborhood and the news quickly spread that a minister had been assaulted in his home by a wild man. Nearly all of the people in the vicinity attempted to help the officers in rounding up the assailant.

Rev. Mr. Lillback was in Worcester attending the state conference of the Finnish Congregational churches, at which preparations were made for the opening of the Theological school at Chicago, Ill., on Sept. 24. Teachers were appointed, registration of pupils approved and plans made for the years work. He returned to Quincy this morning.

The police arrested a man on suspicion as being the party who had attempted to stab Mr. Lillback, and brought him to the house. Mr. Lillback however said that he was not the man. The man who committed the assault is said to have a bad reputation. He is known as a fighter, and has been in frequent stabbing affairs and has served time in prison for stabbing a man. Mr. Lillback said that it would take more than a stab wound to kill him.

Mrs. John Michael and daughter Isabelle, are visiting friends in Milford, N. H.

LARGE INCREASE IN SCHOOL ATTENDANCE

High School Now Has 868 a Gain of 106 Over Last September

Coddington and Washington Next in Gain

A gain of 106 in the attendance at High school over the corresponding date of last year is one of the returns received by Superintendent Barbour at the general teachers meeting held Wednesday afternoon. The enrollment at the several schools of the city, together with the change from last year is as follows:

Adams	327	Loss	23
Atherton Hough	185	Loss	2
Coddington	502	Gain	42
Cranch	314	Loss	3
Gridley Bryant	239	Loss	20
John Hancock	322	Gain	17
Lincoln	426	Gain	22
Mass. Fields	366	Gain	9
Montclair	250	Gain	16
Quincy	425	Gain	20
Washington	482	Gain	38
Willard	772	Gain	6
Wollaston	380	Gain	28
High School	868	Gain	106
Total	5858	Gain	256

This is the largest gain in school attendance in any recent year, and is due principally to the recent change in the labor laws which compel attendance in the upper grades and has probably had some effect this year.

Another factor is that the Woodward Institute can no longer increase in numbers because it has reached the limit of its accommodations and the measures taken to keep the attendance within bounds has no doubt added about 30 to the High school attendance.

Still another factor arises from the introduction of the Industrial school. Many boys have entered the High school to await an opportunity to transfer to the Industrial school at 16 years of age, who without, this incentive would have left school and secured employment.

Another cause of the record growth is due to the general recognition of the general excellence of the schools in all departments, its well rounded business course, its opportunities in manual training and domestic science and its growing field as a preparatory school. It will be of interest to record that of the last graduating class one was given admission to Harvard, one to Radcliffe, two to the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, three to Boston University, one to Dartmouth, one to Simmons, one to Harvard Dental and 11 to State Normal schools.

Although the general effect of this great increase at the High has been to increase the size of all classes, the School Committee has employed one additional teacher and is now occupying every room in the building. What wil happen from two or three more increases like that of the present year can easily be foreseen.

It must throw a coolness over eugenic courtship when grandfather complains of the rheumatiz!

So far no one has asked leave to reprint the Encyclopaedia Brittanica in the Congressional Record, but about everything else has gone in.

Harry Thaw is trying to win the favor of the press by issuing statements but he takes a different course when he wants the help of the lawyers.

Even after reading about the Diggs-Caminetti cases, there are some women who will find fault because their husband falls asleep in the parlor and always wants to go home at 9 o'clock.

It is not probable that Uncle Reuben would go to the poorhouse, even if he quit work Labor day and went to the ball game with the boys.

A great many automobilists are being run over at railroad crossings, but any way they did not expose themselves to ridicule by the bystanders through waiting for the trains to pass.

ONE'S TRUNK.

Getting yourself and your clothes to your destination at the same time has always been one of the problems of the summer tourists. Prudent people pack their wardrobes a day or two in advance, pay an extra carriage charge and send their trunk ahead. Naturally on arriving at ones' destination, one likes to have something more than night clothes and a tooth brush.

Recently some of the railroads, alleging compliance with a ruling of the Interstate Commerce Commission, made the regulation that the passenger must travel with the trunk.

The inevitable result has been that baggage comes late, women must appear in hotel parlors or at the home of friends in soiled travelling clothes, and a man's suit must serve alike for the tennis court and for church. Probably a good many nimble coins have to be distributed at junction points and stations. In a time when railroads are the subject of hostile criticism, this is not exactly the way to make friends and at least one leading railroad has rescinded such an order.

HEALTH FOR CHILDREN.

When the school pupil complains of headache, one's first thought is that a ball game is about to begin somewhere, or that there has been a chance to go on a picnic. Still the statisticians do say that there is an enormous amount of ill health among the children.

One writer says that in one recent school term, 16,000 children left their desks in five American cities, because of diseases and poor health. With facts like these to work on, the fourth international Congress of School Hygiene, in session at New York the past week, should be something more than a gathering of faddists.

Ready made ventilation is supposed to be provided in a "modern school house." Yet the complaint is still heard from many artificially ventilated buildings, that the air feels as if it were baked, and the children still have headaches.

The old time school, if it was gifted with an alert teacher, often seemed to fare quite as well. She would have a thorough cleaning out of foul air about every hour. If the weather was cold, the children marched around the room, and returned to their books with fresh energy.

Several years ago many thousands of New York children could attend school only half a day, on account of crowded buildings. A scientist invsetigated and found that the "half timers" made better progress than those who attended all day.

Clean habits mean a great deal. From the sediment from a drinking cup in one school, an injection was made into the skin of a healthy guinea pig, and he died in 40 hours.

Let it be hoped that this world wide gathering of school hygienists has some practical suggestions to prevent the costly interruption of school work by diseases and anaemia. The tax payers don't get any return on their money while the doctors and the nurses have the children.

BOYS PERFORM GREAT SERVICE

Give Good Account of Themselves In Great Wreck

A RESULT OF CAMP TRAINING

Three Score In Overturned Car, of Whom One Boy and an Instructor Meet Death—Many Lives Saved by Heroic Action of Three Who Escaped In Connecticut Crash

New York, Sept. 4.—Only last Saturday fifty-eight boys at a camp in Maine received the last of a series of lessons in first aid to persons injured and dying. They tore up bandages and made improvised splints for make-believe injured persons and carried them off on cots from an imaginary scene of catastrophe.

These boys, bound for their homes in this and adjoining cities, were brought face to face with a real disaster when the White Mountain express crashed into the train on which they were passengers. The boys proved equal to the emergency. Not only did the they give assistance to their own friends who were injured, but they went among the distressed and dying in other cases without flinching.

The remarkable work of the boys was due largely to Harry R. Mooney, director of the Cobbossee camp at Monmouth, Me., who was in charge at the camp and who accompanied them on the train. He was among the first to realize the extent of the accident, and on his call to the boys to remain cool and maintain discipline they went about the relief work like seasoned soldiers.

Besides the boys there were twenty others in Mooney's party. He chartered a special car for the boys and other members of the party were in other reservations.

When the Bar Harbor express came to a stop early in the morning three boys who had found it impossible to sleep were up and about on a boyish exploration. They were Walter Shuster, 16 years old; Edgar Bauman, 13, and Joseph Hennessy, 15. The three were standing on the front platform of the second car from the rear. The doors of the Pullman car leading to the ground were open and a brakeman was on the ground pacing nervously up and down. Suddenly the brakeman turned to the boys and shouted: "Look out, boys—jump!"

Then he turned and ran toward the end of the train. Schuster gave Bauman a shove that sent him headlong off the car and sprawling on the ground. He jumped after Bauman, only hesitating a second to shout to Hennessy to follow.

As he looked back Schuster said he saw the train coming at terrific speed. He ran farther down the embankment, beckoning to his companions to follow. They stood dumfounded, unable even to give a cry, he said, as they waited for the trains to crash.

Splinters were still flying, the air was full of smoke and the place covered with debris when they made their way back to the train.

Mooney was asleep in the private car Chisholm, the third car from the rear and the one overturned when the accident occurred. He was awakened by the crashing glass. He found his companion, Bert Strock, who had been sleeping at his side, with his arm extending through a window of the car. Stains covered Strock's arm. Mooney saw that an artery had been severed in Strock's right arm. Mooney tore a strip from the sheet on their bed and quickly made a bandage for the injured man.

Mooney then assisted him to the rear of the overturned car. There he found the passage had been blocked through the end being battered into splinters. Slowly they picked their way to the other end, seeking a way out. Luggage piled high in the turn of the car, together with a mass of debris, blocked their progress. All this time Mooney kept admonishing the boys in the car to keep cool. Finally two windows were broken, and Mooney and two of the boys were assisted out.

On top of the car they found the three boys who had escaped injury by jumping. Mooney saw the first little fellow scramble over the side of the car the moment he put his head through the broken window. He heard the boy cry to his companions and the next moment two other forms appeared over the side.

"Come on, fellows," shouted the first boy on top of the car, "here's a place to get our fellows out."

The next fifteen minutes were spent in rescue work that was marked by trying moments. There were times when boys below were delayed in appearing, and as only a few had been taken out, the boys above knew there were fifty others in the car. The suspense was beginning to tell on the boys when adults put in an appearance and assited in the work.

Not until the last boy was taken out and accounted for did they quit their work. Then they turned to assisting less fortunate persons in the debris of the two rear cars.

"In our party," said Mooney, "were three Altschul boys, the sons of Benjamin Altschul of Norfolk, Va. William, the eldest, 16, was the only one of our boys killed, although one of the instructors, Albert Green, met death."

DEPENDENT MOTHERS

New State Laws Says Cities Shall Aid

One of the most important new laws of the Legislature of 1913 went into effect Sept 1, "to provide for suitably aiding mothers with dependent children." While it will entail large expense upon towns, cities and the state, it is thought that it will to a large extent prove a practical solvent of a serious social problem.

The first two sections of the new law are printed in full:

"Section 1—In every city and town the Overseers of the Poor shall subject to the provisions of the subsequent sections of this act, aid mothers with dependent children under fourteen years of age, if such mothers are fit to bring up their children. The aid furnished shall be sufficient to enable the mothers to bring up their children properly in their own homes; and such mothers and their children shall not be deemed to be paupers by reason of receiving aid as foresaid.

"Section 2—Before aiding any mother under the foregoing section, except as hereinafter provided, the overseers of the poor shall determine that the mother it fit to bring up her children and that the other members of the household and the surroundings of the home are such as to make for good character, and that aid from the overseers is necessary to enable her to bring up her children properly, by making an immediate and careful inquiry including the resources of the family and the ability of its other members, if any, to work or otherwise contribute to its support, the existence of relatives able to assist the family, and of individuals, societies or agencies who may be interested therein; shall take all lawful means to compel all persons bound to support the mother and children to support them and to enforce any other legal rights for their benefit; shall press all members of the family who are able to work, other than the mother and her dependent children, to secure work; shall try to secure work for them; and shall secure all necessary aid for the mother and children which can be secured from relatives, organizations or individuals. Nothing herein contained shall be construed to prevent the overseers from giving prompt and suitable temporary aid hereunder, pending compliance with the requirements of this section, when in their opinion such aid is necessary and cannot be obtained from other sources. A detailed statement of expenses incurred under this section shall be rendered to the state board of charity, together with such certificates or other guarantees as the said board may require."

"Section 6—In respect to all mothers in receipt of aid hereunder the city or town rendering the aid shall be reimbursed by the commonwealth, after approval of the bills by the state board of charity, for one third of the amount of the aid given. If the mother so aided has no settlement, the city or town shall bereimbursed for the total amount of the aid given, after approval of the bills by the state board of charity as foresaid. If the mother so aided has a lawful settlement in another city or town two thirds of the amount of such aid given may be recovered in an action of contract against the city or town liable therefor in accordance with the provisions of chapter eighty-one of the Revised Laws and cats in amendment thereof and in addition thereto.

There are nine sections in the act, known as Chapter 763, printed in the Acts and Resolves providing for visits, supervision, etc. Mrs. Robert E. Park of Wollaston was prominent in securing the passage of the act.

The Boston Transcript says editorially:

"Of course the direction of public philanthropy into such a channel cannot be intelligently judged until it has has a practical trial. The justification of the measures, like all other new measures, must depend on results. If there is any truth in the trite saying that "the place of the woman is the home" it fits more closely the mother of dependent children than the woman in almost any other relation. She is their natural guartian as well as the enforced provider for their needs. She must neglect one function or the other. It is beyond her powers to meet both responsibilities as they should be met. By the nature of the case she must neglect what in the final equation may be the more important duty. First they must be fed and clothed, and when these requirements have been met she has little strength and spirit left for training or restraint."

THAW IS RUSHED TO THE BORDER

To Be Thrust Across as an Undesirable Citizen

IS DECLARED A FREE MAN

Beginning of End of Refuge In Canada Comes With Dramatic Swiftness—Action of Immigration Officials Expected to Speedily Land Fugitive Back In Matteawan Asylum

Coaticook, Que., Sept. 4.—Harry K. Thaw, pried out of the Sherbrooke jail on a writ of habeas corpus obtained by William T. Jerome, enjoyed three minutes of liberty and was then seized by the dominion immigration authorities and hustled by automobile to this little town.

Today a special board of inquiry will sit in his case, and by night he may be thrust across the Vermont border as an undesirable alien. His lawyers have planned no procedure to resist extradition to New York, and the belief is current that before many hours Thaw will be back in Matteawan asylum for the criminal insane, from which he escaped on Aug. 17.

The beginning of the end of Thaw's refuge in Canada came with dramatic swiftness. A writ of habeas corpus, sued out at the direction of Jerome, with John Boudreau, chief of police of this village, as petitioner, was sustained by Matthew Hutchinson, superior judge of the district of St. Francis, sitting in chambers at Sherbrooke.

Stolid, pallid, numb, Thaw sat not five feet from the judge as he read. When, in the very last paragraph, the court declared him a free man, whether he desired liberty or not, Thaw seemed to crumple up on the lounge where he sat.

But he did not rise. W. W. McKeown of his counsel leaned over and, patting him on the shoulder, whispered. Thaw raised his big staring eyes and stood up. Immigration officers in the room, headed by E. B. Robertson, assistant superintendent, moved near him, and then Thaw began slowly to move to the door. At the threshold Roberston said simply: "Come with us, Mr. Thaw." And without a word except a hoarse goodbye to the reporters, Thaw obeyed.

Five minutes later a gray roadster streaked away from the courthouse. In the back seat was Thaw. He had not even been given time to pack his scanty belongings and voluminous correspondence in his cell. In an hour he was back in Coaticook, guarded in the immigration detention room by two stalwart dominion police. None but counsel was allowed to see him.

The twenty-two-mile trip was without special incident. Behind Thaw trailed his defeated lawyers. W. L. Shurtleff, the first to arrive, issued this statement:

"If they have doctors all ready to pronounce Thaw insane, as I am informed they have, there is almost no hope of preventing his immediate deportation. I believe if we could find a way to get the case into the courts we would have a good chance to prove this immigration act unconstitutional."

Dr. Kieb, superintendent of Matteawan, followed Mr. Jerome and will doubtless be called to testify as to Thaw's detention in an institution for the insane.

A quick verdict is expected. The New York authorities have arranged everything on the other side of the border, even down to distributing deputy sheriffs and automobiles. It would not surprise Thaw's lawyers, if he, once across the line, were put bodily into a car and headed straight for the New York line.

"THE UNWRITTEN LAW"

Recognized In Korea In Case of American Convicted of Manslaughter

Seoul, Sept. 4.—Suspension of the sentence of eighteen months' penal servitude pronounced on Mr. Mason, American manager of the gold mines at Un-San, on a charge of manslaughter, was ordered as a result of the prisoner's appeal.

At the trial Mason pleaded the "unwritten law" in defending himself against the charge of killing a Chinese who had committed a criminal assault on his 12-year-old daughter.

The suspension of the sentence is regarded as equivalent to an acquittal.

Alfonso Saves Life of Assailant

Madrid, Sept. 4.—King Alfonso commuted the sentences of six prisoners who had been condemned to death to imprisonment for life. Among them was Rafael S. Allegro, who fired three shots at the king in an attempt to assassinate him on April 13 last.

Rothschild Blackmailer Sentenced

London, Sept. 4.—Heinrich Kremerskoten, a German clerk, was sentenced to fifteen months' hard labor on a charge of attempting to blackmail Lord Rothschild. He had threatened to murder Rothschild unless given $150,000.

Fall Kills Railroad Fireman

Boston, Sept. 4.—Richard O'Keefe, 35, employed as a fireman by the New Haven road, fell from the cab of his engine while passing through the Back Bay station and landed on his head. He died in a few minutes.

THOMAS CRANE PUBLIC LIBRARY

How to Use the Card Catalogue at Library

The continuous question asked the Library asistants concerning the use of the card catalogue suggests the publication of the following brief outline of the main principles of the catalogue.

First of all there is just one alphabetical file beginning with "A" and ending with "Z". A book is represented in this alphabet in a number of places. 1st, every book is filed by its author, as, using Jack London's War of the Classes for an example, London, Jack, and on this author card is found the full title, the date and place of publication, the illustrations, maps, diagrams, etc.

2nd,—almost every book has a title card; as, War of the Classes.

3d,—non fiction appears under the subject, or subjects, of which the book treats; as in our example, Socialism.

All fiction has a title card. The only places where title cards are omitted, are in non fiction where the title and the subject of a book are identical; or, where the title begins "Life of," "Story of," and similar first words also, where the title is a personal name, i. e., "Abraham Lincoln" would have no title card under Abraham, but would be filed under Lincoln, Abraham.

In case an author, place, title, and subject begin with the same word, they are filed in this order, person, place, subject, title, i. e.,

London, Jack
London, Description, travels, etc.
London, Tower of London and its environs

This is one of the few cases where the alphabet is not followed. Another is in the case of works by and about an author. Here all works by an author are filed alphabetically before the works about him. The latter are filed alphabetically by biographer directly back of his own works.

Another case is in filing history subjects. Here a country's history is filed chronologicaly by subject, and then alphabetically by author under each subject.

The often maligned cross-references really serve an exceedingly useful purpose. They refer from one of two subjects of practically the same meaning to the other; as, Consumption See Tuberculosis; or, from a large subject to a minor one, and vice versa; as, Birds See also Nests, and Nests See also Birds. Then there are references from an author's pseudonym to his real name, and vice versa, and from a woman's maiden name to her married name, if she has written under both, and vice versa, etc. This Library uses an author's best known name.

The main things to remember in consulting the cards, are 1st, that there is just one alphabetical file for all books, and 2nd, to go directly to the exact author, title, or subject you want. If you don't find what you are looking for under the subjects you are consulting, glance over the cross reference card filed directly in front of that subject, and see if you don't find a better subject to consult, there.

As some one has expressed it, the aim of the cataloguer is to make the catalogue "an encyclopedic bibliography of the resources of the Library."

—It is estimated that members of the Thaw family have spent nearly a million dollars defending Harry and trying to secure his liberation. Only think, with a million dollars, what a lot of good they might have done!—Somerville Journal.

Boston, Sept. 4.—The salaries paid to Elevated officials were made public when John P. Feeney, chief counsel for the carmen, announced them to the special board of arbitration, despite the request of lawyers for the road, when they presented the list, that he keep the amounts secret. The salaries as read by Feeney are as follows:

BERRIES AND SMALL FRUITS.

By George French.

When one says berries the first thought is of strawberries. Let us remember all the time that the successful culture of strawberries in New England is the work of the man who has become a strawberry expert, and that success also depends upon having the right sort of land and being near to a good market. In New England the native strawberry, to be a profitable crop, must be different from those brought to the market from a distance. In Boston, and all large New England cities and towns, the strawberry is in the market from growers are learning to produce fall Christmas to August, and now that crops, to well into September. The berry is not ,therefore, per se, a table rarity. The varieties that are shipped to the New England markets from southern Florida, and along up the the Atlantic region to Jersey, and even into Connecticut and Rhode Island, must be such as can be packed and shipped, and retain their shape and flavor for from two days to a week. Now the strawberry as- is a straw berry, 100 per cent, plus, cannot be shipped long distances, and must be eaten not later than the day after it is picked. Moreover, it must be ripened on the vine. It is for these reasons that for New England tables and palates the berries grown within two or three hours of the consumers' tables are those that New England growers should raise, and do raise.

There is nothing to be had in the way of strawberries, anywhere, equal to the wild berries found in all the New England states, in smaller or larger quantities but in Maine and New Hampshire in large quantities. These cannot be shipped at all, and can only be carried short distances. They must be eaten the day they are picked. Therefore they are local delicacies. They are not an article of commerce, and they do not figure as a source of dependable wealth.

Next to the native wild berries, as luscious fruit that can be found in nearly all New England markets for a short season, are such berries as are supplied to the Boston markets from Marshfield, and a few other towns. These are large, red, ripe, luscious fruit fit for the tables of kings of beggars. They get to the eaters when they are in the best condition. They are the ne plus ultra of berries.

Are they profitable to raise? Note these few examples of profitable strawberry culture in New England. There are hundreds more. These are merely symtomatic: A shoemaker who realized that the confining work was eating into his constitution, with a wife and six children, bought two and a half acres of virgin land in Maine, has made a good living, educated his children, paid for his land and has a comfortable bank account, all from the little patch of a farm. He has raised rhubarb, strawberries, rasberries, currants, gooseberries and plums. All the family worked on this little farm, including father, and all profited. It is not a fit subject for a detailed financial statement, but for more than a quarter of a century it has taken care of the family, and something more.

Another Maine man has netted $1,000 a year off of one acre of strawberries. Another Maine man has, by growing cabbage between the rows of strawberries, got over $2,000 an acre, gross off of his berry patch. A Vermont man got over 5,000 quarts of strawberries off of a quarter of an acre, and sold them at an average of 15 cents a quart. This is a rate of $3,000 an acre. A Massachusetts man has taken $1,000 off of an acre of strawberries. A Vermont man got 1,100 bushels of strawberries off of four acres, 35,200 quarts, which means about $1,000 an acre, if he got a fairly good price for the berries.

A Boston market man went down into Norfolk county and bought a five-acre patch of land and is specializing with currants. He has 10,000 bushes, and they average around eight quarts. He gets from 15 to 25 cents a quart, the price varying for the varities. For white fruit he gets about 15 cents, for red he averages 20 cents, and for the black he gets 25 cents. His currant crop probably brings him a gross of around $16,000 a year. He also has a peach orchard, a lot of dwarf apple trees, which are very profitable, a lot of pear trees, rhubarb, raspberries, blackberries, and several kinds of garden truck. He is essentially an intensive farmer, and the casual observer would think that he was overcrowding his land, but he knows what he is about, and feeds the land for the work he demands from it. and gets. He is a very good example of a farmer who farms with the idea that the land can be made to produce about on the scale of the farmer's wishes and knowledge. As an example of this, there is a man who has a fairly large garden and uses one-fifth of it for blackberries, which he cultivates intensively. He gets 1,000 quarts a year, and averages not less than 10 cents a quart for them.

There is a Vermont man who believes in all kinds of fruit and berries He has a farm that his great-grandfather founded in 1780, bringing 75 small apple trees on his back from southern New Hampshire. At a recent fair this man had 200 varities of fruit and vegetables on display, 41 of which were apples. He has 2,500 fruit trees, with 80 varities of apples, 750 plum trees and 700 cherry trees. He had 2,000 small chestnut trees, some of which were discarded, but the majority used as a nucleus for a big chestnut orchard. He has several kinds of walnuts, with which he is experimenting. He has four acres of raspberries, and sells all the berries at 10 to 12 1-2 cents per pint, mostly to the 2,000 summer residents within a few miles of his farm. He also has 1,000 currant bushes. Apropos of this man's chestnuts, there is a man in New Hampshire who gets $500 a year from native chestnuts grown in his pasture.

A Masschusetts man raises currants and gooseberries, getting about 14 quarts a bush of the former, and a net of $400 an acre from the latter. A Vermont man has 600 plum trees, gets about two bushels from a tree and sells them at an average of $3 a bushel—$3,600 from the orchard. He has been doing this for 30 years; not getting $3,600 every year, but always getting good returns for the number of trees in bearing. A semi-invalid in Massachusetts worked one-fourth of an acre and raised small fruits and berries. His experience is on a small scale, of course, and he was able to work but a small portion of the time. Yet he produced 135 quarts of blackberries, 78 quarts of strawberries, 17 quarts of gooseberries, one quart of June berries 945 pints of raspberries, 113 pints of red currants, 69 pints of white currants, 57 pints of blueberries. This crop was worth about $185, reckoning the rate received for that portion sold. This means in the neighborhood of $750 an acre, gross.

These examples are drawn for the most part from the experiences of farmers who make no pretensions to expert knowledge have nothing special in the way of land, and no better market facilities than any New England farmer has. They are not as glowing as might easily be given. They are not drawn from the great market-garden regions, nor from the experience of the professional truck farmers.

CAMDEN PROUD OF HIM.

The Herald of Camden, Maine, says: "Henry Upton was a former Camden boy and one of whom we have been proud. He was a very successful teacher and a man of the highest character. He was 35 years old. The body was brought here and funeral services were held at the home of his sister Mrs. George Alexander, Wednesday afternoon, conducted by Mr. Richardson, Christian Science reader. Mr. Upton leaves a wife and three sisters, Mrs. George Alexander, Mrs. Percy Bishop and Miss Carrie Upton. The deceased had a wide circle of friends in Camden and in fact wherever he had lived. A man of cleanest living and high character interested in young people and always a strong influence for good among them."

BOY SCOUTS HOME.

Lion Patrol squad of Boy Scouts, composed of West Quincys boys, broke camp at Camp Chittenden on Sunday after an exciting week of adventure. The success of the outing has encouraged the boys to consider arrangements for a Maine camp next season. Harold Kidder of Copeland street acted as patrol leader, and Russell Johnson and Vanna Hilstrom were the camp cooks. Gunner Hilstrom, clam digger and official angler, kept a large supply on hand. Evenings were spent around the camp fire and all returned in good spirits with a healthy glow in their cheeks.

COMEDY AT KINCAIDES.

"A Day Off" a bright jovial comedy, which opened at Kincaide Theater this afternoon for three days run, is a National Inauguration farce. This piece is written around the conditions that exist during a Presidential inauguration. This is a splendid story offering many opportunities for refined comedy and exceptional possibilities for a cast of high class artists. It is a new theme splendidly handled by Mr. Ott and it is sure to be one of the big successes this season. The half tone illustrates some of the stars in the cast.

HIGH SCHOOL FOOTBALL

Practice Will Begin Next Monday with Good Prospects

The football season of the Quincy High school is scheduled for an early opening and first practice is called for Monday of next week. Although the candidates have not lined up as yet there is every reason to believe that this year's showing will better last years.

Clifton Young, who was on the line, has been chosen captain and with Messrs. Fuller and French of the faculty, will take active charge of the coaching and developing of the boys.

The team offers unusual promise since nine of last year's men are back and the new candidates number about 25. The 1912 men available are Paul Larkin, Fred Schenkleberger, Leon White, Hamlin, Young, Martin, Arthur and Jenkins. The average weight will be a little less than the last year's team.

The one noticeable drawback last season was the lack of interest taken in the team by the pupils and the general public. At no game did the gallery have a crowd equal to fair encouragement. This among other things cultivated a different spirit in the players, and it was only through the hardest possible work at one part of the season that the team played any kind of football.

STATE OFFICER ON INSPECTION

Assists Dr. Jones in Infantile Paralysis Cases

No new cases of infantile paralysis have been reported to the Board of Health. This morning Dr. Tenbroeck of the state board and Dr. Fred E. Jones of the local board viewed the remains of the Mullan child, the first patient to succumb in this epidemic.

They also made an investigation of the other cases and spent several hours trying to determine the mode of transmission. The efforts of their board to minimize further contagion will be continued and unless another case develops it will not be considered necessary to close the public schools in that district.

The body of the Mullan child will be taken to Worcester for burial Saturday in the limousine hearse of Albert W. Fay. The family resided there previous to coming to Quincy.

Tonight at the meeting of physicians with the Board of Health for the discussion of contagious hospitals some new facts may develop in connection with the epidemic which has come under the observation of resident doctors.

SURVIVES PLUNGE IN DEATH AIRSHIP

None of Judge's Bones Broken In Fall of Four Hundred Feet

Rutland, Vt., Sept. 4.—Judge J. D. Spellman, who was a passenger with Aviator George Schmidt when the latter's aeroplane plunged to earth at the Rutland fair, killing the pilot, is practically assured of recovery.

Although Judge Spellman was caught in the machine just as Schmidt was, he escaped without a broken bone after the 400-foot drop, and burns he received when his clothing caught fire from the wrecked engine were his principal injuries.

Schmidt, who although only 23 years old, had been flying five years, had promised his moher that he would give up flying when the fair closed. His mother and father saw him plunge to death.

TUNNEL OUT OF ASYLUM

Five Insane Patients Escape, but Two Are Recaptured

Middleboro, Mass., Sept. 4.—By tunneling under a fifteen-foot wall which surrounded a field where they were at work, five mildly insane prisoners at the state asylum here escaped. Two of them, Thomas Sullivan and John Melis were recaptured in Bridgewater last night.

The others, Dean Dempsey, Edward F. Russell and James O. Dolan are still at large. None of the trio is regarded as dangerously insane.

Panic In Comb Factory Fire

Leominster, Mass., Sept. 4.—Sixty women and men were in a panic when fire broke out at the comb factory of the Paton Manufacturing company. Emergency doors and fire escapes helped the people in getting out in safety, while many jumped out of the windows. Several received minor injuries. The fire was caused by a spark igniting a pile of celluloid.

Trusty Convicts Take Oath

Joliet, Ills., Sept. 4.—Forty-five trusty convicts, picked to form an open-air road working gang, took a solemn oath, unknown to the officials of the Illinois state prison, to deal summarily with any man who violates the trust imposed on them. The whispered ceremony was overheard by one of the convicts in the cell-house.

WILL CONSIDER EVERY FACTOR

Federal Investigation of Wreck Will Be Public

STAR CHAMBER PROCEEDING

Favored by Coroner, Who Says Nothing Will Be Gained by Open Inquest —Twenty-One Dead In New Haven Road Disaster and Five Likely to Die From Their Injuries

New Haven, Sept. 4.—The interstate commerce commission will begin a public inquiry here on Friday into the cause of the wreck of the Bar Harbor express, telescoped by the White Mountain express seven miles north of here, with a loss of twenty-one lives. Probably five of those injured will die.

The hearing will be conducted by Commissioner McChord, who has invited the public utilities commission of the state to sit with him, as has been the case at previous wreck hearings.

R. W. Belnap, inspector for the commission, arrived here and served notice on President Elliott of the New Haven road that he would expect the attendance at the hearing of all witnesses who could throw light on the causes of the wreck. Elliott said that all evidence that cound be gathered would be placed at its disposal.

This investigation will be one of the most thorough ever conducted into a wreck on the New Haven road," said Belnap, after a long distance telephone conversation with Commissioner McChord in Washington. "We are not only going into the causes of this wreck specifically, but we intend to bring to light the fundamental conditions of operation and executive management which may lie behind this remarkable fact that the New Haven has suffered from more wrecks than any other road in the United States in recent years.

"Our inquiry will go much deeper into these conditions than the inquiry into the wreck at Stamford last June. That had mainly to do with the personnel of employes and the question of adequate brakes. In this inquiry we shall look into the general operation of the road, into methods of running trains, schedules and neadway of trains, into the signal system and every other possible factor. We are going to the bottom in a most thorough manner. I have no doubt that the commission's action in the matter will be drastic."

Allowed to Burn Wreckage

Belnap denied that the New Haven had been guilty of disobeying the orders of the commission when it burned the wreckage. He explained that F. A. Howard, an inspector for the commission, after having made an investigation, released the wreckage to the railroad company Tuesday afternoon.

Meantime Coroner Mix will conduct a secret inquest. This will begin today behind closed doors. The coroner still persists in his refusal to give out the details of what he learned at the preliminary investigation which he began Tuesday. "I do not see that anything is gained by holding a public inquest," said Mix. "I have not followed that rule. Unless there be some particular reason, I do not propose to change my practice. I do not care how Coroner Phelan at the Stamford wreck conducted his inquest. I believe that I accomplish more by not subjecting witnesses to the trying experience of a public hearing."

Under the state law a coroner has the right to hold a private inquest. In the recent wrecks at Westport and Stamford Coroner Phelan of Fairfield county held open sessions. If Mix does not change his plan it will be unlikely that details of his probe will be known until the finding is filed with the superior court.

The revised list of dead stands at twenty-one and five of the seventeen injured in hospitals are likely to die. Many inquiries have come for persons supposedly missing, but the undertakers to whom bodies were distributed by the coroner have had a total of twenty-one, indicating that this is the entire death list.

BANK WAS VICTIM ZED

Watchmaker Guilty of Larceny From Chelsea Institution

Boston, Sept. 4.—Jacob Watchmaker of Revere was found guilty in the Chelsea court on a charge of larceny of $500 from the Broadway National bank of Chelsea. Behind the charges are allegations that Watchmaker obtained large sums from a number of banks in Greater Boston.

It was testified that Watchmaker sought to establish a credit of $10,000 with the Broadway bank, and to be allowed to discount notes given him for money loaned on stocks of goods.

The prosecution declared that Watchmaker represented the notes as safe business notes, that he assured the bank that goods were in storage but had not been found, that he had goods and real estate worth $175,000 and that he had got money from banks in Boston and Cambridge on similar statements.

VOTE TO END STRIKE

Blower Works Employes Return to Work on Foss' Terms

Boston, Sept. 4.—The strike of the 1200 workers in the Sturtevant Blower Works at Hyde Park is over as the result of a vote taken in a fiercely contested meeting of the strikers last night.

The men who comprise six-sevenths of the whole number out will present themselves at the plant to go to work according to the offer made by Governor Foss two weeks ago.

The 200 strikers at the Becker machine shop will not return to work. They fought out the matter and decided not to accept the terms of settlement offered by the company.

According to the offer made by Foss the strikers get no guaranteed concessions excepting his word that the better class of workmen will be paid more money.

The MacTavish Mystery

It Occurred on Long Island In Colony Days.

By F. A. MITCHEL

In the olden time when New York was called New Amsterdam, when the rotund Dutchmen of Manhattan, increasing and multiplying, were spreading eastward on Long Island, meeting the lean Yankee, also increasing and multiplying, from Connecticut, there lived on that coast a family named MacTavish, but recently arrived from bonny Scotland. Long Island in those days was not crowded with settlers, and the Indians were getting scarce.

The MacTavish family lived a lonely life, their home being built on rising ground overlooking the ocean. All day long they listened to the waves rolling in on the sand and watched the gulls hovering over the water, every now and again descending to pounce upon some luckless fish. Farther out on the horizon at rare intervals a sail would appear and while passing served to lessen somewhat the loneliness, for, though they could see only a spot of white canvas, they knew that there were living human beings there.

MacTavish was both farmer and fisherman, giving his personal attention to the latter, while his wife and his eldest son, Alex, attended to the former. The bulk of the product both of the farm and the nets was consumed by the family, but MacTavish would occasionally in summer sail to New Amsterdam with a load of vegetables and when the weather was cold enough to transport fish would carry his hauls to the same market.

One autumn he bade goodby to his wife and children, intending to take a cargo of potatoes and other vegetables to Manhattan. They watched him sail out of the inlet where he kept his boat and, riding the waves, grow less and less in the distance till at last they could see him no longer. Then Dame MacTavish gathered her children about her in the house, as she always did when her husband went on his trips, to keep off the loneliness that persisted in stalking in as he sailed away.

MacTavish was usually absent a week, sometimes more, sometimes less. A week passed, and his family began to look for his return. One, two, three days more elapsed, and they saw nothing of him. When two weeks had gone by and he did not appear his wife began to worry, for he had told her to look for him in from a week to ten days. Still another week slipped by and no sign of the father of the family.

Mrs. MacTavish, now thoroughly alarmed, determined to go to New Amsterdam to learn if her husband had been there. Her only route was by land, and in those days there was no public conveyance. So the family horse was saddled, saddlebags were put on him, containing, besides clothing, a stock of provisions, and leaving Alex, a boy of sixteen, in charge of the other children, she sallied forth on her quest.

Having reached the bank of the East river, leaving her horse, she was ferried across and proceeded to the house of Dietrich Van Vorst, who she knew was accustomed to buy her husband's produce. There she met with a shock. Van Vorst told her that he had seen nothing of her husband. Had MacTavish been there Van Vorst would undoubtedly have seen him, for the town was then a mere cluster of houses gathered about the Battery.

Mrs. MacTavish, though without hope of receiving a different answer, asked others the same question. No one had seen MacTavish. What had become of him? The weather had been fair at New Amsterdam and at the MacTavish home. There could have been no storm to swamp the little boat, nor had there been any fog. The disappearance of the husband and father was a mystery.

There was nothing for the poor woman to do but go back to her home and wait. She started, hoping that she might find her husband there on her arrival. She was disappointed. He had neither come nor sent any word.

Every day that passed added to the discouragement of the mother and her children. One day, a month after MacTavish had sailed away, a neighbor living some ten miles eastward of the MacTavishes went to New Amsterdam. Hearing that he was going, she sent to him requesting him to make inquiries in the town with a view of getting news of her husband. The traveler returned and said that a British ship had arrived and reported having seen off Sandy Hook a deserted fishing smack, with nothing whatever in her except a few scattered potatoes and onions. She was not considered worth bringing in and left where she was. When last seen she was drifting southward along the New Jersey coast.

It was believed that this was MacTavish's boat. If so he must be alive. But why had he deserted her? What had he done with his stock of vegetables? And why had he not returned to his home? In these days men's disappearances are usually attributed to a woman's influence, and the missing man's accounts are investigated. But at that time the women were all married and settled in their homes when very young, and their time was all spent in taking care of their numerous progeny. As to funds, MacTavish had only what his cargo of vegetables would bring, a matter of about $20 in the currency of the present day. Moreover, Mrs. MacTavish was as sure of her husband's affection for her and his children as she was of the rising and the falling of the tide. After the finding of the fishing smack she believed that he was alive. What was keeping him away from her she could not know, but she believed that some day he would return to her. He might do so when she was away, and in this case she wished that he might find everything in condition for his reception. He had always occupied a bedroom alone. His wife kept his room just as it was when he went away so that should he return at night it would be ready for him. Whether her comfort was at the bottom of her action is uncertain. It is likely that the poor woman was trying to comfort herself in knowing that his room was as it had always been and in thinking that it would in time be again occupied.

Two years passed, and not a word was heard from MacTavish. Then one day the family on Long Island received a terrible scare. Toward evening of an autumn day a sail was seen to the westward, much nearer the coast than it was usual for ships to pass. As it came nearer its hull was seen to be very low and its masts very high, enabling it to carry a large amount of canvas. It floated no flag.

These were the days of the buccaneers, whose depredations were largely on the Spanish main intercepting galleons laden with gold from the mines of Mexico, but not averse to attacking any merchantman worth making a prize or ravaging a craft. Long Island had received one or two such visitors, though there was scarcely enough plunder among the scattered settlers to make a landing worth while.

The fears of the MacTavish family were confirmed by seeing a horseman come dashing eastward, who passed the house without stopping, shouting: "A pirate! She's coming up the coast! Go inland as quick as you can!"

Mrs. MacTavish cast a glance at the rakish vessel and, gathering the few valuables of small compass she possessed and taking her children, ran as fast as possible and kept running until she had put several miles between them all and the coast. Coming to a thicket, she entered it, and, sinking on the ground, the family occupied themselves in regaining their exhausted breath.

They remained there the rest of the day. At evening they saw from their hiding place the man who had warned them and called to him. He was looking for them to tell them that he had seen a man dressed in the fashion of a buccaneer on their farm. A fog had rolled in from the ocean and enveloped the pirate ship. They should make sure that the pirate he had seen was not there before they returned. Then he rode away.

Mrs. MacTavish kept her children in the thicket till late that night. Then they began to cry for food, and she concluded to take them to a point near the farm, leave them there and go forward herself to reconnoiter. It was after midnight when she came to a clump of trees a short distance from her house. Leaving the children in care of Alex, she stole forward. There was no sound except the splashing of the waves on the beach beyond nor sign of any one within the building. The fog had cleared away, and the moon in the third quarter shone brightly. Entering the house, she listened. The door of her husband's room was open, and she heard some one breathing in sleep. Tiptoeing to where she could get a view of the chamber, she looked inside. A man was sleeping in the bed.

She drew back. Clothes were on a chair—clothes that she recognized as a pirate's garb. Several pistols and knives lay on a table. The man in the bed must be the pirate who had been seen in the place. She was about to retire in terror when, casting a glance at the buccaneer's face, lighted by the moon, something in it reminded her of her husband. Advancing to get a nearer view, she struck a chair. The man opened his eyes.

"Mary!" he exclaimed, and, throwing off the covers and jumping out of bed, he clasped her in his arms.

Her thought that her husband might return when she was away and find his room ready for him was realized.

After the children had been brought in and the younger ones had been embraced by their father and put to bed MacTavish told his story. On his voyage to New Amsterdam he had been met by a buccaneer, who appropriated his vegetables and gave him the option of joining the pirate crew or walking the plank. He had chosen the former alternative, hoping eventually to make his escape. After he had lived a dreadful life in the West Indies for two years the buccaneer sailed for the north. She passed the Long Island coast and sent boats ashore to loot the settlers and gather provisions. MacTavish had been in one of the boats, and the coming of the fog enabled him to get away from his companions under its cover. The ship had sailed without him, and finding his home deserted, as was to be expected on account of the vicinity of the buccaneer, he had decided to go to bed and await the return of his family.

There was a long period of rejoicing in the MacTavish family at the return of the husband and father, and that was the last of his taking his produce to the city by water.

Mrs. MacTavish lived to be an old woman, and to the day of her death when any one of the family was away from home she would keep the absent one's room ready that it might be occupied by its accustomed inmate. There were frequent departures, but no one of the family ever returned in a pirate's garb.

THE HUSBANDS OF EDITH

By GEORGE BARR M'CUTCHEON

The young couple returning by the lower road from the schloss came to a resting place at a little eating house and garden on the hillside overlooking the river Inn. It is a quiet, demure, unfrequented place among the crags, standing in from the white roadway a hundred feet or more, clouded by gorgeous trees and somber cliffs. It was to this charming, romantic retreat that Brock led his fair, now tremulous inamorata. She, too, knew that the hour for decision had come. It was in the air, in the glint of his eyes, in the leaping of her heart. And she knew what she would say to him and what they would say to the world a few hours hence. The mountains seemed to have lost their splendid frown. They were beaming down upon her, tenderly caressing instead of bleak and foreboding as they always had been before.

A rosy cheeked girl came into the garden to serve them. Swift, cool breezes were spurring down the valley, bearing in their wake the soft rain clouds that were soon to drench the earth and then radiantly pass on. They were quite alone, seated in the shelter of a wide, overhanging portico. A soft, green darkness was creeping over the mountain side, pregnant with smell of the shower.

Constance ordered tea and a bite of something to eat for both. Brock's gaze never left her exquisite face while she was engaged in the pretty but rather self conscious occupation of instructing the waitress. After the girl had departed, he leaned forward across the little table and said, a trifle hoarsely and disjointedly:

"It was most appetizing to watch you do that. I could live forever on nothing but tea and sandwiches if you were to order them."

"You've said a great many silly things to me this afternoon."

"I wonder"—he stopped and lowered his voice—"I wonder if you would call it silly if I were to tell you that I love you, very, very much." His gloved hand dropped upon hers as she fumbled aimlessly with the menu card, something in the very helplessness of that long, slim hand drew the strength of all his love toward it—all of this confident, arrogant love that had come to be so sure of itself in these last days. His gray eyes, dark with the purpose of his passion, took on a new and impelling glow; she looked into them for an instant, the wavering smile of last resort on her parted lips; then her lids dropped quickly and her lip trembled.

"I should still think you very silly," she said in a very low voice, "unless—unless you do love me."

His fingers closed so tightly upon hers that she looked up, her eyes swimming with tenderness. Neither spoke for a long minute, but words were not needed to tell what the soul was saying through the eyes.

"I do love you," she said simply.

"I do love you—you know I do, Connie. I've loved you from the first day. I cannot live without you, Connie, darling, you won't keep me waiting? You will be my wife—you will marry me at once? You do love me, I know—I've known it for days and days"—

She whimsically broke in upon his passionate declaration, saying with a pretty petulance: "Oh, you have? What insufferable conceit! I"—

He laughed joyously. "I never was so sure of anything in my life," he said. "You couldn't help loving me, Constance; I've loved you so. You don't have to tell me, dear; I know. Still, I'd like to hear you say, with those dear lips as well as with your eyes, that you love me."

She put her hand upon the back of the broad one which held the other imprisoned; there was a proud, earnest light in her eyes. "I do love you," she said simply.

"God, but I'm a happy man!" he exulted. Forgetful of the time and the place, he half arose and, leaning forward, kissed her full upon the upturned lips.

There was a rattling of chinaware behind them. In no little confusion both came tumbling down from paradise and found themselves under the abashed scrutiny of a very red faced young serving woman.

"Oh, never mind," stammered Gretchen quite amiably. "I am used to that, madam. A great many ladies and gentlemen come here to—to—what you call it?" She placed the tea and sandwiches before them, her fingers all thumbs, her cheeks aglow.

Brock pulled himself together. Very sternly he said, "This young lady is to be my wife."

"Ach," said Gretchen, with a friendly smile and the utmost deference, "that is what they all say, mein herr." Then, giggling approvingly, she bustled away.

Brock waited until she was out of sight. "She seems to be on to us, as Freddie would say. But what do we care? I'd like to stand on top of the Bandjoch and shout the news to the world. Wouldn't you, dearest?"

"The world wouldn't hear us, dear," she said coolly. "Besides, it's raining up there. Just look at it sweeping down upon us Goodness!"

He laughed hilariously, amused by her attempt to be casual and indifferent. "You can't turn it off so easily as that, dearest," he cried. "Come! While it rains we may plan. You will marry me—tomorrow?"

"No!" she cried, aghast. "How utterly ridiculous!"

"Well, then, day after tomorrow?"

"No, no, nor week after next. I"—

POSSIBLE CANDIDATE

Representative Leslie May Enter Mayoralty Contest

Rumor has it that Representative William J. Leslie is to enter the municipal caucuses as a Republican candidate for the nomination for Mayor.

When seen Wednesday evening and asked a direct question if the rumor was true, Representative Leslie said that it was too early as yet to talk pressed for an answer he stated that pressed for an enswer he stated that he would not affirm or deny the rumor.

It will be remembered that Mr. Leslie took out papers for the Republican nomination of Representative from the Sixth Norfolk district but at almost the eleventh hour decided that he would not enter the field for the nomination this year, although he could have readily received the nomination as there was no other candidate in the field. Many wondered at that time why it was that he had decided not to run and perhaps the rumor of his becoming a Republican candidate for Mayor may explain the situation.

HIGH SCHOOL BOY DEAD

Robert M. Hamlin Passes Away at Wollaston

Robert Morgan Hamlin of Wollaston, who was prevented by illness from joining his senior classmates at the High school on Tuesday died this morning at his home on Taylor street in his 16th year. For about a year he has been suffering with heart trouble which ultimately resulted in his removal from a wide circle of friends.

Robert was the son of Mr. and Mrs. Gilbert S. Hamlin. He graduated from the Milton grammar school in 1910. While there he was a participant in all athletic events and was a member of the track, hockey and base ball teams.

He entered the Quincy High school and for a while joined in the out of door sports, but a weak heart caused him to withdraw from active participation. On May 5, last year, he was obliged to discontinue schooling and since that time has been ill at his home.

His brother Gilbert Hamlin is a prominent member of the sophomore class at the High school and has played on all of the school teams.

The deceased was a junior member of the Wollaston Yacht club and was a general favorite. Deep sorrow was expressed at the High school this morning when the news of his death became known and his classmates and teachers all stated that he was a "mighty fine chap."

The body will be sent to New Haven, Conn., Friday and on Saturday interment will take place in Ever Green cemetery. No services will be held at the family home on Taylor street.

The noon temperature today was the lowest since June. The strong east wind caused a big drop in temperature.

Horace G. Titus of Kendrick avenue was removed on Wednesday to the Homeopathic hospital in Boston. An operation for appendicitis was successful.

The many friends of Mr. and Mrs. Joe McGue of Upland road, extend them their sympathy in the death of Mrs. McGue's mother, Mrs. Margaret Wholey, who died at her home in Neponset, Wednesday morning after a brief illness.

Charles J. O'Hanlon, 37 years, died at the Carney hospital, South Boston, Wednesday afternoon. He was an employee at the Fore River yard and boarded with Daniel S. Frazer of 17 Sixth Avenue. A high mass of requiem will be celebrated at the St. Johns church Saturday morning. He leaves a brother Patrick at Groton, Conn.

WARD SIX MEETING.

The first meeting of Ward Six Patriotic Association since the Fourth of July was held at headquarters, Wednesday evening. A good attendance. Several matters pertaining to good of the community were considered. One of which was relative to the present condition of Teal pond which is a disgrace to the general public, for the reason that foreign matter that has been dumped into the pond has floated to the edge and lodged all around the pond giving it a disgraceful appearance. The secretary was authorized to bring this matter to the attention of the Board of Health that some means may be provided to abate the nuisance. It was voted that the president appoint an entertainment committee consisting of five members who shall provide entertainments for the association during the winter months. Regular meetings will be held the first Thursday evening of every month.

FUNERAL OF MISS LOWE.

The funeral of Loretta M. Lowe who was instantly killed in an automobile accident at Camden, Me., was held from the home of her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Edward M. Lowe of 495 Washington street Wednesday afternoon. The funeral was largely attended, many of the younger friends of the deceased being among those present. A delegation from George L. Gill Rebekah lodge was present. Services were conducted by Rev. James A. Thompson, acting rector of the Christ Episcopal church. Burial was in Mt. Wollaston cemetery.

BAD DEFEAT.

The base ball team of the Quincy police department was unmercifully walloped by the Metropolitan officers, leaders of the league, on the Ward Three playground this morning. The final score was 16 to 0.

Edward Bok complains of the handwriting of college girls. He fails to recognize an infallible sign of great learning.

Day Is Advertised Better Than Night

By HOLLAND.

THE day is a more popular time than night. Most of the work of the world is done while the sun shines, and only that which can't be done at other hours is performed while darkness reigns.

The day is the more popular and the more fully utilized because it is better advertised. The sun is the great publicity agent. It forces all to see and to remember. If it were possible to advertise any product of man as well as sunlight is advertised that particular product would drive all competitors from the field. Any breakfast food, baking powder, brand of shoes, style of furniture, cough drop, patent medicine, or what not, if it were only as well known as daylight, would have a monopoly of trade that would defy all rivals.

Such successful advertising of the works of man is not possible, but it can be followed at a distance. Successful manufacturers and merchants do follow it, and as a result the best advertised articles are the most widely sold. This is due to the fact that advertising makes the name of an article known, and it also insures its quality. Goods must be of superior merit to make it profitable to advertise them.

ADVERTISING MEANS RELIABILITY.

BOARD OF TRADE

Squantum people experienced from Spectacle Island and Moon Island. He said that after long and hard work the Spectacle Island nuisance had been abated, but that the Moon Island nuisance still continued. He asked that the Board of Trade appoint a committee to act with the committee of the Squantum association in the matter.

It was voted that a committee of five be appointed. The committee to get at the cost of extending the sewer further out into the water and then take it up with the authorities.

COMFORT STATIONS.

Mr. Carlson spoke of the dirty sanitary room at the Neponset station of the street railway. This brought up the matter of a comfort station in City Square, and there was a red hot discussion until someone raised the point of order that there was no motion before the Board.

The discussion brought out what had been done in the past toward securing this convenience. Alfred Pinel claimed that while it was up to the street railway to provide such a station in City Square for its patrons. it was not their duty to provide a station for the general public, but that it was the duty of the city to do this.

This brought A. L. Whitman to his feet. He declared that the street railway was dumping from thirty to fifty thousand people in City Square every day and that it was their duty to provide a station. He claimed that most everybody in the city patronized the cars more or less and that therefore they should be provided with a comfort station.

It was voted that a committee consisting of J. R. Richards, Alfred Pinel and A. L. Whitman be appointed to present a proposition for a comfort station in City Square to the Board at its next meeting.

NO DIVISION.

It was voted that a committee be appointed to confer with the associations at Squantum and Houghs Neck relative to the schemes of these two sections to be come dissolved from Quincy and to see if affairs could not be ameliorated.

PRESENTATION.

A vote of thanks was then extended to Andrew Milne, Jr., for a framed picture which he had presented to the Board for the rooms.

VISIT TO PANAMA.

President Hamilton than gave nearly a two hours' talk on his recent visit to the Panama canal. He took the members of the Board on a personally conducted tour of the canal, the party leaving New York on the steamship Metapan July 16 and returning 22 days later. President Hamilton vividly described the scenes on ship board and at the ports at which the steamship called, also the people at these ports and their customs, in his inimitable manner.

He also described in detail his visit to the big ditch with W. E. Hingston. Of the 40,000 men employed on the canal, 1800 men cut grease, 1200 spread oil, and 1700 dig and clean ditches. That is these men are the ones employed to keep the place sanitary and prevent disease which was the cause of the failure of France.

He said that Americans were usually selected to supervise the work; the natives, usually black, being the common laborers. There were however many French and Italian workmen. The supervisors all carry umbrellas for protection from the frequent rains. The temperature is about the same summer and winter, although there is less rain in winter. In the summer it rains for a few minutes almost every half hour. The mornings and afternoons are hot but the evenings cool. The sanitary conditions were almost perfect. The supervisors pay no rent for the houses which are built by the government. All eat in mess houses where an excellent meal is obtained for 30 cents, although strangers have to pay 50 cents.

Steam shovels do the work instead of the men. Railroad tracks are built to every accessible point tracks are built rapidly. There were two standards of money, gold for the whites and silver for the blacks, and they travel in separate cars. Speaking of railroads, he said that at times temporary tracks would be built for four miles to carry dirt 400 yards. Gatum is nine miles inland and the rock for the concrete is obtained twenty miles away, a whole mountain having been used for concrete.

Each lock has an emergency lock. The lock is 40 feet deep, 110 feet wide, and 1000 feet long. Ships do not go through the locks under their own steam but are pulled through by engines. There is a spillway for the overflow of Gatum lake in case of a great storm so that the locks will not be smashed.

The most expensive piece of railroad in the world is that from Colon to Panama, a distance of nine miles, built at a cost of $9,000,000. Discarded railroad cars are used for dwellings. The whole work was under the direction of Col. Goethals who was supreme in command. His power was such that he could condemn a man to death if necessary. He is on the job every day and Sundays. He holds court and hears any and all complaints. He is referred to lovingly as the "Old Man" and he knows every man on the job.

Engineers are paid $300 a month, with rent free. No cash is used by employees, but books with coupons. The railroad fare is five cents a mile, but employees pay only 2 1-2 cents. Quantities of oil and powder are used to kill off mosquitoes, yet malaria is prevalent in spite of precautions.

President Hamilton then described the locks in detail and said that one man controlled the passage of a vessel through, from a small compartment. Directly in front of him was a floating ship on a dial which showed the position of the vessel passing through at all times.

There were many other interesting points brought out by the speaker which space will not permit repeating. One of the statements however that caused some surprise was that there was no liquor in the canal zone.

At the conclusion of his talk President Hamilton was given a vote of thanks and the meeting adjourned at 11.40.

GOLDEN CROSS.

Dorothy Quincy commandery, United Order of Golden Cross initiated six members at a meeting Wednesday evening. Two applications were received. Among the visitors present were Vice Noble Grand Commander, Mrs. Kirke of Chelsea, escorted by Mrs. Eleanor Hannon of Chelsea, and Miss Jean and Samuel Dinnington of the Dorchester commandery. Organizer Berry closed all official connections with the commandery and was given a vote of thanks. Dancing and refreshments were enjoped after the meeting. C. H. Finn, noble grand, presided.

FUNERAL OF MRS. CALDWELL.

The funeral of Mrs. Hanora E. Caldwell, widow of Edward Caldwell, was held this morning from her home, 47 Rock Island road, Houghs Neck. A high mass of requiem was celebrated at the Church of St. Frances-by-the-Sea, by Rev. Fr. Walter Quinlan. The Gregorian chant was rendered by the regular choir under the direction of John Mahon, organist. The body was taken to Holy Cross cemetery, Malden, for burial.

There is more Catarrh in this section of the country than all other diseases put together, and until the last few years was supposed to be incurable. For a great many years doctors pronounced it a local disease and prescribed local remedies, and by constantly failing to cure local treatment pronounced it incurable. Science has proven catarrh to be a constitutional disease and therefore requires constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, Ohio, is the only constitutional cure on the market. It is taken internally in doses from 10 drops to a teaspoonful. It acts directly on the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. They offer one hundred dollars for any case it fails to cure. Send for circulars and testimonials.

GUESTS DAY AT SQUANTUM

Woman's Club Presents a Pleasing Program

At the regular meeting of the Squantum Women's Club held Wednesday afternoon at the home of Mrs. James Foster, Park avenue, all business was suspended and the time used to entertain guests who had been invited to attend the special ""guests afternoon."

An interesting program had been planned by President Reed. The first number was a solo by Mrs. Ethel Frank Brigham, who sang "Notte Bianca" and "Der Schmetterling" in her usual charming manner. Mrs. Brigham is a pupil of Professor Blanchart of the Conservatory of Music and has a promising future. Mrs. Charles Bostwick was the accompanist. A very interesting talk of a five hundred mile tramp through the Canadian Northwest was given by Joseph Gould who accomplished this trip in October, 1911. Mr. Gould is a graduate of Harvard College and told of his experiences in a very engaging way.

Mrs. Brigham chose as her next selections ""The Wind and Lyre" and "Dandelion" for an encore. Mrs. Leon Weltman of Omaha, Neb., read the "Bondswoman" and showed unusual talent as an elocutionist. She also recited "When I was young" a humorous piece in a clever manner. This concluded the entertainment. Refreshments were served by Mrs. Foster assisted by Mrs. G. Hersey, Miss Mildred Hersey, Mrs. John Loughan, Miss Nan Loughan.

Among those present were: Mrs. A. McManus, Mrs. E. H. Kokerda, Mrs. T. F. Callahan, Mrs. Louise Holt, Mrs. Helen McGowan, Mrs. Mark Redmond, Mrs. Hiram Morse, Mrs. William Reed, Mrs. John Loughan, Mrs. Edward Eagar, Mrs. S. H. Leonard, Mrs. H. W. Orr, Mrs. Gustav Wunderlich, Mrs. H. H. REPUBLICANS AFTER THE YOUNG MEN

Col. Benton and Others Address Ward One Republicans at Outing

All the Candidates Working for Success of Party

"Either Pull, Bail or Cut Bait." That was the sentiment expressed in the motto printed on the face of the menu card at the outing of the Ward One Republican Committee Thursday evening at Norteman's pavilion, Houghs Neck. It was a notable gathering in more ways than one, for not only was Col. Everett C. Benton, one of the candidates seeking the Republican nomination for Governor present, but Maurice Kane and C. L. Burrell, the two candidates for State Treasurer; W. S. Kenney candidate for State Secretary, William R. Thomas and Louis F. R. Langelier candidates for Senator, and Walter E. Piper candidate for Representative from the Fifth district. The other candidates for the nomination for Governor had also been invited but was unable to be present, so that Col. Benton had the field to himself.

In addition to these dignitaries there were present ex-Senator George L. Barnes; Channing Cox, Republican House leader of 1913; Hon. J. Stearns Cushing formerly of the Governor's council; Dr. Everett M. Bowker, candidate for County Commissioner; C. H. Messenger, a well known Boston politician; Hon. John F. Merrill, chairman of the County Commissioners; and Louie A. Flye, a former representative from Holbrook. These gentlemen occupied seats at the head table and furnished the after dinner speeches.

In addition to these were John R. Richards, chairman of the Republican City Committee and the following: C. H. Johnson, Dr. A. H. Gilson, H. P. Kittredge, G. Westland, F. F. Green, I. M. Whittemore, J. Weeden, C. Vanner, W. H. Cobb, J. E. Green, E. C. Johnson, L. Barry, C. J. Hart, A. W. Walker, J. E. Keniley, Jr., A. Nelson, H. E. Glover, A. Thomas, A. M. Carver, Wm. Norteman, O. F. Frisk, C. Torn, Wm. Norteman, P. Sevenson, R. E. Winslow, W. S. Hardwick, G. L. T. Tupper, O. Carlberg, T. Newton, John O. Hall. Abbott Johnson, F. W. Vaughn, N. Lindquest, T. Butler, E. W. Baxter, W. J. Hudson, G. Wilbas, C. Chilstedt H. S. Barker, E. C. McConnell, G. T. Magee, F. F. Prescott, C. T. Furnald, G. K. Moorehead, R. Prout, J. M. Michell, M. I. Gatcomb, A. Macleod, J. R. S. Ross, L. Noonan, T. B. Davenport, H. D. Cole, E. Norteman, A. Dunham, R. T. Woodbury, E. Rich, J. E. Keniley, H. E. Emerson, H. C. Andrews.

Charles H. Johnson was the toast master, but Dr. A. H. Gilson, secretary of the committee, was the one to start the ball rolling. Most of the party went down on the special car which

Provost's orchestra occupied a prominent position in one corner of the dining room and furnished almost continual music during the dinner. There were no long waits between their numbers for one selection quickly followed the other. These included all of the popular airs.

It was a little after 6.30 when dinner was announced and no time was lost in taking seats at the tables. The menu served was one of those shore dinners that have made the name of Norteman well know among those who enjoy good dinners. It was also well served and everybody pronounced it fine.

SECRETARY GILSON.

The dinner over Dr. Gilson as secretary of the committee called the party to order, and after thanking the party for their attendance, said that the idea had been to get the young voters of the ward interested. He urged them, if they had any ideas, to come to the committee and make them known. We want the young men with us, so that when we get old you can take our places. He then introduced Charles H. Johnson as toast master.

CHAIRMAN JOHNSON.

Mr. Johnson made one of his rousing speeches in accepting the position as toast master. He said there are 34 young men here who in November will for the first time exercise the right of suffrage, a sacred right accorded American citizens. With this right goes a responsibility, and it is for you to decide what party you will affiliate with. Be faithful to your manhood, and remember that when you cast your vote you are casting it in no mean city. Here rest the remains of that great statesman John Adams who when the country needed great men as it never needed them before, came forward. Young men be something. Take up with some party whatever it may be. As you start your career, I want to say that the word non-partisan is misleading. Beware of the man who steps forward as a non-partisan. There is something behind it. Be with the man who stands for some party. He then briefly told of the candidacy of Col. Everett C. Benton who was introduced as the first speaker.

COL. BENTON.

Col. Benton thanked the committee for the opportunity to be present. He had considered going to the centre of the state that evening, but had changed his mind and came to Quincy; as he wanted to meet Quincy Republicans. He was glad to meet old friends and new ones. No matter what might happen in the primaries I ask you all to enter the primaries and vote. He had rather be defeated at a large caucus than win at a slimly attended one.

He stood for direct primaries and we are to give it a test this year. If it was not for the direct primaries, it would be absolutely useless for him to try and be Governor. Now the nomi-

HEARING ON GOFFE STREET

Opposition to Changing Name to Presidents Lane

Considerable opposition will probably develop at the public hearing before the City Council next Monday evening on the question of changing the name of Goffe street to Presidents lane. From what can be heard on the street there seems to be an almost unanimous sentiment against changing the name, one reason being that Goffe street is a good name and that Quincy already has a street with a similar name as the one proposed, namely, Presidents avenue at South Quincy.

The idea of having more than one street with a similar name is one that the City Council has been trying to avoid for some time, and it causes considerable confusion, especially to strangers.

An instance of this had in the name Madison. There is a Madison street in Atlantic, a Madison avenue at South Quincy and a Madison avenue at Quincy Point, which is confusing even to old residents.

There are also other streets with similar names which might be mentioned, so that the general public think that the fewer streets we have with the same or similar names, the better.

With a Presidents avenue and a Presidents lane, considerable confusion is sure to result. The hearing is set for 8.15 next Monday night and as it looks now there will be a lot of opposition to changing the name of the street.

ALL ARE BUSY IN QUINCY

Lowest Percentage of Unemployed Is Reported

Quincy has the lowest percentage of unemployed union men in Massachusetts, which is certainly good news.

With 1037 unions of a total membership of 172,343 reporting—more than 80 percent of the entire trade union membership in Massachusetts—the quarterly employment report of the State Bureau of Statistics, Labor Divisions, states that the percentage of (union) unemployment on June 30 last week was 6.4.

This figure was materially lower than the 11.3 percent of March 31, but higher than the 5.3 percent of June 30, 1912. The percentage for the same date in pervious years was: 1911, 6.6; 1910, 7.0; 1909, 6.4, and 1908, 14.4.

The unemployment figure was highest, 24.5 percent, in Fall River, owing largely to the strike of bricklayers, painters and textile workers. In Lawrence unemployment of textile workers made the city's percentage 20.3, and in Taunton strikes of molders and loomfixers and unemployment of carpenters gave a percentage of 10.7. Boston's figure was 5.8, less than the State average, and the lowest percentages registered were 3.5 for Cambridge and Springfield and 2.0 for Quincy.

MRS. JAMES M. BRYANT.

Mrs. Mary L. Bryant of West Quincy died Thursday evening in her 67th year. She was the wife of James M. Bryant, and leaves one son, William Bryant. NEW STANDPIPE A LANDMARK

Will Tower 104 Feet Above Great Hill

The contract for the construction of the standpipe on Great Hill Houghs Neck, for which $20,000 was appropriated by the City Council has been awarded to the Chicago Bridge and Iron Works of Chicago, Ill. The firm is one of two that submitted bids inside the appropriation. The contract price is $18,350.

The stand pipe will be 104 feet in height and will be the most conspicuous land mark visible in Boston Harbor. It will have a capacity of 400,000 gallons and does not necessiate the construction of new mains for its supply.

Its reserve supply will be one of the best protective features Quincy will have in water supply. Work will probably be commenced in September and it will be ready for its contents by early spring. The foundation will be of cement and will extend into the ground for a great depth.

TO TAKE LONG TRIP.

William Norteman, whose fame for serving shore dinners, is far famed in planning a trip across the water next month when the shore season closes. He will be accompanied by Mrs. Norteman and his daughter Mrs. Clara Catarius. Leaving America they will go first to England, then to Norway, the birthplace of Mrs. Norteman, afterward going to Germany for a visit to the birthplace of Mr. Norteman. They will also visit another daughter who lives in England. They expect to be gone all winter and will return to Quincy next April. Mr. Norteman is thinking some of disposing of his property at Houghs Neck although he may decide to run the pavilion another year.

TOOLS STOLEN.

A vandal visited the dam at the Quincy water reservoir Thursday, where the Fore River Shipbuilding Corporation is making repairs on the iron bridge that runs to the gate house, and broke open the tool boxes and stole a quantity of valuable tools. The matter has been reported to the police. The tools stolen were being used by workmen who locked the box after completing their days labors. The theft was discovered when they reported for work this morning. The box was wrecked.

DISTRICT COURT.

James H. Moran was fined $5 for drunkenness at Weymouth and Robert L. Jones $10 for drunkenness at Quincy.

HENRY M. FAXON OFFERS SITE TO CITY

Buildings Would Cost City About $23,000

Henry M. Faxon publicly announced at the conference of the physicians of the city and the Board of Health in the Council chamber Thursday evening, that he considered the care of contagious diseases a municipal function and to assure its removal from private supervision he was willing to give a lot of land, of sufficient size to allow for the erection and development of a contagious hospital, providtunity affords the patients a delightful view at all times.

The site offered is near Faxon Park, on a hill directly opposite the stand pipe. The location he thought ideal and aside from offering every opportunity affords the patients view at all times.

The conference was for the purpose of talking over the needs of a contagious hospital and the tentative approval of plans submitted. Chairman Teasdale presided and Dr. Fred E. Jones and James Thomas, members of the board were present. Others present were Dr. W. J. Middleton, Dr. Sidney Hardwick, Dr. William B. Ferris, Dr. Daniel B. Reardon, Dr. John H. Ash, Dr. J. H. Anderson, Dr. N. S. Hunting, Dr. E. H. Bushnell, Henry M. Faxon, Fred B. Rice, Mrs. Wilson Marsh, Perry Lawton, Dr. Ahlstrom, Dr. H. E. Diehle and Ezekial Sargent.

The conference opened with a statement of fact by Dr. Fred E. Jones, who after reading the law relative to contagious hospitals, and giving its strict interpretation as ruled by the attorney general, went into a detailed explanation of the work of the board in this city. He spoke of the proposed hospital of its labatory equipment which will permit the rapid determination of diseases and overcome the delay of as much as three days while waiting for a return from the State Board of Health. This new phase had never before been introduced in connection with dieseases in Quincy and gained the approval of those present.

By law, Dr. Jones pointed out, a penalty of $500 can be imposed for each violation of the law which requires cities to suitably equip and maintain a contagious hospital, and he said that the city had received notification and was now liable if it was not the fact that the work of the board in trying to solve the problem has been taken as evidence of good intention.

A state inspection of the camp at Mt. Pleasant resulted in a report stating that at least $3000 would be necessary to make it acceptable to the state so that $5 per patient would be allowed. This, according to Dr. Jones hardly justifies the outlay, because nothing tangible is presented for the care of diphtheria and scarlet fever, two other contagious diseases which must be cared for.

Tuberculosis will never be stamped out until it is properly isolated is the belief of Dr. Jones. It is a communicable disease and sufferers must be attended to. The weekly cost is alarming and care must be given when requested. It is equivalent to a demand and improper supervision is a element in its spread.

The Diggs-Caminetti offence is a common one, but usually the women are kindly willing to take all the blame.

The children of Worcester, Mass., have raised garden products this summer worth $3400, but during other seasons they have captured fruit from the neighbors amounting to much more than that.

LARCENY AS A DIVERSION.

A man who owns a little place within about twelve miles of a large city told the writer the other day, that it had become pratically impossible for him to do any fruit raising. Every Sunday at this time of the year gangs of strollers roam over his land, breaking fences and tipping over walls. They shake fruit trees and feast on berry bushes. Many of them brings bags, in which they stow away all the apples, pears, or plums they can carry.

Public sentiment has always tolerated this minor thieving. Successful business men and politicians rather like to tell how they used to rob orchards when boys. There is some feeling that they would have been molly coddles if they hadn't. While these older men probably never got out with bags and peddled the product thereof, the one things leads to the other.

The station master in the employ of a certain railroad told the writer a short time ago that when a college athletic team went through, he always locked up everything loose in the way of restaurant silver. Many college students feel that a room shows no character or originality, unless decorated by signs stolen from some one's place of business.

A fruit orchard means some one's thought and labor for years. If fruit raising must be abandoned in any locality near a city or large town, it becomes more costly to keep orchards and gardens. Law abiding people have to pay the bills, in order that the hoodlums may feed and feast free.

There is morally economically no difference between knocking a dollar's worth of fruit off a tree, and stealing a dollar bill out of some one's cash drawer, and the courts should impose the same penalty.

THE PRESS HUMORISTS.

Being a funny man, constructing new jokes and reparing old ones—largely the latter—is serious business. The public is glad that the newspaper humorists are having their annual outing and convention, meeting this year at Peoria, Ill.

American humor at its best sparkles and satirizes, it flashes with unexpected relations between words and ideas, it throws the white light of satire on prigs and pharisees and fops and fools. But the demand is so ravenous that too many counterfeits sell as the real goods.

You can market a very flat fragment of conversation, if you accompany the same with a smartly drawn picture of the low necked girl and the creased trouser man. It is not necessary that the picture have the least relation to the point of the dialogue. It must simply be smart, and show what men and women are wearing or aren't wearing.

To supply the demand the old stock of jokes must be worked over and over, though their point may be gone. The Englishman is represented as having no sense of fun, though he continues to buy and read Dickens and Thackeray. The Bostonian uses long words and wears spectacles, though most Bostonians now are aleins who are studying the English primer. The Philadelphian is slow, though the ball teams don't think so. The Chicago girl has large feet, in spite of her lithe gift for high kicking. The mothers-in-law is a creature of vinegar, though mothers-in-law are usually grandmothers, and grandmothers have sweet faces and kind hearts.

The press humorists are simply speeded to a higher rate than the humor mill was built to stand. No wonder the product often looks thin and the machinery wobbles audibly. The more conventions and trips and vacations they have, the greater will be the relief of this overstrain and overtime.

SHOULD ANSWER THE CHARGES

Full Explanation of Assertions Asked of Sulzer

ROOSEVELT IN HIS DEFENSE

Says Charges Leading to Impeachment Were Not Animated by a Single Honest Motive—Assault Due to Executive Having Stood Up For Good Citizenship

Albany, Sept. 5.—Theodore Roosevelt has advised Governor Sulzer to "make a full and straightforward explanation and answer in reference to the charges" that resulted in his impeachment, but strongly attacks Sulzer's assailants as being without a single honest motive.

In a letter replying to two communications relating to the gubernatorial situation sent by the governor to the former president while he was traveling in the west, Roosevelt says:

"On my return from Arizona I have received your two letters. I thank you for them. I believe I thoroughly understand the assault that is now being made upon you. I have yet to meet a single person who believes, or even pretends to believe, that a single honest motive has animated the pro ceedings of your antagonists.

"From Mr. Murphy himself to the legislators who obeyed his directions, there is no possible question that all of your assailants are the enemies of the public, and that their aim is to acquire the evil domination of the state government and that the conspiracy against you has not one saving impulse behind it that can in the remotest degree be ascribed to patriotism or civic spirit or to anything save the basest impulse of crooked politics. We have never seen a more startling example of the power of the invisible government under the present system.

"The extraordinary thing is that the 'conservative' upholders of this present system should have witnessed the decrees of the invisible government carried out within twenty-four hours, and who nevertheless denounced as revolutionary our proposal for changes in the form of government whereby the deliberate judgment of the majority of the voters may be executed within a space of time no shorter than that required for the execution of their deliberate judgment in the choice of a President of the United States.

"Let me add one thing, my dear governor. You owe it to yourself and to all those who have supported you to take the earliest opportunity to answer the charges made against you.

"That the purposes of those bringing the charges are wholly evil, I am sure that all honest men feel. Moreover, I am sure that honest men feel that the asault made upon you by your foes is due to your having stood up for the principles of good government and decent citizenship even when it was necessary to defy the will of the bosses of the two parties, and especially of your own, and to stand in the way of the success of the corrupt schemes of the party machine managers.

"But there is also among honest men a desire for a full and straightforward explanation and answer in reference to the charges made against you, and I very earnestly hope that as soon as possible the explanation and answer will be made."

Sulzer made the Roosevelt letter public without comment. Asked if he would follow the former president's suggestion, the governor referred his interrogators to his general denial of the charges made by the Frawley committee, issued on the advice of his counsel on Aug. 10, three days prior to the adoption of the impeachment resolution by the assembly.

OBJECTION TO REBATE

President Sends Special Message to Senate on Tariff Protest

Washington, Sept. 5.—President Wilson sent a special message to the senate stating that he has given to the chairman of the senate finance committee the protests of foreign nations against the provision in the tariff bill granting a rebate of 5 percent on goods imported in American bottoms.

The message was in reply to a resolution offered by Senator Jones. The message includes a statement from Counsellor Moore of the state department that the proposed rebate violates treaties of the United States with fifteen nations. This provision was stricken form the bill.

Bryan In Maine Fight

Washington, Sept. 5.—Secretary Bryan left today for Bangor, Me., and on Saturday will speak in the campaign in the Third Maine district. He will return to Washington Tuesday.

FIVE HUNDRED KILLED

Hurricane Reported to Have Swept Island In Pamlico Sound

Raleigh, N. C., Sept. 5.—It is reported here that Ocracoke island, in Pamlico sound, was swept by a hurricane and that all the island's 500 inhabitants have been drowned.

ON LEAVE OF ABSENCE

Moore May Be Out of the State Department For Good

Washington, Sept. 5.—John B. Moore, counsellor of the state department, is out of Washington on an indefinite leave of absence. This fact has just leaked out and is causing renewed speculation as to the whence and wherefore of the conduct of the state department.

As far as can be ascertained, Professor Moore has not resigned nor has his resignation been requested. The puzzling thing is the word "indefinite." If it is true that Moore is "indefinitely" away from Washington there are those who are reasonably certain that he will be away definitely and for good.

It is no secret that the diplomatic training and ideals of Moore and the secretary of state are so divergent that they have had friction in the few international dealings in which Bryan has participated. Upon Moore's shoulders have fallen much, if not all of the really hard work of the department. This fact being publicly known, has served, it is believed, to irritate the secretary of state considerably and friction has resulted.

YANKEES CLEVER SAILORS

Capture Third of International Sonder Races at Marblehead

Marblehead, Mass., Sept. 5.—The Sprig scored a clean-cut victory for the Americans and made a tie for the President and Governor cup with the Ellen and Cima.

The three American boats have each won a race in three days' racing, and the Germans must win the next race or be eliminated altogether.

As Designer Drewitz of the German sonder Wittelsbach put it after the race, tells the story:

"The crews of the American sonders have been sailing boats since they were boys. Look at the lads around here sailing boats. We don't begin until we are over 20. That is the answer."

CARNEGIE WANTED TO BE A REPORTER

Has Never Lost His Liking For Field of Journalism

Brussels, Sept. 5.—Andrew Carnegie, in an interview, said: "I have always had a liking for journalism, and when I was young my one ambition was to join the staff of one of the Pittsburg newspapers as a reporter, but fate decided otherwise.

"When still young I wrote my first article for the Pittsburg Journal, and I have written for newspapers ever since. For this reason I like newspaper men. No matter what may be the color of the newspaper they represent they are all alike to me."

SERGEANT DROPS DEAD

Two Marines Captured After Sensational Dash For Liberty

Philadelphia, Sept. 5.—A sensational attempt to escape by two marines under arrest at the Philadelphia navy yard on the charge of desertion resulted in the death of Sergeant of Marines Southerd, who dropped dead from over-exertion, and the serious injury of Loren S. Nichols, a marine, who was knocked unconscious by the escaping prisoners.

The entire regiment of marines on duty at the yard was called out to capture the fugitives, who reached the banks of the channel separating League island from the mainland before they were overtaken. One leaped into the water and was arrested in an exhausted condition on the opposite bank by two other marines who swam the 100-yard wide stream after him. The other deserter was captured before he entered the water.

ALL FOR WOMAN SUFFRAGE

Three Maine Candidates For Congress Are on Record

Washington, Sept. 5.—The headquarters of the woman's suffrage movement is rejoicing because of the news from Maine that every one of the three candidates for congress from the Third Maine district has pledged himself to support the constitutional amendment for equal suffrage.

Edward M. Lawrence, Progressive, and William R. Pattangall, Democrat, have written to Washington, declaring their sympathy with the votes-for-women movement. John A. Peters, Republican, voted last winter for the bill granting woman suffrage in Maine.

Providence Man Drowns

Providence, Sept. 5.—Despite the efforts of two men to save him, Peter McGovern, a laborer, 49 years old, was drowned in the Providence river. McGovern fell off a wharf.

Messina Still Shaking

Messina, Sicily, Sept. 5.—Another slight earthquake was felt here and created a fresh panic among the inhabitants. The shock lasted five seconds.

OFFERS SITE TO CITY

Chairman Teasdale spoke of the difficulty in placing patients, and showed the cost of keeping contagious diseases during the past five years. He said one never knew what the future was in the contagious field, and what appears to be a lull may simply be the fore runner of an epidemic. This is peculiar in tuberculosis cases, and five cases were reported within five days a few weeks ago. These all must be taken care of, and if no room is open at the camp accommodations must be secured elsewhere.

Albert Wright, an architect, submitted plans for the proposed hospital, the principles of which were evolved by Dr. Fred E. Jones. The building will be of wood, and divided into two sections. One half will consist of the administration building and wards for men and women patients suffering from tuberculosis extended on both sides. A passageway of 200 feet connects another building.

This ward is so divided that diphtheria and scarlet fever patients can be admitted to their respective sides. The system of air locks and ventilation guards against infection, and while three beds for each disease are considered there is ample opportunity to build onto the wings.

The idea of Dr. Jones is practically new in medical circles, and he is the first one to secure what appears to be a practical solution of the difficulty of treating two diseases in the same building.

The building proposed will be of wood and will cost approximately $23,000, including plumbing and heating apparatus. The equipment, a principal factor is provided for also.

In making his offer, Mr. Faxon said, that he had several ideal spots in mind and that after deep consideration he decided to place the land near Faxon Park at the disposal of the city for a contagious hospital. He asked the board to have the city engineer stake out any part of the 40 acres in the tract and to make a map of the contour of the land to determine the best section.

The physicians present plainly expressed their belief in the proposed hospital and the substance of their remarks was that the success of a community depended on its health. Several stated that they considered the hospital essential, because a man with a contagious disease is a menace to the public and should be taken care of.

All gathered round the plans and entered into a hearty discussion of their merits. Dr. Jones explained his principle ventilation which separates the two diseases again and again, and finally the physicians asked another opportunity of looking at the plans which seem to offer all that could be desired.

The next step, after they have received the approval of the physicians, is to submit them to the State Board, and in turn to the district police, after which they can be submitted to the City Council and arrangements made for the appropriation necessary for the erection.

QUINCY POINT CAR SERVICE

Supt. Gammon of the Bay State Street Railway Co. states that Secretary Hall of the Board of Trade was mistaken when he made a statement at the meeting Wednesday evening that there were but two cars an hour on the Quincy Point line, as there has always been four cars an hour. Supt. Gammons says that when the Nantasket cars were taken off another car running between City Square and the Point bridge was put on. He also said that it was physically impossible with the present trackage to run a car every fifteen minutes and that if anyone can show him how it can be done with the present trackage he will be glad to do it.

ANOTHER COLD DAY.

The temperature this noon was 59 degrees which is the coldest day at that hour since June 8. Last year it was not until Sept. 21 that the temperature at noon was as cold as today. Coming so soon after such hot days as Tuesday and Wednesday the change is all the more noticable. Warmer weather however is promised for Saturday and Sunday.

—District nominations are a failure. If there were abuses under the old convention system these abuses have only been intensified under the direct primary. Take the governorship. No worthy but poor man can aspire; it costs too much money to make the campaign. Most of our best men are naturally modest. They do not like to put themselves forward and resort to the cheap demagogy that characterizes our politics at the present time. Nor has it improved the quality of those in public service.—Springfield Union.

AMUSEMENTS

DOINGS ON THE STAGE IN BOSTON AND VICINITY

KINCAIDE THEATRE.

Without question the strongest attraction ever presented at Quincy's pretty playhouse is the Gorman Musical Comedy Companies who last Monday began a two weeks engagement. There are four different companies coming and each one presents an entirely different comedy for their three days stay, afternoon and evening. All these funny farces were written by Mathew Ott, who is a well known resident of Quincy, and whose fame for writing Musical Shows of the "My feet Won't Behave" kind is international.

The second of the series, "A Day Off" is now playing. It is a rollicking, melodious, musical comedy, the scenes of which are laid in Washington. And it deals with the many amusing episodes of the recent inauguration, which gives ample scope for the introduction of spicy dialogue, fascinating dances, brilliant musical selections, rendered by an excellent company of singers, dancers, comedians, and a beauty chorus of charming young ladies and strong-voiced young men.

Beginning Monday an entire new company will present "I Should Worry" and for Thursday, Friday and Saturday "The Brinkley Girl" will be the attraction. All these clever comedies are brimming over with pure wholesome fun, and you'll miss a real treat if you don't take them in.

CASTLE SQUARE THEATRE.

With "Under Two Flags" at the Castle Square next week, there are sure to be large audiences at every afternoon and evening performance. Ouida's novel from which it is dramatized is even more famous than the play, and during the past dozen years it has prove extraordinarily successful both as a book and on the stage. From its opening incidents leading up to the flight of Bertie Cecil under the false charge of forgery, to the final heroic scenes with Cigarette in the desert, its story is powerful and appealing. The essential characters of the novel all appear in the play, and among its most famous scenes are those of Cigarette's wild ride up the rocky gorge, and the sand-storm on the desert. Cigarette is one of the most fascinating heroines ever seen on th modern stage. She is wilful and audacious, capricious, gentle and self-sacrificing and the story of her love for Bertie Cecil is fascinating. Cigarette will be acted at the Castle Square by Miss Doris Olsson, and that clever young actress may be expected to give an ideal representation of the character. The striking role of Bertie Ceciel will be acted by Mr. Carleton, and every one of the members of Mr. Craig's company will be enlisted in the cast. There will be a special scenic production, and the costumes will reveal the picturesque dress of the French zouaves and the Bedouin Arabs. No pains will be spared to make the production complete in every detail.

B. F. KEITH'S THEATRE.

Clifton Crawford, the famous musical comedy star, late feature of "Three Twins" and "My Best Girl," will head the bill at B. F. Keith's Theatre the week of September 8th, preparatory to his departure to London to become principal comedian of the George Edwards Gaiety Theatre Company in the British capital. Mr. Crawford had decided not to appear on the American stage this season, but he at length yielded to the tempting offer made him by Mr. B. F. Keith to appear at the Boston playhouse for a positively limited engagement of one week only. As a musical comedy star, Crawford is in a class by himself. He has not appeared in vaudeville for several years, but on his last visit here proved one of the biggest drawing attractions the house had ever had. It is confidently expected that Clifton Crawford's coming engagement will be one of the most enjoyable events of the season. Mr. Crawford will appear in a new monologde with some original songs written by himself. Another big feature of the week will be the first vaudeville appearance of Sydney Jarvis, late of George H. Cohan's "Little Millionaire," and Virginia Dare, pronounced the most beautiful woman in vaudeville, in a skit called, "Oh, You Wonderful Girl." Other splendid features will be the Great Adas Family of sensational aerialists; John E. Henshaw and Grace Avery, two more musical comedy stars in "Strangers In A Strange Flat;" The Transatlantic Trio; Five Juggling Mowatts; Cummings and Gladyings; English and Johnston; Chalk Saunders; and the Pathe Keekly with the latest news in pictures.

PLYMOUTH THEATRE.

At the Plymouth Theatre, Boston, Miss May Irwin, on next Monday, will begin the second week of her engagement in "Widow by Proxy," the funniest piece this popular comedienne has had in years. The reception accorded Miss Irwin on her opening performance was another tribute of the remarkable esteem in which she is held by New England theatre-goers. The play in which she is appearing is brand new, full of bright, breezy and snappy dialogues, and never lags for a single moment. From the rise to the drop of the curtain the audience is kept in a continuous roar of laughter. And good wholesome laughter at that. Miss Irwin is supported by an unusually competent company including Clara Blandick, Alice Johnson, Helen Weathersby, Helen Orr Daly, Orlando Daly, Joseph Woodburn, Pell Trenton and Arthur Bowyer. If you would enjoy the season's biggest laugh, don't fail to see Miss Irwin in this screamingly funny comedy. It's the best fun tonic for this time of the year. You can send in your order for seats by making checks payable to Fred E. Wright, with the assurance that it will be given the strictest attention. The usual Thursday and Saturday matinees are held. Miss Irwin's engagement is for four weeks only.

TREMONT TEMPLE.

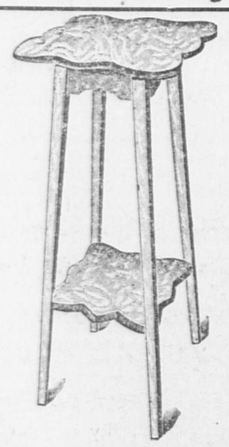

That the motion picture drama has cut a big figure in the theatrical world is evidenced by the astonishing success achieved by "Les Miserables," Victor Hugo's wonderful story, presented in motion photography at the Tremont Temple. The production is absorbingly interesting and rings true to the narrative of this universally read novel. The story is presented in four acts comprising nine reels that form the nucleus of a series of tense and exciting scenes the like of which have never before ben witnessed. The pictures are unusually remarkable for their clarity and vividness. On next Monday will start the second week of the engagement, which is scheduled to remain for a limited time only. There will be daily natinees and a popular scale of prices, 25c, 35c, and 50c wil prevail.

nations are not settled at the American House the night before the convention. This is a year when the Republicans must pull together. There are but one or two states that elect a Governor this year and the eyes of the country are on Massachusetts.

He stood for a business administration. He was a strong protectionist and had always been. That is a protective tariff in the interest of all people, such a tariff as had made this the grandest country there is.

He differed from some on minor matters but he believed these could be safely left to the state convention who would make up the platform. There were some few things he wanted to call attention to. As for immigration, Congress was the place where that would be settled not on Beacon Hill. There are more important matters in this great state, for we have many local matters to attend to.

It is time to have better and more harmonius action among state boards. The same wages paid by one commission should be paid by another. We should consider the commonwealth as a big corporation, and run it in the interest of the taxpayers. One way this could be accomplished was by establishing a central purchasing department. He would equalize the expense of educating the children so that the burden would fall more equally on the towns and cities of the state.

We should look after the facilities for transporting the product of the farms to the market, thereby reducing the expense and time. Farmers should be allowed to use the street railway lines during nights to enable them to bring their products to the cities. A central freight yard should be established.

Some few weeks ago, said Col. Benton when it looked dark, I became a candidate. There was a condition where no one seemed to desire to make the fight. But as soon as a Democratic Governor saw a better opportunity to get elected by the Republican party then others came into the contest. "I was the first in and I will be the last out."

He believed that he had a better opportunity to size up the situation than one who came at the last minute. I was willing to come out and make the contest. We should make a fight for the whole state ticket even if he did not receive the nomination. He believed in a harmonious advance all along the line. That is the only way to win.

The three ring circus of the Republicans last year was a disgrace. There was nothing but a lot of hot air all along the line. Massachusetts is a great state of which we are all justly proud, Do you realize that there are but ten more counties in the world that raise more produce than Worcester county? Here we have these counties furnishing employment to thousands and it is our duty to protect, foster and continue them and it can be best done by retaining the Republican party in power, not only in the state but in the nation. "I ask you to get into line for we have got to forward march all along the line."

Loud applause greeted the speaker as he concluded his brief address.

PRESIDENT RICHARDS.

John R. Richards, president of the City Committee spoke briefly congratulating the Ward Committee on the success of its outing and urging that other ward committees fall into line and do the same. He also touched upon the tariff question and showed how if the new tariff bill became a law how it would affect the granite industry in Quincy. He stood as a Republican and he had always been a Republican. He came here as a boy and had always noticed that whenever there was prosperity in the United States it was under a Republican administration. This non-partisan business is all humbug and he had no respect for a man who was always trying to fit in somewhere between the two great parties.

CANDIDATE KENNEY.

W. F. Kenney candiadte for Secretary of State said that he had no opposition for the nomination. He was glad to see that the committee were trying to enlist the young men in this contest. There has been talk of progressiveness as though the Republican party had not always been progressive. If people would only remember that the republican legislature had placed upon the statue books legislation that was far in advance of any state in the country, they would not question the progressiveness of the Republican party. He spoke briefly of some of the measures that were passed by the legislature of 1913, commenting briefly upon each of them. It is our duty to say no third party is necessary, and that the Republican party is the one in which you should place your confidence.

CANDIDATE KANE.

Hon. Maurice Kane, candidate for the nomination for Treasurer, spoke of the law which obliged the state to elect a new treasurer every five years. This was to be regretted at the present time as the state would have to lose the services of Elmer A. Stevens. If elected I shall try and follow in the footsteps of Mr. Stevens. A man in the treasurer's office should be honest and one of experience in public affairs and he fully realized the responsibility of the office. As a Republican he would support the man who received the nomination.

CANDIDATE PIPER.

Walter E. Piper, candidate for Representative from the Fifth district, was introduced as a man about whom there was no question.

Mr. Piper said that he was pleased to see so many young men present. It was certainly great. He wanted to see all Republicans elected this year. Through a peculiar condition of circumstances he had been defeated last year but it looked as if those conditions would not prevail this year.

CANDIDATE BURRELL.

C. L. Burrell, also a candidate for State Treasurer, said that whoever was elected he should support the ticket. He had had 25 years of training for the position which he sought. He was the president of one bank and the vice president of another and was thoroughly conversant with financial affairs. He believed the currency question should be settled by congress and that it would be better settled if put over until there was a Republican congress.

REPRESENTATIVE COX.

Channing Cox immediately put his hearers in good humor by several stories. He hoped that the disagreeable experience this district had this year in the Senate would not be repeated. He had a good word to say for Mr. Langelier and for Mr. Thomas and also a good word for Mr. Piper. He was also glad to be at such a fine gathering of Republicans. He also went briefly into what Republican legislature had accomplished.

CANDIDATE BOWKER.

Dr. Everett M. Bowker, candidate for County Commissioner thanked the voters for their support last year and spoke of the excellence of the plan of getting the young voters together and of meeting the candidates before the primaries rather than after them.

SENATORIAL CANDIDATES.

Louis F. R. Langelier and William R. Thomas, the two candidates for the Senatorial nomination, occupied seats side by side during the dinner and when called upon for a speech each threw a bouquet at the other and promised that what ever the result of the primaries, that they were Republicans and that they would take off their coat and work for the man nominated.

EX-MAYOR HALL.

Ex-Mayor John O. Hall made a stirring address in favor of the nomination of Col. Benton and was freely applauded as he concluded showing that the genial colonel had many warm friends among those present.

COUNCILLOR CUSHING.

J. Stearns Cushing, a former member of the Governor's council, was very careful in his remarks not to take sides with either of the two candidates for Governor. He spoke along general lines and urged that the Republican ticket be elected from top to bottom. He urged that the primaries be largely attended. He also spoke of the proposed tariff and how it affected his business which was printing. Bibles he now printed would be manufactured abroad. This meant that $300,000 now paid in salaries would go to Scotland. He wittingly alluded to the fact that as Bibles were not a luxury and would not reduce the cost of living.

EX-SENATOR BARNES.

The last speaker was ex-Senator George L. Barnes who took occasion to thank the voters for the support they had given him in the past. He also spoke of some of the legislation enacted by the Republicans and urged all to attend the primaries that there might be a full expression of the voters.

At the conclusion of the speaking Chairman Johnson called for three cheers and a tiger which were given with a will as the party stood.

The patriotism of the entire party was shown by a small silk flag worn on the lapel of the coat. Literature and cigars were passed.

—The town of Norwood is having its troubles. During the past few days some of the residents of the South end made a wholesale raid on the twelve-room school being erected in that section and stole all the lumber which was not nailed down. This district of the town is made up chiefly of foreigners. They apparently valued the lumber more for building shacks than they did to house their children in winter where their learning might be increased.—Hingham Journal.

Summer's Passing

Later the glow of sunrise drives
Darkness from dreaming hills away;
Cooler the breath of morn arrives;
Fewer the bird notes at break of day;
Fainter the green on the lawn.
Summer is almost gone!

Over the fields that at morning lie
Peaceful and restful a quiet broods,
Telling of autumn drawing nigh,
Viewless on paths through fields and woods,
Stepping the meads upon.
Summer is almost gone!

Over the stillness of August noon
Comes a slow change, imperceptible, slight,
Something withdrawn from the sun's full boon,
Paling its glory of golden light,
Lavished when at solstice it shone.
Summer is almost gone!

Sooner the shadow of evening falls;
Faint comes the scent of aftermath hay;
Earlier the moonrise glow enthralls;
Slower the brook runs at close of day;
Earlier night's curtain is drawn.
Summer is going—is gone!

NAIVE FEDERAL INQUIRY REVEALS CURIOUS FACT.

No Law Against Patented Strychnine Cocktails and Cyanide Highballs.

How much poison can be put in a patent medicine? is the naive inquiry made of the secretary of agriculture in a letter that establishes a record even for the curious inquiries that are made by correspondents of the federal departments. The communication is given below, omitting the name and address:

Secretary of Agriculture, wood this all be alowed in medicen and wood it have to bee Patend before it Could bee spald and Arsnic Dovers Powders Quinene Epsons Salts and then A number of herbs that grows heare such as Mullin and sum Barks, how much Arsnic wood bee alowed to say a galon of Chill Tonic please write mee at once My Mother wants to make this Medecin and I want to know the Ruels before it is don. Respectfully, ——— and how much 188 alcohall wood bee alowed in one galon this to preserve it only I think sume youses 8 per cent in Volum please tell just how much the law wood permit.

Aug. 25, 1913.

It is needless to say that experts of the bureau of chemistry did not encourage the writer to enter the patent medicine field. He was given specific warning as to the danger of preparing such substances in haphazard fashion, and also given full warning as to the federal law governing the matter.

One curious fact developed in the examination of the law, however, and that was that there was nothing to prevent any one making and selling a patent medicine with any amount of poison in it, provided the nature and amount of the drugs used was stated on the label and no extravagant claims were made for its curative powers. It would, therefore, appear that any one who wants can put up strychnine cocktails or cyanide highballs just so they patent them and otherwise comply with the law.

NINE BATTLESHIPS TO CRUISE.

Others of Fleet to Remain For Duty In Mexican Waters.

Only nine battleships of the Atlantic fleet will make the Mediterranean cruise planned for this fall, and they will not be accompanied by the torpedo flotilla, as the original program proposed.

Secretary Daniels has announced that it has now been determined that it would be incurring an unnecessary risk to have the destroyers make the return trip across the Atlantic in midwinter and that they would be sent to the Mediterranean at a more favorable season.

It had been intended to send a larger number of battleships on the cruise, but four of the big vessels are being kept in Mexican waters, and four others are held in readiness to relieve them at stated intervals. The ships will leave Hampton Roads, Va., Oct. 25.

The destination of the nine battleships will be as follows: The Wyoming (flagship), Rear Admiral Badger, commander in chief, Malta; the Vermont and the Ohio, Marseilles; the Arkansas and the Florida, Naples; the Utah and the Delaware, Villefranche, France.

SHOW RAILROAD EXPENSES.

Reports From 159 Carriers Are Received by Commerce Commission.

Nearly 3,000 miles were added during the year closing Aug. 21 to the roadway of steam railroads of the country earning less than $1,000,000 a year, according to a statement issued by the interstate commerce commission at Washington. Reports were received from 159 railroads, and these show that the average number of miles operated during the year was 203,695, compared with 200,986 for the corresponding period of the year previous.

The total operating expenses were reported to be $2,823,555,873 for the year as against $2,543,782,711 last year. The net revenue per mile is given as $4,286 as against $3,944 last year.

New Record For Guillaux.

Maurice Guillaux, the French aviator, who flew from Biarritz to Brackel, Germany, Aug. 23, has been awarded the single day record of 859¾ miles. This beats the record for a straight course made last June by Marcel G. Brindejonc des Moulinais, who flew from Paris to St. Petersburg, by two and one-half miles.

SMOKES AND SINGS WITH ARM CUT OFF

Wonderful Nerve Displayed by a Connecticut Man

Winsted, Conn., Sept. 5.—His right arm taken off below the elbow by a train at Canaan, Charles Padelford, a member of the Winsted fire department and driver of the motor truck of the Empire Knife company, smoked a cigar and sang "Blue Eyes" while being brought on a stretcher by train to the county hospital here.

Padelford, who had been on a vacation trip, stumbled in attempting to board a moving train and his arm went under the wheels. The first question he asked the surgeon was whether he could be fixed up so as to drive the auto truck. He was told that with the aid of a hook he could do so.

SMOKE TRICK UNDER WATER

Young Maine Man Loses His Life In Trying to Perform Feat

Calais, Me., Sept. 5.—Attempting a tobacco smoke trick under water cost Stephen Griffin, 21 years old, his life.

Griffin boasted that he could dive into a pond with a chew of tobacco in his mouth and with his lungs full of cigaret smoke, then blow the smoke out when he came up.

He dived and arose after a few seconds, but had been apparently strangled under water by the tobacco and smoke, for when he came to the surface, although a strong swimmer, he was helpless and sank immediately.

"THE LOST CHARLIE ROSS"

Cleveland Man Satisfield He Is the One Who Was Stolen

New York, Sept. 5.—On a passenger train that left here for Cleveland was Charles B. Ross, who had come east a few days ago to see if he could identify himself as Charlie Ross, who was kidnapped from Germantown, Pa., on July 1, 1874. Detectives searched far and wide for Charlie until the death of his father, Christian K. Ross, in 1897.

The Cleveland man says he satisfied himself, by his trip here, that he was the stolen boy. On the strength of what he learned he will make affidavit in Cleveland as to his birth and parentage.

FORTY-THREE MILES AN HOUR

Record Speed Is Claimed For New Russian Destroyer

Swinemuende, Ger., Sept. 5.—The Russian torpedo boat destroyer Novik established a record when she attained a maximum speed of 37.3 knots (43 miles an hour), on her trials here.

Her average speed over the measured mile was 37 knots. The Novik, which was built in Germany, burns oil and is not fitted with smokestacks.

Farmers Ask More For Milk

Boston, Sept. 5.—Directors of the New England Milk Producers' association have decided to ask for an increase for their milk, and to notify the Boston milk contractors to that effect.

MILLER PLACED UNDER ARREST

Engineer of Death Train Charged With Criminal Negligence

FLAGMAN MURRAY ALSO HELD

Each Placed on $5000 Bail, Which Is Furnished For Miller by Union—Accused Men Tell Conflicting Stories at Coroner's Inquest—Belnap Actively at Work

New Haven, Sept. 5.—August B. Miller, engineer of the White Mountain express, and Charles H. Murray, flagman of the Bar Harbor express, the two trains involved in the fatal North Haven wreck on the New York, New Haven and Hartford railroad last Tuesday, were formally placed under arrest by Coroner Mix late last night, charged with having "criminally caused the death of Royal H. Hotchkiss," one of the victims of the disaster.

They were each placed on $5000 bail under a coroner's warrant, effective until twenty-four hours after the coroner has rendered a verdict in the inquest into the catastrophe which he began in private yesterday.

Bail for Miller was furnished by the local Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers and Firemen. Friends of Murray, who does not belong to any railroad organization, it is said, are making efforts to raise the required sum.

Both men, who have been detained by the coroner in the county jail since the day of the wreck as material witnesses, were arrested after they had given testimony at a night session of the inquest.

The pair, who, it is said, have told widely conflicting stories as to the causes of the accident, were examined separately.

Miller was the first to be taken into custody. He was brought from the superior court, where the hearing was held, to police headquarters nearby, where the warrant was issued. He was there permitted to call up Treasurer Gates of the engineers brotherhood, who was quick to arrive with surety.

While Coroner Mix was conducting what he termed a "private, not secret," inquest to fix the criminal responsibility, if any, for the fatal wreck, Chief Inspector Belnap of the interstate commission prepared the foundation for the broader inquiry to be begun here by the federal authorities.

The inquest of the coroner, held in the superior court under protection of a guard of police, continued until late last night, and more than a score of witnesses, nearly all employes of the New Haven road, including members of the crews of the two trains involved in the wreck, the White Mountain and Bar Harbor expresses, were examined.

It became known that Miller and Murray have told different stories as to the location of the torpedoes which the flagman placed on the tracks to warn the on-rushing White Mountain express that the Bar Harbor express had halted.

MANUEL WEDS VICTORIA

Brilliant Gathering of Royalty at Castle of Bride's Father

Sigmaringen, Ger., Sept. 5.—To an accompaniment of pomp commonly associated with royalty, former King Manuel of Portugal was married to Princess Augustine Victoria of Hohenzollern in the castle of the bride's father here.

The ceremonies, which followed the Roman Catholic ritual, were conducted by Cardinal Netto, former archbishop patriarch of Lisbon. There was a brilliant gathering of princes and princesses.

Enormous crowds of townfolk and strangers gathered around the castle. Prince William had great tables set along the roadway covered with good things to eat and drink, and all were invited to help themselves.

GAZES AT DEATH TRUNK

Preliminary Interrogation of Charlton Completed In Italy

Como, Italy, Sept 5.—Interrogation of Porter Charlton, the American uxoricide, was completed last evening. Charlton was confronted with the trunk in which he hid his wife's body in Lake Como. He gazed at it intently for a few moments, looking at the brown bloodstains, but did not flinch.

The young prisoner was questioned about his wife. He said she was 40 years old when he fell in love with her in February, 1910. She had been previously married, but was divorced. She had been an actress, and had once tried to shoot a man in a New York hotel for deserting her after they had become friendly.

BEIDLEMAN IS DEAD

Old Man Ate but Two Bits of Toast In Fifty-Six Days

Harrisburg, Sept. 5.—William Beidleman died here after a fast of fifty-six days, during which time he ate but two small pieces of toast. He was close to 96 years of age.

Beidleman's fast was due to grief at the death of a close relative, and he declared, when asked why he did not eat, was that he had no desire to take food.

COHAN IN AUTO CRASH

Daughter of Playwright Receives Probably Fatal Injuries

Hartford, Sept. 5.—Thrown from their speeding automobile when it struck a garbage wagon, two miles from this city, and all seriously injured, George M. Cohan, his 13-year-old daughter, Georgia Cohan; Wallace Eddinger, leading man for Cohan's new play, "Seven Keys to Baldpate"; Francis X. Hope, Cohan's confidential secretary, and William Van Buren, Eddinger's chauffeur, were rushed to the Hartford hospital, where it was said Cohan and the other men would recover, but that the recovery of his daughter is doubtful.

The party was coming from New York to Hartford to begin rehearsals for the new play which was to be tried out here. Two miles south of Hartford, Van Buren, who was driving, turned out to pass a garbage wagon. He struck the horse and the car was thrown aside by the impact. It struck an embankment by the roadside and turned turtle.

The horse was badly injured and had to be killed. Van Buren said his car was traveling about thirty-five miles an hour when he first saw the wagon.

TRADING AMOUNTS TO $3000 A MINUTE

Cattle Record Established at Kansas City Yards

Kansas City, Sept. 5.—Nine thousand head of cattle were received at the local stock yards yesterday, bringing the cattle receipts for the first days of this week to 101,327, and establishing a new record. The previous record was made in October, 1908, when 95,586 cattle came in.

The presence of out-of-town buyers has partially sustained the market and prices on prime cattle were steady, on killers 25 to 5 cents lower, on stockers and feeders 10 to 25 cents lower, and on common stock 25 to 50 cents lower.

A conservative estimate of the amount of money that has changed hands at the yards during trading hours of the four days of this week is $1,500,000 a day, or over $3000 a minute on cattle alone.

ARMY FLIERS MEET DEATH

One Has Fatal Plunge In California and Two In Germany

San Diego, Cal., Sept. 5.—Lieutenant Moss L. Love, Signal Corps, U. S. A., was instantly killed when his aeroplane plunged 300 feet to the ground at the army aviation school near here.

The exact cause of the accident was not ascertained. Witnesses say the air was absolutely still at the time and the machine was gliding to the ground.

The aeroplane was wrecked and there is small likelihood that an examination of it will disclose the cause of the acicdent.

Breig, Ger., Sept. 5.—Lieutenant von Eckenbrecher and Lieutenant Prinz were testing a new aeroplane over the military aerodrome here when the left wing collapsed while they were at a height of 100 yards. The aviators were crushed to death as the machine struck the ground.

Canned Pineapple Dumped Overboard

Boston, Sept. 5.—Fifty cases of canned pineapples seized by the government authorities under the pure food law were dumped into Boston harbor. The impure goods had been shipped here by a New York canning concern.

TWO YELLOW EYES

He Faced Them Bravely

By ADELAIDE BURNHAM

The Hendersons were writing a book on "The Faund and the Flora of the Himalayas," and they were occupying a whitewashed bungalow on the edge of the jungle five miles beyond Simla. Sylvia Bradley, Mrs. Henderson's sister, was acting as private secretary to that talented lady, while Robert Orthman fulfilled the same duties for John Henderson.

Mrs. Henderson and Sylvia engaged themselves with botanizing expeditions, surrounded by a capable native guard, while the two men carried guns and notebooks into the jungle and met with several thrilling adventures. The book was progressing well in spite of the blistering heat that shortened the working days to minimum hours, when a little party of American friends who were touring India came up from Simla for the night.

"Bobby Orthman with you?" asked Mr. Delafield, as he strolled around the compound with his host after dinner. "Like him?"

"First rate," cried Henderson.

"They say he's something of a molly-coddle in spite of his six feet two bulk. Wouldn't stand for hazing at college and they say has a deadly fear of wild animals," said Delafield.

Henderson started ever so slightly.

"Doesn't look like deadly fear when he enters the jungle with me every day," retorted Henderson obstinately.

"Humph! Not much danger around here. The jungle has been pretty thoroughly beaten, they tell me, and, besides, your native fellows can take care of you."

"Shall we join the ladies?" asked Henderson abruptly, and so the conversation ended. But after the guests had departed the seeds of distrust sown by Delafield sprouted in Henderson's mind, and one evening Henderson confided the story to his wife and sister-in-law, hoping they would rout his suspicions with their warm defense of Bobby Orthman.

But Mrs. Delafield had been gossiping, too, and Maud Henderson and her sister, who were hero worshipers, had somehow changed their opinion of Bobby Orthman overnight. It wasn't a fair or loyal thing to do, but because they liked him so well, Sylvia especially, they were vexed at this flaw in their idol of young manhood.

They expressed themselves vigorously to this effect, and the idol of young manhood happened to be taking a siesta in his own room off the east veranda and heard every word of the conversation before he realized that he had been eavesdropping.

Then he jumped up, had a bath and got into clean linen clothes, and, leaving the compound by the west gate, he went up to Juppor hill to have it out with himself.

He sat down on the scattered rocks and stared at the sunset—an amber sea of clouds beyond the jagged peaks.

Bobby Orthman was proud, and his soul writhed when he remembered Sylvia's light laugh of disdain as they discussed him. His hands clinched until the bronzed knuckles showed white and his strong teeth bit hard into his lower lip.

Sylvia, whom he loved—he was only waiting a favorable opportunity to tell her—Sylvia thought him a coward!

If she only knew!

At the compound gate he found his own servant, Mitti Tanduri, conversing excitedly with the other servants.

"What is the trouble, Mitti?" he asked.

"Ah, sahib, a tiger has appeared in the village beyond. Last night it carried away the wife of my Cousin Goona."

Bobby leaned, white and shaking, against the gate. He could have killed himself for this weakness. When he sat down at table his air was constrained, and after Henderson had heard the story of the tiger from Mitti's eager lips he understood what ailed his secretary.

"How dreadful!" shuddered Sylvia, with blanched lips. "I hope it won't come any nearer us. Can't you go out and shoot it, Jack?"

"I'll try," said Henderson grimly. "Anjar better strengthen the stockade tomorrow and see that the gates are locked after sundown. I suppose this is an end to your rambles for the present, Maud."

"It is!" returned Mrs. Henderson decidedly. "We can work on the book. There's enough to do at home until you exterminate that beast."

"And you, Jack—you will continue to go to the jungle every day?" asked Sylvia.

"Of course. How about you, Orthman?"

"Certainly," said Bobby gravely, but he knew that his face was like death and that his hands shook.

Sylvia thought him a coward, and he was too proud to explain to her that his childhood had been spent in India and that when but a tiny lad he had been carried away from his nurse by a tiger. Only his father's bravery had saved his life, but his arms and breast still bore the scars of savage teeth.

After dinner he sat alone on the veranda, for the others were gathered around the lamp in the living room reading papers from home.

There was a soft murmur of voices from the servants' quarters, and then silence broke now and then by the bark of a dog or the cry of some sleepy bird.

Bobby thought he was alone out there, but he had a companion near by. A queer thrill down his spine followed a movement in the shade of a deodar tree near the closed gate. Bobby was conscious of being watched. He glanced around at the wire screened window; neither Sylvia nor her brother-in-law had looked his way. He was alone on the veranda, but not alone in the compound.

Straight ahead, under the deep black shadow of the deodar tree, there shone two round yellow lights. They were, perhaps, fourteen inches apart and they moved slowly toward him in dreadful unison.

He struck a match sharply, and the eyes receded before the sudden flare of light. While he held the match to his empty pipe, he spoke hoarsely to the man within the room:

"Henderson! Close your wooden shutters. Get a line on him if you can. I'll draw him off."

Thus calmly, Bobby Orthman, the coward, proceeded to throw himself in the way of a man eating tiger in order to save the girl he loved and the ones that she loved.

He went quietly down the steps, scratching matches as he did so; the eyes remained stationary under the deodar. Unless Henderson got his shutters closed in time and brought the gun the beast would soon lose his curiosity about the flaring matches and bring his prey to the ground. If Bobby Orthman dodged into the bungalow the tiger would rush the nearest open window or ravage the fragile quarters of the servants in the rear.

Henderson was slamming shutters.

The tiger uttered an earth shaking growl and leaped forward. Bobby Orthman dodged aside, but he heard the heavy thud as the beast's padded paws struck the ground beside him.

Bobby darted toward the deodar tree, knowing that the tiger must follow him across the streak of light from the hall window. If Henderson could get in his shot while the tiger crossed the lighted streak Bobby might escape.

In two bounds the tiger had regained the tree and Bobby was fleeing across the streak of light.

Suddenly he turned and waited. Henderson was too late. He might as well have it over with now. There would be no one to care and his honor would be vindicated. They could never call him a coward again. He smiled at the yellow lights creeping stealthily toward him. No one would ever know how he had accepted Henderson's offer to go into the jungle in order to face the jungle beasts and try to subdue that fear in his heart. Well, God knew, and he knew himself.

The tiger came in a flying leap that showed his huge body against the star spangled sky.

As he crossed the streak of light there came two shots in quick succession, and then there remained in the shadow a writhing mass that presently resolved into two quiet forms.

After that pandemonium reigned in the compound. Henderson and a white lipped Sylvia, with other assistance, found Bobby's unconscious form beneath the dead bulk of the tiger.

"Did you notice? His arms were folded!" sobbed Sylvia in Henderson's ear.

He nodded. "His face was toward the enemy, too," he said remorsefully. "He had the stuff in him, Sylvia, only we didn't understand him. God knows I am sorry."

Sylvia was caressing Bobby's blood stained face, and she was surprised when he opened his eyes and smiled at her with wonderful sweetness.

"Don't be too kind to me, Sylvia, if you don't mean it," he whispered. "I'm not going to die yet. I'm only scratched and bruised a little where the beast fell on me. Don't be kind unless you love me."

"I must be kind, Bobby, dear," whispered Sylvia, making amends for her doubt of him; "I must be kind to you because I love you so!"

"If you love me," grinned Bobby, "you may kiss a coward."

"A hero," amended Sylvia, proceeding to take advantage of Bobby's permission.

And the striped skin of the yellow eyed monster became part of the furnishing of their home.

THAW BEFORE INQUIRY BOARD

Must Show Reason Why He Should Not Be Deported

CLAIMS HE WAS A "TOURIST"

Receives Setback When Not Allowed to Pass Through Canada Under Jack Johnson Ruling—Fugitive Expected to Be Taken Across Border to Vermont Very Soon

Coaticook, Que., Sept. 5.—Counsel for Harry K. Thaw met with another defeat when Justice Hutchinson refused to grant a writ of prohibition against the immigration authorities detaining Thaw. The board of inquiry, which had taken a short recess, immediately resumed its examination of Thaw when the ruling became known.

The board of inquiry decided that Thaw was not a transient tourist, and therefore not entitled to pass through the country under the Jack Johnson ruling. This means Thaw will be dealt with as an ordinary immigrant.

This was the last play left open to the Thaw attorneys in view of the expected order for their client's deportation.

Thaw raised the point that he was merely a tourist passing through Canada from another country. He said he had bought a ticket for Detroit and was willing to be escorted to that city by the immigration officials. He insisted that his case did not come under the immigration act.

Thaw was questioned by E. B. Robertson, assistant superintendent of immigration. He said he had purchased the first railroad ticket at Rochester, N. H., intending to go to Pittsburg from there. Then he discovered that this town was not on a direct route to Pittsburg, so he got a ticket for Whitefield, N. H. On arriving at Whitefield, he learned that this station was also off the main line and took another train for Beechers Falls, Vt.

Arriving at Beechers Falls, Thaw said he learned the train went no further, so he gave up traveling by trains for the day and had his supper.

Thaw said he then decided to go to Coaticook. He hired a man to drive him to this place, but the horses gave out and could not finish the trip. A second team was hired and he was driven to St. Hermenegilde, where he put up for the night.

It was his intention, said Thaw, to go to Coaticook the following morning and purchase a ticket for Pittsburg, but he was arrested before he could leave.

H. Johnston, a farmer, who drove Thaw across the line, followed Thaw on the stand. He said they drove toward the border in the direction of Paquettsville. A hundred feet from the line they turned back, he said, and made their way towards Canaan, Vt. Finally they crossed the border at "Peabody's Line House." Johnston added that as they went through that place the low, cautious tone of Thaw's voice frightened him and he refused to go any farther.

Thaw and his companions, among them Roger Thompson, alighted and went to the house of Octave Nadeau. Nadeau agreed to drive them to the inn at Garford, owned by Ben Cedioux. Cadieux followed Johnston on the stand.

In case Thaw is ordered deported the fight to keep him out of New York state will not be ended. His attorneys will make a last stand in Vermont. Just where this action will be taken has not been decided, but should he be ordered out of Canada his counsel will immediately rush for the state from which he entered the dominion and bring action in the courts there in an effort to keep him out of the possession of Jerome.

Dr. Kieb, superintendent of the Matteawan asylum for the criminal insane, from which Thaw escaped more than two weeks ago, is held in readiness to testify as to Thaw's commitment and confinement there as the insane slayer of Stanford White.

WEDS FOSTER CHILD

Chicago Man Says It Was Dying Wish of His First Wife

Chicago, Sept. 5.—How Marjorie Payne celebrated her 24th birthday is a story unique in the records of romance. She selected that occasion to change her title for the man she has called "father" ever since she was 6 years old to the even more intimate one of "husband."

She was married to William Worth by Rev. William Carwardine, a Methodist minister. "Miss Payne was my ward and I married her," declared the bridegroom. "It was the dying wish of my former wife, who died last June.

"Marjorie Payne was laid on my doorstep eighteen years ago. She was then a child of 6. Her parents were theatrical people."

THE HUSBANDS OF EDITH

By GEORGE BARR M'CUTCHEON

Copyright by Dodd, Mead & Co.

"See here, Connie, we've got some one else to consider as well as ourselves. In order to square it all up for Edith we must be able to say to these people that we haven't been frivoling—that we are going to be married at once. That will let Edith out of the difficulty, and everything will look rosy at the outset. If we put it off the world will have said things in its ignorance that she can never refute, simply because the world doesn't stop long enough to hear two sides of a story unless they are given pretty closely together. Now, Edith is counting on us to put the peeping Tom Rodneys and the charitable Carneys to rout with our own little bombshell. They're saying nasty things about all of us. They're calling you a vile thing for stealing your sister's husband, and they're calling me a dog for what I'm doing. No telling what they'll be saying if we don't step into the breach as soon as it is opened. We can't afford to wait, no matter what Roxbury says when he comes. We've just got to be able to forestall even dear old Roxbury. Come! Don't you see? We must be married at once."

"Dear me," she murmured softly, "what will papa say?"

"My dear Constance, I will explain it all to your father when he gets back from South America next winter."

It was now raining in torrents. They moved back into the darkest recess of their shelter and blissfully looked out upon the drenched universe with eyes that saw nothing but sweet sunshine and fair weather.

The clattering of horses' hoofs upon the hard mountain road sounded suddenly above the hiss of the rainstorm. It was quite dark by this time, night having been hurried on by the lowering skies. A moment later three horsemen, drenched to the skin, drew up in front of the inn, threw their reins over the posts and dashed for shelter. They came noisily into the arbor, growling and stamping their soggy feet.

"What, ho!" called one of the new comers, sticking his head through a window of the house. Brock and Miss Fowler looked on, amused by the plight of the riders. Two of them were unquestionably officers of the police, the third seemed to be an Englishman. They were gruff, burly fellows, all of them. For a few minutes they stormed and growled about their miserable luck in being caught in the downpour, ordering schnapps and brandy in large and instant quantities. At last the Englishman, a heavy, sour faced man, turned his gaze in the direction of the lovers, who sat quite close together in the dark corner. His gaze developed into a stare, then a look of triumph. A moment later he was pointing out the couple to his companions, all three peering at them with excited eyes.

Brock's face went red under the rude stare. He was on the point of resenting it when the Englishman stepped forward. The American arose at once.

"I've been looking for you, Mr. Medcroft—if that is your name," said the stranger, halting in front of the table. "My name is Githens, Scotland Yard. These men have an order for your arrest. I'd advise you to go with them peaceably. The young woman will not be bothered. She is free to go."

"What are you talking about?" demanded Brock angrily. Suddenly he felt a chill of misgiving. What had Roxbury Medcroft been doing that he should be subject to arrest?

"You are masquerading here as Roxbury Medcroft, the architect. You are not Medcroft. I have watched you for weeks. Today we have learned that Medcroft is in London. Your linen is marked with a letter B. You've drawn money on a letter of credit together with a woman who signs herself as Edith F. Medcroft. There is something wrong with you, Mr. B., and these officers, acting for the hotel and the state bank, have been instructed to detain you pending an investigation."

Mr. Githens was vindicating himself. He may have been a trifle disconcerted by Miss Fowler's musical laugh and Brock's plain guffaw, but he managed to preserve a stiff dignity. "It's no laughing matter. Officers, this is your man. Take him in charge. Madam, as I understand it, you are the alleged sister of the woman who is working herself off as Mrs. Medcroft. It may interest you to know that your sister—if she is your sister—has locked herself in her room and was in hysterics when I left the hotel. She will be carefully guarded, however. She cannot escape. As for you, madam, there is as yet no complaint against you, but I wish to notify you that you may consider yourself under surveillance until after your friends have had a hearing before the magistrate tomorrow. As soon as it has ceased raining we will ask you to ride with us to the city. As for Mr. B., he is in charge of these officers."

At 8 o'clock that evening a solemn cavalcade rode into Innsbruck. There were tears of expostulation in the eyes of the lone young woman, flashes of indignation in those of the tall young man who rode beside her.

The tall young man was going to jail!

WHOSE BUSINESS IS IT?

"Parents, as a rule, are desirous of having their children instructed in morality. They want them to be honest and truthful-not to lie, steal swear or kill. They want them to be patriotic, courteous, reverent. Many parents strive to inculcate these virtues by precept and practice. Before the question of purity, however, parents, for some unaccountable reason, flounder helplessly. They want their children to be pure in thought and act, but who shall instruct them? What is everybody's business is nobody's business.

"The American has transferred this delicate problem to the already overburdened shoulders of the public school. The public school declares it has no time to deal with this question except indirectly, and it has passed it along to the church. The latter has signally failed to reach the masses of youth."—Suburban Life.

—There's no doubt of it. Advertising brings home the sweetness, says an exchange, and then states in proof of it that recently a gentleman at New Richmond advertised in the Republican for a girl. The paper hadn't been out an hour before a girl was born to him and his wife. Steady, continuous advertising by the same party would hardly bring results every week—Foxboro Reporter.

MINISTER APPRECIATIVE.

Many people believe that a newspaper falls together without work or concerted action or plan. Rev. McLeod, a Presbyterian minister, was of the opinion and asked to be permitted to edit an edition of a paper in his own locality. The editor gladly accepted the opportunity, and the report says he took advantage of the respite by enjoying a little fishing trip, the minister meanwhile taking up his duties in the newspaper office. This is how he felt when he found himself at the end of the task which, it is said, was accomplished very creditably:

"My time is almost up as I pen this last line; my hand is almost paralyzed; my brain is befuddled and I am free to confess that I am right glad to vacate the holy spot. Such rush and riot and disarray. Such a jumble of potpourri; it strikes me as the effort to bring order out of chaos and to do it lightning quick.

"I am reminded of the memorable words, 'The earth was without form and void, and darkness was upon the face of the waters.' Never shall I criticise newspaper men more. I shall pray for them. They will have my heart's forbearance henceforth and for ever. They are the hardest worked, shortest lived, poorest paid brainworkers on this weary old world of ours."

BIG HAUL ON SCHOOL STREET

Burglars Enter the House of James H. Stetson

The return of James H. Stetson to his home on School street this week resulted in his discovery that bric a brac, furs and silverware had been taken while the family were at their home in Harwich. It is estimated that the loss is about $2500.

No definite idea of when the robbery was committed could be obtained since nothing about the premises gives the police any clew. It is entirely probable that the haul was the work of the gang of thieves that have been operating in New England the past summer. Capt. Daniel R. McKay and Inspector Fred E. Goodhue have been assigned to the case. The police department have given out no information on the robbery.

DANGEROUS PLAYTHINGS.

Two six year old boys exploded a dynamite cap on Kent street Wednesday afternoon and escaped with slight injuries. Charles Shea, son of Mr. and Mrs. Daniel Shea of 27 Town Hill street received severe burns about the face and Leslie Hennon, who lives with Mrs. Framingham received a severe fright. The boys found three dynamite caps on Kent street and when they could not evenly divide them young Shea exploded the odd one by striking it with a rock. He was thrown to the ground by the explosion. Dr. J. T. Reynolds examined both hoys and said neither had sustained serious injury.

No Cause to Worry.

"Theosophilus,' said Mrs. Gossip, "just think: One-half the world doesn't know how the other half lives!" "Never mind, dear," replied her long-suffering husband, "that isn't your fault."

MONUMENT TO HEROES OF ALL OUR CONFLICTS.

Carter County, Tenn., Will Honor Both Blue and Gray.

Carter county, Tenn., has just completed a monument of concrete, with marble tablets, to the memory of its soldiers of all our wars, from the American Revolution down to the present time. This monument commemorates the deeds not only of the soldiers of the republic, but those of the men who wore the gray in the civil war.

East Tennessee counties contributed sparingly to the Confederate forces; but, although loyal to the Union, the boys who wore Federal uniforms have come to love and respect the heroes of the Confederacy and all traces of a one time bitterness have disappeared. Thus it is that this monument, erected almost in sight of Sycamore shoals, where the heroes of the American Revolution assembled for the march to King's mountain, recognizes all soldiers.

The Spanish-American war helped this feeling. At Chickamauga, where 60,000 soldiers were mobilized, the sons of the men who wore the blue and the sons of those who wore the gray assembled in the same camp under one flag. Prior to that time the old sores had been hard to heal.

The Carter monument will be unveiled early in October and soldiers on both sides in the civil war will be there. There will also be present descendants of Sevier and Campbell and Shelby and other forces of King's mountain.

Among those invited to speak on the occasion are Governor Ben W. Hooper of Tennessee, United States Senator John K. Shields, Congressman Sam R. Sells and General Harvey Hannah.

WILL PRECANCEL STAMPS.

Yearly Saving of $200,000 to Postoffice Department Expected.

Beginning Sept. 16, precanceled postage stamps are to be sold to the public, an order to this effect having been signed recently by Postmaster General Burleson. By the operations of this order it is expected that a saving of approximately $200,000 per year can be effected in the operating expense of the postoffice department.

Precanceled stamps are those which bear the name of the postoffice at which matter bearing them is mailed. The name appears between two heavy black lines. The canceling is done by means of a special machine, and by the use of such stamps it becomes unnecessary to pass each piece of mail through the canceling machines.

To cancel the number of stamps now used each year in this manner, it is stated, will cost about $10,000, while if the stamps are not canceled until placed on the matter to be mailed the cost would approximate $250,000.

The precanceled stamps are to be valid for postage for any point only when matter bearing them is mailed at the office of precancellation—that is, stamps precanceled at Washington will not be good on any matter mailed outside the delivery limits of Washington.

Formerly the use of such stamps was not permitted unless at least 2,000 were sold at one time, to be used on pieces of mail identical in size and class. Postmaster General Burleson's order removes these restrictions and is considered another great step forward toward making the postal service thoroughly efficient.

Butter In Well Seven Years.

A crock of butter was taken from a well on the farm of John McQuigg, a wealthy landowner of Grant City, Mo., a few days ago. The butter was lost in the well years ago by Mr. McQuigg's wife, who died seven years ago. The cloth still was around the butter, which was firm, of bright color and of good eating quality.

SCHOOL HYGIENE MORE ADVANCED

Less a Fight Against Disease Than For Health.

EXHIBITS MORE SCIENTIFIC.

Argument In Favor of International Movement by United States Bureau of Education—Right Living Under Right Conditions For School Children of First Importance.

With the closing of the fourth international congress on school hygiene, lately held at Buffalo, one fact stands out vividly, according to the United States bureau of education. "The school hygiene movement has become a positive movement for the advancement of the health of the school child rather than a negative summing up of disease," says a bulletin just issued by the bureau.

"The health emphasis was particularly noticeable in the scientific exhibit held in connection with the congress. Visitors to educational exhibitions on hygiene and sanitation do not need to be told how frequently these have been of the 'chamber of horrors' variety. There were survivals of this type in the Buffalo exhibits, but for the most part the positive, sane, normal exhibit was conspicuously present.

Pictures a Feature.

"There were wonderful pictures of city girls engaged in outdoor sports and games—the New York schoolgirls, for instance, who in their Public Schools Athletic league illustrate the newer health spirit of the hour, the spirit of wholesome recreation, to which even the tenement seems to succumb.

"The old familiar exhibits of wan and careworn consumptive children were replaced in the exhibits with cheerful pictures of 'pretuberculous' youngsters busy in the school of the out of doors, their faces bright with the hope of health, typical of the knowledge that fresh air and sunshine can and will drive tuberculosis from the earth.

"There were more illustrations of healthy teeth than decayed in the Buffalo exhibit; there was less emphasis on the pitiable condition of bad teeth and more stress on the advantages of good teeth, and, above all, there was the spotless school dental clinic of Cincinnati and other cities, with its promise of better, cleaner mouths for future school children.

Central Fact Emphasized.

"Exhibits of the old sort there were, a few, just as there were a few speeches of the kind that were undoubtedly necessary in the early days of the health movement to arouse public sentiment, but the one big central fact, both in the exhibit and in the speeches, was that school hygiene is to be henceforth considered from the point of view of health, not disease; that sound bodies, clear minds, normal development, air and sunlight, rational living, education to fit for natural productive life, are the things to be stressed; that it is not so much a fight against disease as it is a fight for health. It was almost as if the delegates of the nations at Buffalo had declared to the world: 'There are many things to be done. We know the evils now; let us remedy where we can, but let us above all do our best to point the way to clean, healthful, normal living for the generations to come.'"

AID ARRIVES JUST IN TIME.

Relief Ship Saves Party of Explorers From Terrible Death.

According to dispatches from Christchurch, New Zealand, relief arrived just in the nick of time to save the lives of Dr. Douglas Mawson, the Australian antarctic explorer, and his five companions who were left in March last on Macquarie island, in the Antarctic ocean, when the remaining twenty-four members of Dr. Mawson's expedition returned to Tasmania.

The six men were believed to have ample provisions to last them until the antarctic spring, but the commander of a government steamer recently sent to their relief reports that the explorers had exhausted all their supplies and had been living for some time on the hearts and tongues of sea elephants. All of them were obviously in very weak condition when the relief ship reached them.

Dr. Mawson's expedition was unfortunate in losing by death two of its members owing to accidents on the ice—Lieutenant Ninnis, an English army officer, and Dr. Xavier Mertz, a Swiss scientist.

The original expedition left Hobart, Tasmania, on Dec. 2, 1911, its principal object being the exploration and survey of the antarctic coast line.

When the Aurora went to fetch the explorers back early this year the vessel was forced to leave before taking on Dr. Mawson and five of his companions, as she was in danger of being crushed by the ice.

Horses Instead of Autos.

Secretary Wilson will not get a limousine and electric runabout from congress. The house subcommittee handling appropriations for the department of labor recently cut out the automobiles and provided horses.

The 15th anniversary of the marriage of Mr. and Mrs. W. F. Pyyny was observed at the Finnish Congregational church Thursday evening, by a large number of friends and relatives. There is more Catarrh in this section of the country than all other diseases put together, and until the last few years was supposed to be incurable. For a great many years doctors pronounced it a local disease and prescribed local remedies, and by constantly failing to cure local treatment pronounced it incurable. Science has proven catarrh to be a constitutional disease and therefore requires constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, Ohio, is the only constitutional cure on the market. It is taken internally in doses from 10 drops to a teaspoonful. It acts directly on the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. They offer one hundred dollars for any case it fails to cure. Send for circulars and testimonials.

'TIS A GOOD HORSE WHO NEVER STUMBLES

But an old horse gets to know a great deal. The writer recently saw a milk wagon drop its master on the west side of the street, and the horse immediately crossed, without stumbling to the east side, where the horse knew the next stop.

Good Horse, That.

If a horse by careful training can pick his steps to go along from side to side of a city street, surely you have a right to expect the men in this business to pick the right brands and qualities of food stuffs and to protect you from bad merchandise.

This Store Certainly does reject many things not up to its standard

Almost every kind and brand of goods are offered to us for purchase.
Almost every day we refuse more than we accept as not up to our grades.
Some of these rejected goods—canned, bottled, in packages, cartons, boxes, etc.,—copied to look exactly like other goods, we see the next day overdisplayed elsewhere.
It is the inside of the watch that makes the real watch, and this is also true of silver plate, of a piano and of food articles.
It is the cleanliness of the store, the high grade of the goods it sells and the name over the door that actually certifies the value and goodness.

THE QUINCY DAILY LEDGER

LARGEST GUARANTEED CIRCULATION IN THE CITY

Vol. 28 No. 207 QUINCY MASS., SATURDAY EVENING, SEPTEMBER 6, 1913 PRICE TWO CENTS

SCHOOL STREET BURGLARY

Loss at James H. Stetson's May Exceed Estimate

Instead of the loss being $2500 as reported in Friday's Ledger the burglars that ransacked the home of James H. Stetson on School street are thought to have taken over $3000 worth of bric a brac, silverware, rugs and clothing. The fact that a break has been committed was established without the aid of the police department who did everything possible to keep the matter quiet.

It has since been learned that the visitors to the Stetson home ransacked the house thoroughly. They left two valuable rugs rolled around a quantity of silver, and thinking that the burglars might return for their abandoned loot nothing was given out by the police at the request of Mr. Stetson.

The robbery was discovered Tuesday night by Mr. Stetson who stays there once a week while Mrs. Stetson is at Harwich. He did not make his customary weekly visits during August and the burglary may have been committed anytime during that month although the police believe it occured since Saturday.

The interior presented a wrecked appearance when Mr. Stetson opened his doors Tuesday. He found evidence of burglary all about him and on making an inspection of the premises discovered open drawers with contents strewn about the floor and floor covering and pictures removed from their accustomed places.

The way entrance was effected defied discovery for a long time and it was only by the closet searching that they found a rear window had been forced with a tool so fine that it hardly made any marks.

The house fronts on School street and in the rear are the tracks of the railroad and a long field. The shades are drawn always during the absence of the family and the blinds closed and it would be almost impossible to detect burglars at work in the house.

The method of the ransackers was methodical to the extreme, and everything was left in good order around the entrance.

A list of the missing articles was prepared and furnished to the police. Capt. McKay and Inspector Goodhue have been at work on it.

When Mr. Stetson came out Tuesday night he was surprised to find, when he tried to enter the side door that the chain was on. It had been his custom to enter by this door and he could not account for the chain being on. Further investigation showed that the house had been burglarized.

Once inside the parties evidently worked at leisure. There was a large amount of valuable goods in the house and the parties picked out what they wanted. Some very valuable articles were laid aside and similar articles of less value taken. A valuable pair of binoculars were left, while an inexpensive camera hanging near by was taken. A very expensive set of furs was left, and a cheaper set taken. In the attic many valuable sets of furs were also undisturbed.

Evidence showed that a lot of valuable rugs which had been rolled up and left on the lower floor had been unrolled and examined, but none were taken. Some valuable portieres however, which had been covered with papers and cloth to keep out the moths and dust, were carried away, also a valuable clock.

Aside from this there was a lot of valuable bric-a-brac, which Mr. and Mrs. Stetson had collected at various times, which was taken and some of the silverware, although other valuable pieces of silver were left behind. Whether the parties intended to come again and remove these goods or whether they were frightened away is not known.

There was a well defined path leading from the rear of the house to the railroad tracks and it is believed that the burglars approached the house by this path and that the loot which they carried away went by the same route.

The fact that a break had been made was promptly reported to the police, but at the request of Mr. Stetson it was not given out to the newspapers. Newspaper reporters however got hold of the fact that something was up and ran down the story. Even then the police refused to give out any information, and it was not until the Daily Ledger published the account of the break Friday that any of the facts came out.

CITY SQUARE IMPROVEMENT

New Transfer Points Suggested and a Wider Sidewalk

Commissioner Tupper is giving the suggestion of the Daily Ledger, relative to a white line through City Square for automobile drivers to follow, considerable attention. The Commissioner said this morning that he hardly thought a white lime line would do for there was so much traffic over that part of Washington street that the lime would soon be obliterated.

He was however considering the plan adopted in some places. That was to erect a small stand, near the crossing which runs from the corner of Saville street across Hancock street another near the corner of Washington and Temple streets. On this stand he would have a sign reading "Keep to the right." This he believes would help matters.

The Commissioner said that he thought if the street railway transfer point was moved either north or south of the present place in front of the Faxon block that it would help some, but that the real solution of the scheme would be by double tracking Washington street.

Temple street has also been suggested for a transfer point. It is a little off the travelled way; is wide enough for two tracks and could be connected up directly with the tracks from South Quincy and also from Houghs Neck. There should be double tracks around the First church with crossovers, so that cars of all lines could make the circuit of the church.

It would be a great improvement, also, if the sidewalk from Saville street to Granite street was widened to about twice the present width.

Now it is very much congested. Hancock street is so wide that it could spare 10 or 20 feet in front of City Hall and Hancock cemetery, and straighten the line. Such a sidewalk would be a continuation of the sidewalk from Dimmock street to Saville street, which has met the approval of the people generally.

A comfort station is very much needed in City Square and should not longer be delayed. If an isolated site is wanted, it could be located largely underground in a new triangle at the junction of Coddington and Washington streets. There might be some question of heating it in winter, but there is such a station on Boston Common, near Park street. If located in the rear of City Hall it could probably be heated from City Hall. Such a station will need not only heat but caretakers. There should be a man for the man's department, and a woman for the woman's department. Malden has such a station in the basement of its City building.

PILGRIM FATHERS.

A colony of the United Order of Pilgrim Fathers was instituted at the Catholic Lyceum hall, Houghs Neck, Thursday evening by Supreme Governor George F. Bradstreet, assisted by Supreme Secretary Nathan Carey, Supreme Trustee Cooley and suite of Supreme officers.

The new colony which starts off with a membership of 55 will be known as Onward colony No. 270. After the institution by the Supreme officers the pretty degree of the order was exemplified in an exceptionally fine manner by the degree team of Wakefield lodge. The following officers were elected and will hold office until the annual meeting which takes place in October.

Ex-Governor, Arthur Addy.
Governor, Herbert M. Hodgkinson.
Lieut. Governor, Mrs. Mima M. Baker.

Assistant, J. Herbert Baker.
Chaplain, Mrs. Mary F. Freethy.
Inside Sentinel, Carrie E. Darrow.

A second meeting of the colony will be held Thursday evening Sept. 18, when it is expected that there will be a class of upwards of fifty to initiate.

STATE BOARD HAVE PLANS

Will Report on Contagious Hospital for Quincy

The plans of the proposed contagious hospital for Quincy that were exhibited at the conference between physicians and the Board of Health in the Council chamber Thursday evening are now in the hands of the State Board of Health.

After a thorough examination of the new features, which combine the care of scarlet fever and diphtheria in one building, they will pass on them and make whatever suggestions they may deem necessary.

The plans were submitted Friday by Chairman Teasdale and Dr. Fred E. Jones, and both briefly outlined the intentions of the board in regard to its care of contagious diseases.

Dr. Jones whose constant study of the problem for an economical and practical way of caring for tuberculosis, scarlet fever and diphtheria resulted in the details on which the plans were made, explained his system of air locks and ventilation which makes it possible to treat two contagious diseases in the same building. It is the first time that the State Board of Health have had plans along these lines submitted.

QUINCY CHORAL SOCIETY.

At a recent meeting of the executive board of the Quincy Choral Society, George Sawyer Dunham of Brockton was elected to the conductorship of the society, due to the resignation of Osbourne McConathy, who has taken up his musical interests in Chicago. Besides being organist and choirmaster of the Porter church, Brockton, he conducts the large choral society there, also another in Bridgewater. He teaches several days each week at Lassell seminary also.

Plans are being formulated for a busy season under Mr. Dunham's conducting in the Quincy society. The officers for the coming year are: Thomas B. Pollard, president; Wendell H. Luce, vice president; Mrs. Edith Cary Page, secretary; Lawrence H. Allen, treasurer and Frank W. Crane, Miss Sara E. Thomas, Richard Howard, Louis B. Weston and Mrs. Edith Gray Fitts, directors.

REGULAR OF CITY COUNCIL

Considerable Business on Docket for Monday Evening

The first regular meeting of the City Council since the adjournment for the summer last June will be held Monday evening, and there is considerable important business to come before the meeting. Not the least of the business is the hearing on changing the name of Goffe street to Presidents lane. Then the resignation of Councilman Cunningham will be received and acted upon.

In the calender is the order establishing an ordinance relative to parades and speaking in the public streets, which will come up for its second reading. The finance committee have some matters before them and a meeting of that committee has been called for Monday evening before the regular meeting.

While it has not been announced that the special committee who have been investigating the Fire Department will make its report, the chances are very much in favor that it will. This committee held a number of meetings during the spring and practically every member of the Fire Department was summoned and questioned. Just what the committee will recommend no one outside of the committee knows.

CASES DISMISSED.

The continued case against Edward M. Sweeney, who was charged with breaking into the house of Mr. Ballou Aug. 18, came up in the Quincy court this morning, when the case was dismissed. Sweeney was arrested by the officer of station 11, Dorchester, for the Quincy police. On the night of the alleged break, Mrs. Ballou had gone down stairs and saw a man climbing out of the window. From the description she gave of the man Sweeney was arrested. The identification however was not sufficient to hold him.

The continued case of Raymond Hutchinson of Weymouth for breaking and entering also came up and on request of Chief Butler the complaint was dismissed for want of presecution as Hutchinson had been indicted by the grand jury.

TRIALS OF RIVADAVIA.

The indications are that the Rivadavia, now laying in Nantasket roads, will leave for the Rockland, Me., course next Thursday night for the trial trips. Everything is apparently in good condition and the coaling will be finished Monday. Wednesday the stokers will go on board to prepare for the final test of the biggest dreadnought afloat.

TELEPHONE COMPLAINTS

Inspectors Investigating Service In Quincy

The New England Telephone Co., were very prompt to act on the complaint made by the Board of Trade, in relating to the telephone service in Quincy. At the meeting of the Board held Wednesday evening the secretary was instructed to communicate with the officials at the Milk street office and ask that an investigation of the service in Quincy be made. This letter was forwarded Thursday to the Telephone Co., and Friday Mr. Whitaker, who has charge of the complaint department, with a corps of assistants were on the ground in Quincy making the investigation.

Mr. Whitaker is personally visiting and interviewing those who had complaints to make, while his assistants are conducting their investigation along another line. These inspectors not only visit subscribers and put in test calls but they also place an indicator in the basement of the telephone building by which a record is made of the time consumed between when a subscriber attempts to get central and the time when central answers. Operators upon whom the instrument is placed have no way of knowing it but the instrument is accurate.

Mr. Whitaker will remain in Quincy several days and any defects in the service detected will be immediately remedied.

It is believed that President Heurta will abide by the Mexican constitution, since he can amend it at any time.

Just why the governors elected to hold their discussions in a city not provided with a major league ball team has never been satisfactorily explained.

While Harry Thaw may not be appointed to the Canadian cabinet, it is thought that the people up there like him so much that they will send him to Parliament.

Mr. Carnegie's arbitration court building at the Hague is now ready for business, but it is expected that that the judges may have to spend some time brushing cobwebs off the bench.

Pedestrian Weston has bought a farm in Minnesota, but no doubt he will walk down to New York occasionally to see how the folks are.

In spite of the brighter outlook in Mexico, the fact that Pitcher Johnson lost a game has filled the Capitol at Washington with gloom.

Owing to the fact that the Thaw complaint was written in blue ink instead of black, there seems to be no way to hold him for his crimes.

Americans residents in Mexico are now packing their trolley lines and mines into their suitcases and preparing to flee the country.

It is claimed that many railroad stations smell badly, but the railroad companies believe the difficulty can be remedied by making a smudge with soft coal.

The only trouble with a free and fair election in Mexico is that whoever is chosen the people will be unanimously against him.

Mrs. Pankhurst is coming over to this country to lecture. Fortunately Carrie Nation has given the police some useful information.

The upshot of the governors' conference seems to be that all these troublesome state problems will be solved if only the present incumbents are elected again.

THE UNMARRIED 17,000,000.

The unmated condition of 17,000,000 adult men and women in the United States has led Conservation Commissioner Rittenhouse of the Equitable Life Assurance Society to issue an appeal for early marriages. In this position he has the support of the majority of social reformers.

The excuse commonly given for postponing wedlock is the high cost of living, and high standards set up by young women. Marriageable men say the girls expect them to begin where their fathers left off.

Quite as often, though, the real hitch lies in the vanity of the men. When they marry, their wives must have the biggest hat, the longest feather, the fluffiest dress, of any woman in town. And the home with its furnishings is to be built to correspond.

To offer a girl less hurts pride. They won't admit that they have not ascended the bandwagon of large success. So they adhere to single life, with incidentals of more or less loose living that do not make them any better risks for Mr. Rittenhouse's insurance company.

Men of this type should put the proposition up to their girl friends. They will find plenty of them that are willing to begin on a five room flat basis, if they have the right man for a comrade.

For a minority of girls the irreducible minumum includes motors, jewelry, furs, travel and good servants. That their manicured fingers should ever come in contact with the frying pan appears grotesquely impossible. They get the goods for which they are shopping. But love is an incidental they will probably overlook in seeking for more tangible values.

Early marriages promote industry and sober and moral living. They permit people to become grandfathers and grandmothers before age has taken the zest out of life.

HAS SYMPATHY FOR REFUGEES

Huerta Would Give Them First Class Passage Home

AMERICANS REJECT HIS OFFER

Provisional President Says It Is Made In "Benevolent and Just" Spirit—Former Mexican Ambassador Sent to Washington as Special Envoy—May Be on Financial Mission

Mexico City, Sept. 6.—It was stated at the American embassy that American refugees probably would not take advantage of an offer by the Mexican government to supply Americans with first-class passage out of the country.

Consul General Shanklin, who has charge of the American exodus, said that the $100,000 appropriation by congress probably would relieve the situation and enable all Americans to leave Mexico first class.

Provisional President Huerta caused to be issued a statement to the effect that the Mexican government would pay from its own resources the difference between first class passage for Americans from Mexico to the United States and the third class (steerage) accommodations offered by the United States government to refugees.

"The personal sentiments of the constitutional interim president of the republic toward citizens of the United States residing in this country are benevolent and just," said Huerta's statement, "to the extent that, their government having recommended without justifiable cause that they leave the country, and while lamenting the disposition which caused alarm, as well as the fact that many Americans have decided to leave the country, the president has resolved to recommend to the proper authorities, in view of the fact, as stated in the newspapers, that the government of the United States finds it possible to furnish only third class passage, that they offer in a spontaneous and kindly manner to cover the difference which exists and even provide special trains and gratuities, to the end that the Americans arrive in their country with greater comfort and means than they otherwise would have."

Aboard the Ward liner Esperanza, which sailed from Vera Cruz, is Manuel Z. Inclan, former Mexican ambassador to the United States, whom Huerta is sending to Washington as his personal representative to discuss the situation with Secretary of State Bryan. While Inclan is ostensibly a special envoy, going to Washington in the same capacity in which John Lind came to Mexico, it is believed by Americans here that the former ambassador is really going to the United States as a financial agent, to endeavor to negotiate a large loan for the Mexican government.

Rumors persisted here, but could not be confirmed, that Huerta will resign in order to be a legitimate candidate for president, while members of his cabinet stoutly declared he would not do so.

Foreign Secretary Gamboa denied there had been any communication with John Lind since the last notes made public, and was at a loss to account for the stories in the United States that negotiations were continuing. Charge O'Shaughnessy likewise denied that any notes have been exchanged with Gamboa, save routine ones. Both the Mexicans and O'Shaughnessy say there have been no negotiations since President Wilson's speech.

SIGNALS ARE OFTEN IGNORED

"Banjos" Passed In Foggy Weather Without Stopping

FEDERAL PROBE IS BEGUN

Trains Figuring In New Haven Disaster Had Almost Collided but Short Time Previously—Coroner Makes Sensational Statement Concerning Work of Ghouls at Wreck

New Haven, Sept. 6.—Engineers of the New York, New Haven and Hartford railroad frequently passed danger signals of the "banjo" type in foggy weather without stopping, according to sworn testimony of three witnesses at the interstate commerce commission's investigation into the fatal North Haven wreck of last Tuesday.

It was further testified that the White Mountain express, the train which plunged into the Bar Harbor express, and followed it from Springfield, Mass., on the morning of the wreck, eight minutes behind, was saved from colliding with the Bar Harbor just after it left Springfield on the fatal run.

This was at Wilson's (between Springfield and Hartford) and, according to the testimony of the engineer, the White Mountain, flagged by C. H. Murray of the Bar Harbor train at that point, drew up to the latter train before it was again started on its journey.

Murray, the flagman, denied on the stand that he had at any time seen the White Mountain train until it had whizzed by his torpedoes a moment before the wreck at North Haven. The two trains involved were the last of a procession of six which that morning passed Wallingford, three miles north of the wreck, within a period of thirty-two minutes. An order to stop the White Mountain at Wallingford, which would have prevented the wreck, was rescinded, it was brought out.

General Manager Bardo was ordered by Commissioner McChord to produce minutes of all meetings of the directors or of the executive committee of the New Haven road which would show that action had been taken since the Bridgeport wreck of July 12, 1911, "toward bettering safety conditions."

Flagman Murray testified that he had gone back to place danger signals to protect his train "as far as I could until I was recalled by my engineer's whistle." Murray, who was locked up Thursday night, was formally released yesterday, bonds being given by Samuel Hemingway, a brother of James S. Hemingway, a director of the company. Engineer Miller had previously been furnished bonds by his brotherhood.

That there were wholesale and disgraceful robberies from dead bodies at the wreck is the opinion of Coroner Mix, who reported the facts to Chief of Police Smith and requested him to apprehend the culprits.

It is understood that Mix during his inquest heard witnesses tell of cutting fingers off dead passengers to get rings, and of persons searching clothing of injured passengers to secure money or valuables.

Engineer Miller testified that he heard a woman groaning and looking around he saw a man deliberately cut off her finger on which were several rings, and then run away. He also saw a man strip a dead woman's hand; and afterwards he saw a man lean over an injured woman and snatch away a locket.

Other railroad men gave corroborative testimony and one of them told of a man who, with a pillow case, went about picking up jewelry, purses and other articles of value.

MORGAN QUITS NEW HAVEN

Firm to Terminate Contract as Railroad's Fiscal Agent

New York, Sept. 6.—J. P. Morgan & Co. notified the New Haven railroad that the firm takes advantage of a ninety-day clause in the contract to end its relations as banker to the railroad.

The Morgan firm also sent a ninety-day notice to the Boston and Maine and Maine Central railroads, New Haven subsidiaries, for which it has been financial agent.

J. P. Morgan said his firm wished to leave the New Haven under its new management perfectly free to form its own banking connections and so had formally terminated the contract.

On authority second only to Morgan it was said that Morgan & Co. were thoroughly tired of being attacked in connection with the New Haven's misfortunes.

Wealthy Men Taking No Chances on the New Haven Road

New York, Sept. 6.—The group of very wealthy New York men who in summer time commute in special cars on the New York, New Haven and Hartford road are urging the Pressed Steel Car company to hurry the delivery of two armor clad steel cars in place of the wooden cars in which they have been riding.

These commuters, who are becoming nervous over the necessity of having to ride in wooden cars, are members of the "Car club," the most exclusive club of commuters in the country.

Anna J. Tracey to Ellis Hollingsworth.

SUDDEN DEATH.

The funeral services of Margaret E. Wholey (nee Tobin) was held from Saint Ann's church, Neponset, Friday morning with solemn high mass of requiem at 9 o'clock.

Mrs. Wholey was born in Newburyport October 23, 1865. A large number of friends called at her late home to extend their sympathy to the bereaved family . Although being in poor health for some time her death came as a great shock to all as she visited her daughter on Upland road, Quincy, last week Thursday. Besides a husband she leaves three daughters and three sons, namely Mrs. Joseph J. McGue of Quincy, Teresa, Esther, William, Frank and John of Neponset. All mourn the loss of a true and faithful mother. Although of the quiet home loving nature she had a large circle of friends as was shown by the beautiful floral tributes among the young people .Burial was at Saint Mary's Cemetery, Newburyport.

FREEDOM BIRTHDAY.

A pleasant surprise was tendered Enor Lundin of Glendale road Friday evening by about thirty of his friends who came to help him celebrate his twenty-first birthday. Mr. Lundin was at City Hall to register as a voter while the guests were assembling, and upon his return was very much surprised to find his home filled with smiling faces.

Some gathered around the piano to sing songs after which games were played. Refreshments were served in the dining room and before partaking of the lunch Mr. Lundin was presented with a curious bundle which upon opening proved to be a box containing a brick underneath which was a large sum of money, a gift from the assembled guests. Mr. Lundin responded with an appropriate speech, thanking his friends for their kind remembrance.

The 21 candles on the birthday cake were lighted and all did justice to the dainty repast. It was at a late hour that the guests departed who left behind them best wishes for many more such pleasantly spent birthdays.

GOFFE STREET IN FAVOR

D. L. F. Chase Tells of the Old Tradition

Editor of the Patriot:

Within a few days, notice has been served on residents of Goffe street appointing a public hearing at City hall on Monday evening, Sept. 8, regarding the proposal to change the name of the street.

Our readers may remember that two or three months ago, when the matter was first broached, I published a letter deprecating the proposed change, and urging sentimental and other reasons for holding on to the old regicide tradition, hazy though it may be. Charles Francis Adams, in a letter following mine, while making pleasant and polite comments on my article, takes occasion to express strong disbelief in any reasonable foundation for the tradition.

Regarding this tradition I was plainly wrong in calling it "well-founded." In a strict sense no pure tradition can be called well-founded; for when a tradition can be run down and proved true by contemporaneous records, it ceases to be tradition and becomes authentic history. A tradition usually has its origin among an illiterate people, who witness some strange and unusual event which powerfully compels their attention, but which no one has the wit to write down. They do, however, pass the story along from mouth to mouth sometimes through many generations.

I suspect that Mr. Adams does not get much pleasure out of pure tradition of any kind, judging from his playful hint that Goffe Street might have got its name from somebody's darky Cuffee coachman! I do not understand, however, that there is any tradition of this kind, well-founded or otherwise; and perhaps at that early period darkies were scarcer than regicides in this region!

I think that many minds are satisfied to believe that a tradition which is definite and consistent may be held, by its very existence to prove itself in its main features, because it can hardly be conceived how a circumstantial story could become current, and persist through several generations unless there were some germ of original truth in it.

We read that Goffe and Whalley, after their flight from England, came to Boston and were entertained by Gov. Endicott. After Boston became too hot for them they slipped away by some road or other, and made their appearance later in Connecticut and western Massachusetts. It requires no unusual flight of fancy to imagine them beginning their wanderings from Boston by following Mr. Adams' Old Coast Road down to Old Braintree, and perhaps showing their noses there for a longer or shorter period. Of course this is pure fancy, with nothing but the existence of the tradition itself to substantiate it; but perhaps in this regard the tale may be as good as many another which has gained firm foothold in popular belief.

But all argument aside, and granting the regicide tradition to be nothing but a hazy old myth, it has come down to us somehow, and persists in facing us smilingly, like a stowaway from an ocean ship. Why not put it to work on the roads, as it were, as some thoughtful person has done on Presidents hill?

I still believe that the reasons, both sentimental and practical, urged in my former article are good and sufficient.

D. L. F. Chase.

WOMAN SMUGGLER PAYS $3500 FINE

Cash Produced by Wife of Automobile Manufacturer

Trenton, N. J., Sept. 6.—Mrs. William Velie, wife of an automobile manufacturer of Moline, Ills., who was arrested Aug. 19 on a pier in Hoboken with her maid, May Lillie, charged with smuggling, was fined $3500 by Judge Relstab in the United States district court. The maid was fined $50 on the same charge.

Mrs. Velie, gowned in the latest Paris style, was accompnaied to court by her husband and several lawyers.

The United States district attorney recited that several thousand dollars' worth of jewels, including a pearl necklace, and much fine wearing apparel had been found in Mrs. Velie's trunks, which had not been declared as dutiable. He asked for a maximum fine, which would be $5000. The fines were paid in cash.

HAS NOT RESIGNED

Moore Says Reports of His Departure Are Unfounded

Mantoloking, N. J., Sept. 6.—John B. Moore, counsellor to the state department, branded as wholly unfounded the reports that he was taking an indefinite leave of absence and would resign.

"So far as anything I have said or done," Moore said, "the reports as to my taking indefinite leave or resigning are wholly unfounded. I leased a house in Washington only last week."

Miss Lewis was caught beneath the car and was crushed to death. Williams was frightfully injured and is not expected to recover.

OPERA BOUFFE AND BUSINESS

Mark an Eventful Day in Town of Coaticook

VICTORY SCORED BY THAW

Secures Ten Days' Delay by Counsel Taking Fight Up to King's Bench After Deportation Is Ordered by Immigration Officials—Jerome Arrested on Gambling Charge

Coaticook, Que., Sept. 6.—Counsel for Harry K. Thaw are making good their declaration that they will carry their fight in his behalf to the king's bench itself.

Following the decision of the immigration officers to deport Thaw to Vermont they procured a writ of habeas corpus, prohibition and restraint, under which Thaw will be brought to Montreal on Sept. 15, and the constitutionality of the act under which the immigration officials seek to deport him will be put to the test.

Opera bouffe and events of great importance were mingled in the developments of the day, which brought a victory to the fugitive from Matteawan and considerable discomfiture to his nemesis, William T. Jerome.

Thaw has won ten days' delay, at least, in his fight to keep out of Matteawan. Jerome has been placed under arrest, has been shown the bitterly hostile attitude of the public toward him, and has suffered the additional disappointment of waiting in vain at Norton's Mills, Vt., for Thaw to be deported.

Jerome was arrested for gambling as the result of a plot worked out by the townspeople, who showed, when he first came here, that they would do all in their power to balk him in his attempts against Thaw.

Jerome engaged in a game of penny ante with some newspaper men. The game was played in Jerome's automobile, in full view of the citizens of Coaticook.

Proceeding in accordance with a plan worked out—with which close personal friends of Thaw, including George McLeish, his publicity man, are believed to have been cognizant—a complaint was sworn out against Jerome, charging him with gambling.

Thaw's counsel are not thought to have had any part in the plot. They deny any conection with it, and have expressed their sympathy for Jerome.

Following Jerome's arrest, he was confined for an hour in the cell that formerly quartered Thaw before he was released on bail, which was fixed at $500.

Under the law, he may be imprisoned for a year or fined any amount in the discretion of the court provided he is found guilty of the charge against him.

Two other events of the day showed the attitude of the Coaticook citizens toward Thaw and Jerome. They contrast sharply.

When Jerome was in jail, a woman—possibly one of those who have sent the bouquets of roses and sweet peas with which Thaw's room at the immigration detention station are decorated—sent the former district attorney a large bouquet of burdocks and thistles, addressed to "William Travesty Jerome."

Last night, when a band concert had been aranged in the public square of the town, the band leader asked permission of the authorities to play on the street across the railroad tracks in front of the station, where Thaw could see the band and hear it play. His request was granted, and the townspeople, realizing the reason for the changed location of the concert, cheered the leader and the other musicians enthusiastically.

Maine Cattleman Succumbs to Injuries Inflicted by Bull

Lewiston, Me., Sept. 6.—Fred Webster, a cattle dealer of Farmington, died in a hospital here with a broken back, the result of the charging of a mad bull in a cattle shed at the Maine state fair.

The bull had gored its owner, Chester Hamlin of Wilton, earlier in the day, and Webster was watering the animal.

Webster was road commissioner. He regained consciousness long enough to speak to his wife, who hurried from Farmington on hearing of the accident.

RELIC OF BYGONE DAYS

Petrified Skeleton of Huge Mammal Found on a Maine Island

Orr's Island, Me., Sept. 6.—The petrified skeleton of a mammoth prehistoric mammal has been uncovered, it is believed, at Great island.

In digging for a well on his farm there, Theodore Bullard found what is believed to be a mammal's skull, a mass weighing 500 pounds, in a subterranean cave. Investigation showed other parts of the same supposed body.

Dr. Cram, professor of geology at Bowdoin college, is to look over the find. Bullard is of the opinion that it is the skeleton of a triceratops, described as a huge three-horned monster, twenty-five feet long and ten feet high, having twice the bulk of an elephant.

SOCCER MEN IN DEMAND

Harrison and Melville to Play in Pennsylvania

Harrison and Melville, two of the strongest soccer football players in this state, signed with the Bethlehem football team of Bethlehem, Penn., and play their first game there today. For several days representatives for the Bethlehem management were in Quincy looking for good material, and after negotiations, extending over a weeks time, they were able to return with the signed contracts. Both men have been a mighty factor in keeping the Fore River team in the front ranks of soccor, and their aggressiveness and defense often proved to be the turning point of the game.

Boyd, another strong player, is in Scotland on a visit and while there has been in the lineup of the Morton A team at Greenock. He is reputed to be one of the fastest that ever played the game in this country.

Hendry who has gone with Brockton in the Boston District league plays his first game there today. He sidestepped the diplomats from Bethlehem but they are still presistent.

The Fore Rivers, although holders of the Williamson cup, will not have a team this year. It is probable however that they will organize a line in a slight effort to show the sporting public how they won the cup.

WILLIAM GOFFE A PATRIOT

Name of Goffe Street Should Be Retained as Memorial

Editor of the Ledger:

On Monday evening certain petitioners will appear before the City Council in an effort to show that "public convenience and necessity" require that the name of "Goffe street" be changed to "Presidents lane."

The changing of the name of a long established street should attract more than passing attention and doubtless the petitioners will be prepared to prove their case although the reasons for the change are not now apparent.

Perhaps it would not be out of place to give the public at this time a few facts about William Goffe for whom the street was named. History tells us that he was born in 1605, and spent his youth and young manhood in business pursuits. In 1647 he joined Cromwell's army, where his ability gave him rapid advancement until in 1655 he became a major general. Previous to this he was distinguished by receiving an honorary degree from Oxford University. In 1649 he was elected to parliament and soon after was appointed to the house of lords, where he was looked upon as a leader, and considered by many as the logical successor of Cromwell. He was a member of the court which condemned Charles I. to death, and for this reason was compelled to flee to America when the monarchy was restored. In Boston he was received with honors by Governor Endicott, and spent a few months in that vicinity. Tradition also tells of his being in Quincy although this has never been definitely proved.

Orders were sent from England for Goffe's apprehension, so he was forced again to flee, this time to the Connecticut valley, where he escaped capture by living in seclusion until his death in 1679. Associated with him in exile were Edward Whalley and John Dixwell.

From the above facts it is seen that General Goffe was a man whose name would do honor to any street. He should not be looked upon as a criminal, but as a patriot who gave many years of his life in a struggle against tyranny but who, as often happened in those days, was forced into exile by a turn in the political tide. The Massachusetts and Connecticut colonists were in entire sympathy with his cause and were always ready to aid him in escaping the officers of the King.

Our two Quincy presidents, of whom we are justly proud, have already been honored in many ways about our city, and their memory will always be with us. Let us therefore retain the one memorial to the name of William Goffe, scholar, soldier, statesman and patriot.

DOGS KILLED.

Four dogs that were were bitten by the South Quincy mad dog a few weeks ago have been killed and the others are in quarantine where they are under observation. They will be immediately shot if any signs of rabies appear before the 90 days pass.

As the result of the mad dog scares in South Quincy, two of which have occured this summer, the owners of dogs have practically restrained their animals. The Board of Health have issued instructions to the police to kill all unlicensed dogs and this has had a tendency to increase the license fees at the city clerks office.

Donato Di Bona who was bitten by the dog is receiving Pasteur treatment on the recommendations of the State Board of Health and local doctors.

GUN PRACTICE.

The heavy gun fire heard in Quincy shortly after 10 o'clock Friday night was caused by the target practice at Fort Andrews by the 153d company, firing at a target 8000 yards at sea. Shipping was protected by powerful search lights which were kept playing about the channel so that approaching vessels were picked up and firing stopped until they were out of range.

ORGANIZES FOR SEASON

Quincy A. A. to Have Strong Football Team

Matthew Cummings of Neponset, was elected captain of the Quincy A. A. foot ball team at the organization meeting Friday evening. William H. Flynn, who has attained splendid results in athletic circles for the club will continue as manager and has arranged the opening game with the Roslindale A. A. on Merrymount Park, Sept. 27.

All the available, last year, men and many new candidates were at the club rooms Friday evening and talked over the situation of having a faster team this year than ever. For two years the teams of the Quincy A. A. have been of championship calibre and the showing of the season justifies such honors.

A smoke talk will be held in the near future by the players at which time it is planned to have a well known Boston physical culturist lecture on the conservation and development of strength through proper training.

Miss Bean's Letter

A Question of Ownership.

By CLARISSA MACKIE

The three Misses Bean were eating breakfast in their prim dining room overlooking the flower garden.

Sarepta was enjoying cereal, coffee and dry toast; Sophia was almost purring over a bowl of oatmeal and cream, while Sarah, the eldest Miss Bean, drank strong green tea, with rolls and a chop. Sarepta was thin and dark and delicate looking; Sophia, her twin sister, was plump and rosy like a gray and white kitten, and Sarah was tall and bony, with sandy hair and eager dark eyes. Once she had been very handsome, but that was long ago.

Hannah, the black cook, padded heavily into the room with a letter held between thumb and forefinger.

"Ephie done brung de mail, ma'am," she said, placing the letter beside Sarah's plate, "an' dey wa'n't no mo'n dat one letter."

"Very well, Hannah," said Sarah, adjusting her glasses to scan the superscription on the large, thick, square envelope. As she read her face grew quite red, and she looked at the others. "It's for me, I think," she said uncertainly.

Sarepta bristled instantly.

"It might be for me," she said tartly, "unless it is addressed to you."

"In that case there would be no doubt at all whom it was for," giggled Sophia, sprinkling sugar on her oatmeal.

"It says 'Miss S. Bean,'" said Sarah with dignity. "From its appearance I should judge it was for me."

"Let me look at it, please; I am expecting a letter," snapped Sophia, holding out her hand for the missive.

Sarah surrendered the letter and was irritated to note that Sarepta's dark face glowed strangely.

"It's the one I've been waiting for," declared Sarepta, with the handle of a spoon slipped under the flap. "I recognize the handwriting."

"So do I," was Sarah's obstinate reply. "You have no right to open it, Sarepta, until you are sure it is yours."

"I am sure."

Sophia blinked her blue eyes and looked up from her empty bowl.

"Let me see the letter. It may be for me. I am 'Miss S. Bean' also; you appear to forget that fact," she said fussily.

"Why, it's Mr. Gray's handwriting, girls!" she exclaimed bluntly. "I think it's for me. I have a great deal of talk and correspondence with him over—over—church—and personal matters," she ended, with a simper.

Sarah's mouth hardened.

"The letter is for me, Sophia. It's all nonsense your thinking Mr. Gray would bother to write to you about church matters. Ministers are very busy men."

Sophia looked ready to cry.

"I think he's as likely to write to me as to you or Sarepta—more likely. I understand why he has been calling here regularly all winter."

Sarepta laughed shortly.

"I understand why, too," she said, with a hidden meaning in her tone.

"It is nonsense for us to bicker over this letter," said Sarah impatiently. "It must be opened, and it is my place as the eldest to do it. I can tell instantly by reading the first line whether it is for me or not."

"So can I," retorted Sarepta.

"And I," sniffed Sophia, dabbing at her eyes with a snowy cambric handkerchief.

"Well, the best way to find out is to inquire of Mr. Gray whom it is for," decided Sarah judicially. "I will send Eph over to the parsonage with a note."

The letter was placed on the mantelpiece behind the Chinese vases, and Sarah wrote the note and sent it off by Eph, the black boy.

Ten minutes afterward he rushed into the sitting room breathless with excitement.

"Marse Gray done gone away in a turrible hurry, Miss Sarah, yes'm. Seems lak he had a telygraft last night that his paw wore killed on de railroad, and Mr. Smif said he guessed it would be a long day afore de pahson come back, fer dey was gwine to give him a good vacashun to git over de shock. He's gwine clean to Californy, whah his paw lives."

It was characteristic of the Beans that not one of them would relinquish her claim to the letter, and so it stood on the mantelpiece day after day, unopened, waiting for Mr. Gray to return and divulge the identity of the "Miss S. Bean" to whom the letter belonged.

In the bottom of each maiden heart there was a firm belief that the letter contained a declaration of marriage, for Mr. Gray had called with marked regularity every Thursday evening during the winter. His attentions to the three sisters had been distributed with careful nicety and exasperating uncertainty. When their niece, Estelle Bean, from Little River, had visited them the minister had sung to them while Estelle played upon the old square piano, and the songs he chose were disquieting to sentimental ladies.

When he lifted his handsome head, with its noble crown of graying hair, and sang about "Annie Laurie," Sarah knew that if he dared the parson would substitute her name for that of Scotch Annie, while Sarepta and Sophia were quite as certain that he meant them—individually.

As for Estelle, she was a meek, mouselike little person with sweet gray eyes and a gentle manner, and she was much beloved by her three aunts, and she loved them in return. She never looked at the middle aged minister when he sang. Her cheeks always grew very pink, and she bent her blond head over the keys until Sarah chided her for bashfulness. Then she lifted her head and was quite gay until Sarepta took her aside and told her not to act "so shallow."

Five months went by, and the letter remained unopened on the mantelpiece.

One golden September day Sarah and Sarepta and Sophia climbed into their surrey and drove over to Little River to call upon their brother, Estelle's father.

Jacob Bean was gathering late corn in the fields that bordered the highway, and he came over to the fence and talked to his sisters while he nibbled a straw. He was a big framed man, and he had five big sons, who worked the farm with him. It was a prosperous farm, and Estelle, the only girl, was petted and indulged. But it did not seem to spoil her. They were all fond of Estelle.

"You look worried, Jacob," said Sophia when their greetings were over.

"I am," said the man, with a glance toward the distant house. "Girls, Maria and I think Estelle's going into a decline."

"What does the doctor say?" asked Sarah sharply.

"Nothing. He says there's nothing to say. You know Brown's way of joking. He said that Estelle was pining for her sweetheart. Why, land, Maria was so mad she wouldn't have him in again!"

"Nonsense!" cried Sarepta sharply. "Estelle's only a child. If she don't have a beau for ten years yet it will be time enough."

"That's what I say," grunted Jacob, and he returned to his pumpkins.

The three sisters found their niece swinging in a hammock on the shaded front porch. Her mother sat beside her knitting a pink wool shawl. Estelle was asleep, and she looked alarmingly pale and thin.

Mrs. Bean greeted her sisters-in-law affectionately and called a stable boy to take the horse. Sarah brought in a basket of grapes and some jars of quince jam she had just made, and the four women sat and talked in low tones about Estelle's health.

"Estelle's never had any beaus, has she, Maria?" asked Sophia carelessly. To Sophia Estelle was a child.

"No, she never encouraged any one except—well, I suppose you've heard folks mention it, though Estelle's dumb as can be about it—except Mr. Gray. But he's gone away now," said Maria complacently. "He always was too old for her, but nice as could be. I almost fell in love with him myself."

"Mr. Gray?" asked Sarah blankly, her mind flying to the letter.

"Mr. Gray?" echoed Sarepta in a stunned tone, her mind on the much discussed letter.

"Oh, Mr. Gray!" said Sophia in her blunt way, throwing up her romance with generous hands. "Why, there's a letter over to the house from him addressed to Miss S. Bean, and there wouldn't one of us open it because we wasn't sure which one of us it was for. It couldn't be for Estelle, for her name begins with an 'E,'" ended Sophia dubiously.

The hammock stirred, and a rosy face appeared over the edge. With her tousled fair hair Estelle looked more like a little girl than ever.

"Aunties, I heard all your remarks," she said tremulously, "and perhaps the letter is for me!"

"But, dear, your name begins with 'E,'" persisted Sophia kindly.

"I know, but he, Mr. Gray, called me 'Stella.' He said it meant a star." The girl turned a glorified face toward her mother. "Oh, mother, don't you believe it was for me? If I never answered he might think I didn't care, and so he stayed away."

Maria turned pale with emotion. "Perhaps so, dear," she said in her heavy way. "If we can get the letter over here you should let your three aunts open it and each one read the opening line. Then they could tell whether it was for one of them. Their names all begin with 'S,' you know."

"Of course, mother," palpitated Estelle. "I wish the letter was here now."

Sarah arose. "I'll go in and telephone to Hannah to send Eph over with it," she said decisively. "It's been on the sitting room mantelpiece for five months."

When she returned they talked of other things until Eph's shining black face appeared at the gate. After he had given up the precious letter and disappeared toward the kitchen Mrs. Bean arose and went in to see about supper.

Estelle took the letter, smiled at the meager address, wondered at her lover's mistake in addressing it to Westbrook instead of Little River; then she tore open the letter and gave the thick, folded sheets to Miss Sarah.

"You first," she said softly.

But Sarah shook her head, and Sarepta shook hers, and Sophia refused point blank, and they all kissed Estelle and said they were going to try to get Mr. Gray to come back to the church so she would be with them, and Sophia said they would talk about her wedding.

They went down to look at the dahlias in the garden, and they smiled at each other and nodded, contented in Estelle's happiness, and in their hearts each one knew that this was the nearest she would come to romance. Yet they were strangely happy.

THE HUSBANDS OF EDITH

CHAPTER XIII.

The City Prison.

THE anticlimax had struck the Hotel Tirol some hours before it came upon Brock and Miss Fowler. Mr. Githens demanded the person of the man calling himself Roxbury Medcroft. The principal bank in the city was also represented in the company of investigators. Likewise there was a laconic gentleman from the British office.

Mr. Medcroft was out. Then, they agreed, it was necessary to see Mrs Medcroft, or the lady representing herself to be such. Mr. Githens was permitted to go to her rooms in company with the manager of the hotel. What transpired in those rooms during the next fifteen minutes would be quite impossible to narrate short of an entire volume. Edith promptly collapsed Subsequently she became hysterical She begged for time, and, getting it, proceeded to threaten every one with prosecution.

"I am Mrs. Medcroft!" she declared piteously. "Where is the American consul? I demand the American consul!"

"What has the American government to do with it?" gruffly demanded Mr. Githens.

"Mr.—Mr.—the gentleman whom you accuse is an American citizen!" she stammered.

"Oho! Then he is not an English man?"

"I refuse to answer your questions You are impertinent. I ask you, sir as the manager of this hotel, to eject this man from my rooms." The man aged smiled blandly and did not eject the man.

"But, madam," he said, "we have a right to know who and what you are If Mr. Medcroft is in London this gentleman surely cannot be he, the real Mr. Medcroft. We must have an explanation."

"I'll—I will explain everything to morrow. Oh, by the way, is there a telegram for me in the office? There must be. I've been expecting it all day. I telegraphed to London for it."

"There is no telegram down there, madam."

At this juncture Mr. Odell-Carney appeared on the scene uninvited, but welcome.

"Wot's all this?" he demanded sternly. Everybody proceeded at once to tell him. Somehow he got the drift of the story. "Get out, all of you!" he said. "I stand sponsor for Mrs. Medcroft. She is Mrs. Medcroft, hang you, sir. If you come around here bothering her again I'll have the law upon you. The Medcrofts are English citizens and"—

"Oh, they are, are they?" sneered Mr. Githens, with a sinister chuckle.

"Who the devil are you, sir?"

"I'm from Scotland Yard."

"I thought so. You've proved it, 'pon my soul. I am Odell-Carney. Daresay you've heard of me."

"I know you by sight, sir. But that"—

"Clever chap, by Jove! And there's no but about it. Mr.—Mr.—never mind what it is. I don't want to know your name. Mrs. Medcroft, will you permit me to send my wife up to you? Mr. Manager, I insist that you take this c'nfended rabble down to the office and tell them to go to the devil! Don't do it up here; do it down there."

After some further discussion and protests the Scotland Yard man and his party left the room to its distracted mistress. It may be well to remark for the sake of local color that Tootles was crying lustily, while Raggles barked in spite of all that O'Brien could do to stop him.

Odell-Carney sent his wife to Edith. A few minutes later, as he was making his way to the office, he came upon Mrs. Rodney and Katherine, hurrying, white faced, to their rooms.

"Oh, isn't it dreadful?" wailed the former, putting her clinched hands to her temples.

"Isn't wot dreadful?" demanded he brutally.

"About Edith! They're going to arrest her."

"Not if I can help it, madam. Where is Mr. Rodney?"

"He hasn't anything to do with it! We're as innocent as children unborn. It's all shocking to us. Mr. Rodney shouldn't be arrested. His rectitude is without a flaw. For heaven's sake, don't implicate him. He's"—

"Madam, I'm not a policeman," said Odell-Carney with scathing dignity. "I want your husband to aid me in hushing this c'nfended thing."

He started away as Mr. Rodney came puffing up the stairs. Odell-Carney changed his mind and waited.

"Where's Edith?" panted Mr. Rodney.

"Good heavens!" groaned his wife, lowering her voice because three chambermaids were looking on from a nearby turn. "Don't mention that creature's name. Just think what she's got us into. He isn't her husband. Alfred, telephone for tickets on tonight's train. Tomorrow will be too late. I won't stay here another minute. Everybody in the hotel is talking. We'll all be arrested."

But Mr. Rodney, for once, was the head of the family. He faced her sternly.

"Go to your rooms, both of you We'll stay here until this thing is ended. I don't give a hang what she's done, I'm not going to desert her."

"But—but he isn't her husband!" gasped Mrs. Rodney, struck dumb by this amazing rebellion.

"But she's your cousin, isn't she, madam?" he retorted with fierce irony.

"I disown her!" wailed his wife, sans raison.

"Go to your rooms!" stormed pudgy Mr. Rodney. Then, as they slunk away, he turned to the approving Odell-Carney, sticking out his chest a trifle in his new found authority. "I say, Carney, what's to be done next?"

"We'll have a drink first and then see," he said.

As they were entering the buffet a cheery voice accosted them from behind. Freddie Ulstervelt came up, real distress in his face.

"I say, count me in on this. I'll buy, if I may. I've just heard the news from the door porter. Beastly shame, isn't it? I had Mlle. Le Brun over to hear the band concert—she's related to that painter woman, by the way; I told Katherine she was. Say, gentlemen, we'll stand by Mrs. Medcroft, won't we? Count me in. If it's anything that money can square I'm here with a letter of credit six figures long."

"Join us," said Odell-Carney warmly. "You're a good sort, after all."

They sat down at a table. Freddie stood between them, a hand on the shoulder of each. Very seriously he was saying:

"I say, gentlemen, we can't abandon a woman at a time like this. We must stand together. All true sports and black sheep should stand together, don't you know."

It is possible that Odell-Carney appreciated the subtlety of this compliment. Not so Mr. Rodney.

"Sports? Black sheep? Upon my soul, sir, I don't understand you," he mumbled. Mr. Rodney, although he hailed from Seattle, had never known anything but a clean and unrumpled conscience.

Freddie clapped him jovially on the shoulder. "It's all right, Mr. Rodney. I'll take your word for it. But if we are black sheep we shan't be blackguards. We'll stand by the ship. What's to be done? Bail 'em out?"

Mrs. Medcroft despite Mrs. Odell-Carney's friendly offices refused point blank to discuss the situation. She did not dare to do or say anything as yet. Her husband had not telegraphed the word releasing her from the sorry compact. She loyally decided to stand by the agreement no matter what the cost until she received word from London that he had triumphed or failed in his brave fight against the "bloodsuckers."

"I will explain tomorrow, dear Mrs. Odell-Carney," she pleaded. "Don't press me now. Everything shall be all right. Oh, how I wish Constance were here! She understands. But she's off listening to silly love talk and doesn't even care what happens to me. Burton, will you be good enough to spank Tootles if she doesn't stop that screaming?"

'TIS A GOOD HORSE WHO NEVER STUMBLES

But an old horse gets to know a great deal. The writer recently saw a milk wagon drop its master on the west side of the street, and the horse immediately crossed, without stumbling to the east side, where the horse knew the next stop.

Good Horse, That.

If a horse by careful training can pick his steps to go along from side to side of a city street, surely you have a right to expect the men in this business to pick the right brands and qualities of food stuffs and to protect you from bad merchandise.

This Store Certainly does reject many things not up to its standard

Almost every kind and brand of goods are offered to us for purchase.

Almost every day we refuse more than we accept as not up to our grades.

Some of these rejected goods—canned, bottled, in packages, cartons, boxes, etc.,—copied to look exactly like other goods, we see the next day overdisplayed elsewhere.

It is the inside of the watch that makes the real watch, and this is also true of silver plate, of a piano and of food articles.

It is the cleanliness of the store, the high grade of the goods it sells and the name over the door that actually certifies the value and goodness.

INDICTMENTS BY GRAND JURY

Mike Rossa and Thomas J. Kelly Must Stand Trial

Among the true bills reported by the Norfolk grand jury Friday were the following important indictments from Quincy. Mike Rossa for intent to murder Ottavinano Rissio at Quincy. This is the case where Rissio was shot near the Granite street bridge for an alleged insult to the girl of Rossa. The shooting took place Sunday Aug. 17.

Thomas J. Kelley was indicted for breaking and entering at Quincy April 25, and Patrick McGrath was indicted for attempting to burn a house in the Fore River district Aug. 11. The cases will go on trial Monday in the criminal session of the superior court.

STREET RAILWAY SERVICE.

Reports from the joint hearings held by the Public Service Commission and Boston Transit Commission, who have been hearing complaints as to service on the trolley roads of the state, do not show that there were any complaints about the Bay State company service in Quincy and vicinity. The Board of Trade sent a letter to the joint Commission relative to fifteen minute service on the Quincy Point line under the impression that Quincy Point only got two cars an hour. As the facts, however show that this section receives four cars an hour, which was what the Board of Trade desired. the chances are that nothing will come of the hearing as far as Quincy is concerned. It seems that Sec. Hall had been informed that Quincy Point only had two cars an hour and took it for granted that his information was correct.

AUGUST TEMPERATURE

Blue Hill Observer Says It Was Unusually Warm

L. A. Wells of the Blue Hill observatory issues the following report for August.

The weather during August was warmer than usual, the month being the warmest of the name since 1906. The mean temperature of 68.6 degrees was 1.4 degrees above normal, as compared with 65.5 degrees in August 1912. The highest temperature reached was 93 degrees on the 17th and this was also the maximum of the summer. The lowest of the month was 52 degrees on the 15th.

The rainfall, all in the form of showers, oocurred on 11 days, the total amount of 3.30 inches being .40 inch less than the average and the least in August since 1910. Last year the total for the month was 3.85 inches and in August 1911, it was 6.70 inches. The greatest rainfall in one day was .86 inch on the 29th.

There was somewhat more than the usual relative humidity and about the customary amount of cloudiness. The total amount of sunshine was 2 per cent. less than normal. There was a small excess of wind, and the prevailing direction was southwest. The maximum velocity of the month was 45 miles per hour from the south on the 23d. Thunderstorms occurred on six days, the most in August since 1908. Those of the 18th and 27th were of considerable severity.

CITY HALL WORRIED HIM

Midnight View Even Was Not Satisfactory

Alexander D. Smith, who came into fame a few months ago when he announced to the world that he had a preparation which would remove the rust from the granite at the Court House has fallen from grace and is now at the police station.

Smith was given the job to clean the Court House and for a time it looked all right. Then it began to turn green and yellow so that today it looks worse than before. Then Mayor Stone gave him a job to clean City Hall and here also the building looked all right for a time but is now turning green and yellow.

For the past week Smith has been looking too often on the wine when it was red in the cup, and although he did not appear to be very much intoxicated by his walk and talk he looked as though he was asleep.

Friday night in the vicinity of midnight, Officer Olsen found him on Depot street gazing in an absent manner at the side of City Hall and thought it was best to take him in charge. He was brought to court this morning but as stated above his condition was such that the court ordered him taken back until he sobered off.

Miss Dorothy Kitson of Park lane is one of the young women of the city who may be depended upon to help along any good cause. She has always taken an interest in the children's garden work and this year she was very helpful to the ladies carrying on the garden work for school children in Quincy.

There is more Catarrh in this section of the country than all other diseases put together, and until the last few years was supposed to be incurable. For a great many years doctors pronounced it a local disease and prescribed local remedies, and by constantly failing to cure local treatment pronounced it incurable. Science has proven catarrh to be a constitutional disease and therefore requires constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, Ohio, is the only constitutional cure on the market. It is taken internally in doses from 10 drops to a teaspoonful. It acts directly on the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. They offer one hundred dollars for any case it fails to cure. Send for circulars and testimonials.

WARD TWO IMPROVEMENT

Edwin W. Newcomb President of New Association

At a largely attended meeting Saturday evening an association was formed to better the conditions of Ward Two. A temporary organization was chosen consisting of Edwin W. Newcomb, president; T. J. Collins, vice president; and Dennis S. Sweeney, secretary.

The aim and object of the organization is to improve that section of the city and to make it the cleanest and most attractive part of Quincy. A permanent organization will be effected this week.

The organization is the direct result of hopeless agitation which has been quickened by individuals for several years. In Ward Two certain conditions exist which escape remedy because they have not properly been brought before the proper authorities. The members intend to allow no opportunity to go by the board whereby improvements can be made and it is the feeling of some to advance a strenuous program.

SUNDAY NIGHT ALARM.

The alarm from Box 154 at 9.22 Sunday night was for a slight fire in an automobile on Fenno street. The car was coming from the boulevard when leaking gasoline took fire. The occupants became alarmed and summoned the department. The fire was out when the apparatus arrived. The owners name was not learned.

NEW BLOCK OF 14 STORES

Will be Erected by Col. Kincaide Opposite Music Hall

The business block, contemplated for several years by Col. Henry L. Kincaide of Henry L. Kincaide & Co., is about to be erected on Hancock street, on the land adjoining Alpha and Union halls as far south as Wild place. The wooden buildings now located on the property will be razed and all of the tenants have been given notice to vacate the first of the month.

The building to be erected will contain 14 stores and will have a frontage of about 165 feet. It will be one story in height and the foundations and supports will be set so that other stories can be added.

The basement will be used for various purposes, one of them being the installation of bowling alleys. At present Col. Kincaide considers the installation of four alleys.

The building is part of the plan of expansion of Colonel Kincaide who recently built the Kincaide theatre and filled a long felt want in the community. In this building the ventilating apparatus is hardly satisfactory and within a few days workmen will commence to install a new system whereby patrons will receive the benefit of fresh air at all times. Several large fans will be set in the theatre and special attention is being paid to the balcony system.

OUGHT TO BE RESTRAINED

So Says Judge Avery Relative to Use of Acid

In pronouncing his finding in the case of Alex. D. Smith who was arraigned in court for drunkenness this morning, his honor took occasion to say that he hoped the defendant had not used the same kind of acid cleaning public buildings in Braintree that he used in Quincy and that he ought to be restrained from using it.

Smith was represented by counsel. Smith declared that he was not drunk and that his condition when he arrived in court Saturday was not due to the use of intoxicating liquor, but to extreme nervousness. He further said that he was not drunk when arrested Friday night, as he came from Boston, although he admitted having taken two drinks of rum in Boston and some beer.

During his testimony he said that he had cleaned the Court House building and City Hall in Quincy and some public buildings in Braintree. The court found him guilty and placed the case on file on payment of $3 costs. It was then that his honor said he hoped that he did not use the same ind of acid on the Braintree buildings as used in Quincy and that he ought to be restrained.

Quincy is experiencing today one of the most uncomfortable days of the season. Not only is the temperature high but the humidity is also high, the two combined making it very oppressive. The early morning gave promise of a hot day and as noon approached the mercury began to rise and with it the humidity. In fact it is a regular dog day. There was hardly a breath of air stirring, and it was extremely uncomfortable.

JOHN HARKINS PASSES AWAY

For Many Years a Mason Contractor with His Brother

John Harkins, father of Rev. Fr. Howland Harkins and one of the most prominent mason contractors south of Boston, died Sunday evening at the Carney hospital from complications following an operation performed there a week ago.

During the past year Mr. Harkins had not been enjoying the best of health and upon the advise of physicians entered the Carney hospital for observation. The medical staff decided to operate, and this was successfully done a week ago. The complications set in Thursday and he quietly passed away Sunday evening.

TWO MORE FOR ATLANTICS

Defeat the Dedham A. C. and Hillside A. C.

The Atlantic A. A. won two games Saturday afternoon on the Ward Six playground before a large gallery of fans. The Dedham A. C. was defeated 8 to 6 and the Hillside A. C. were beaten 8 to 3.

The first victory resulted from the fine stick work of Joe Duffy who slammed a triple in the sixth inning with the bases full. This duplication of past performances by the strongest batter on the team took the fight out of the visitors. John Duffy pitched and received elegant support throughout.

The winning lineup consisted of Creedon, Johnson, Joe Duffy, Donnelly, Curtin, Duffy, Cullen, McNally and O'Connell. The losers played Tucker, Harris, Wurch, Dovely, Shea, Hanson, Korn, Damner and Ablur, all well known in Atlantic.

The score by innings:

Atlantic	2 2 0 0 0 2 2 0 0—8
Dedham	0 2 2 2 0 0 0 0 0—6

In the second game victory came as easy as in the first. Tom McNally did the box work and held them scoreless until the sixth, when they scored three through errors. The Atlantics then took a brace and prevented further tallying.

The Hillside team was Lilly, Doyle, Gill, McGlennan, Monhall, DaGreg, Coves, Collins and Zortona. The Atlantic team was the same as in the first game.

The score by innings:

The two games totaled 31 played by Atlantic for the season, only four of which have been defeats and they claim to have the most perfect record of any of the junior teams in and about Boston. They have scored 310 runs against 187 for their opponents.

It is evidently against the law to settle the Thaw case legally.

The wife of Vice-President Marshall has made 1500 calls since March 1, but if she used good judgment she must have found many of the people out.

There is a general agreement among the friends of good government in New York City that they should have the plums.

Now the milliners are sending hats by parcel post. If they are too big to go through the door of the mail car, probably they could be carried on the roof.

Some unprogressive farmers continue to work on cattle show day, when they could learn so much about scientific agriculture by watching the horse trots.

In spite of the general impression among the inhabitants that the undertakers were taking a day off, it appears that it was the press humorists that met at Peoria.

SHOOTING UP THE EDITOR.

Formerly the fiction about the necessity of having a "fighting editor" was in many parts of the country no joke. The common practice, when you did not like the political views of a newspaper man, was to demonstrate the superiority of your convictions by licking him with a whip, or still more logically, by perforating him with a revolver.

While these robust manners have been somewhat decadent of late, a reminder of the old war days in journalsim is furnished at Sulphur, Okla., where J. Y. Schenck, editor of the Sulphur Democrat, was shot and killed by a politician, because he would not "eat" his words.

All these methods of conducting political arguments are going out of favor, even in localities where unconventional manners still prevail. It begins to dawn on most politicians that to win out they must have votes, to gain votes, they must, in the long run, convince the reason of a majority of the people. Bullets and horsewhips never convinced brains.

CREDIT FOR THE FARMER.

A bank man remarked to the writer the other day, that few people know the financial burden carried by many farmers. The investor in farm mortgage commonly receives 5, 6, or 7 per cent. But the farmer may be paying 8 to 10 per cent. The difference goes to loan companies.

A hoodoo for a generation was placed on the farm mortgage business by the enormous losses formerly incurred by investors. Hosts of elderly people today will never forget them. They will always recall the days when every mail brought in bills for taxes, water privileges, foreclosure expenses, fees for sheriffs and lawyers, newspaper bills for advertising sales, and all kinds of expenses which the bankrupt owners of the land had thrown over.

All this still creates prejudice against farm loans not justified by present conditions, but which still works against the former's interest. There is a general agreement that the farmer should have a better opportunity for legitimate advances, although there are radical differences as to methods.

Today the West is abounding in prosperity. It is almost able to finance itself. Just as workmen's compensation laws are being passed to save the expense of litigation and turn all the proceeds of damage payments over to the man who is injured, so the farmer should get the full benefit of the interest he is paying, without needless charges by loan companies.

In Germany, for instance, there are 12,614 rural co-operative banks. The members not only know each other, but see from day to day how their advances of funds are being used. This promotes conservatism. In France the farmer has been borrowing his funds for 4.3 percent. But in progressive America he has often had to pay 8 to 10 percent, as the result of antiquated banking laws and lack of initiative.

PLANS SAFETY ON NEW HAVEN

Definite Changes Promised by New President

OUTLINES SCHEME OF REFORM

Wooden Pullmans Will Be Abandoned, Signal System Will Be Improved and Bridges Strengthened—White Mountain Express Engineer Was Doing Two Men's Work

New Haven, Sept. 8.—Satisfaction was expressed at the policy of safety outlined by Howard Elliott, the new president of the New York, New Haven and Hartford railroad, for the prevention of more accidents like the Wallingford disaster of Tuesday, which caused the death of twenty-one passengers.

Elliott announced that before next January all wooden sleepers would be taken off the line, the Pullman company having agreed to furnish enough steel sleeping cars for the railroad's use. In addition, the signal system will be improved at great expense and bridges will be strengthened.

A statement was given out by a banker close to the Morgan firm in which he declared that the banking firm long had contemplated the withdrawal as the railroad's fiscal agents, and that the action would have taken place if there had been no wreck.

The interstate commerce commission's investigation here is completed, having brought out the fact that Augustus B. Miller, who was at the throttle of the White Mountain express locomotive when it ploughed through two sleeping cars of the Bar Harbor express, had been been doing two men's work for a week previous to the wreck and had been going with very little sleep.

Elliott's statement of the proposed safety improvements on the New Haven announces that the company seeks permission to issue debenture bonds to raise $67,552,000, and, he adds, that if permission is not granted the company cannot go ahead with its policy of safeguarding travel.

He anounced that two divisions would be created of the Shore line so that closer supervision of the operating might be enforced.

Coroner Mix resumed this morning his "private" inquest into the wreck. The coroner said the inquest would probably be concluded Friday and that his finding would be ready a few days later.

Sixteen of those injured in the wreck are still in the various hospitals here, but only three are in critical condition, it is said. These are Misses Edna and Jean Annette of Bayonne, N. J., and Mrs. Carl R. Zimmerman of New York city.

CHARACTER NOT CHANGED

Pomeroy Has Spent Thirty-Seven Years Behind Prison Walls

Boston, Sept. 8.—Thirty-seven years ago yesterday Jesse Pomeroy, considered by criminologists one of the most interesting prisoners in the country, was committed to the Massachusetts state prison at Concord, after Governor Claflin and counsel had commuted the death sentence and decreed that he should spend the rest of his life at state prison in solitary confinement.

When 18 years old Pomeroy was taken to Concord on Sept. 7, 1876, and since then he has been but once outside of prison walls. That was for a few hours one day in 1884, when, with the other prisoners, he was transferred to Charlestown.

Thirty-seven years of prison existence has not served to change Pomeroy's character. He was morose when first locked in a cell at Concord and he has so remained up to the present time.

WEDDING ON NOV. 25

Marriage of President's Daughter to Be Big Society Event

Washington, Sept. 8.—Society here learned with pleasure that instead of having a simple wedding, as was at first intended, the ceremony that will unite Miss Jessie Wilson to Francis B. Sayre at the White House on Nov. 25 will be as brilliant an affair as similar ones of that nature.

Miss Wilson, through her secretary, announced the date of the wedding and also the fact that it is intended to have it in keeping with other White House weddings.

TOO LARGE FOR USE

Treasury Department Destroys $2,500,000 In $5000 and $10,000 Bills

St. Louis, Sept. 8.—Two million and a half of dollars in currency was destroyed here at the United States subtreasury, by order of the treasury department at Washington. The notes were gold and silver certificates of the $5000 and $10,000 denomination.

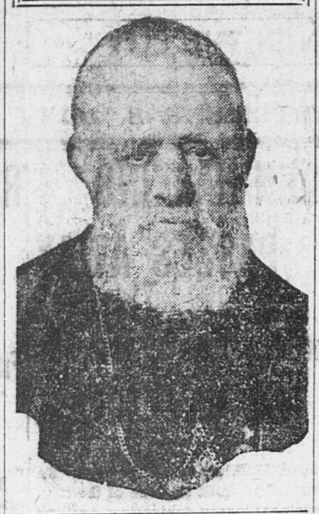

W. D. VanDiver, assistant United States treasurer, said the reason for destruction was that the notes, which are new, are of too large denomination for general circulation.

Reduction In Bank Deposits

Washington, Sept. 8.—Individual deposits in national banks of the United States decreased $190,000,000 between June 4 and Aug. 9, and loans and discounts increased $20,000,000, according to figures issued by the comptroller of the currency.

VIVES Y TUTO

Had Been Considered Possible Candidate to Succeed Pope

VIVES Y TUTO DIES

Cardinal Had Acquired Prominent Position at the Vatican

Rome, Sept. 8.—Cardinal Joseph C. Vives y Tuto, prefect of the congregation for religious affairs, died Sunday. Recently he had undergone an operation for appendicitis.

The cardinal was born in the diocese of Barcelona Feb. 15, 1854. He was created cardinal June 19, 1899.

The cardinal acquired a prominent position at the Vatican after the election of Pope Pius X., and had been considered as a possible candidate for the succession.

The pope was deeply affected by the death of the cardinal and exclaimed: "I have lost one of my best friends, the church one of its greatest supports."

GERMAN SONDER BOATS ELIMINATED

Fail to Qualify In Races For President Wilson Cup

Marblehead, Mass., Sept. 8.—A 6000-mile journey in quest of the President Wilson cup has come to naught for the Germans who figured in the international sonder match off Marblehead. Their team of three boats has been eliminated from further participation.

It was brought about when the American sonder Ellen, owned by C. P. Curtis, won the second leg on the trophy by finishing first in a race which counts fourth in the series.

By rules governing the contest, boats that have not won a first are thrown out.

The fight for the President Wilson cup continues between the Americans. One boat must capture three firsts to secure the splendid prize.

FOUND DEAD IN BED

William Havemeyer, Member of Old Sugar Firm, Suddenly Dies

New York, Sept. 8.—William F. Havemeyer, who was a member of Havemeyer Brothers, sugar refiners, at the time that concern was absorbed by the American Sugar Refining company twenty-five years ago, was found dead in bed in the apartments of his son-in-law, William R. Wilcox, with whom he lived.

Death was ascribed to angina pectoris. Havemeyer had enjoyed comparatively good health and is believed to have died while asleep.

Havemeyer, who was 63 years old, was a son of Mayor Havemeyer of this city, who was stricken at the city hall in 1876, during the second year of his term. Although retired from business, Havemeyer took an active interest in various enterprises.

Pawtucket, R. I., Sept. 8.—Henry H. Cochran, 34 years old, janitor of the local postoffice building, was arrested by postoffice inspectors charged with stealing letters from the mails.

He confessed to the larcenies but tearfully pleaded for clemency, stating that he stole the letters because he was unable to support his wife and two children on his salary of about $13 a week.

Cochran was taken to the office of Deputy Marshal Dallow and made a written confession, it is said. He stated that he stole letters from the carriers' desks after they had sorted them out and were preparing to start on their routes.

TEST OF LAW MEANS DELAY

Thaw Likely to Be at Least Six Months In Canada

HE DROPS PUBLICITY CAMPAIGN

Accepts Conditions Imposed Upon Him by Counsel—Probably Will Be Admitted to Bail at Hearing In Montreal—Jerome Insists He Is Not Yet Defeated

Coaticook, Que., Sept. 8.—Harry K. Thaw has at last agreed to give up his publicity campaign. His lawyers went to him and said that William A. Stone, formerly governor of Pennsylvania, had instructed that a fight be made for Thaw if necessary before the privy council in England on one condition.

"What is that?" the prisoner asked.

"That you drop all of your publicity and remain a dummy in the case."

"I accept," said Thaw without hesitation.

"Then there is not a chance of your being deported for six months, if at all," his lawyers told him.

"If the case is taken to the privy council it will take at least one year to decide it. Your case will test the immigration act for good. Many of us have believed from the first that it is unconstitutional."

From information received by Thaw lawyers from Montreal it seems likely that Thaw will be admitted to bail after his hearing Sept. 15. He will enjoy freedom until the privy council has passed on his case.

The prisoner is so delighted with the attention he is receiving from the residents of Coaticook, and is taking such pleasure in the shouts of "Hooray for Harry Thaw!" which frequently come up to his cell from hangers-on about the building, that he is not anxious to go to Montreal until his case comes up for a hearing on the writ of habeas corpus before the court of appeals on Sept. 15.

William T. Jerome has gone to Montreal to arrange the legal battle there to prevent the release of Thaw.

"We are not defeated yet," Jerome said. "Thaw will go back to Matteawan before we are through. Rest assured of that."

It is said Thaw is now considering arrangements whereby he may become a British subject. Thaw himself refuses to deny the story, but it is known that in his talks with Canadian newspaper men he has frequently said he would like to live in the dominion and become a British subject.

This attitude was believed to have been taken merely for its effect in arousing public sympathy in his behalf.

LATEST FROM MEXICO

Trevino's Entry Into Cabinet May Mean Elimination of Huerta

Washington, Sept. 8.—While no announcements were made at any of the government departments of any change in the diplomatic side of the Mexican controversy, two phases of the situation attracted much attention in official circles.

One was the published disclaimer on the part of Nelson O'Shaughnessy, American charge d'affaires at Mexico City, that any positive assurances had been given him of the intention of Victoriano Huerta not to be a candidate in the approaching elections.

The other was the receipt of private telegrams stating that General Trevino would be made minister of war soon, to succeed General Blanquet.

It had been generally supposed here that Trevino had been ordered back to Mexico City by Huerta to be given the reigns of government as provisional president while Huerta entered the presidential campaign.

Woods said his father, who had been an employe of the Fort Worth bank for the last twenty years, confessed his shortage while visiting here and the son notified the bank by telegraph that his father would return.

RUNAWAY ACCIDENT.

The fastenings of a seat in the democrat buggy of Nicholas Murphy of West Quincy parted when the horse bolted at Houghs Neck Sunday afternoon and Mrs. Murphy and two daughters, Agnes and Mary were thrown out. Mrs. Murphy landed on her head and was knocked unconscious. She was carried to the Tessier pharmacy where she was treated by Dr. von David of Boston, who found that she had sustained a scalp wound and multiple cuts and buises, The daughters escaped without injury.

Mr. Murphy and family were returning home from a visit to friends when the accident occurred. The horse, a high strung animal, is thought to have bolted when the snapper of the whip brushed his ear. The accident was witnessed by many people who were on Sea street and all rushed to the assistance of the trio.

Mr. Murphy held onto the reins and after the horse had covered a short distance got him under control. He then returned to the pharmacy and took Mrs. Murphy home. She is doing well today.

OFFICER WAS ON HIS JOB.

What appeared to be a burglary in the Quincy Department store after midnight Saturday turned out to be nothing more than a window left open by accident. The discovery was made by Officer George Phillips as he was making his rounds.

It was shortly after Officer Phillips reported for duty that he made his examinations of the windows and doors in the rear of the business blocks. On finding the open window he entered the store and after an examination found that nothing about the premises had been disturbed. He phoned the police station and Sargent Bishop got in touch with Officer Olsen, the night officer in the square. Both men made an examination but found that no burglary had been committed. They closed the window but kept a strict watch on the building for the rest of the night.

RED LETTER DAY AT BETHANY

Recognition Service for Miss Melcher Who Goes to India

Rev. B. A. Willmott resumed his work as pastor of Bethany church on Sunday after a vacation of six weeks. He was greeted with large congregations both morning and evening. Ser vices were held in the chapel because the renovating of the auditorium was not complete.

The subject of the pastor's message in the morning was "The power of things invisible." The evening service was a recognition of the departure of one of the young ladies of the church, Miss Margery Melcher, for India. Miss Melcher, the only daughter of Abbot L. Melcher, is to be student secretary of the Young Women's Christian Association with headquarters at Calcutta.

Mr. Willmott in introducing Miss Melcher said it was one of the great days of our church, for she goes to work among our brothers and sisters far away from us. To most people India is a world of mystery, but henceforth we will feel better acquainted as we will have a friend there. She will arrive in time to assist in the celebration of the centenary of the Y. W. C. A.

Miss Melcher said at the outset it was hard to tell just what led to conclusions—why she had become a missionary. She put first the early influences of home and church. When in Radcliffe she was a delegate to the Silver Bay conference. At that time the last thing she thought of was missionary work. At that time however one of her friends said she would like to become a missionary.

In her senior year Miss Melcher again attended the Silver Bay conference and then enlisted as a student volunteer. Then the question came to her, where did God need her most? The address of Robert Spear decided me. The christian forces are unequally divided. There will not be less Christians in America because there is one more Christian in India. I decided then to do the work of association secretary in some place except America.

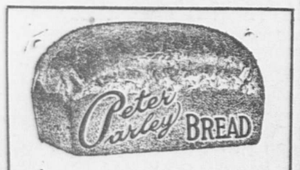

To many the work of missionaries is hazy and dry, but they are solving the world's problems. Some say they will do anything for home missions but nothing for foreign missions, but God sees no difference. He sees an unequal division of forces. New York city alone has 3,300 religious organizations, but in China there are 1,147 towns without any Christian people. In one district of India with 21,000,000 people there are only 4 christian workers.

In India the people are hungry for God, and they appreciate help. In no country of the world have women suffered as in India. It is important that the women be educated. The educated ones have a big opportunity. My work will be to supervise the student work in the ten branches at Calcutta and vicinity.

There is just one reason for missionary work—our love for Him. We must be interested in His work and plans. That is the supreme motive.

At the close Mrs. Emma S. Moore sang a song written by a Christian woman born in India.

Many wished Miss Melcher health and success in her new work in India. Her service as student secretary in Chicago and the West has admirably fitted her for the work abroad.

WOLLASTON BAPTIST CHURCH.

Members of both the Wollaston Baptist and Congregational churches are rejoicing on the feeling of unity which has prevailed throughout the union services during the summer. The last of these were held Sunday at the Baptist church, with an inspiringly large audience. The pastor preached from the text, "Wherefore criest thou to me? Speak unto the children of Israel that they go forward," and Charles M. Kempton sang, "It Matters Little to Me." At the close, a union communion service was held, deacons from both churches assisting in serving.

The regular session of the Sunday school were resumed, with a very good attendance, considering the fact that all the members have not yet returned. The new addition to the chapel is not quite completed, but the younger children were able to meet in their new rooms. A kindergarten has been added to the school, and several of the classes are to unite, thus forming one or two large instead of several small ones.

The final union service of the Young People's Societies of Christian Endeavor was held at 6 . An unusually fine prayer meeting was held at 5.45, and all who attended were well repaid. Miss Marion Farwell of the Congregational church was the leader. Topic "The ideal Christian—his faith." The rolls of both societies were called, about forty being present.

Tuesday evening at 7.45, the Nearer and Farther Lights' Society will meet with Miss Eleanor Dunn 233 Newport avenue.

Thursday evening at 7.45, the regular meeting for prayer, praise, and testimony will be held in the chapel.

Friday evening, at 7.45 the semi-annual business meeting and election of officers of the Y. P. S. C. E. will be held in the chapel, followed by a social.

WOLLASTON UNITARIAN CHURCH

Services of worship were resumed Sunday. Though not a few of the church people are still out of town, many were present at the opening service of the new church year, and lingered after the meeting to greet familiar faces and exchange greetings. The musical portions of the service were finely rendered by a mixed quartet (Mrs. Frank A. Page, Mrs. Royal L. Turner, Charles A. Powers and Frederick Bishop.) The large bunch of flowers on the communion table was presented in memory of Carleton Cummings, and after the service distributed among the sick.

Rev. Carl G. Horst preached a helpful sermon on "Bridling the Tongue" taking for his text "I said I will take heed to my ways, that I sin not with my tongue."—Psalm 39-1. After speaking of the sin of hasty, profane, impure, slanderous, and disagreeable words he said: "The bridling of the tongue is of the utmost importance. The tongue is like a musical instrument which responds to the touch of the player. The same instrument in the hands of one produces harmony, while at the touch of another it gives forth discord. It depends upon the heart behind the tongue, whether it utters words for good or for evil. We need, therefore, to keep a guard over our hearts, that we may guard our tongue, "for out of the abundance of the heart the mouth speaketh. The good man out of his good treasure bringeth forth good things and the evil man out of his evil treasure bringeth forth evil things. To keep the heart pure we must be careful about the company we keep. We must cultivate noble companionship, read good books, look upon beautiful pictures, cultivate the consciousness of God's presence and follow the Lord and Master of us all, Jesus the Christ." At the close of the sermon Mr. Horst read Adelaide Proctor's fine poem entitled "Words."

The Alliance is to have charge of the food table at Country Fair to be held on the church grounds, Friday and Saturday, Sept. 12-13.

Among the worshippers from out of town were Mrs. George Bennett from Weymouth, Miss Barney from St. Louis and the Rev. and Mrs. Houghton H. Schumacher of Iowa City, Iowa.

Rev. Carl G. Horst's new address is 39 Grand View avenue, Wollaston.

Rev. Carl G. Horst, Hon. Eugene H. Sprague and William H. Boynton are the delegates to represent the Wollaston Unitarian church at the General Conference in Buffalo, Oct. 6-9.

HALL PLACE M. E.

Rev. G. M. Bailey of Wollaston preached an excellent sermon at the Sunday morning service of the Hall Place M. E. church. He took for his subject "The unconquerable motive," his text being taken from Solomon 8-6. "Love is as strong as death."

The Epworth League conducted their devotional service at 7 P. M. in place of the regular evening service, Mr. Alex Stewart led on the subject "Books that have helped me."

Tuesday evening at 8 o'clock the cabinet of the Epworth League will meet with the president, J. M. Francis.

The Ladies Aid Society will meet in the vestry Tuesday evening.

Wednesday evening the Sunday school is invited to attend the farewell reception tendered to Rev. Wallace H. Miner at the Tremont Street, church. Mr. Miner is to go to China in the interest of Sunday school.

Thursday evening the Pilgrim Union of Epworth League will meet with the Wollaston chapter. Supper at 6.30 followed by business session and address.

FINNISH CONGREGATIONAL.

Rev. John E. Lillback starts tomorrow on a trip that will terminate in a two weeks visit to the Finnish Congregational Church at Brooklyn, N. Y., to which he has recently accepted a call. Rev. Mr. Lillback is in charge of missionary work in a great part of New England and his visits to New Hampshire and Gardner, will be in connection with this supervision. The trustees of the Finnish Congregational Church here are seeking a pastor to succeed Rev. Mr. Lillback whose resignation was accepted with deep regret. He will leave the parish about Nov. 1 for his new station.

BRIEFS

Mr. and Mrs. James S. Whiting of Wollaston have been at Manomet Point.

Miss Sally Dawes, the new English teacher at Quincy High, recently taught at Springfield. Her home is at Plymouth.

HAPPINESS.

To be unhappy is to blame life unjustly. Those who understand this and realize that happiness is of their own making know that paradise is to be found here on earth. It should be the duty of the governments of the world to destroy the anguish and terror felt by living creatures toward nature, life and death. Be happy in love. We must recognize that disillusionment is not always caused by the other person, but from lack of clear sightedness. We must have the courage to be mistaken twenty times and, so far from despising disappointment, must understand that it can be useful in educating us.—Henry Marx.

—If Mr. Bryan accepts the $50,000 which is being raised by democrats of Texas in order that he may stay in Washington and attend to his official duties, it does not place him in any better position than when he stated the necessity of his continuing on the lecture platform in order to earn money to make up for the insufficiency of his official salary. When he accepted the office he knew what the position paid, and being already a wealthy man should have been willing to devote part of his private income to maintaining his official life, or else should never have become secretary of state.—Old Colony Memorial.

SAYS WOMEN ARE NOT OPEN MINDED

Professor Hugo Munstersberg on Female Stubbornness.

CARD DOTS CONVINCE HIM.

Noted Harvard Psychologist Advances an Entirely New and Original Thesis on the Limitations of the Fair Sex. Women Not Fit For Jury Duty, Psychology Wizard Asserts.

Women everywhere are up in arms over the announcement of Professor Hugo Munsterberg, head of the psychology research department at Harvard university, that a series of psychological experiments convinces him that women are not fitted for jury duty.

The professor has advanced an entirely new and original thesis, "The Mental Stubbornness of Women," stating that his experiments show that women are unwilling to listen to argument and cannot be brought to change their opinions on any subject.

Describes His Experiments.

Describing a series of experiments with psychology classes in an article in the September Century, the psychology wizard says:

"It is evident that this tendency of the female mind may be advantageous for many social purposes. The woman remains loyal to her instinctive opinion. Hence we have no right to say that one type of mind is better than another. We may say only they differ and that this difference makes men fit and women unfit for the task which society requires for jurymen."

The experiment is described as follows: Cardboards on which were a certain number of black dots were held before a class of men, and they were asked to estimate the number of the dots.

Men Profited by Debate.

After five minutes of debate and argument the men again estimated the number. A second debate was held and again a guess made.

Of the men fifty-two voted right the first time, and seventy-eight were correct on the final vote, showing they had profited by debate.

When the experiment was tried out on a class of women forty-five voted right on the first vote, and after two five minute periods of discussion the correct answers still numbered forty-five, from which the psychology wizard concludes "the women had not learned anything from discussion" and "are apt to return to their first idea, however much is argued on the other side."

BIG GUNS GUARD CANAL.

Defenses at Panama, Long Under Way, Rapidly Nearing Completion.

Work on the Atlantic and Pacific defenses of the Panama canal fortifications is rapidly nearing completion. Most of the fourteen inch guns have been received at the canal zone, and the remainder are complete, ready for shipment. Several of the twelve inch mortars have already been set up.

On the western side of the Atlantic approach to Colon is Fort Slocum, and on the eastern side is Fort Randolph. In both of these forts are batteries of fourteen inch rifles and twelve inch mortars. Fort De Lesseps, nearer Colon, has two batteries of mortars. Maps and charts have been compiled showing the range and angle of fire of the great guns and the mortars. These contemplate private electric light and power plants and an extensive system of searchlights for night firing.

The hardest part of the work is done, according to army officials. The plans have been prepared and the pits practically constructed. The remaining work consists of simply following the lines already decided upon.

On the Pacific coast, at Fort Grant, are Batteries Newton, Merritt, Carr, Prince, Warren, Burnside, Park and Buel. In Fort Amador there will be Battery Smith and one which has not yet been named. Here there are twelve inch mortars, fourteen inch rifles and one sixteen inch gun.

Drainage and leveling of land will be necessary to accommodate the defenders of the fort from the land side. Some of this work has been done, but a great deal yet remains.

It is thought that the fortifications for both entrances of the canal will be ready for emergency action before the first ship passes through.

TOOTH 200,000 YEARS OLD.

Found In Chalk Pit Where Piltdown Skull Was Unearthed.

Little by little the secret is being probed of the mysterious woman of 200,000 years ago whose skull, found some months ago at Piltdown, Sussex, England, by Charles Dawson, fascinated and puzzled scientists the whole world over. Mr. Dawson has been indefatigable in his pursuit of the mystery ever since his discovery of the skull in a chalk pit, and he has now been richly rewarded.

While digging with two friends a few days ago one of the latter found a canine tooth belonging to the skull. In form it closely resembled the Smith-Woodward restoration, but is smaller in size and more pointed. It bears the same evidence of having chewed roots and gritty substances as the teeth already found in the jaw.

ELECTING DAY IN MAINE

Voters Balloting For Congressman In Third District

Augusta, Me., Sept. 8.—About 70,000 voters in the Third Maine congressional district are today registering their choice either for John A. Peters of Ellsworth, Republican; William R. Pattangall of Waterville, Democrat; Edward Lawrence of Lubec, Progressive, or William W. Wyer of Augusta, Socialist, as representative in congress to fill the vacancy caused by the death of Forrest Goodwin of Skowhegan. Here is the situation as the leaders size it up:

Pattangall—I am satisfied that I shall receive 16,000 votes, and shall be elected by from 2000 to 3000 plurality, nearer the latter figure.

Lawrence—I am satisfied with the result of my canvass, but I am not making any extravagant claims. The Progressive vote in this district will be a surprise to both of the old parties.

Chairman Parkhurst of Republican state committee—A careful canvass of this district assures John A. Peters 14,000 votes, which will be enough to elect him by a plurality of from 1500 to 2000.

TRIPLE DROWNING

Playful Dog Responsible For Tragedy on a Maine Lake

Bangor, Me., Sept. 8.—Leavitt Soucie, 38, unmarried, and his two married sisters, Mrs. Peter Bishop, 37, and Mrs. Jerry Dubay, 40, all of Oldtown, were drowned in Pushaw lake, near Oldtown.

Soucie, his sisters and Joseph Duguay were out in a canoe when a large dog with them began to frisk about, alarming one of the women who, in trying to avoid the animal, lurched far to one side, capsizing the canoe.

Soucie and Mrs. Bishop sank at once. Duguay, grasping the canoe, managed for a time to support Mrs. Dubay, but again the dog, thinking it all play, interfered, leaping repeatedly upon Duguay's head and shoulders, and so exhausting him that he was obliged to relinquish his hold upon the woman. Mrs. Dubay was going down apparently for the last time when a boat came from shore and took her in.

She died, however, soon after reaching shore, having swallowed a great deal of water.

HOT SPRINGS WILL REBUILD AT ONCE

Not Discouraged by Her $12,000,000 Conflagration

Hot Springs, Ark., Sept. 8.—Out of the ashes of residences, factories and power plants worth close to $12,000,0000—which were swept away in the conflagration that scourged the city—will rise within a week the first timbers of new structures to replace the old.

Governor Hays has already taken charge of the work of providing for the 2000 homeless. Mayor McClendon has closed all saloons, sworn in 250 special officers and called a mass meeting of citizens.

General Manager Dillon of the public utilities commission has announced that a temporary light and power service will be established within thirty days. Within three months, he said, the plants will be working to capactiy again.

KITE CARRIES DEATH

Boy Instantly Killed When Toy Hits High Tension Electric Wire

Clinton, Mass., Sept. 8.—Michael F. Joyce, a 16-year-old kite flyer, was instantly killed near his home when a steel wire attached to his kite came in contact with a high tension wire of the Clinton Electric Light company's service carrying 2300 volts.

The current passed through the boy's body for ten minutes before it was shut off. Dr. Tobey, medical examiner, gave the cause of death as accidental electrocution.

The boy had a large kite which he started to fly on a vacant lot near his house. He had gotten the kite only about fifty feet from the ground when the wind blew it against the electric company's wires.

MAN HUNT A FAILURE

Three Fugitives From Massachusetts State Farm Still at Liberty

Middleboro, Mass., Sept. 8.—The three men who broke from the state farm at Titicut last Thursday are still at large and the officers of the institution have practically abandoned the search.

The men escaped when they pulled themselves through a hole which had been cut in the wall to allow rats to get out of the fields.

Superintendent Blackstone of the institution has sent printed circulars to all the police in nearby cities to be on the lookout for the three men.

Epidemic Among French Cattle

WESTERN UNION TELEGRAM
THEO. N. VAIL, PRESIDENT

Telegraph letters by land and sea have brought Western Union service within reach of a multitude of new users

THE WESTERN UNION TELEGRAPH COMPANY

ON TELEGRAPH WIRE.

The funny mistakes of telegraphers are as numerous as those charged up to proofreaders. A gentleman who has been an extensive traveler, and consequently not supposed to overlook any details, saw his wife off on a train for the slope the other day. It was supposed that everything had been arranged. The good-by and its accompaniment had been passed, and the gentleman returned to his home. That night his wife suddenly remembered that she had left a valuable adjunct to her happiness and wrote a message to her husband which he received the following morning at his office. It read:

"Forget. Think conductor has telegraphed for it."

He read it again, and it read as at first. "Forgot what," he murmured. And he read it again and kept reading it until the words ran together and his temples throbbed. He sent a message to his house asking the servants if Mrs. —had left anything. They made no discoveries, of course. Then he sent a message to the operator at the office from which his wife's message was sent, asking him to repeat it. He waited for an answer. He lost his luncheon and his dinner waiting. He remained at his office until late at night, and as he was about to leave in despair he received an answer to his query. It read: "Forgot trunk. Conductor has telegraphed for it."

Sure enough, the word "trunk" had been made to read "think." But wasn't it strange that a man who had traveled all over the world should come to his own home to forget to check his wife's trunk? He laughed to himself after it was all over. But it had cost him lots of worry.

Equally funny is this one:

A lady in this city had received a letter from her old home in Connecticut which caused her a good deal of trouble. Her answer to it was by wire. When it was delivered in the Connecticut home, it read, "How's the weather?"

What an exasperating query at such a time! The letter referred to the lady's mother's health. The dispatch should have read, "How's mother?"

A little different is this one: A gentleman of this city sent his wife a message from Washington, March 4, 1893, prepaid, and it has not been delivered up to the present writing. The corespondence between the Chicago office and the Washington and New York offices about the transaction has accumulated until the batch looks like the papers in a long continued lawsuit.

Electric illumination is now a feature of nearly every celebration or exposition.

THE DOLLAR MARK.

In the early days of the nation there was utter confusion in the circulating medium. Several of the colonies had authorized coins of different denomination, and, besides these, there were English pence, shillings, crowns and half crowns; French coins brought from Europe and Canada; Spanish coins of half a dozen denominations, especially reals and doubloons; Mexican coins; in Pennsylvania Dutch and German pieces, and along the coast Portuguese and even Italian money was often seen, brought by seamen.

The United States mint was established in 1791 and the United States coinage became, of course, the legal tender. The mixed coinage, however, was not at once displaced, but continued in local use, so that it became necessary for merchants in keeping accounts to designate that a bill was to be paid in United States currency, or, if in miscellaneous coins these were received at a discount. So before the sum total of the bills the merchant was accustomed to write the letters "U. S." signifying United States money. In the hurry of writing the "S" was often written over the "U;" then the connecting line at the bottom easily dropped off and to the present day most people unconsciously commemorate the original practice by making the two down strokes first, then adding the "S."

JUST GIRLS.

Both of them looked intelligent, and the author of these lines has reason to believe both girls are in the High school somewhere.

This was the conversation:

"Goin' down town?"

"Down town is right."

"F street?"

"Sure thing."

"Say, that's some hat you got there. Where d'you get it?"

"Class, ain't it. Muh sister made it."

"She must be there on millinery."

"Aw, she's a bear."

"Seen Jim lately?"

"'S up t' th' house las' night."

"Oh, you kid!"

"Ain't he got the grandest shoulders?"

"Oh, I don't know."

"He's goin' t' take me t' the matinee Sat'day.

"Y' ain't got nothin' on me."

"Whose draggin' you?"

"Swellest fellah y' ever saw."

"Wher'd yuh meet him?"

"To a dance."

"Let's get a soda."

"Sure."—Washington Post.

WOGGIE FIRST SINBAD SECOND

Handicap Race for Power Boats off Houghs Neck

A back-and-go-bang handicap race for speed power boats was held Saturday afternon by the Quincy Yacht club and was won by the Woggie. The Gymark of J. Emery Green stood a good chance of winning the race, but her skipper misunderstood the signal gun, and instead of turning and starting back he kept on, thus losing some valuable time. The scheme of the race is that when the first boat turns the mark a gun is fired and all other boats racing are supposed to turn and start back for the stake boat. Instead of turning however Mr. Green kept on, not having been informed of the rules. Through a misunderstanding he was also a little late in starting. The summary was as follows:

Woggie, W. S. Hubbard,	0.37.13
Inbad, G. H. Newcomb,	0.37.27
Gymark, J. E. Green,	0.38.00
Pal II, G. P. Rupert,	0.38.03
Kraken, E. E. Ford	0.38.13
Alki, W. H. Keiser,	0.38.38
Cosey, T. B. Crane,	0.38.49

RACE WON BY THE JENNIE

Eight Power Boats Sail for the Edwards Trophy

The special race for speed power boats, held under the auspices of the Quincy Yacht club Saturday afternoon, between power boats of the Quincy and Town River clubs for a cup offered by James L. Edwards brought out several of the speedy power boats of the two clubs. The fastest time was made by the Marcel Wave but as her skipper consumed too much time she was disqualified, and the race went to the Jennie owned by W. F. Packard. The summary:

Jennie, W. F. Packard	6.55.56
Carolyn, J. R. Mellin	1.04.47
Naughty Girl, Sandberg Bros.	1.05.45
Chum, C. Cranshaw,	1.08.19
Bee, J. L. Edwards,	1.09.24
Marcel Wave, C. Folsom,	0.50.10

SHE WAS TOO WISE.

Over in Europe negroes are seen so seldom that they are not regarded as having any bearing upon social conditions. They are simply accepted as any other foreigner is.

Apropos of this, a well-known Louisville man was relating to the Courier-Journal an experience which befell an old negro "mammy" whom he took along with his family.

They were staying at a Parisian hotel, and the old woman was startled almost out of her senses to receive an invitation from the head waiter to go out for a drive.

The waiter could speak English a little bit, and thought, no doubt, that this visitor from the land of the free would be glad to mingle in the social life of the gay capital.

"Go 'way f'um heah, white man!" she said, severely. "Huccum you ast me sech a fool question? Ah don' hab nuthin' to do wif no po' white trash, an' you needn't ast me!"

It is unnecessary to add that the head waiter made no further effort to extend the social amenities.

—What will be the substitute for coal, when the coal supply is exhausted? It is not an immediate problem, but present attention to it is frequent, and is at least scientifically interesting. The increasing use of oil has been suggested as a step in the direction of relieving the burden on coal, but D. A. Thomas, the British "coal king," dismisses the oil idea with the claim that "oil will not take the place of coal in this or the next generation," and he bases his claim on the assertion that "the total quantity of oil available for fuel purposes in the world today is less than 2 p. c. of the total coal production."—B.

—The eugenic marriage at Lynn was a dismal failure. Applying the "eugenic" idea in Chicago has caused a jilted girl to start a damage suit. Perhaps Cupid is having a quiet smile to himself over these results of trying to beat the famed Cupidian method of disseminating a certain degree of happiness in this world.—Brockton Enterprise.

DECLARED TOKEN OF A BROKEN VOW

Chicago Man Stutters Because He Lied to His Wife

Chicago, Sept. 8.—Don't lie to your wife, Don't break any vows. If you do you will suffer as one young Chicago man suffers, in the opinion of a young woman who attended the "Question and Answer" meeting of the Theosophical society here. He lied to his wife in his former incarnation and now every one knows it.

The young woman sent the following question to the platform:

"A bright young friend of mine has a habit of stuttering. Naturally this is a great detriment to his business career. What was the cause?"

"Well," said Mrs. Russak of Madras, India, special envoy of Mrs. Besant, supreme head of the order, "he must have lied to his wife. I know of one case in Madras where a man is mute because he lied to his wife. Anyone who habitually told untruths in his former incarnations suffers that way—justly, too. Stuttering is a token of a broken vow."

BODY HORRIBLY MUTILATED

Police Have but Slight Clue to Slayer of Biddeford Man

Brunswick, Me., Sept. 8.—The horribly mutilated body of Kassen Sulieman of Biddeford was discovered against the grating in the water that surrounds the turbine at the Topsham pulp mill.

The murderer had cut Sulieman's throat, slashed the abdomen, made two stabs in the chest, cut the left cheek and ear, and thrust a knife into seventeen other places in the body.

The only clue to the murderer is furnished by a man in Topsham village. A stranger called at his home, said he had been in a fight with a man over a woman with whom they were both in love, and and asked for assistance.

RIOT OVER A GIRL

Many Wounded In Fight of Gunmen Are Spirited Away

New York, Sept. 8.—Shots and slashing marked the breaking up early Sunday of a picnic in Saw Mill River park, Yonkers, the police pursuing two warring bands of gunmen to the New York city line, where they searched all the passengers on a street car, arresting one man who had a loaded revolver.

Witnesses of the revolver battle told the police that several shot and slashed fighters had been carried away by their friends, who vanished before the arrival of the police.

The fight began over a girl, two fighting men of rival bands asserting sole proprietorship to her affections.

THERMOMETER AT 100

Chicago Is Experiencing Weather Which Is Really Hot

Chicago, Sept. 8.—Not satisfied with having inflicted upon Chicago the hottest summer in seventeen years, the weather man took an additional fling when the official temperature up in the observation tower, where lake breezes blow, was 92, but down on the streets and in the suburbs it was 100, accompanied by hot winds.

Fortunately few people were compelled to exert themselves. Record crowds were at all the lake beaches.

DRAGS NURSE TO HER DEATH

Sanitarium Patient Suddenly Plunges Into a Fond

COMPANION JUMPS AFTER HER

Could Not Swim, but Pluckily Battles to Rescue Her Charge Until Both Are Drowned—Doctors Vainly Work Over Bodies With Pulmotors For Two Hours

Stoneham, Mass., Sept. 8.—Quarter-Mile pond was the scene of a double tragedy when, in a heroic attempt to save Miss Ada Feingold, 20, of Worcester, a patient at the New England sanitarium, after she had thrown herself into the water, Miss Hazel Crummell, 21, plunged in after her, although she was unable to swim.

The only witness of the double drowning was Louis Gittes, 14 years old. He said he first saw the two young women walking along the shore of the pond, almost opposite where he was standing.

They sat down on a large stone and remained there a few minutes, when suddenly Miss Feingold jumped to her feet, ran to the water and leaped in.

Without an instant's hesitation the other girl, whom Gittes recognized as a nurse by her uniform, followed Miss Feingold and plunged in after her. The boy did not see them reappear on the surface.

Gittes called for help and Metropolitan Park policemen ran toward the pond, only a short distance from Spot pond, with which it is connected.

They got a boat with grappling irons and ropes and rowed to the place where the two girls had leaped into the water. At that point the water is fifteen feet deep within a short distance of the shore. The bodies were recovered in about eight feet of water. They were locked in a final embrace, the condition of their garments alone indicating the terrible struggle which ended in death.

They were taken at once to the New England sanitarium, where doctors worked over the bodies with pulmotors for two hours without avail.

Miss Feingold was a graduate of the Worcester high school and was a talented musician and elocutionist. Four weeks ago she came to the sanitarium, suffering from a stomach disorder. Physicians at the sanitarium said that persons suffering from mental troubles are not admitted to the institution, and they could not account for her action in plunging into the pond.

Miss Crummell has a sister, Mrs. Clara Bo...owdale, also employed at the New England sanitarium. Her mother visited the institution several weeks during the summer and had just left for her home in Akron, O., a few days ago.

SCUFFLES IN ROME

Anti-Clericals Object to Presence of Catholic Athletes

Rome, Sept. 8.—The streets of Rome were guarded Sunday by large forces of police, carabineers and troops from the Church of St. John Lateran, where the Catholic athletes heard mass, to St. Peter's, to which edifice they marched to be received by the pope.

A great parade that had been planned was prohibited by the police on account of threatened reprisals by the anti-Clericals. Notwithstanding the strictest measures to ensure order, a few scuffles occurred.

Four hours were occupied by the athletes in reaching St. Peter's, where they unfurled flags and passed into the court of San Damaso. They knelt when the pope appeared on the balcony surrounded by the pontifical court.

The athletes, pilgrims and others in the assembly numbered 8000, and after the apostolic benediction had been imparted they gave a triple hurrah.

A CHANCE OF FRONT

Sulzer's Friends Not Anxious to Put His Power to the Test

Albany, Sept. 8.—Governor Sulzer's friends have changed front in their fight for recognition and now show a disposition to avoid putting to the test at this time the question of his right to honor requisition papers.

District Attorney Blessing, appearing for the California authorities before Justice Whitmeyer in Schenectady, said he had been requested by Sulzer's office to postpone action.

Whitmeyer advised Blessing to go before Acting Governor Glynn and get his signature instead of Sulzer's to requisition papers signed by Governor Johnson of California.

Blessing said he gathered the impression that the Sulzer office was not anxious to have the point of validity of the requisition papers urged at all. By agreement of all parties the case was adjourned a week.

Mystery of the Topaz Cat

Luck a Queer Jewel Brought to a Pair of Lovers

By JONAS BRYANT

Roger Holden stared disconsolately in the window of the antique shop. There was no hope of finding anything here within his means, and yet he wanted to buy a birthday present for Dorothy Williams. But Dorothy's tastes were simple in the extreme, and he was quite sure that none of the bizarre jewelry heaped on the dusty velvet trays would appeal to his sweetheart.

Now he inventoried the contents of the velvet lined tray—an antique silver ring, a chatelaine of tarnished copper coins, an amethyst cross, some odd filigree finger rings, a necklace of garnets, a jumble of odds and ends of trinkets, among which gleamed a topaz cat.

"That's odd," muttered Roger, with another quick glance at the little trinket. "Topaz is Dolly's lucky stone. No harm in asking the price."

He entered the shop and was approached by a grizzled old man in a black alpaca smoking cap set rakishly over his jet black eyes.

"Well, my son?" he grinned.

"I would like to examine a trinket in your window—the little topaz cat," said Roger.

Roger held it in his hand and marveled at the delicacy of workmanship that had carved from a bit of topaz half an inch long a perfect likeness of a sitting cat. There was a tiny hole bored through the humped back of the animal, in which was inserted a small ring. The topaz cat might have been used as a charm.

"What is the price?" asked Roger.

"Whatever any one can afford to give is the price of the topaz cat," returned the old man sleekly.

Roger stared at him in surprise.

"Isn't that rather unusual in your business?" he asked dryly.

The other shrugged his shoulders.

"May be, but it is so in this particular instance. I may not set a price on the little trinket. Whatever you can afford to give is the price of the topaz cat," he repeated, with a confident glance at Roger's well dressed person.

The young man turned the trinket over in his hand and hesitated. What was the use of his offering $2 for the little jewel? It was probably worth much more, and the shopkeeper would laugh at such a paltry offer.

"I can afford to give only $2 for it," he said reluctantly. "But I want it. Will you take that?"

The old man looked at him from under grizzled brows.

"It is yours, sir," he said with simple dignity.

Roger was still dazed as he walked out of the shop with the topaz cat tucked away in his waistcoat pocket.

"I WOULD LIKE TO EXAMINE A TRINKET IN YOUR WINDOW," SAID ROGER.

There was only one solution to the mystery—the topaz was probably a good imitation of a genuine stone. It would be easy to ascertain the truth of this suspicion.

In a Fifth avenue jewelry shop they examined the topaz cat and told Roger its real value—about $50, the dapper clerk said with a keen glance at Roger as he spoke.

When Roger Holden left the shop he did not know that one of the jewelry firm's detectives shadowed him to his modest boarding place and that the man carefully noted the street and number of the house before fading away in the early autumn twilight.

That evening Roger gave the topaz cat to Dorothy Williams. In the bleak parlor of the boarding house which she called "home" while working and waiting for her marriage with Roger, Dorothy received the birthday gift with unalloyed pleasure.

"But, dear, you must have spent a lot of money for it," she objected as she slipped it on her watch chain where the topaz cat caught the rays of light and gave them back in a golden shower.

Roger confessed his adventure of the afternoon, and the two marveled at the peculiar circumstances of the case—the odd behavior of the dealer in antiques and the surprising value of the trinket as appraised by the jewelry salesman.

Dorothy was dressed for the theater, and presently the two set forth, quite unconscious that they were followed from the house to the theater.

As they were leaving the playhouse a man touched Roger on the arm.

"Come with me, sir," he said in a low tone. "I will explain what I wish with you in a very few words."

"But," objected Roger, "can't you wait? I have a lady with me"—

"It is necessary that the lady should be present also," said the other in a tone of authority.

"Do you mind, dear?" asked Roger of his fiancee.

"Certainly not, Roger. Let us go with him by all means and see what he wants," said Dorothy in her quick decisive manner.

The man led the way to a nearby drug store and placed a chair for Dorothy and another for her companion.

"You are Mr. Roger Holden?" asked the man quietly.

"Yes."

"You bought a topaz from Moses, the antique dealer, this afternoon?"

Roger was surprised, but he nodded an affirmative.

"In connection with this topaz I am about to ask you if you will not call at a certain address this evening—with the lady, who I see wears the jewel on her chain."

"Why all this concern over a paltry topaz cat?" demanded Roger impatiently.

"It is of immense importance to my client," returned the stranger.

"And the name of your client is?"

The man leaned forward and whispered a name that was so well known throughout the world that Roger and his sweetheart stared incredulously.

"But," he added, "my client prefers to be known as 'Mr. Brathwait.' Now, Mr. Holden, will you go and do a great service to a grief stricken old man?"

"If your credentials are satisfactory," was Roger's cautious reply.

Mr. Brathwait's private secretary, for such he proved to be, produced documents that satisfactorily established his identity, and without further demur Roger and Dorothy entered a taxicab with Mr. Linn and were driven to a certain address on Fifth avenue.

Although it was on the stroke of midnight when they entered the great mansion, the windows were brilliantly lighted, and they were evidently expected, for the man servant who admitted them conducted them at once to a handsome library on the second floor.

"If you will sit down I will summon Mr. Brathwait," said Linn pleasantly as he left the room.

The two young people so unexpectedly occupying comfortable chairs in the library of the great magnate looked at each other with rueful smiles.

"I am afraid that you are about to lose your topaz cat," remarked Roger.

"Who knows!" nodded Dorothy wisely. "Perhaps the topaz cat has brought us good luck, Roger!"

Before Roger could make answer the door slowly opened and there entered a tall, dignified old man whose lean form was clad in a faded silk dressing gown.

"You will pardon my appearance," he said in a deep voice, "but I am recovering from a serious illness, and this is my first venture out of my own room for several weeks."

Roger placed a chair for Mr. Brathwait, who sat down rather heavily. He possessed a gentle, refined face, cleanly shaven, but emaciated from long illness. His snowy hair hung over the collar of his dressing gown.

"I am greatly indebted to you for coming to me at this late hour," began Mr. Brathwait in a very tired voice, "but I learned today that the topaz cat had come into your possession, and I knew that I must get it again at once before it was lost from sight.

"I suppose you are wondering, Mr. Holden, how I knew that you had bought the topaz cat. Well, my jewelers knew that I was searching for it, and as soon as you showed it to one of their salesmen he placed a detective on your track, and your movements this afternoon were easily learned. He followed you to the theater and pointed you out to my private secretary, who met you and brought you here."

"Is it stolen property?" asked Roger, with an unpleasant tightening of the heart.

"In a way—yes." A pained smile curved the old man's lips. "It was taken from my cabinet by one who is very dear to me. Out of revenge, because I refused to countenance his dissipated habits by advancing him more money, he stole the topaz cat and sold it to Professor Dinkwalz of Berlin, who is my bitter rival in the acquisition of rarely cut antique gems. The topaz cat was found in the coffin of an Egyptian princess, and to me—or Professor Dinkwalz—it is worth a fortune.

"Professor Dinkwalz, although informed that the stone was stolen property, refused to part with it. I believe him to be an honest man in every regard save that he loses all principle when his hobby is at stake.

"Awhile ago I received a message from my—from the one who stole from me, and he told me that he had stolen the topaz cat back from Dinkwalz and left money in its place, the very sum the professor had paid for it. And he was bringing the cat back to me. He was broken, repentant, eager to begin life anew. The ship that he engaged passage on was lost at sea, and one who was saved in the few bouts that withstood the gale was intrusted with the topaz cat and a letter to be given to me.

"The messenger sent me the letter when he reached land, and he told me that my—that he who had sent it had died a hero's death, but the messenger kept the topaz cat. He succumbed to greed and sold it and then disappeared. I have searched for it ever since. The young lady has it now—so Mr. Linn tells me."

Dorothy detached the topaz cat from her chain and, stepping forward, laid it in Mr. Brathwait's palm.

"I am happy that we can restore it to you," she said gently.

Mr. Brathwait smiled down at the little jewel in his hand.

"And you give it to me freely, without knowledge or hope of reward?" he asked sharply.

Roger arose and stood beside his sweetheart.

"That is a quite unnecessary question, Mr. Brathwait," he said stiffly. "I purchased the trinket for Dorothy's birthday, and I paid only $2 for it. We are very glad to be the means of restoring it to you. Come, Dorothy; it is very late."

"Not so fast!" cried Mr. Brathwait, with a fine smile curving his thin lips. He touched a button near his desk, and the private secretary appeared at once.

"Please find a copy of the Herald and show Mr. Holden the advertisement I inserted for the topaz cat," he requested.

Mr. Linn went to a drawer and brought a newspaper which he showed to Roger and Dorothy. There, under date of six months before, they read Mr. Brathwait's skillfully worded advertisement for the return of the topaz cat. "Large reward and no questions asked," it said.

"SO IT IS STOLEN PROPERTY?" ASKED ROGER.

"Through Moses, the antique dealer, I have bought seven cats, all of which were alleged to have been the original topaz cat. The seven were cut from yellow glass and had been skillfully manufactured for the purpose of cheating me. The topaz cat is described in many works on Egypt and in my own monograph on Egyptian gem carving, so it was comparatively easy for a skilled artisan to copy it in every detail save the one that actually identifies it. Moses undoubtedly thought he was getting rid of another fake when he handled this one; but, young man, it happens that you have found the genuine gem. The identification mark is here, imperceptible to any eye but my own." Mr. Brathwait laid down the powerful magnifying glass with which he had been studying the topaz cat and leaned back in his chair.

"Mr. Linn will arrange for you to have the reward, Mr. Holden, and I hope it will bring you as much happiness as money may in this world." The millionaire smiled bitterly as he arose and shook hands with his visitors. "Thank you for coming Mr. Holden—and Miss Williams—am I right in congratulating you both?"

Dorothy blushed and thanked him prettily, and when they were alone with the secretary that dark eyed young man extended a friendly hand to Roger.

"Let me congratulate you on gaining the reward," he said heartily. "If you will give me your full name, Mr. Holden, I will make out the check now."

Roger did not even glance at the check as he folded it away in his pocketbook.

"I feel like thirty cents taking this for doing a perfectly square thing by a poor old man," he said.

"Look at the check and perhaps you won't feel like thirty cents," smiled Linn kindly.

Roger looked and gasped. Dorothy looked and gasped and almost fainted from excitement, and it took all of Linn's persuasion to make the young couple believe that the $5,000 written on the check was in return for the tiny topaz cat.

At last they went dizzily home, and Dorothy planned to give up her clerical position at once and prepare for the coming wedding, and they both agreed that the very next Sunday they would go out and look for a home that they might call their very own.

But up in the front chamber of a Fifth avenue mansion there sat a world weary old man, who clutched to his heart the tiny topaz cat which had brought luck to two people that night.

Ralph Braithwait did not care for the cat any more save for one thing—it's only value lay in the fact that it was his last message from a scapegrace who had died a hero's death.

THE HUSBANDS OF EDITH

By GEORGE BARR M'CUTCHEON

Copyright by Dodd, Mead & Co.

By 9 o'clock that night every one was discussing the significant disappearance of Constance Fowler and the fraudulent husband of Mrs. Medcroft. Just as Mr. Odell-Carney was preparing to announce to the unfortunate wife that the couple had eloped in the most cowardly fashion, Miss Fowler herself appeared on the scene, dishevled, mud spattered and hot, but with a look of firm determination in her face. She burst in upon her sister, a very angry young person indeed.

"Are we alone?" demanded Miss Fowler, not giving Edith time to proclaim her joy at seeing her. "Well, I've arranged a way to get him out," she went on, her lips set.

"Out?" murmured Mrs. Medcroft.

"Of course. We can't let him stay in there all night, Edith. How much money have you? Hurry up, please! Don't stare!"

"In where? Who's in where?"

"He's in jail!" with supreme scorn. "Haven't you heard?"

Mrs. Medcroft began to cry. "Mr. Brock in jail? Good heavens, what shall I do? I—I was depending on him so much. He ought to be here at this very instant. What has he been doing?"

"Edith Medcroft, stop sniffling and don't think of yourself for a while. It will do you a great deal of good. Where's your money?"

"I have a little over 4,000 crowns," Edith murmured helplessly.

"Give it me, quick. There's no time to waste. I have about 5,000 it's all in notes, thank heaven. It isn't quite enough, but I'll try to make it do. Don't stop me, Edith. I haven't time to answer questions. He's in jail, didn't you hear me say? And I love him!"

"But the—the money. Is it to bail him out with?"

"Bail? No, my dear, it's to buy him out with. Sh! Is there any one in that room? Well, then, I'll tell you something." The heads of the two sisters were quite close together. "He's in a cell at the—the prison hof, or whatever you call it in German. It's jail in English. I have arranged to bribe one of the jailers—his guard. He will let him escape for 10,000 crowns. We must do it, Edith. Then Mr. Brock will ride over the Brenner pass and catch a train somewhere before his escape is discovered. I expect to meet him in Paris day after tomorrow. Have you heard from Roxbury?"

"No!" wailed Roxbury's wife.

"He's a brute!" stormed Miss Fowler.

"Constance!" flared Mrs. Medcroft, aghast at this sign of lese majesty.

"Don't tell anybody," called Constance as she banged the door behind her.

Soon after midnight a closely veiled lady drove up to a street corner adjacent to the city prison, a dolorous looking building which loomed up still and menacing just ahead. She alighted and, dismissing the cab, strode off quickly into the side street. At a distant corner, in front of a crowded eating house, two spirited horses, saddled and in charge of a grumbling stable boy, champed noisily at their bits. The young woman exchanged a few rapid sentences with the boy and then returned in the direction from which she came. A man stepped out of a doorway as she neared the corner, accosting her with a stealthy deference that proclaimed him to be anything but an unwelcome marauder.

After eager pleading on one side and stolid expostulation on the other, a small package passed from the hand of the young woman into the huge paw of the man. The latter gave her a quick, cautious salute and hurried back toward the jail.

The veiled young woman, very nervous and strangely agitated, made her way back to the spot where the horses were standing. Making her way through the cluster of small tables which lined the inner side of the sidewalk she found one unoccupied at the extreme end, a position which commanded a view of the street down which she had just come.

Half past 1, then 2 o'clock. The merrymakers were thinning out; she was quite alone at her end of the place. By this time a close observer might have noticed that she was trembling violently; there was an air of abject fear and despair in her manner.

Why did he not come? What had happened? Had the plot failed? Was he even now lying wounded unto death as the result of his effort to escape captivity? A hundred horrid thoughts raced through her throbbing, overwrought brain. He should have been with her two hours ago—he should now be far on his way to freedom. Alas, something appalling had happened, she was sure of it!

At last there hove in sight, coming from the direction in which lay the prison, a group of three men. It was a jaunty party, evidently under the influence of many libations.

They bore down upon her. The next instant they were solemnly shaking hands with her, much to her dismay.

"Cons'ance, we've been lookin' f-fer you ever'where in town. W-where on earth 've you been?" asked Mr. Rodney thickly, with a laudable attempt at severity.

"Ever sinch 'leven o'clock, Conshance," supplemented Freddie, trying to frown.

"My dear Miss F-Fowler," began Odell-Carney in his most suave manner; "it is after 2 o'clock. In—in the morning at that. You—you shouldn't be sittin' here all 'lone thish—this hour in the morning. Please come home with us. Your mother hash—has ask us to fetch you—I mean your sister. Beg pardon."

A Small Package Passed Into the Huge Paw of the Man.

"I—I cannot go, gentlemen," she stammered. "Please don't insist—please don't ask why. I cannot go"—

"I shay, Conshance, by Jove, the joke's on you," exclaimed Freddie. "I know who 't ish you're waitin' f-for. Well, he can't come. He's locked in."

"Freddie, you are drunk!" in deep scorn.

"I know it," he admitted cheerfully. "We've looked ever'where for you. We're your frien's. He said it was at 'n eatin' house. We've been ever' eatin' house in Inchbrook. Was here first of all. Leave it to Rodney. Wassen we, Rodney? You bet we was. You wassen here at 'leven o'clock. Come on home, Conshance. 'S all right. He's safe. He can't come."

"But he will come, unless something terrible has happened to him," she almost sobbed in her desperation. "Cousin Alfred, won't you go to the jail and see what has happened?"

"Permit me," interrupted Odell-Carney with grave dignity. "Your friend, Miss Fowler, is not in jail. He is out"—

"Not in jail!" she almost shrieked. "I knew it! I knew it could not go wrong. But where is he?"

"He's out on bail. We bailed him out at half past 10—Wot!" She had leaped to her feet with a short scream and was clutching his arm frantically.

—The Paterson silk workers' strike involved a loss of five and a half million in wages, and other losses of profits from the industry and of general business in the city probably total as much more. The whole community suffers from this waste of earning and producing capacity and its consequent upset of every contingent interest, and yet there is hesitation as to the right of the public to intervene in such an industrial quarrel and protect itself. The losses of the strikers are being exploited as a warning against the foolish advice of would-be leaders, but the losses of the public need to be emphasized as pointing the necessity of measures of prevention.—Philadelphia Bulletin.

PLAN WAR TEST OF MARINE CORPS

Big Force Will Be Rushed to Cuba This Fall.

WILL PROVE READINESS.

Always Prepared For Emergency, Naval Officials Say, and Can Answer Call Within Two Hours—Philadelphia Station Considered Best Equipped For Fast Work.

While the United States marine corps has not been preparing for any particular emergency, officials now declare that that branch of the service has been made so mobile that on a few hours' notice it could start for any place its services were needed. This applies in general to the entire personnel of the corps, but more particularly to that portion stationed at Philadelphia. From that station the 1,000 marines in barracks there would be ready to take transport and sail on the shortest possible notice.

Ready on Two Hours' Notice.

So far as the men themselves are concerned, every one would be at his post with all his paraphernalia in two hours after the call came. Every man would be in line for the marine corps is the one branch of the fighting service of the nation which is filled up to the last man. Of the 9,922 marines, not counting officers, many more are stationed at Philadelphia than at any other point. At Norfolk there are almost 700, but many are recruits, not ready for service without at least ten weeks' training.

The especial preparedness of the marines at Philadelphia is due to the "advance base" training given them there. Speed is the element which enters, to a greater degree probably than any other, into this training. An hour's loss of time in reaching and holding some particularly desired strategic point in an enemy's territory or elsewhere might give the enemy an advantage which would engender weeks of hard fighting and maneuvering. For this reason the necessity of speed in answering every call is instilled by constant practice.

As to provisioning a transport to carry marines from Philadelphia, it was said that it would require some hours more than it would take the men themselves to get aboard. However, unless a call came at night, it is believed all the food needed for an extended trip could be taken aboard in considerably less than twelve hours time. Should a call come in the morning it is believed a transport could be on its way by nightfall or soon after.

Hancock to Be Transport.

A practical demonstration on a large scale of the efficiency of the new organization is soon to be made. The old army transport Hancock, for several years a naval receiving ship at New York, is being overhauled and turned into a transport. She is to be sent to Philadelphia, and some time next fall at a given signal the full resources of the "advance base" are to be called into operation.

A thousand marines are to be ordered on the transport, which will have been loaded with nonperishable food supplies, even wagons and possibly live stock, constituting a miniature army. This expedition will be rushed probably to Guantanamo. At every step the time will be taken to establish a standard for a successful landing expedition upon the shore of a hostile country.

JULY 4 LESS DANGEROUS.

Fewer Died From Celebrations This Year Than Ever Before.

Thirty-two persons died of Fourth of July celebrations this year, fewer than in any year since statisticians began recording the toll of fireworks. Figures gathered by the Journal of the American Medical association just published, compare this total to that of 466 in 1903, the first year the association counted the victims, and gave rise to the prediction that the "annual orgy of death and destruction soon will cease.

Of this year's victims, thirteen, most of them little girls, were burned to death when their clothing caught fire. Two of these accidents were caused by supposedly harmless "snapper" matches.

The nonfatal injuries this year were 1,331, as against 947 in 1912, and 3,983 in 1903.

The most notable reductions in the number of injured came from cities, where ordinances prohibiting the sale and use of fireworks are enforced. In the list, Boston, Newark, N. J., Milwaukee and Chicago appear most prominent.

The publication calls attention to the fact that more than 40 per cent of all casualties were in Pennsylvania, which reported 491 injuries, including nine deaths. Of this number 340 occurred in Philadelphia.

Made Head of Indian School.

Peru Farmer, a Choctaw Indian, has just been appointed head of the Armstrong Indian school of Oklahoma by Cato Sells, commissioner of Indian affairs. Mr. Farmer succeeds G. E. Parker, recently appointed registrar of the treasury. Mr. Parker is also a Choctaw.

TALE OF A TIGHTWAD.

Every Man Should Take to Heart the Moral It Points.

We once knew a man who was too stingy to take the newspaper in his home town and always went over to borrow his neighbor's paper.

One evening he sent his son over to borrow the paper, and while the son was on the way he ran into a large stand of bees, and in a few minutes his face looked like a summer squash.

Hearing the agonized cries of the son, the father ran to his assistance and in doing so ran into a barbed wire fence, cutting a handful of flesh from his anatomy and ruining a $4 pair of trousers.

The old cow took advantage of the hole in the fence, got into the cornfield and killed herself eating green corn. Hearing the racket, the stingy man's wife ran out of the house, upsetting a four gallon churn full of cream into a basket of kittens, drowning the whole flock. She slipped on the cream and fell downstairs, breaking her leg and a $19 set of false teeth. The baby, left alone, crawled through the spilled cream into the parlor and ruined a $40 parlor carpet. During the excitement the daughter eloped with the hired man, taking the family savings bank with them.

The moral is that every man should be a subscriber to his home newspaper. —Brooklyn Eagle.

THE GOLDEN HORSESHOE.

That Was the First Order Founded In This Country.

How many persons have ever heard of the Order of the Golden Horseshoe, the first order founded in America?

In 1724, when Virginia extended from the Atlantic into the unknown west, few of her colonists had crossed the Blue Ridge or the Alleghanies. So full of dangers from savages and wild beasts and so full of natural difficulties was the passage of these terrible heights that Governor Spotswood, setting out to discover a pass, looked on the expedition as so hazardous that he took with him a guard of "soldiers, gentlemen and pioneers," armed and carrying provisions. These scaled the pass with great hardships and perils and returned after the governor had cut the name of King George in the rocks on the highest peak.

He then constituted the society, or order, of the Golden Horseshoe. Each man who had scaled this high pass was made a member of it, and to each one he presented a golden horseshoe. On the side was inscribed in Latin, "So It Pleases Him to Cross Mountains."

Any man thereafter who could prove that he had read with his own eyes the name of the king on the height was entitled to become a member of this order.—Chicago Record-Herald.

Economical Hand Bag.

"I want you to see my lovely new shopping bag," said a certain lady to a caller the other afternoon. "My husband gave it to me for my birthday, and it's simply grand. And it's so economical! You see, you open this and there are two compartments, and you open the compartment on this side and there is a little pocket in that, and you open the little pocket and there is a cute little pocketbook for change, with one side partitioned off for street car tickets."

"I see," said the caller. "But why do you call economical?"

"Why, it takes so long to open all the things and get to your street car tickets that by the time you do whoever's with you has paid your fare."—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Reported Verbatim.

Very few speakers are precise and accurate enough to stand well in an absolutely verbatim report. I have come across a verbatim report of a wonderful question addressed by Lord Chief Justice Hyde to an accused person, writes "A Man of Kent" in the British Weekly. If any reader can make head or tail of it I should like to hear from him. Here is the question:

"You took a man in the dark by the throat, that man that was guilty of such a thing, as when that you did let him go to call his companions to bring the money, bring fellows to you single; I would be glad to know whether in this case they would not have knocked you on the head and killed you."

Running No Risk.

"What," asks the maiden aunt, "going to marry that Mr. Newwun? Why, you hardly know the man, Imogene. In the few days you have been acquainted with him you cannot possibly have learned anything of his family or antecedents or habits or personal circumstances."

"That is true, Aunt Keturah. But you have always told me that no woman who knows anything about a man will marry him."

A Genius.

"Oh, doctor, I feel so discouraged—whooping cough, measles, mumps and croup, one after the other, and now my child is ill again!"

"Why, the boy's a genius!"

"A genius?"

"Yes—infinite capacity for taking pains, you know."—London Tit-Bits.

Soft.

"Should a man shave up or down?" asked a youthful clerk, and the barber replied with a grin:

"That depends. When I shave you, for instance, I always shave down."

Encouragement.

Jack—I am afraid that if I ask you to be my wife you will treat my proposal as a joke. Molly—But all jokes are not rejected, Jack.

HISTORIC QUINCY.

City of Presidents Has Much of Interest

Old historic Quincy settled in 1625 has much of interest to visitors When Braintree was incorporated in 1640, the territory now known as Quincy, was a part. In 1792 Quincy became an independent town, and in 1888 was incorporated as a city.

Quincy was named in honor of Col John Quincy, descendant in the third generation from Edmund, 2d, who settled in Quincy, in 1634; grand-father of Abigail (Smith) Adams, the wife and mother of a President of the United States.

The city includes Wollaston, Atlantic, Quincy Point, South Quincy, West Quincy, Montclair, Norfolk Downs, Wollaston Park, Squantum, Houghs Neck, Adams Shore, Germantown and Quincy Neck, comprising in all over 16 square miles, of which 2,530 acres are in public parks.

Birthplaces of Presidents.

Birthplace of John Adams, the first Vice President and second President of the United States, Franklin street Quincy Adams house built in 1681 and restored in 1897 by Adams Chapter, Daughters of the Revolution. Open to public. Admission charged.

Birthplace of John Quincy Adams the sixth President of the United States, junction of Franklin street Presidents road and Independence avenue. Built 1716, restored 1896 by the Quincy Historical Society. Open to public afternoons from 2 to 5. Admission charged.

Abigail Adams Cairn.

Penns Hill, erected June 17, 1896 by Adams Chapter, Daughters of the Revolution, to the memory of Abigail Adams, who with her son, John Quincy, from the spot watched the smoke of battle at Bunker Hill. Cairn composed of many historic stones, the corner stone being part of the old sleeper of first railroad in United States which ran from Quincy quarries to tide water, Neponset river.

Burial Place of Presidents.

First Congregational Church (Unitarian) at Quincy centre. In auditorium each side of high pulpit, are mural monuments, to the memory of John Adams, the second president, and John Quincy Adams, the sixth president of the United States, and their wives. The funeral of John Quincy Adams was held in this church. Beneath the entrance is the Adams tomb reached by stairways from the vestibule. Near the tomb is the box in which was brought from Washington the body of John Quincy Adams, also the old town hearse.

NOT APPREHENDED.

The Worcester police have not apprehended the Finn who assaulted Rev. John E. Lillback of Quincy in that city Sept. 2, and are of the opinion that the man is outside of the city. A description has been furnished police circles. The man recently finished a long sentence for stabbing another Finn and when arrested will be charged with assault with a dangerous weapon since he brandished a knife and slashed the clothing of Rev. Mr. Lillback in several places.

The atack which was made in the home of his mother was not the first that has been directed against Rev. Mr. Lillback. Several years ago, while preaching against rabid socialism at Maynard he was suddenly covered with revolvers and it was only because he challenged his enemies that they refrained from firing on him.

WATERHOUSE—BRIGHAM.

Mr. Frank Porter Waterhouse and Mrs. Alice Dunbar (Poole) Brigham were united in marriage Saturday afternoon at 5 o'clock at the residence of Tyler Brigham at 5 Lincoln avenue. There were no attendants to the bridal couple. Both are well known at Wollaston.

There is more Catarrh in this section of the country than all other diseases put together, and until the last few years was supposed to be incurable. For a great many years doctors pronounced it a local disease and prescribed local remedies, and by constantly failing to cure local treatment, pronounced it incurable. Science has proven catarrh to be a constitutional disease and therefore requires constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, Ohio, is the only constitutional cure on the market. It is taken internally in doses from 10 drops to a teaspoonful. GOFFE STREET PEOPLE ARE DIVIDED

City Council Give Hearing on Changing Name to Presidents Lane

Order Adopted for Restraint of Dogs for 90 Days

The first regular meeting of the City Council since the adjournment for the summer last June was held Monday evening, and although there was considerable business, the meeting was not of long duration.

The hearing on changing of the name of Goffe street to Presidents lane developed quite an opposition and after the hearing the petition was referred to the Street Committee where it will be thrashed out.

One of the important matters to come up was the report of the special committee appointed to investigate the Fire Department. This committee held a large number of meetings and practically every member of the department was before them. The committee as will be seen by its report printed elsewhere found nothing vitally wrong with the department, showing that many of the street complaints were unfounded and were probably started by sore heads or someone who had an axe to grind.

A large number of communications were received from the Mayor on various matters and considerable new business was introduced.

Councilmen Bryant, Cunningham and Johnson were absent.

TRANSFER WANTED.

The City Auditor asked for a transfer of $60 to his department for office expenses. Laid on the table until later when Councilman Bailey offered the necessary order which was referred to the Finance Committee.

COMMUNICATIONS

A communication was received from the Mayor appointing William R. Cole as clerk in Ward Six precinct one in place of Cephas Drew declined. Confirmed.

The Mayor forwarded a communication from the Assessors asking $184 for extra clerical and $100 for miscellaneous. Laid on the table until later when Councilman Bailey offered the necessary orders making the transfer. Referred to Finance Committee.

A communication was received from the Mayor appointing Charles A. Stecher as a measurer of leather. Confirmed.

COUNCILMAN RESIGNS.

President Whiton read a communication from Councilman Cunningham resigning as a member of the City Council. Councilman Little offered a resolve accepting the resignation and declaring the seat vacant. Adopted.

DOGS IN RESTRAINT.

The Mayor forwarded the following communication from the Board of Health relative to dogs.

"We respectfully represent to you the following condition, an epidemic in hydrophobia has broken out among the animals in the city and has already been transmitted to some of our inhabitants, and almost daily dogs are being found afflicted with hydrophobia. That we in meeting today have voted that the Mayor and City Council be requested to have in restraint or under leash for a period of ninety days all dogs in this city. Laid on the table until later when Councilman Gilliatt offered the necessary order. Adopted.

WATER METERS.

The Mayor forwarded a communication from the Commissioner asking for the transfer from the appropriation for water maintenance of $1,500 for the purchase and installation of meters. Laid on the table until later when Councilman Sandberg offered an order for that amount. Referred to Finance Committee.

CLEANING BROOKS.

The Mayor forwarded communication from the Board of Health asking for an appropriation of $200 for cleaning brooks. Referred to Finance Committee.

PETITIONS.

President Whiton said that he had received a letter from Houghs Neck complaining about the express service and had received a second letter stating that the complaint had been rectified. Placed on file.

A petition was received for three street lights on Bellevue park. Referred to the Executive.

A number of petitions were received from the Telephone Co. for attachments which were granted.

The Electric Light Co. petitioned for a relocation for poles. Laid on the table until later when Councilman Beeman offered an order for a public hearing Sept. 15. Adopted.

Applications to keep gasoline were received from the Fore River Shipbuilding Corporation and from Louis K. Badger . Laid on the table until later, when Councilman Gilliatt offered orders for public hearings Sept.15 Adopted.

Several applications for minor licenses were received and referred to the License Committee.

A public hearing was held at 8 o'clock on petition of the Gas Co. to lay mains. Mr. Nichols stated that the locations were desired to supply customers.

There was no opposition and the hearing closed. Laid on the table until later, when Councilman Beeman offered on order granting the locations, which was ordered to a second reading.

BUCKLEY CLAIM.

The Finance Committee reported ought to pass on the order appropriating $416 to settle expense of the Katherine Buckley claim. Rules suspended and order passed.

GARBAGE HOUSE.

The Finance Committee reported ought to pass on the order appropriating $1,000 for a new garbage house. Rules suspended and order passed.

FIRE DEPARTMENT.

The Special Committee appointed to investigate the Fire Department made a lengthy report which was accepted. The report will be found in full in another column.

GOFFE STREET

A public hearing was held at 8.15 on changing the name of Goffe street to Presidents lane.

George E. Pfaffmann spoke in favor He said the idea was to correct an error made a number of years ago. One part of the street was originally known as Presidents lane, but when the street was extended the name was changed to Goffe street. He had seen some letters published in a local paper against changing the name but the majority of the residents on the street desired the name changed. He should judge about ninety per cent. He failed to find any evidence that Goffe ever resided in Quincy. Personally he liked to believe in the legend of William Tell and others but that aout Gen. Goffe was mythical.

Mr. Pfaffmann read a letter from Charles Francis Adams in which he said that he did not think Goffe ever lived in Quincy, if so it must have been in a shack. The original name of the

KICKING OVER A LAZY JOB

Socialist Who Had a Snap at Shipyard

Employees and others at the Fore River shipyard have been amused at the comments of M. C. Harrison who "worked" there a few weeks this summer. Young Harrison is a Socialist from Nebraska who entered Harvard law school in 1912. His article appeared in one of the Sunday papers and told of different jobs he has had since June. He certainly cannot complain of any hardships in Quincy. Only a part is reprinted. He says:

"On Monday morning, July 14, I was in the market again for a chance to earn an honest penny. After the miscarriage of several plans—one as a freight handler on the Portland boat dock of the Eastern Steamship Corporation and another as a ditch digger in a Medford sewer gang, I finally secured a place at the Fore River ship works in Quincy.

"During the first week I was occupied as a clerk in the rivet sub-store. There were four of us working as clerks in this substore. We had to weigh out the proper amount of rivets to the riveters as they came there with requisition slips. It was not difficult. Two of us could easily have done all that was required except for the rush hour, when work commenced in the morning.

"We began at 7.45 and quit at 4.15, with a half-hour off at noon for lunch The pay was 20 cents per hour, which made it $9.60 per week. After subtracting 22 cents carfare per day, the remaining amount was not large enough to cause any embarrassment as to how we could spend all our wealth.

"It was very interesting to hear the other clerks talk to the Syrian riveters. With typical American contempt for the foreigner, they would shower a volley of curses upon them at the least provocation. Indeed, the variety of expression and vigor of emphasis with which they condemned these riveters to eternal punishment would have done credit to the most capable old salts. And it was evident that the Syrians (who were all said to belong to the I. W. W.) felt that these young autocratic clerks represented the hated plutocratic powers behind them, and resented their attitude accordingly.

"I was told that these Syrians were absolutely untrustworthy and inveterate liars. However that may be, their vices were evidently the vices of crudity and not of decadence. The faces of the majority were most striking in showing evidence of great innate strength and ability. In fact, if the illustrator of fashion plates wished to find the originals for those faces which are supposed to represent ideal American manhood, in their square lines and keen angularity, he could not do much worse than to come and study the features of some of these Syrian men.

During the second week, beginning with July 28, I was shifted from the rivet substore to a telephone booth on the deck of one of the boats being built by the Fore River Cororation. It was an oil steamer and was lying just beyond the Rivadavia, the Argentine battleship which has just sailed on its trial trip. This little booth—just barely large enough to sit down in—was connected to the main storehouse, so that the workmen could bring their requisition slips to me and have them phoned in to the storehouse. The articles were then sent down to the boat and delivered to the men.

"It was the most perfect lazy man's job that I have ever seen. On the first day I had seven orders to phone in—a matter o ften minutes' work for the whole day. This number gradually increased until at the end I had 11 orders as my high record. However I brought out some books, and Tuesday read Benson's "The Truth About Socialism" and later Hugo's "Les Miserables." The reading of both books was immensely worth while—but it was a new sensation to be paid at the rate of $1.60 per day for reading them.

"The general conclusion from what I saw here was again that the much vaunted efficiency of private enterprise was not so apparent as might be expected. Nor was I judging by the matter of the phone job, which was such a lazy man's delight. That was a new departure, and as soon as the system is perfected will undoubtedly be a great time saver. Though based on a very superficial acquaintance with affairs, such facts as I did gather brought me to this conclusion."

LONG SWIM BY TWO MEN

From Ward Two Bathhouse to North Weymouth

Sunday afternoon, although the temperature of the water was icy in some places being as low as 58 degrees, four well known Quincy young men tried the swim from the public bathhouse at Quincy Point, to North Weymouth. James Sullivan, James Flaherty, Edward Berman and Tom Wood accompanied by a rowboat started from the bathhouse at 3.45. Sullivan made the swim, a distance of over two miles in 55 minutes, and Flaherty reached the goal five minutes later. Berman was caught with a cramp in the right leg near the Street Railway power house and after attempting to swim with it was taken from the water, having traversed about three-fourths of the distance. Wood dropped out from exhaustion when only about three-eighths of the way had been made.

James Flaherty made a very plucky finish. He was caught with a cramp about a quarter of a mile from North Weymouth and, refusing all suggestions for help swam with the pain still in his leg and finally reached his destination. Probably much better time would have been made by all the swimmers had it not been for the coldness of the water and the air. The last quarter mile was swum in a light, but cold rain. After the swim all four were rowed back to the bathhouse which was kept open for them through the courtesy of Attendant Starr.

FUNERAL OF MRS. AMET.

The funeral of Mrs. Emily Amet of West Quincy, widow of Charles N. Amet whose sudden death was a shock to her many friends, was held Monday morning from her home on Willard street with a large attendance of relatives and friends. For two months Mrs. Amet suffered with diabetes and she never recovered from a sudden turn on Thursday. A high mass of requiem was celebrated at St. Mary's church by Rev. Fr. William Keenan and burial was in St. Mary's cemetery.

Mrs. Amet who before her marriage was Emily De Labrude was born in France, July 11, 1865. She came to West Quincy in 1887, and afterward removed to Barre, Vt. She returned to Quincy two years ago and has made her home on Willard street.

The pall bearers were Thomas Bouteon, Fellas Stone, Joseph Gosslen, Esrale Ladree. Among the floral tributes were a wreath from the children, a standing cross from Miss Sophie DeCoste, a large pillow from the employees of the Rice and Hutchins South Braintree factory, and a standing wreath from William J. McGinnes.

She is survived by three children, Mr. Ottie M. Lewis, Miss Emma M. Amet and Joseph C. Amet.

REV. SILAS B. DUFFIELD.

Rev. Silas B. Duffield, formerly of Quincy died Aug. 30 at Hingham centre. Rev. Mr. Duffield was born in Hingham and after his course of theological studies was ordained deacon in 1863 and made priest the next year by Bishop Williams. He had been retired from active parochial work for some time, and had made his home in Hingham. He was at one time a member of the Quincy City Council, and later a rector of St. Thomas Episcopal church at Somerville. He has supplied at Christ church.

MANY RECOMMENDATIONS FOR FIRE DEPARTMENT

Special Committee of City Council Find Most of Charges Without Foundation

Present Standard of Efficiency in Department Good

The present standard of the Quincy Fire Department in efficiency, discipline and clerical administration is good, says the special committee of the City Council which for months has been making an investigation. The committee included Councilmen Richards, Griffin, Little, Boyd and Duffy. In their report to the City Council this week they make several recommendations. The report is printed in full:

Quincy, Mass., Sept. 8, 1913.

To the President of the City Council:

Your committee, which was appointed to investigate the present condition of the Fire Department of the City of Quincy, having investigated and considered the same, beg leave to submit the following report and recommendations.

Your committee endeavored to get a complete and thorough understanding of the Fire Department, and to find if any of the charges and criticisms that have been heard from various citizens had any foundation in fact.

We find, as is most always the case with charges and complaints, that the most of these charges are without foundation. But our inquiries and investigation have brought out the facts that while the present standard of efficiency, discipline and clerical administration of the Fire Department is good, we believe from the knowledge gained that the efficiency of the department can be raised to a higher standard, and to that end we offer the following recommendations:

The present system of turning over the fines of call members to the Firemen's Relief Association is done without authority, and we believe and recommend that the City Treasurer should be authorized to hold these receipts until they are disposed of by the City Council each year.

The number of times that hydrants have been found out of commission when called into use at fires during the past few years is a matter that should be taken up by the Executive. We would recommend a greater care of hydrants and a prompt notification to the Fire Department when a hydrant is temporarily out of order.

The abuse of apparatus, which is the property of the citizens of Quincy, has been the cause of much criticism in our city. We recommend that Section 13 of Ordinance No. 1 of the City of Quincy be enforced more strictly.

In order to increase the fire-fighting force, upon the arrival of apparatus at fires, we recommend that all apparatus slack up for callmen on the way to fires, and that the system used by District Chief Nyhan of Atlantic be carried out throughout the city. That is: have all callmen learn the routes taken to all boxes by the apparatus and to appoint places on different routes to meet apparatus.

We find that there have been occas-

There is great consternation among the sporting writers of Chicago now that the readers of one paper have decided to have baseball written up in the English language.

There has been some inquiry as to what has become of the old fashioned man who used to wear a cabbage leaf in his hat in hot weather. Probably he quit because it kept dropping out when he tipped his hat to women friends.

THE USE OF SLANG.

The baseball reporters have a lingua franca of their own, which to them appears the limit of wit, humor, and originality. They were much surprised therefore a few days ago when a Chicago paper, having polled its readers, announced that they preferred baseball news written in plain English.

The tendency of the educated world is toward formality of expression. Cultured persons feel safer in the company of decorous words of ancient pedigree and guaranteed associations. The tendency of the every-day world is toward the short cut.

A great many uneducated people often excel cultured persons in a gift for using what might be called "picture words," phrases that suggest in a graphic manner a picture of things seen or heard. These tendencies create a multitude of new expressions, often mere linguistic driftwood. But some of these have real vitanity.

The expression "joy-riding" for instance. It not merely conveys the idea of exaggerated speed, but it pictures the exuberance and exhileration of the speeder. The expression "make good" will become permanent because it is a short cut. Two words do the work of a dozen.

In baseball writing, the expression "fanned" is good, because it is a picture word, not merely telling a fact, but drawing a picture of the inexpert futility of the batter. But when the reporter calls the ball the "pill," he neither has invented a short cut, nor has he found a more expressive phrase. He is merely trying to be funny. In the race for originality, he frequently becomes unintelligible. The baseball public likes a racy and glowing story, but it is tired of words it doesn't understand and of posing.

DECLARES BOTH SIDES GREEDY

Real Cause of Coal Strike, Says Bishop Donahue

WORKMEN ARE COMFORTABLE

But They Will Not Be Satisfied Until They Own Mines—Prices In Company Stores Far Above the Market—Bible and Beatitudes Suggested as a Remedy

Washington, Sept. 9.—Greed of coal operators, as well as of miners, was the fundamental cause of the West Virginia strike, Bishop Donahue, Roman Catholic, of Wheeling, told the senate investigating committee.

He gave, as one instance of greed, the exorbitant prices in company stores, from 15 to 25 percent above the market. The bishop was a member of a commission that investigated conditions on Paint and Cabin creeks. He was agreeably surprised by the living conditions of the miners.

"Of course, we found no Turkish rugs, but we did find fairly comfortable workingmen's homes," said the prelate.

"Were the men contented?" asked Senator Kenyon.

"I can best answer in the words of Witness Griffith, who said the men would not be satisfied until they owned the mines."

Coming to the cause of the strike the bishop quoted a line from the Psalms—"The rich man fluants his wealth and sets the poor man on fire," and declared it applied to the situation in West Virginia. He added that infidelity had been taught to the miners; that they had been taught that the saying: "The poor we have with us always" was a farce, and that the miners had just as much a right to automobiles and to live in Kanawha street as the coal operators.

Senator Martine asked Donahue if labor unions were not organized, in his opinion, for the good of the members. The bishop hesitated until the question was repeated, then said: "That may be one reason; another is to furnish fat salaries to officials."

Attorney Monnett, also for the miners, asked if the bishop thought gatling guns, armored cars and bloodhounds were some of the things that set the souls of the miners on fire.

The bishop responded that he considered the use of those weapons best governed by the common law, which allowed the use of guns when the user was "backed to the wall." The bishop denied having come to Washington at the request of the coal operators to protest against former Immigration Commissioner O'Keefe stopping immigrants going to West Virginia mines because the mines were not unionized. The bishop declared he came on his own volition.

The bishop denied that, either individually or officially, he was interested in West Virginia coal lands or mines.

Senator Martine asked the bishop what he would do to remedy conditions if he had the power.

"First of all I would require both operators and miners to go to church twice every Sunday," said the bishop. "I would give each a Bible as a steering chart, and then give them about eight beatitudes and make them hang two or three in their bedrooms, such as 'Blessed are the poor in spirit' and 'Blessed are the meek.' Those would cause them to forget to use the machine guns."

STOP KILLING CALVES

How 11,200,000,000 Pounds Might Be Added to Our Beef Supply

Washington, Sept. 9.—The conservation of calves as a means of lowering the high cost of living is a plan formulated by Representative Britten of Illinois, who has been investigating the scarcity of beef cattle and the consequent high cost of meat.

Britten introduced a bill to prevent the killing of calves and to insure an increase in the meat supply. The measure would make a misdemeanor the shippment in interstate commerce of cattle killed under two years of age.

"In 1911," said Britten, "eight billion calves were slaughtered. If these calves had been allowed to live for two years and allowing 1100 pounds pounds as an average weight for a 2-year-old cow or steer, they would have produced 11,200,000,000 pounds of beef to supply the scarcity we now feel."

Near Death In Hunger Strike

Cleveland, Sept. 9.—Mrs. Margaret Carter, alleged "Black Hand" letter writer, is near death today in the county jail as a result of her six-day hunger strike.

JEROME IS ACQUITTED

Court Apologizes For Humiliation Which He Suffered

Coaticook, Que., Sept. 9.—William T. Jerome suavely faced an angry crowd in the courtroom here last night when he appeared on the charge of gambling on the railway station property and was acquitted by Judge Mulvena, who apologized to him for the humiliation to which he had been subjected.

There was no mistaking the bitter feeling of the crowd against him. They filled every inch of space in the little courtroom, but made no effort to disturb the New York lawyer, whom they look upon as the nemesis of Harry Thaw, as he left the room.

When acquitted Jerome thanked the court and said he did not attribute his arrest and brief imprisonment last week to the thinking people of the dominion. He took a late train from Coaticook for New York and will return to Montreal for the arguments on the latest Thaw habeas corpus writ to be heard before the king's bench, Montreal, on Sept. 15.

FREED OF MANSLAUCTER

Charge Against English Christian Scientist Is Not Proven

London, Sept. 9.—The point whether the father is guilty of manslaughter following the death of his child if he relies solely on the services of a Christian Science practitioner during a serious illness was decided in the affirmative by Justice Rowlatt in the central criminal court.

A verdict of manslaughter was returned by a coroner's jury against Benjamin Jewell, whose 7-year-old daughter died from diphtheria while undergoing Christian Science treatment. Jewell pleaded not guilty, declaring he was not aware that the child was suffering from diphtheria.

Rowlatt directed the jury to acquit Jewell on the ground of insufficient evidence, but he admonished Jewell to be more careful in the future, saying: "If the case had been proved I certainly would have passed a heavy sentence, Christian Science or no Christian Science."

EIGHT CONVICTS SMOTHER IN CELL

Negligent Homicide Charged Against Prison Officials

Harlem, Tex., Sept. 9.—Eight negro convicts, confined in the "dark cell" of camp No. 3 on the state farm here, were suffocated and four others are seriously ill from the effects of breathing foul air resulting from poor ventilation.

Negligent homicide formally was charged against Sergeant Wheeler and two guards following a coroner's investigation. They gave bond.

The "dark cell" has been used as a means of discipline since whipping was abolished. The cell is about 10 feet long, 7 feet wide and 7 feet high. Ventilation is supplied by ten air holes, each one inch in diameter.

MAY BE SENT BACK

Landing of Mrs. Pankhurst In United States Is Uncertain

Washington, Sept. 9.—Before Mrs. Emmeline Pankhurst, leader of the British militant suffragists, can be admitted to the United States the immigration authorities will decide whether any of the acts for which she has been imprisoned in England constitute moral turpitude within the meaning of the law and make her an undesirable alien.

She will be detained at whatever port she lands, but whether eventually she may be permitted to enter cannot be foretold. Officials of the department of labor now are seeking all obtainable information concerning the British suffragist's militant activities that may have a legal bearing upon her right to admission to the United States.

FOR FRAUD CONSPIRACY

Publisher and Subscription Manager Are Fined $1000 Each

Boston, Sept. 9.—For making false statements to the postoffice department relative to the subscriptions of their paper, Herbert Myrick and James M. Cunningham, president and subscription manager, respectively, of the Orange Judd North West Homestead, published in Springfield, were each fined $1000 by Judge Morton in the United States district court.

The charge was conspiracy to defraud the postoffice department.

A stay of sentence, pending an appeal to the circuit court of appeals, was asked by counsel for the defendants, and was granted by Morton.

Tabby Chooses Queer Place to Give Birth to Four Kittens

Rochester, N. Y., Sept. 9.—A mail bag from New York city, opened in the Rochester postoffice, was found to contain under the mail matter a cat and four newly born kittens.

The mother of the quartet was nearly dead, but was resuscitated with a saucer of milk. All of the kittens were alive and apparently uninjured.

HAVE A "BLACK BOOK" AS GUIDE

Chinese Criminals Sought by Immigration Officials

THEIR SECRETS REVEALED

Show That White Slavery and Opium Smuggling Is Carried on In Many Cities by Means of "Underground Railway"—White Wife of Murdered Restaurant Man Is Grilled

Chicago, Sept. 9.—Through the revelations made in the "black book" seized in a raid on a Chinese resort in Chicago, immigration officials have planned to follow a trail leading through the Chinatowns of a score of American cities in the search for a band of oriental criminals, whose business is the entrapping of young white girls and the smuggling of opium and Chinese into this country.

Acting under orders from Washington immigration officers here went into conference with police officials who accidentally found the "black book" while raiding the resort of George Norn, a Chinaman, wanted in connection with the murder of Charles Sing, wealthy restaurant man.

Frank Moy, mayor of Chicago's Chinatown, offered his services to the government officials and police in deciphering the book, and promised to obtain the co-operation of leading orientals in the cities along the path of the "underground railway," as indicated by the list in the book.

From Alice Sing, the young white wife of the murdered restaurant keeper, the federal authorities and police believe they will obtain further valuable information. They are satisfied that she was on friendly terms with Norn, and that when she makes a detailed statement she will reveal some of the processes by which the gang of Chinese white slavers and smugglers worked.

"Society should step in and prevent young white girls from wrecking their lives by attempting to Christianize orientals who know nothing and care nothing of our God," declared Henry Davis, Kansas City railroad detective, standing beside the cot of his daughter, Mrs. Sing, while the police were grilling her.

"The Elsie Siegal case wasn't enough," said Davis. "Foolish girls forget in a month—and careless parents, I'm afraid, too. Every state in the union should pass laws that would prohibit a white girl from ever crossing a Chinaman's threshold."

Contents of a suit case found in the home of Charles Sing and known to belong to a friend of the victim's white wife, formed an important development in the efforts of the police to solve the puzzling crime. The satchel was found in a room adjoining the one where Sing was found dead and its owner, who is said to have been an admirer of Mrs. Sing, is being sought by the police.

Mrs. Sing holds to her story that her husband was murdered by two strange men who entered the house through a window while she and her husband were asleep.

GIRL CUT UP ALIVE

Hudson River Being Dragged For Missing Head and Limbs

New York, Sept. 9.—The body of a young woman, one part of which was picked up last Saturday and another Monday, at widely separated places on the New Jersey shore of the Hudson river, was dismembered while the victim still lived, according to the report of the autopsy made by Dr. King, county physician of Hudson county, New Jersey.

The absence of the head made it impossible, King said, to determine whether the murderer or murderers had stunned the victim with a blow or resorted to the use of an anesthetic. The Hudson river for several miles along the New Jersey side is being dragged for the head and limbs of the body.

CAUGHT ON A CROSSING

Train Hits Automobile and Instantly Kills Man and Wife

South Norwalk, Conn., Sept. 9.—Mr. and Mrs. Addison T. Millar of Silver Mine, a suburb, were instantly killed when an express on the New Haven road struck their automobile at a grade crossing.

Their daughter, Dorothy, 15, and a friend, Jessie Guthrie, 18, who were also in the machine, are badly cut and bruised and internal injuries are feared. Physicians entertain but slight hopes for Miss Guthrie's recovery. Millar was a landscape artist.

Fall River, Mass., Sept. 9.—Two weeks ago an operative in the Barnard mill at a salary of $8 a week, today heir to a fortune of $23,000, is the situation in which Hugh Mayor of this city figures as the chief character. Mayor received word from London that his uncle, a wealthy sheep owner in Australia, has died, naming the mill worker as the principal beneficiary in his will.

FATAL ACCIDENT.

Benjamin F. Seeley, a former resident and son of Mrs. Maria Chubbuck of Germantown, received fatal injuries in a fall from an electric light pole in Boston, Monday morning and died shortly after at the Boston City Hospital. He was 45 years of age and leaves a wife and family.

Seeley, who was employed by the Edison Electric Light Co., was at work on a pole at Harrison avenue and Eustis street, Roxbury, when he received a slight shock and it is believed lost his balance. He fell to the sidewalk, 20 feet below, fracturing his skull and died at the hospital where he was taken in the ambulance of station 9. One side of his face was burned. It is said that this was the third fatal accident on the pole within the past two years.

Seeley was employed as a lineman by the Quincy Electric Light and Power Co. and lived in this city up to a few months ago. He was popular among the other employees and was well known here.

A PATHETIC CASE.

The pathtic story of the Braintree girl who collapsed on Franklin street and later gave birth to a child at the Quincy City Hospital has never before been equalled in this city. The child died soon after. She told the authorities that Monday morning she was forced from home, and thinking that she would be admitted to a maternity hospital at Boston she went to that city. At two hospitals she learned she could not be accepted because there was no room and after seeking in vain for a refuge she came to Quincy to consult with local physicians. She called at the offices of two, and both told her they could give her no assistance, and desperate in mind and body she started to walk to Braintree, where she thought that the love of a mother for a child would come to her rescue. When notified, Overseer Elcock and City Physician Ash rendered aid.

BIRD CLUB OUTING.

The annual outing of the Bird club which was announced to take place on Thursday has been postponed until Friday, as some of those who desire to attend can not get away Thursday. The party will be somewhat larger this year than usual and for this reason the auxiliary sloop of Councilman Sandberg will be used. The party will leave Bakers Yacht basin at 9 o'clock and steam out into Boston harbor at an eight knot gait until Boston Light is reached. There anchors will be thrown overboard and the club will tempt the fish with some attractive bait. After a few hours fishing a landing will be made near Weymouth Back river where dinner will be served.

DANIEL McCARTHY DEAD.

Daniel McCarthy, a former resident of Quincy, died at Sharon on Sunday, aged about 60 years. He was a well known contractor and set many of the heavy concrete foundations in and around Boston. Among the contracts executed was the foundation of the power house of the Bay State Street Railway Co. on the bank of the Fore river. While here Mr. McCarthy lived on School street. He was well known in Quincy and had many friends who regreted his departure for Sharon about 13 years ago. He leaves a widow and two children, Margaret and John.

JUNIOR MOOSE.

After a susfension of meetings during the summer, the Junior Order of Moose gathered at Protection hall, Monday evening and opened its fall season. Three candidates were elected and three members were transferred to the senior lodge. Conspicuous at the meeting was the immense Moose head which has been returned from a taxidermist's where it was being repaired. The head was damaged a few days after it was presented to the lodge. The members are considering a dance early in the season.

VALUATION BOOKS SOON

Will Give Assessed Value of All Property in City

The long expected but long delayed Valuation books of the assessed property of Quincy for 1912 are expected at City Hall this week or next. Only a limited number were ordered, an edition of 500, and may soon be exhausted. It is suggested that those interested in the subject of taxation should make early application in writing to the Assessors. Not since the city was incorporated in 1888 has the valuation list been printed, probably not since 1875. It is important that assessments should be equitable, and the books will be perused with interest.

GOFFE ST. PEOPLE DIVIDED

street was Presidents lane. Mr. Adams also expressed his displeasure at the way historic names had been misplaced in Quincy in naming streets.

Continuing, Mr. Pfaffmann said that it was true there was a Presidents avenue in South Quincy but he did not think this would cause any confusion.

No one else appeared in favor.

In opposition the first speaker was Richard D. Chase. He desired to enter his protest against the change. He had signed the petition because he did not like to appear offish. Now, however, he desired to withdraw his name from the petition. The street has been called Goffe street for many years and was so recorded in land titles. He also had found that several had had signed the petition under the same conditions which he had. We have plenty of historic names, for we have Adams street, Adams shore, Adams Academy and Adams Square but the name of Goffe has no duplicate, and he could see no reason to take the name out of the directory. He had lived on the street for 37 years and unless there was some good reason he should object to the name being changed.

Councilman Duffy asked if he believed the name of an outlaw should be perpetuated in Quincy.

Mr. Chase replied that Gen. Goffe was a patriot. He would advise that before the council made up its mind that it should read history, and if they did so they would not be ashamed of the name Goffe.

Carle R. Hayward opposed for the same reasons as did Mr. Chase. He could see no reason for it. The first part of the street was Presidents lane, but that was only a small portion of it. The name Goffe is written in titles to land and should be retained. There was no reason why Gen. Goffe should not be honored. He was an honest gentleman and a patriot and he was proud to live on a street bearing his name.

Edward B. Marsh represented an estate that had bordered on Goffe street for a hundred years. He had remembered it as Goffe street ever since he could remember anything, and he wanted to protest against its name being changed. He could not see how anyone would me benefited by the change.

Joseph A. Sedgwick could see no reason for the change. He had lived on the street for ten years. If it will bring any illumination to the street let it be changed. If it is going to be changed he would suggest the name of "Paradise avenue," or if one had occasion to use the street at night as he did they would suggest the name of "Spoon avenue." He hoped before changed the Council would consider these names.

Letters remonstrating were also received from Wilson Marsh and from Charles Hatch.

The hearing then closed and the petition was referred to Committee on Streets.

SALARY INCREASE

Councilman Boyd offered on order amending the Fire Department ordinances so as to increase the pay of the men as follows: Captain and superintendent of fire alarm from $1,100 to $1,200; Lieutenant from $1,050 to $1,150, and the pay of the permanent men $2.75 per day for the first two years, and $3.00 per day thereafter. Substitute firemen $2.75 per day when detailed. Referred to Ordinance Committee.

MORE LIGHT

Councilman Hadlock offered an order for two lights on Conant road. Referred to Executive.

Councilman Duffy offered an order for a street light on Sixth avenue. Referred to Executive.

Councilman Devaney offered an order for a light on Bent place. Referred to Executive.

BOSTON SEWER.

Councilman Richards offered a resolve for a special committee of three to act with a like committee of the Board of Trade and Squantum Improvement association relative to abating the sewer nuisance at Squantum. Adopted. President Whiton appointed Councilmen Hadlock, Beeman and Sandberg.

JUNK ORDINANCE.

Councilman Duffy asked why the Committee on Ordinances had not reported on the ordinance relative to storing junk. The committee had been considering the matter since last May and it was time it reported.

Chairman Gilliatt replied that this matter involved a number of legal questions and had been referred to the legal department and the City Solicitor had not reported.

City Solicitor McAnarney said the matter had slipped his mind. He had received a number of matters from the committee and supposed that he had reported on all of them. The blame therefore for the delay was on him.

The committee were given further time.

WOODWARD FUND.

President Whiton at this point appointed Councilman Thompson, Ross and Gilliatt as the special committee to investigate the Woodward Fund and Property as required by the Ordinances.

BUILDING ORDINANCE.

Councilman Gilliatt offered an order amending the Building Ordinance relative to three story buildings. Referred to Ordinance.

TO DRAIN SWAMP.

Councilman Thompson offered an order appropriating $1,500 to improve the water course under Coddington street to the canal. Referred to Committee on Health.

STREET ORDINANCE.

In the calendar the order establishing an ordinance regulating speaking on public streets and public parades took its second reading and was passed.

Adjourned at 9.20 until next Monday, Sept. 15.

During the meeting of the Council the Presidents platform resembled a large flower garden for George F. Elcock had presented a large number of his 157 varieties of dahlias and they added a pretty bit of color to the scene. After the meeting it was found that the several bouquets contained tags for their disposition. One went to the Mayor while others went to President Whiton, Councilman Richards and others.

OFFICERS REPRIMANDED.

Sergt. John T. Larkin, while at Hancock and Granite streets this morning heard the burglar alarm on the Granite Trust Co., ringing violently and immediately footed across to the bank to investigate. He found that workmen who were repairing the wires were responsible for its release. After receiving the thanks of the officials he went to City Square where he met three officers who had likewise heard the alarm sound, but proceeded on their way. He reprimanded the officers and said it was their duty to investigate such incidents, stating that the possibility always exists that the services of an officer is needed. According to Sergt. Larkin the pressing of a button sounds the bell and that alone was sufficient reason why an officer should immediately answer its summons.

BILLIARD BALLS STOLEN.

The police expect to apprehend the party who forced his way into St. Mary's hall, the home of the St. Mary's C. T. A. & M. R. Society and stole a set of billiards balls valued at $50. The break was discovered Friday evening and promptly reported to the police. No public announcement was made but it is generally known amongst the members.

MYSTERY FLAGS.

Trophies That Are Souvenirs of Long Forgotten Battles.

In the midst of that wonderful collection of the souvenirs of battle that are on permanent exhibition in Trophy hall at the Naval academy in Annapolis are the nation's unknown trophies. Flags that were captured in now forgotten engagements are hung in the cases side by side with those whose glorious history is known.

Two of these souvenirs of forgotten battles are British flags. One is a jack marked Avon and nothing more; the other is the ensign of a warship and is marked Bereford. From the condition of both of these flags it is supposed that they date back to the war of 1812, but history gives no record of ships bearing those names being sent to American waters by Great Britain.

Another of the mystery flags is the "814" flag. In great white figures this number appears on a field of blue, and the entire flag is bordered with red. From some engagement in the war with the Moorish pirates the flag that the officers at Annapolis came to call the "house flag" seems to have come. Yet no one knows where that battle was fought or under what circumstances of heroic sacrifice it was added to the long list of the trophies of our naval victories.—Christian Herald.

BATHING A PRINCE.

Thomas Smoaker "Seen His Duty and He Done It."

George IV. while prince and residing in his Brighton palace kept in his bedroom a portrait of Mrs. Gunn, an old bathing woman who used to dip him into the sea when he was the little Prince of Wales. A picture book much prized by children in England in those days showed the old lady bathing the little fellow. Beneath the picture was this stanza:

To Brighton came he,
Came George the Third's son,
To be dipped in the sea
By the famed Martha Gunn.

A companion portrait to Martha Gunn's was that of Thomas Smoaker who had charge of the horse which drew the bathing machines into and out of the sea. One day the little royal highness, having learned to swim, swam out farther than Thomas judged to be safe. He called to him to come back, but the self willed boy struck out with more vigor. Thomas went after the prince, overtook him, seized him by an ear and drew him to shore.

"Do you think," he replied to the boy's angry words, "I'm a-going to get myself hanged for letting the king's heir drown hisself just to please a youngster like you?"—Pearson's.

The First Reporter.

The modern reporter harks back to the reign of Queen Anne and to the unknown scribe who attempted to tell the public the secrets of her parliament. He had a hard time of it, for parliament wished to keep its secrets to itself. In 1728 an order was passed "that it is an indignity to and a breach of the privilege of the house for any person to presume to give in written or printed newspapers any account or minute of the debates or proceedings; that upon discovery of the authors, printers or publishers of any such newspapers this house will proceed against the offenders with the utmost severity." During the famous Wilkes case in 1772 the reporters won the victory which they have since held without dispute.—New York American.

A Dish of Tea.

"Dish" throughout the eighteenth century was a colloquialism for cup. In fashionable houses at first, and for long, tea was drunk from a cup without a handle brought from China. The vessel was termed a dish. When the Chinese cup was first copied by English potters, the convenience of a handle was added. The saucer also was brought from China. It received the name because of its resemblance to the English saucer, a platter in which sauce was served. The familiar gibe, "saucer eyes," was originally inspired by the sauce saucer long before Lord Arlington gave the first tea party in England in Arlington house, where Buckingham palace stands, at the restoration period.—London Chronicle.

Clearing Up History.

As a part of the squabble over the world's decisive battles a reader comes forward with the statement that Waterloo decided nothing. If Napoleon Bonaparte had won the battle he would have been crushed a few days later. Yet everybody concerned went through the fight as if it really meant something. It is strange how much clearer we see some things the further we get away from them.—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

PEACHES IN NEW ENGLAND.

By George French.

Most people of New England ancestry have heard their parents or grandparents tell about the fine crops of peaches that were harvested when they were young from trees growing where there are now no peaches. Elderly people remember when the peach crops were as sure as the apple crops are now. Then there came a time, the span of a generation, during which there were very few peaches raised in New England. It was thought the climate was too cold. The real trouble was that the people did not know how to raise peaches. They got to thinking that the peach tree should live and bear as long as the apple, and because it did not, and the trees stopped bearing and died after they were from ten to twenty years old, they believed that New England climate was not adapted to peaches. They stopped putting in new trees, and naturally there were no peaches. Then the peach began to be a commercial proposition. They were shipped in awkward wood crates at first. When they became a staple, and the growers had learned what varieties would endure shipment, some New Englanders began to think again about the peach. The first thing they found out was that they did not know much about what the peach required. Then they discovered that the rocky old pastures, filled with so many rocks that there was scarcely room for grass enough for sheep to find it, were the very best peach land in all the world.

The man who really discovered this interesting fact is J. H. Hale, of Connecticut, who raised his first marketable peaches on his late father's pasture and a church mortgage, and by persistently doing that which his wise neighbors told him he must not do. He manured his peach trees with common sense and exact knowledge, and has made that fertilizer pay him somewhere around a cool million. Now he is not only the biggest peach man in the Nutmeg state, but the biggest peach man in the country, if not in the world. The rocky Connecticut soil too poor to sell or keep, has made him a millionaire. He had no capital, or experience, or friends. He just found out what sort of soil and climate and treatment the peaches needed, and gave it to them.

It does not matter that now he is turning some of his peach land into apples. He has made out his case. Apples are a more staple crop. The trees live and bear a hundred years. And Mr. Hale is not as young as he was. Peaches for the young man; apples for the man who looks back on middle age—perhaps. Probably Mr. Hale has found that his example has lured so many into the peach business that there is not now quite the margin of profit there was in his palmy peach days. Be that as it may, there is yet plenty of peach opportunity in New England. We have not yet got very near to the limit of profitable peach raising, and will not until New England is able to supply her own markets. As long as there are New York, of Michigan, or Colorado peaches in New England fruit stores during the New England peach season, no one need hestitate to put out New England peach orchards, if they have the right kind of soil and can depend upon the early frost dates.

Science must be invoked, to discount the early frosts, as that Connecticut grower invoked it when he pushed his crop ten days ahead of the average by the use of nitrate of potash. He used nitrogen, potash, or phosphoric acid, as the trees and season told him to. He has 400 acres in peaches, and is setting more every year. He has trees nearing twenty years of age that are still bearing profitable crops. How the traditions of the past do go down before good common sense and exact knowledge! This is the man who has been offered a million dollars for his farm, but will not sell because he knows that what pays him bigger than anything else is his brains. Peach trees yield large individual crops in New England, as do apple trees. They begin to bear in the third year, but rarely make a profitable crop before the fifth. At seven or eight good trees often yield as much as twenty to twenty-five baskets, that bring an average of seventy-five cents Figure this out. Suppose you had a 400-acre farm of eight-year peach trees! Peach trees are, or ought to be set about fifteen feet apart in rows about eighteen feet apart. This shows how you can figure, so many trees to the acre and eight baskets to the tree at 75 cents per basket.

Roughly speaking, the bulk of good peach land in New England is in Massachusetts and Connecticut, though there are good small regions in all of the other states, very good records being every year made in far northern New Hampshire, sections of Vermont and several localities in Maine. It must not be forgotten, however enthusiastic we may get, that to successfully grow peaches requires ample knowledge, the right land, and a great amount of real work. Not all good land is good peach land. It is the real poor land that makes the best peach land, provided the rocks are plentiful and of the right kind. They must be limestone rocks. Plenty of limestone where the soil ought to be for any crop is what peaches must have, and then they must be fed the other chemicals as they develop appetites for them. The trees must be good to start with, they must be properly set and carefully nursed until their third year, and all the time they must be cultivated and fed, systematically, generously.

Do not be led away by the above tale of eight baskets to the tree. You won't get that kind of a crop unless you are a wonder, have wonderful land and wonderful luck. Half as much is a great crop. Quarter as much is a money-making crop, while if you get one basket per tree, year after year, you will have no cause for complaint, and need not fear the tax collector or the town overseer of the poor.

I could give a string of specific examples of peach money-making. Hale and the other Connecticut man and the Massachusetts man will do. Hale was a poor lad at fourteen, when his father died. The most he had was a dependent mother and brother, and a rocky bit of a hill farm, mortgaged to the hilt to the local church. Peaches saved the farm, supported the mother, educated the brother, paid the mortgage, bought more land and more land, bought Georgia land, built up a great peach plantation in Connecticut and another in Georgia, made Hale a millionaire, and earned for him the deserved title of "Peach King." What man has done man can do—even in New England.

A certain scientist in the service of Uncle Sam at Washington is said to be a hard taskmaster to both his official and his domestic servants, according to Harper's Weekly.

Being detailed once to accompany a scientific expedition on an extended cruise, the scientist is said to have unbent a trifle in communicating the news to his personal attendant.

"Henry," said he, "how would you like to go with me around the world?"

"Do we go from east to west, sir?" asked the man.

"Yes."

"And we lose a day going that way, do we not, sir?"

"We do."

"Then, sir, I should like very much to go. It would give me a day off."

STONE PRODUCT $78,284,572

Larger in 1912 Than in Any Previous Year

The value of the stone produced in the United States in 1912 reached the large total of $78,284,572, an increase of $1,176,005 over 1911, thus breaking all previous records. Although the percentage of increase for 1912 over 1911 was not large, according to E. F. Burchard, of the United States Geological Survey, and although some of the varieties of stone showed a decrease, the total increase was considerably larger than the increase of 1911 over 1910, when the total value was $76,520,584, the increase then being but $587,983.

Pennsylvania has always held first rank among the stone-producing States except in 1908, when Vermont reported the largest production. In 1912 the Keystone State produced 11.68 per cent of the total of the entire United States, with Vermont second, producing 8.41 per cent. Other large stone-producing States, named in order of output, are New York, Ohio, Indiana, California, Illinois, Massachusetts, Missouri and Wisconsin, the production of each of which was valued at more than $2,000,000.—Banker and Tradesman.

BOWLING LEAGUE.

The Old Colony bowling league will be reorganized and the first match is booked for about Sept. 22. In the league will be the Weymouths, Norfolk Downs, Coliseums and the Quincys. The fastest bowlers on the South Shore with no exceptions, rolled in the league last year and since all the men are available the pins will be scattered in lightning style this winter.

Don't be too free about signing nomination papers. Under the law you are allowed to sign for only one candidate for the same office. Signing for more than one not only vitiates your signatures on both but imperils the parties you sign for.—Walthan Free Press.

WOMAN ENDED LIFE BY TAKING POISON

No Suspicion of Murder In Death of Mrs. LeMaire

Dedham, Mass., Sept. 9.—Mrs. Marie B. LeMaire, the manicurist who was found dead in her room at Norwood, Aug. 15, committed suicide by taking poison, according to the official report of Associate Judge Hutchinson, filed in the superior court here.

Hutchinson presided at the inquest to determine the cause of death. A portion of his report reads:

"I find that her death was due solely to her own acts and not to the unlawful acts of any other person or persons."

There had been some doubt whether the woman committed suicide or was murdered.

VOTE ON TARIFF BILL

Senate Decides to Wind It Up Late This Afternoon

Washington, Sept. 9.—The senate will vote finally on the Democratic tariff bill this afternoon at 4 o'clock. This agreement was reached last night at 11:45 o'clock, when it became apparent that it would be impossible to carry the plan to pass the measure before adjournment.

The party leaders agreed to keep the senate in session until well into this morning to dispose of as many of the reserved amendments still pending as possible, and then adjourned until 9 o'clock this morning.

Democratic lines in the senate stand solidly against the final onslaught of the tariff fight.

Jennings of Everett, known in sporting circles as "Young Kid Carter," who was found guilty of murder for shooting William MacPherson, a bartender, to death in a South End saloon, was returned to Charlestown state prison by the officials of the state hospital for the criminal insane at Bridgewater.

After careful observation of the man the officials at Bridgewater decided he is sane enough to finish the remainder of his life sentence in state prison.

UNABLE TO GET COUNSEL

Wife Slayer Charlton Has No One to Conduct Defense For Him

Como, Italy, Sept. 9.—Porter Charlton, the American who is soon to stand trial for the murder of his wife, has as yet not succeeded in securing the services of counsel to conduct his case.

Deputy Camera, when in the United States recently, was urged by Charlton's friends to undertake his defense. Camera has not yet accepted the task, but in the meantime he asked the judge to allow him to confer with the prisoner. This, the judge replied, would be impossible until the preliminary investigations had been concluded.

ROXBURGHE DUCHESS GIVES BIRTH TO SON

Abstained From Sugar That Her Wish Might Be Fulfilled

London, Sept. 9.—The Duchess of Roxburghe, who was May Goelet of Newport before her marriage, gave birth to a son at the London residence of the Roxburghes.

In announcing the birth of an heir the duke admitted his wife had practised a form of eugenics, and said they both attributed the sex of the newborn infant to this.

Desiring a male heir to the dukedom, the duchess consulted an authority on embryology. The principal thing he told her to do in order to insure a male child was to avoid all food containing sugar. She did so, according to the duke, and bore a son.

WILLING TO WITHDRAW

Morgan May Quit as Director of the New Haven Road

Boston, Sept. 9.—"J. P. Morgan has expressed entire willingness to resign from the directorate or the executive committee of the New Haven if the directors request," said George Von L. Meyer at the close of a meeting of the stockholders' protective committee at which it had been voted to uphold Howard Elliott in his new policies.

This announcement came on the eve of the appearance before the public service commission today of high officials of the New Haven and prominent stockholders of New England, who have fought "banker management" for years.

They will ask permission to issue $67,000,000 bonds to carry out the new policies of the road.

The body of Gray was found in a field on the farm adjoining that of Mrs. Allen, his grandmother. He had shot himself through the head.

The Spring is eliminated, but made a game fight to overtake the Cima.

Vote In November

Taft, Rep.	7,159
Wilson, Dem.	14,692
Roosevelt, Pro.	13,236

Portland, Me., Sept. 9.—Returns of the special congressional election in the Third Maine district gave John A. Peters of Ellsworth, the Republican speaker of the Maine house of representatives, a plurality of 553 over William R. Pattangall of Waterville, the Democratic candidate.

Democratic national leaders had hoped for an indorsement of the present administration through Pattangall's election. Peters' vote was 8619, greater than that polled for Edward M. Lawrence of Lubec, the Progressive standard-bearer, to whose success the Progressives looked to establish their party as the chief rival of Democracy in Maine.

The returns indicate that more than half of the Progressive votes returned, temporarily at least, to the Republican fold, and the Democrats have not rebuked the Wilson administration, for the totals show but a slight variation from the Democratic figures of last November.

The Progressive vote showed a falling off of about 50 percent from what Theodore Roosevelt received in November. This was believed to have been due to the lack of impetus which Roosevelt's personality gave to the Progressive cause, and also to the fact that many Republicans have been convinced that the Republican party in Maine is now progressive. The combined anti-Democratic vote of the Republicans and Progressives gave a plurality against Pattangall of rising 6500.

The Peters vote was 108 percent greater than the Taft vote, while the Pattangall and Wilson vote did not vary more than a score of votes.

Pattangall carried his own county of Kennebec by about 1000 plurality, but he ran behind in Hancock, Somerset and Waldo counties and apparently in Washington county. These are the five counties in the district.

National aspect was lent to the campaign by the interest taken in the candidacy of Pattangall by the Democratic administration. Copies of a personal letter from the president advocating the election of the Democratic candidate were widely circulated throughout the district, and two members of the cabinet, Secretaries Bryan and Redfield, and Speaker Clark came to the state and spoke at a number of meetings.

They were assisted by a number of members of congress at different times. Never in the history of the state has a national administration taken so close a personal interest in a campaign for a congressman.

The Republicans had eight or ten members of congress in the district, although none of such prominence as the speakers sent here by the Democrats. The tariff was made a big issue between the two parties, the Democrats arguing in favor of the proposed tariff law and the Republicans urging that it was inimical to Maine interests.

The Progressives made no less strenuous a fight, and the national leaders of the party addressed meeting throughout the district. The Progressive speakers included Congressman Murdock, former Senator Beveridge and former Secretary Garfield. The Progressives fought for recognition of their party, but they made a common cause with the Republicans in calling for a condemnation of the Democratic tariff policy.

As against the Progressives, the Republicans urged that their own party was progressive in sentiment, and that it stood for practically the same things that the Progressive party did.

Stampede For Exit When Lightning Hits a Factory In Malden

Malden, Mass., Sept. 9.—During an electrical storm lightning struck the factory building of the Neider Hose company and two women were overcome and trampled on by other women near the exit in the stampede of the ninety employed there, who were frightened by the crash.

The lightning struck the flagpole on the building and tore a large hole in the roof, making a loud report. The electricity followed the steam pipes through the building, but caused no damage of consekquence.

THOMAS GAMMON, Superintendent

Silas Findlebury's Ghost

And Why It Ceased to Walk

By REBECCA STEVENS

Alida Loyd panted heavily as she came into her aunt's kitchen, for she was very fat and quivered like a mold of jelly when she moved. She was an idle, shallow minded woman, much given to gossip of a harmless sort, and, as might be expected, she was a poor housekeeper. Her husband, Finney Loyd, was a little wisp of a man who did odd jobs around the shipyard.

"Well, Aunt Betsey," said Alida in her slow drawl, "any news?"

"News of what?" snapped Betsey Findlebury.

"Oh, anything," was Alida's reply, but her little eyes narrowed watchfully as she swayed to and fro in the Boston rocker.

"No news." Mrs. Findlebury clipped her words sharply, as she always did when speaking to her niece.

For the past six months Alida had carried much news from Betsey Findlebury's neat white house.

"Haven't you heard a word from Uncle Silas?" asked Alida.

"I can't communicate with the dead," persisted Alida.

"Of course," and Betsey's lips shut tight.

"Then Mrs. Moore was wondering why you don't wear black for him or lavender," went on Alida.

"Mamie Moore's always wondering about something," retorted Betsey dryly. "Once she wondered what Finney Loyd ever saw about you that was with falling in love with."

Alida's fat cheeks reddened dully. "Mamie Moore's always been jealous of me marrying Finney," she said with some difficulty.

"Hum. Seeing's she gave Finney the mitten two years before you kept company with him, I don't see how she's got anything to complain of," nodded Aunt Betsey. "Now, you was talking about your Uncle Silas, Alida."

Mrs. Loyd glared resentfully at the quiet little white haired woman knitting so serenely by the west window.

"I ain't the only one Mamie Moore talks about," she muttered as she got upon her feet. "She says, says she, 'I hear that Silas Findlebury's ghost is walking again,' and, being as he was my own uncle, I felt it a duty to myself, me having been a Findlebury, to come over and find out about it."

Betsey's soft lips settled into a straight line, and for a woment she made no reply. Then:

"Your Uncle Silas was drownded off the White Rock six months ago—to be exact, on the 17th day of February. Leastways, we think he was drownded, and now we're sure he was drownded because he never came home, and the empty boat, all stove in amidships, came ashore one day. You know all that I know, Alida." Betsey was quite pale when she finished.

Alida stared at her with round eyes.

"Well, Humbolt Pedrick declared he saw Uncle Silas plowing the south field in April," she said boldly, "at night."

"Fiddle!" snapped Betsey crossly.

"Well, who plowed it then?" demanded Alida triumphantly. "Humbolt says he's asked every man in Little River, and there ain't one that done it. Who did it, Aunt Betsey?"

"Goodby, Alida," said Mrs. Findlebury coldly. "I'm sorry you're in such a hurry, but it's most supper time, and I expect your dinner dishes ain't washed up yet, and it might be that your beds ain't made. I saw a pillow hanging out of Finney's winder just now." She smiled grimly as the door slammed after Mrs. Loyd's bulky form.

When she was alone her sweet face grew suddenly pinched as if with mental suffering. She hid her face in her worn hands and rocked gently to and fro.

"I wonder—I wonder who did it," she murmured over and over again.

She wondered what Alida and her inquisitive friends would say if they knew that Silas Findlebury had quarreled bitterly with his wife the day before he disappeared.

No one but herself knew of that quarrel, the outgrowth of Silas' desire to build a new barn on the place. They had been saving money for two years to pay off the little mortgage remaining on the farm. The $500, together with $18 for the six months' interest, would build the barn that Silas declared he needed for the proper housing of his stock.

Betsey believed that the old barn would do for awhile longer. She was eager to remove the last encumbrance from her home. They had quarreled for the first time during their happy married life.

The very next day Silas had announced his intention of going fishing, and that was the last Betsey had seen of him. The money had been in his pockets, for Silas placed no faith in banks.

Early in April Mrs. Findlebury awoke one morning to find her south field plowed and harrowed, ready for the corn. It had been Silas' habit to have his corn in before the 10th. The field was plowed on the 7th, and Betsey planted the corn herself on the 8th and 9th.

Humbolt Pedrick declared that he saw Silas Findlebury driving two white horses before a white plow, plowing his own cornfield at midnight. He also said that Silas was dressed in white robes and that a cold wind blew over the field as he watched. Suddenly he was stricken with the truth. It was the ghost of Silas plowing his own cornfield!

Betsey Findlebury grew very white when she heard what the gossips were saying, but she said nothing.

If she only knew whether Silas—but what else could have happened to a middle aged man of his sober habits? The sound had been rough that day, and the sea was quite high, and near the mouth of the river there was a strong tide, and White rock was a dangerous reef.

Well, there was the empty boat floating bottom upward. The oars were missing, and there was the broken side!

"It can't be explained," muttered Betsey Findlebury as she arose and began to get supper. "There's more things in heaven and earth than—I've forgotten the rest—but I guess it means there's more queer happenings than we poor mortals can explain."

After supper she went out to feed the chickens. On her way back she looked up at the roof of the old house. The two wide mouthed chimneys needed repainting, and if Silas had been alive she knew that he would have painted the bricks a fresh red, with neat white stripes outlining the mortar. A big locust tree overhung the house and trailed drooping branches along the ridgepole.

"That limb needs lopping off," sighed Betsey as she went indoors.

* * * * * * *

At 12 o'clock that night Betsey Findlebury awoke suddenly and sat up in bed.

What was that sound? She listened intently. It was a gentle pattering overhead and occasionally a heavy creaking sound.

Betsey Findlebury slipped from her bed and went to the garret stairs. Again she harkened. Now the sounds were plainer, and they appeared to come from the roof.

What could it be? She sniffed the air.

In five minutes Betsey had dressed herself in the dark and noiselessly gone down stairs. The front door opened and closed, and Betsey tiptoed out to the porch, down the steps and on to the grass of the front yard. When she had reached the shadow of a tall shrub she peered up at the roof of her house, and her nervous fingers clutched her throat.

Silhouetted against the midnight sky, in the radiance of the full moon, was a man's tall, white clad form. Betsey saw him stepping carefully to and fro, bending now and then. His arm went back and forth, back and forth, and, although the shrill chorus of the katydids drowned any sounds he might have made, Betsey imagined she could hear the pat-pat-pat of a paint brush passing over the bricks of the shabby chimney.

Betsey stole into the house and went to the kitchen, where, with shades carefully drawn, she lighted the oil stove and put coffee on to boil. Then she stepped from pantry to table until she had a tablecloth laid and places set for two. When everything was in readiness she went out into the front yard and looked up at the roof.

The midnight painter was quietly letting himself down into the branches of the locust. By the time he had slipped down to the ground beside the back porch Betsey had flung wide the kitchen door and was saying in a cheery voice that she tried to hold steady:

"Hurry up, Silas. Your breakfast is waiting for you. Seems to me you've been a powerful long while over them chimneys."

For an instant there was silence. Then the tall form, clothed in painter's overalls, stepped forward on to the porch.

Silas Findlebury appeared worn and haggard and very tired. His eyes looked anxiously at Betsey's face, beautiful with its tender, tremulous smile.

"Betsey, Betsey, do you want me?" he whispered brokenly.

"Silas Findlebury, you'll ketch your death a-standing out there!" scolded Betsey, and so, drawing her lost husband within the house, Betsey Findlebury once and forever laid his ghost.

Over that midnight meal Silas Findlebury told how he had gone fishing that February day, how the wind and tide had carried him off shore and into the path of a sound steamer and how a deck hand had flung him a rope and pulled him aboard.

He told of their arrival in New York and of his sudden inspiration to speculate with the $518 contained in his pocket. If he could return home with double that amount of money they could pay off the mortgage and build the new barn as well.

Silas speculated and lost. Then he went to Milton, where his brother lived, and obtained work there in one of the mills. Little by little he was saving money, trying to make up the sum he had lost. At different times he had walked the ten miles to Little River to do something on his own farm, to help Betsey, to catch a glimpse of her sitting beside her lonely lamp. Tonight he had come to paint the chimneys. They had worried him, he said. Here Betsey's arms around him stopped his narrative.

It mattered not that he had saved only a paltry $25 of the needed amount; it mattered nothing to Betsey that it would take two more years of saving to acquire another amount sufficient to pay off the mortgage. Silas had come home, they were together, and his ghost would walk no more.

And Betsey was so happy that she gave the glad news to Finney Loyd's wife so that Lida could have the pleasure of spreading the tidings from one end of Little River to the other.

THE HUSBANDS OF EDITH

By GEORGE BARR M'CUTCHEON

"On bail? At half past 10? Good heavens, then—then—oh, are you sure?"

"Poshtive, abs'lutely."

"Then what has become of my 9,000 crowns?"

"You c'n search me, Conshance," murmured Freddie.

"I don' know what you're talkin' 'bout, Cons'ance," said Mr. Rodney in a very hurt tone. "We—we put up security f'r five thous'n dollars, that's what we did. This is all the thanks we getsh for it. Ungrachful!"

Constance had been thinking very hard, paying no heed to his maudlin defense. It rapidly was dawning upon her that these men had secured her lover's release on bail at half past 10 o'clock, an hour and a half before she had given her bribe of 9,000 crowns to the jailer. That being the case, it was becoming clear to her that the wretch deliberately had taken the money knowing that Brock was not in the prison and with the plain design to rob her of the amount. It was a transaction in which he could be perfectly secure; bribing of public officials is a solemn offense in Austria and Germany. She could have no recourse, could make no complaint. Her money was gone!

"Where is Mr. Br—Mr. Medcroft?" she demanded, her voice full of anxiety. If he were out of jail why had he failed to come in the meeting place?

"He's locked in," persisted Freddie.

"That's just it, Miss Fowler," explained Odell Carney glibly. "You shee see, it was this way: We got him out on bail on condition he'd appear tomorrow morning 'fore the magistrate. After we'd got him out he insisted on coming 'round here so's he could run away with you. That wassen a gen'nemanly thing to do after we'd put up our money. We couldn't afford have him runnin' away with you. So we had him locked in a room on top floor of the hotel, where he can't get out 'n leave us to hold the bag, don't you see. He almos' cried an' said you'd be waitin' at the church or—or something like that bally song, don't you know, an' as a rush reshort, to keep him quiet like a good ferrer—feller, we said we'd come an' get you an' 'splain everything saffis—satisfac—ahem!—sassfac'rily."

She looked at them with burning eyes. Slow rage was coming to the flaming point. And for this she had sat and suffered for hours in a street restaurant! For this! Her eyes fell upon the limp horses and the dejected stable boy. Two hours!

"You will release him at once!" she stormed. "Do you hear? It is outrageous!"

Without another word to the dazed trio she rushed to the curb and commanded the boy to assist her into the saddle. He did so, in stupid amazement. Then she instructed him to mount and follow her to the Tirol as fast as he could ride. The horses were tearing off in the darkness a moment later.

CHAPTER XIV.

The Prodigal Husband.

THE unlucky Brock, wild with rage and chagrin, had paced his temporary prison in the top story of the Tirol from 11 o'clock till 2, bitterly cursing the fools who were keeping him in durance more vile than that from which they had generously released him. He realized that it would be unwise to create a disturbance in the house by clamoring for freedom, because, in the first place, there already had been scandal enough, and, in the second place, his distrustful bondsmen had promised faithfully to seek out the devoted Connie and apprise her of his release. He had no thought, of course, that in the meantime she might be duped into paying a bribe to the guard.

Not only was he direfully cursing the trio, but also the addlepated Medcroft and his own addlepated self. It is to be feared that he had harsh thoughts of all the Medcrofts, as far down as Raggles. His dream of love and happiness had turned into a nightmare; the comedy had become a tragic snarl of all the effects known to melodrama.

It occurred to him at 2 o'clock that pacing the floor in the agony of suspense was a very useless occupation. He would go to bed. Morning would bring relief and surcease to his troubled mind. Constance was doubtless sound asleep in her room. Everything would have been explained to her long before this hour. She would understand. So, with the return of his old sophistry, he undressed and crawled into the strange bed. Somehow he did not like it as well as the cot in the balcony below.

Just as he was dropping off into the long delayed slumber, he heard a light tapping at his door. He sat up in bed like a flash, thoroughly wide awake. The rapping was repeated. He called out in cautious tones, asking who was there, at the same time slipping from bed to fumble in the darkness for his clothes.

"'Sh!" came from the hallway. He rushed over and put his ear to the door. "It is I. Are you awake? I can't stay here. It's wrong. Listen. Here's a note—under the door. Good night, darling! I'm heartbroken."

"Thank God, it's you!" he cried softly. "How I love you, Constance!"

"'Sh! Edith is with me! Oh, I wish it were morning and I could see you. I have so much to say."

Another querulous voice broke in: "For heaven's sake, Connie, don't stand here any longer. Our reputations are bad enough as it is. Good night—Roxbury!" He distinctly heard the heartless Edith giggle. Then came the soft, quick swish of garments and the nocturnal visitors were gone. He picked up the envelope and, waiting until they were safely down the hall, turned on the light.

"Dearest," he read, "it was not my fault and I know it was not yours. But, oh, you don't know how I suffered all through those hours of waiting at the cafe. They did not find me until after 2. They were drunk. They tried to explain. What do you think the authorities will do to me if they find that I gave that horrid man bribe money? Really, I'm terribly nervous. But he won't dare say anything, will he? He is as guilty as I, for he took it. He took it knowing that you were free at the time. But we will talk it over tomorrow. I've just got back to the hotel. I wouldn't go to bed until Edith brought me up to hear your dear voice. I am so glad you are not dead. It is impossible to release you tonight. Those wretches have the key. How I loathe them! Edith says the hotel is wild with gossip about everything and everybody. It's just awful. Be of good heart, my beloved. I will be your faithful slave until death. With love and adoration and kisses. Your own Constance.

"P. S. Roxbury has not made a sign. Edith is frantic."

Several floors below the relieved and ecstatic Brock, Mrs. Medcroft was soon urging her sister to go to bed and let the story go until daylight. She persisted in telling all that she had done and all that she had endured.

After a Summer Vacation

Returning from a pleasant vacation in the mountains, at the beach or country, rested from a long year's toil, looking forward to another year brighter and more prosperous than the one before but with clothes that bear the marks of travel in smoky steam cars and drives through dusty roads. Impossible to return to business with such apparel. But why worry? Here in the heart of our city is an establishment, WARSHAW'S DYE HOUSE, which in short order will bring back to those clothes the new look and finish necessary to the dress of all.

PARTY AT WOLLASTON

Farewell to Miss Stella Cummings Who Goes West

A birthday party was tendered to Miss Stella Cummings of Freeman street at the home of Mrs. William M. Ferguson, Chester street, Monday evening by the members of the Dorothy Q. lodge and friends and she was presented with a purse of money. John V. Leland made the presentation and read an original poem to fit the occasion. Miss Cummings is leaving October 1st for Los Angeles, California where she will make her home. After refreshments were served by the hostess Mr. Leland read another original poem of 60 verses on his trip to Vermont.

Those at the party were Mrs. L. W. Collett, Mrs. Clara Houghton, Mrs. Dora Ferguson, Mrs .Millie Leland, Mrs. Antoinette Pletsch, Mrs. Ethel Stewart, Mrs. Alice Dunn, Mrs. Prudence Brown, Mrs. Sadie Cook, Mrs. Abbie S. Gray, Mrs. Rose Curtis, Mrs. Ella Hawkins, Mrs. Lucy Small, Miss Edna Gray, Jessie Cahill, Mabel Loughead, Ruth Cahill, Harriet Beattie, Clara Bennett, Beulah Collett, Eva Parkhurst, William M. Ferguson, Harry Collett and Walter Stewart.

NEWSY BRIEFS

There was happy time at the Thomas Crane Public Library this morning when Miss Blanche Morrison one of the library staff was the recipient of a kitchen shower. It was a jolly occasion.

Friends will be glad to learn that Mrs. C. T. Melville of Stewart street, who has been seriously ill, is out of danger and when able to be out, will go over to Hillendale farm, Weymouth Heights to recuperate.

Miss Josephine Trifone of 97 Brackett street and Louis Mastroianni of East Weymouth were married at Boston, Sunday by Rev. Fr. Mario Casazzo. The ceremony was witnessed by a large number of relatives and friends.

Miss Doris Frazier of South Walnut street, a member of the class of 1915 at Woodward Institute, was removed to the Quincy City Hospital Monday evening where she will probably be operated upon for appendicitis. She is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. David R. Frazier.

LOW TAX RATE.

The board of assessors of the town of Norwood have announced that the rate of taxation for the year 1913 is $10.40 per thousand valuation. This is an increase of 90 cents a thousand over the year of 1912, and the assessors state is due in a large measure to the increase in town grant over the year 1912, which increase is practically $15,000. There has been an increase in real estate values of $932,740, and a decrease in taxable personal property of $20,000.

OUT OF QUARANTINE.

The tension in Atlantic, due to the epidemic of infantile paralysis in that section, was somewhat relieved this morning when the Board of Health released one of the six families affected from quarantine regulations. It will remain in force in four families for the balance of the period.

—In addition to the $40,000 already contributed by means of popular subscription, the city of Buffalo has just provided an additional $35,000 in the form of a bond issue for the purpose of meeting the expenses of the Fourth International Congress on School Hygiene which will be held at Buffalo the week of Aug. 25-30, which will be attended by delegates from all the leading nations of the world. "One of the most remarkable exhibitions of far sighted municipal intelligence, and one of the most noted examples of civic pride that has ever been associated with these great international enterprises"—these are the words used by Dr. Thomas A. Storey, Secretary—General of the Congress, in paying a tribute to the public spirited support which the citizens at Buffalo are giving the Fourth International Congress on School Hygiene.

The rich object to being taxed because they are rich, says the Boston Daily Advertiser. That's the surest thing under the sun. So do the poor object, but the property of the poor and the middle classes is easy to get at and so it gets taxed to the limit. The coming income tax may tend to equalize matters.—Dedham Transcript.

LETTER TO EMPLOYEES.

The following letter was forwarded on Monday, Sept. 8, to all officers and Employees of the New York, New Haven and Hartford Railroad Company:

On September 2nd, 1913, Howard Elliott, one of the signers of this statement, arrived in New Haven after thirty-three years' service with the Chicago, Burlington and Quincy and Northern Pacific roads. On the same day J. H. Hustis, the other signer of this statement, arrived after thirty-five years' service with the New York Central and Boston and Albany roads.

We have both come into the management of the New Haven road to work with and alongside of you.

We have no purpose except to maintain, operate, and improve the property so that it may do its work with safety to you and the traveling public, and with efficiency and economy for the shippers and owners.

We hope to make our service for this company our life work.

Today we are all involved in this awful casualty, and the men, as well as the management, and the public, are in great distress over it.

Terrible as it is, we must face it with courage, keep our heads, and do our duty.

We are fellow employees,—our duties and responsibilities only varying in degree. Each one of us has a great responsibility to the public, to his fellow employes and to the thousands of owners of securities. We need your help, and we wish to help you, Each must help the other if this road is to be run safely.

The work of the great army of employes is most important. because you are engaged in the detailed work of maintaining the road and in operating trains under the rules and regulations laid down by the public authorities and by the management.

Upon the officers there is imposed by law the duty to adopt and enforce every reasonable rule and practice which experience has shown will help to protect life and preserve property. This is a duty that cannot be shirked, and the management must perform it with firmness and without hesitation.

No railroad can obtain safe operation that does not have the earnest and loyal support of its men in all reasonable efforts to protect and perform the service. There is no question of your loyalty, can now be shown in no more practical way than by observing the existing rules and by adopting and accepting cordially any further rules and regulations that make for safety.

It is urged that all employes read and re-read the rules in the timetables and in the books governing the operation of stations, trains, yards, signals, shops, tracks, inspection and care of equipment, in fact everything pertaining to operation, and that they confer with one another and with the officers as to the best means of promoting safety.

Take the case of the accident on the morning of September second. The public will discuss, and properly so, improved signals and stronger equipment, both of which are necessary and desirable as a help in preventing or lessening the horrors of an accident of this kind.

This accident should not, however, and would not have occurred had the rules of the railroad been observed strictly, and good judgment born of experience, been displayed. The men on the colliding trains were all of sufficient intelligence and experience to understand their duties and were of good habits so far as is known. Certainly their apearance indicated that to be the case. It is believed they are men of sincere purpose and high character, as are the great body of men in engine and train service,—men who would not intentionally do a wrong and who take a pride in their work. They all had proper rest, or had been given opportunity for taking it, and were familiar with the piece of road which they were running. The air-brakes and the signalsperforme d their functions. The conditions of that morning had been duplicated many times before, and there was nothing unusual about it, except that a heavy holiday business was being handled. The operating officers of the road, many of them, had been on duty a greater part of the night, in an earnest effort to see that everything was being handled properly, and were relieved to think that Tuesday morning had come without serious trouble, when the news of this awful accident came shortly after seven o'clock.

There is no intention, or desire, at this time, to place the responsibility for the accident anywhere, but certain facts should be made known to all employes at once so that they may take additional steps to protect themselves, their fellow employes, and the public.

The accident happened within what is known as automatic signal territory. The various rules require a number of specific things:

1. When an engine nears one of these signals set at danger it should stop before passing the signal and then proceed.

2. The duties of trainmen and flagmen in the matter of protecting trains are clearly set out.

3. The responsibility o fthe conductor for checking up his flagmen is also made clear.

4. The duties and responsibility of the engineer are set forth clearly.

It is true that rules cannot be made to cover every contingency, and much must depend upon the inteligence and interest displayed by the particular individual in applying the rules.

There is not, nor can there be, any other duty so important as the protection of a train loaded with human beings.

This piece of road where the accident occurred has been operated safely for many years under the same conditions that existed the morning of September second. It is true there was a fog, but that is a condition to be met at certain seasons of the year in places along the sea coast and on many railroads, and in such cases there should be, of course, unusual care and caution exercised.

It is also true that the signal system now protecting the track where the accident happened is being replaced, so that under similar conditions the engineers of both trains would have received a warning signal a mile or more in advance had the home signal shown danger, but the protection of signals, under no circumstances, can relieve the train crews from the duty and responsibility of prompt and accurate flagging.

The flag, fuses and torpedo should be used as if there were no signal system. Every extraordinary stop may be but a short distance from a following train, and the flagman should act quickly at all times, as if the danger were great and his time limited.

Wile the question of physical condition and ability of the men involved does not enter into this accident, yet as a result of accidents that have occurred, there are certain rules and practices which it is proposed to introduce into the service solely with the idea of increasing safety and operation for the protection of the public and of the employes.

These rules refer to examinations for vision, color sense, hearing, and, under certain conditions, other physical tests. The proposed rules are similar to those that are being used on other standard lines in this eastern territory.

We believe you will agree that this is too serious a matter, not only in the interest of the public, but of yourselves and your families, to be delayed.

Nothing unusual will be required, or expected, and no unnecessary hardships will be entailed,, for the railroad needs the experience that comes from years of service, and wants to retain every good man in the service who is physically competent to perform the duties. We desire to work with and through those officers of the company who are charged directly with the supervision of the operating department,—Mr. A. R. Whaley, vice president, Mr. C. L. Bardo, general manager and the general superintendent, mechanical superintendent, division superintedents, trainmasters and master mechanics, and other operating officers, many of whom come in daily contact with you and who have the same spirit and desire that we believe you have,—namely, to do their full duty to those with whom they work, their fellow employes, the patrons of the road, and the owners of its securities.

The New Haven road is a great property, and there is no reason why, with loyal support and hearty co-operation of all, it should not be made the best and safest road in the United States.

Let every man in the service resolve that from this time forth he will redouble his efforts to do his duty, that he will not speak disrespectfully of the road, of his fellow employes ,or of the management, —that he will welcome just criticism of the service, and do his part to apply remedies that will prevent such criticism, and let all ask the public to aid them in their efforts to disparage unfair and unjust criticism, so that the undivided attention of all employes and men can be in accord with the important work of trying to serve the pubilc with absolute safety.

Howard Elliott, President,
J. H. Hustis, Vice-president.

—Bananas are not raised in this country and there can be no competition in them. Would you not say therefore that the astute framers of the new tariff who put a duty on them of 5 cents a bunch expecting that the tax would come out of the earnings of the United Fruit Co was most certainly a neophyte at the business?—Waltham Free Press.

—Steps are being taken in Scituate for the formation of a Choral Society which is to have about 125 members at the beginning. It is hoped to effect organization at a meeting on Sept. 11.

MANY RECOMMENDATIONS

ions when time was lost at fires through lack of knowledge of the location of hydrants, and we recommend that the Chief of the Fire Department be instructed to detail men on the department to tours of duty through the districts in which they are located to become familiar with buildings and hydrant locations in that district.

We find that the men on the department, when first appointed, have to depend on the good will of their comrades, as well as experience gained in fighting actual fires, to learn all branches of their duty as firemen. We would recommend that the Chief be authorized to become familiar with training-school methods as taught by the Boston Fire Department Drill School and to drill all members of the department.

As the department stands, there is, in our opinion, a need of a clearer understanding of the authority of different officials, and we would recommend the placing of one permanent man in command of both call and permanent men in each district at fires in the absence of the Chief and the District Chief, or pending their arrival.

There are at present, too many boxes on each circuit in the fire alarm system, and we recommend that the present system of six-circuit repeater be increased to a ten-circuit repeater in order to minimize the danger of a break in the wires, as a break in the present system would make useless from twenty (20) to twenty-nine (29) boxes, while a ten-circuit repeater would reduce the number of boxes affected to fifteen or less.

We find that the steamer answers but a limited number of boxes and that it keeps two men and three horses inactive at the Central station during alarms outside the limited number of boxes to which it responds thereby reducing the fire-fighting strength of the department. We recommend that the steamer respond to more calls, or that the idea of replacing it with a triple combination or auto pump (so called) be given careful consideration or that the purchase of a tractor to replace the horses now held for the steamer be considered by the City Council.

We believe that one of the best aids to faithful work and good discipline is the prospect of proper advancement in rank, and we recommend that all promtions be made only after a competitive examination, open to all permanent men eligible.

Having always the need of quick and speedy arrival at fires in view, we recommend that the Chief instruct drivers to avoid railroad crossings in responding to alarms whenever possible, as we find that the apparatus has, at times, been held up at railroad crossings by passing trains.

We find that in many parts of the city there are rubbish heaps and piles of inflammable material, adjacent to buildings, which form dangerous conditions, and we recommend that the Chief of the Fire Department insist on the immediate removal or destruction of such heaps whenever or wherever found.

There is a tendency to forget the fact that all apparatus of the Fire Department is the joint property of the citizens of Quincy, and we recommend that the apparatus be used for no other purpose than the immediate business of the Fire Department, and that economy be exercised in its operations.

We recommend that the callmen of the department be assigned one night each, in rotation, to the Stations to which they are attached, so that there will be one callman at each station every night, thereby increasing the fire-fighting force.

Owing to the one-day-in-five law, and the arrangement of meal hours, the apparatus during the day often leaves the Central station with no more than one or two men. This is a condition which should be remedied, and we recommend that the Chief of the Department give this matter careful consideration.

We find that all men in the department are not supplied with copies of the rules and regulations, and we recommend that there be copies furnished each man and that instructions in the rules and regulations be given the members of the Department from time to time.

In closing the report and recommendations, we wish to call the attention of the City Council and His Honor, the Mayor, to Section 22, title III, of the City Charter, which gives the City Council the power of regulating the government of the Fire Department, and we trust that these recommendations will be received and acted upon by both the Executive and Legislative branches of the city.

COOLER TODAY.

There was quite a decided change in the temperature at noon today from what it was at the same hour Monday. Monday everybody was suffering with excessive heat and a high humidity, with the temperature at 81. Today at noon there is a cool breeze with the temperature at 68, and light coats do not feel uncomfortale, especially if one is riding. The weather today however is not much cooler than a year ago in September for there were many days during the month when the temperature at noon was in the sixties and lower.

—Scituate's tax rate this year will be $17 per $1000 an increase of $1 over last year. The total valuation of the town is $5,550,000 a gain in the year of $418,000.

There is more Catarrh in this section of the country than all other diseases put together, and until the last few years was supposed to be incurable. For a great many years doctors pronounced it a local disease and prescribed local remedies, and by constantly failing to cure local treatment, pronounced it incurable. Science has proven catarrh to be a constitutional disease and therefore requires constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, Ohio, is the only constitutional cure on the market. It is taken internally in doses from 10 drops to a teaspoonful. It acts directly on the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. They offer one hundred dollars for any case it fails to cure. Send for circulars and testimonials.

TRIAL OF BIG GUNS

Quincy Houses Shaken but at Hull Windows Smashed

Many houses in Quincy were shaken Tuesday night when the 12 inch mortars at Fort Banks and Fort Andrews were fired in the target practice. It is the first time these big guns have been fired, and while the reports were plainly heard in Quincy and in some cases houses were shaken, it was nothing to what happened at houses at Hull. There they were badly shaken, and in many cases windows were smashed although officers from the forts had advised the people to open their windows.

FORMER CHIEF OF POLICE

Joseph W. Hayden Passes Away--Grand Army Veteran

Joseph Warren Hayden, who preceded Chief Burrell as chief of police in Quincy, died this morning in his 73rd year, having been sick for several weeks.

Mr. Hayden was born in Quincy, Dec. 10, 1842, and has always made Quincy his home. He has been prominently identified with the affairs of the town and city. Under the town form of government he was a constable for twenty years. At that time constables were elected at the annual town meeting. Since Quincy has been a city he has been appointed every year. In his younger days he was an enthusiastic fireman and was for several years foreman of the old "Tiger," and of late was a member of the Washington M. French Hose Association whose members are all old firemen.

In addition to being a constable for all these years he served several years on the permanent police force and was for a number of years Chief of Police, having first been appointed to that position by Mayor Hodges in 1894 and serving in that capacity under ex-Mayors Hodges, Adams, Keith and Bryant.

Mr. Hayden was educated in the common schools of Quincy and when old enough to select an occupation he chose that of a stone cutter and became apprenticed to that trade. While the Civil war was in progress he ran away from his employer to enlist in the Union cause. Joining Company M, First Massachusetts Heavy Artillery, he was sent to Washington, D. C., where he remained on guard for two years. He was then sent with his regiment to the Army of the Potomac and on June 22 1864, was taken prisoner by the Confederates in front of

ABOUT 300 OUT OF WORK

How New Child Labor Law is Working

According to Charles H.Johnson, attendance officer of the School Department, there are about 300 children, between the ages of 14 and 16 years who are affected by the new child labor law. Of this number nearly 200 are employed in the factory of Rice and Hutchins at Braintree. The remainder are scattered throughout the city, mainly in small numbers in the stores.

According to Mr. Johnson the Tubular Rivet Co. who employ a large number of young women have always made it a rule not to employ any girl under 16 years of age so that the new law will not apply to their help. There are no other factories in Quincy that employ any number of minors.

In some of the stores where young girls are employed, notably Woolworths, the hours of labor have been changed so as to comply with the law. This has been accomplished by extending the opening hours in the morning to 8.30.

At the Rice and Hutchins factory it has been decided to discharge all of the boys and girls employed who are between the ages of 14 and 16 years, so that there will be about 200 out of employment.

Mr. Johnson says that it will now be necessary for every minor between the ages of 14 and 21 years to obtain a new labor certificate. These certificates have not arrived from the State office as yet, but when they do arrive it means a lot of work. Under the new law a boy or girl, between these ages who desires to work must first apply to Mr. Johnson for a certificate blank. This he or she takes to the principal of the school at which they last attended who must certify to it.

Then the applicant must take the certificate to Dr. C. W. Garey, who has been appointed by the Board of Health as the medical examiner, for his certificate as to physical ability and qualifications. These two signatures having been obtained, Mr. Johnson must be sought again who will issue the final certificate.

Last year Mr. Johnson issued about 800 labor certificates. These must all be renewed this year under the new law.

As far as increasing the school attendance, Mr. Johnson says that there has been no evidence in Quincy as yet in this regard and he does not think that it will affect the school attendance much. Those most affected will be the minors that have been employed at the Rice and Hutchins factory in Braintree and these will probably try to find employment elsewhere.

Many families in Quincy, in common with other municipalities, have depended upon the small amounts earned by their children to help out, which means that these families will find it harded to make both ends meet.

As yet however no one in Quincy has felt the effect of the new law, although it would not be surprising if during the coming winter the Poor department would be called upon to render more aid.

In some cities, notably Fall River and New Bedford, where many minors are employed in the mills, the effect is most apparent, and it is reported that in these places many families are moving across the line into Rhode Island where the law is not as strict.

BURGLARY AT WOLLASTON

House of Frank W. Neal Is Thoroughly Ransacked

In the midst of the investigations being made by the police of the burglary at the home of James H. Stetson or School street where goods valued at $3000 were taken another rifled house has been discovered.

Frank W. Neal of Summit avenue, opened his doors after a six weeks absence Monday evening and found his house had been thoroughly ransacked. Clothing that was in the upstairs closets was scattered around the lower floor, drawers were opened and their contents strewn about the rooms and all the sterling silver ware, cut glass dishes and jewelry in the house were taken. Until the return of Mrs. Neal next Thursday it will be impossible to correctly ascertain the loss, but it is believed that it will reach several hundred dollars.

In addition a well stocked buffet was rifled, and sitting on the table in the living room was an emptied champagne bottle which had been opened by the burglars. No cigarette butts or burnt matches were thrown about the house.

The thieves smashed a window in the cellar and got from there to the living room by forcing a door. As in the Stetson break the work was neat and thorough and a casual glance would not distinguish the method. The house, which is situated on the northerly slope of Third hill, offered the burglars as good a chance to make a getaway as they had at the Stetson home, there being large fields near by.

Mr. Neal is a fish dealer at 22 T Wharf, Boston. He has been a resident of Wollaston for several years.

YOUNG MEN'S CLUB.

A meeting preliminary to the forming of a club of young men mostly first voters of Ward Two, Quincy Point, was held Tuesday night. The club will be formed to work for Republican candidates for State offices and also in the interest of Charles H. Johnson the young men's candidate for Mayor. This movement started by Mr. Johnson is spreading all over the city and it is predicted at the beginning of his campaign there will be at least 1000 young men organized.

WHALLEY AND GOFFE

Not Regicides Except to King Charles II of England

Editor of Quincy Ledger:

The New Haven colonists hated royal oppression. In 1661 Whalley and Goffe, two of the judges then known as "regicides," because during the English Civil War (1649) they had voted to put the tyrannical Charles I to death, fled to New Haven.

King Charles II sent orders to arrest them. Davenport concealed them (Rev. John Davenport, a Puritan minister) and preached to his congregation a passage from the Bible, "Hide the outcasts; betray not him that wandereth."

The sermon had the effect intended and the officers returned to England disappointed at not capturing the "regicides."

According to tradition, Goffe saved the town of Hadley, Mass., (where he was concealed) in an Indian attack during King Philip's war. The savages were on the point of gaining the day, when a venerable man, with long white beard suddenly appeared, rallied the inhabitants and drove off the assailants. He then disappeared. Some thought they owed their victory to an angel.

FORE RIVER IMPROVEMENT

Urge Expenditure of Balance of $60,000

Congressman Murray while at Washington on Tuesday received a telegram from the Maritime Committee of the Boston Chamber of Commerce urging that an unexpended balance of an appropriation for the improvement of Fore River be used for deepening the channel still further, and Mr. Murray will take up the subject with the proper authorities. Of $140,000 originally appropriated, $80,000 was spent in dredging the channel to a depth of 18 feet at mean low water, and it now is urged that the remaining $60,000 be used to deepen it to 24 feet at low water.

A Little Talk On Good Flour

THE People are usually right. Years ago their demand for white flour caused expert food specialists to give wheat flour the most critical and through tests and analyses.

Many varieties of wheat were milled, the different parts of each microscopically examined, made into dough—baked into bread. The results were tabulated and compared.

These results proved the people were right—the whitest flour made from the best hard wheat contained the most gluten—the highest food value—made more loaves—ran more evenly—could always be depended on. The woman who always bought this kind never had a baking day failure. Her oven might not be just right, but somehow the bread always was. Such flour is less affected by temperature than the ordinary blended, carelessly ground kind.

In making IVORY WHITE FLOUR the manufacturers have taken advantage of what people want and science has shown how to attain.

IVORY WHITE FLOUR never varies and your bread may always be good. Order a bag today.

So far the President and cabinet have not gone up to get Thaw back, but it is believed they will have to do so soon.

In many growing towns this fall it is going to be a problem how to place 50 children in a 40 seat school room. Probably the older boys at least would be willing to hold the girls in their laps.

Yesterday's Ledger contained over 40,000 ems of good reading set on our linotype machines between 7.30 A. M. and 2.30 P. M. More than double the amount set by our competitors. You are invited to visit the Ledger office and see the linotypes in operation. Your name cast on a slug, while you wait, if desired.

While the United States will feel for Canada's sorrow in parting with Harry his friends on this side of the line feel that they can not spare him any longer.

It is hoped that the higher officials are not blamed for the recent railroad accidents, as the employes wouldn't like it if the bosses interfered with train running.

A hundred members of the Greek letter societies of the Lockport, N. Y., schools have been expelled, although the societies kindly allowed the schools to hold their sessions as usual.

The prediction that the express companies will lose 90 per cent of their business suggests again what a mistake they made in letting Congress establish the parcel post.

UP-TO-DATE SHOW WINDOW.

Alert merchants are naturally keenly alive to the advantage of a very attractive show window. Old fashioned glass frontage and sloppy and infrequently changed displays hurt a business.

Yet they do not hurt it as much as a failure to make a creditable appearance in the newspaper advertising, the true 20th century show window. In the days of small towns, and of no telephones, people did their shopping and marketing almost daily, and buy what they saw in show windows. Now people order a great many things by telephone, and old fashioned shopping excursions are not so common.

Only a small fraction of the people will see any given display that a merchant may make in his show window. Weeks pass during which most of them never pass, or at least never give more than a glance at his store. But daily and weekly they look to see what he is doing in the newspaper show window.

COLLEGE ATHLETICS.

The feverish excitement of athletics, the tendency to professionalism, the neglect of real work, these are evils that prejudice many conservative people against the modern college. Yet something worth while must have been done for physical culture in this country, to attract the interest of the imperial commission just over from Germany to study our college system of physical training.

These visitors will find some magnificently equipped plants for turning out educated men with sound bodies. These they may well copy. But if they look below the surface, the yiwll find, alas, that the principal product is a small group of highly trained athletes for inter-collegiate contests. The other students stand on the side lines and "holler." This may develop lung capacity, but gives no general exercise.

If one of the picked band of athletes has a sore toe, the newspaper discuss the extent and progress of his ailment. But 500 men in the same university may be so neglecting their physical development, for which these enormously expensive plants are really given, that they could not walk five miles without becoming winded. Yet that fact is never mentioned.

One suggestion of the college athletic reformers, to provide a more general physical development of the men, is that no colleges be allowed to form colleges teams until the last month of the season, and that athletics previously be restricted to inter-club and inter-class competitions. That would promote more general athletics work, but imagine the uproar such a rule would create.

Why not require every undergraduate to spend a given amount of time each day in some approved athletic sport? Hundreds of college men who now walk out of the scholastic portals with flabby muscles and disordered nerves would then acquire some physical capital with which to begin their battle with the world.

THE UNSEEN MIRACLE.

The angel of the night, when night was gone,
High upon heaven's ramparts cried "The dawn!"

And wheeling worlds grew radiant with the one
And undiminished glory of the sun.

And angel, seraph, saint and cherubim
Raised to the morning their exultant hymn.

All heaven thrilled anew to look upon
The great recurring miracle of dawn.

And in the little worlds beneath them men
Rose, yawned and ate and turned to toil again.

All Europe an Armed Camp; Sinister Meaning Now In "Compensation"

MORE THAN AT ANY TIME SINCE WATERLOO, EUROPE IS AN ARMED CAMP. THE TALK OF THE CLUBS, THE ARTICLES IN THE PRESS ARE ALL OF PEACE AND PREPARATIONS FOR WAR.

The unequaled thrift of the French people makes France the world's banker. They save five hundred millions of dollars a year, which they put into the hands of a syndicate of their bankers to invest. There is now over a thousand millions of dollars in France awaiting investment and hoarded because EUROPE IS A POWDER MAGAZINE AND PLENTY OF FOOLS AROUND WITH MATCHES and because of DEEP DISTRUST OF AMERICAN SECURITIES.

THE MOST SORDID WAR OF MODERN TIMES IS THAT OF BULGARIA AGAINST HER ALLIES, GREECE AND SERVIA, AND HER FRIEND, ROUMANIA.

A patriotic war to free kindred people from the intolerable oppression of the Turks becomes a fratricidal strife in which over a hundred thousand men were killed in three weeks over the division of the spoils, and the atrocities perpetrated upon the inhabitants of the villages and the farmers in the country have made by comparison almost an angel of the "terrible Turk."

An old word has acquired a NEW AND SINISTER MEANING IN OLD WORLD DIPLOMACY. It is "COMPENSATION." When either of the great powers covets territory another possesses it claims that it has not its fair share and wants "COMPENSATION." That word is playing the mischief with The Hague tribunal.—Leslie's.

SPENT MONEY RECKLESSLY

Youth Who Cut Wide Swath Sought by Employes

CASHIER AND $50,000 GONE

Amount of Defancation From Flour Company May Reach $150,000—Remarkable Dual Life Led by "Boy Millionaire" and His Bride—Lived Like Royalty In Summer Colony

New York, Sept. 10.—John Schildknecht, 22 years old, cashier of the export department of the Washburn-Crosby Flour company, has vanished from the splendid suite he occupied in the Garden City hotel.

With him has vanished the woman who, as his bride, was a social leader of the summer colony, whose gowns were the wonder of even that exclusive coterie, and whose jewels outshone the treasures of millionaires.

Also, there has disappeared $50,000 from the treasury of the New York office of the Washburn-Crosby company. That is, $50,000 has been proved to be missing. The total defalcation may be $150,000.

A fugitive with a price upon his head—the youth who for a luxurious summer lived as a potentate and worked as a $20-a-week clerk—is hidden in New York or fleeing to some foreign port.

Never, in a city famous for striking contrasts, for dual lives, for splendid "bluff," has any one accomplished the looting of one of the mightiest firms in the world with the finesse, fortitude and savoir faire of this boy of 22 years.

Fifteen hundred dollars is offered for his capture—$1000 by the United States Fidelity and Guaranty company, his bondsmen, and $500 by the Washburn-Crosby firm. Fifteen hundred dollars was the pin money of an evening's pleasure for young Schildknecht and his beautiful bride.

Possibly a dinner for ten would cost them less than $500, but very seldom; and the entertainment afterwards, the expensive singers, the exclusive ballroom privileges, the reckless wagering in the billiard room and the rich favors for the women guests brought always a splendid total that would have made the hotel clerks hesitate if the cash had not been always on hand.

The double-life drama was exquisitely staged. It was at the bustling subway station at Atlantic avenue, Brooklyn, that the daily transformation took place.

Each morning a big gray touring car—Schildknecht's own car, not the one that was alloted exclusively to his bride's use—slid up to the gates of the Garden City hotel.

"The boy millionaire," as he was called by every one in Garden City, would come bustling from the door and would be whisked over to Brooklyn.

In the subway he went across to his work at 17 Battery place. He was a common clerk. He toiled throughout the day at a high desk, kept expert accounts, handled hundreds of thousands of dollars and allowed his employers to have what he thought he could spare from the profits.

In the evening he took the subway back to Atlantic avenue. The motor car awaited him. Sometimes the wife waited in the car. A new world opened. They motored from $20 a week to $500 a minute.

Schildknecht paid $115 a week for his suite at the Garden City hotel. By every one there he was regarded as a millionaire. But over in Brooklyn, in a dingy apartment, his parents eked out a hard-won existence on the $7 a week his father earned as a bank watchman.

Two motor cars and two maids were part of the establishment of the $20-a-week clerk at Garden City. He spent money wildly. Ten dollars a hair was a minimum bet at pool, and the tips he distributed were reckless.

Suspicion had been fixed upon him, and he had shrewdly intercepted mail bearing on the matter. When he realized that there was no chance of eluding accusation he fled with his bride.

WHITE SLAVE SHOWS BARRED IN GOTHAM

"The Lure" and "The Fight" Withdrawn From the Stage

New York, Sept. 10.—The curtain was rung down yesterday afternoon on the two red-light melodramas which have upset New York during the last week. Upon advice of counsel, the Shuberts told Chief Magistrate McAdoo they would withdraw "The Lure," and the Henry B. Harris estate took similar action regarding "The Fight."

In each play spades are called spades and the story of the white slave is given in great detail. Both theatres were dark last night.

As to further action against the producers of the plays, the cases will be referred to the court of special sessions and the grand jury. Special performances will be given for the benefit of the grand jurors, who will then decide as to possible prosecution.

Petersburg, and for more than six months following was in confinement at Libby Prison, Belle Isle, Salisbury Andersonville, Savannah, Florence, Mellen, Charleston and St. John's College hospital. When discharged from the hospital July 2, 1865, he had been reduced in weight during his imprisonment from 199 to 96 pounds.

After his return home, when his health permitted, Mr. Hayden resumed his trade and followed it for a number of years. He was then appointed inspector by the Board of Health, a position, which he held for six or seven years. Then he became a permanent patrolman on the police force. In 1893 he was appointed Chief of Police and performed the duties incumbent on the office most satisfactorily to the people of Quincy and with credit to himself for several years.

Although not actively engaged in business since he completed his last term as chief of police, he has done some constable work, and was for many years the constable to whom the venires were sent for the drawing of jurors.

Mr. Hayden is survived by a widow. For many years they lived on Sargent lane, off Howard avenue but recently sold their property to the Fore River Ship building Corporation and have resided on Quincy avenue.

Mr. Hayden was a member of Paul Revere Post 88, G. A. R.; Mt. Wollaston lodge, I. O. O. F.; George L. Gill Rebekah lodge; and Dalphi lodge, K. of P., of Weymouth.

FOREST NOTES.

Switzerland has four co-operative associations for the growing and marketing of forest products.

The U. S. forest service is using gasoline railway speeders for fire protection purposes. They follow up trains on steep grades where sparks thrown out by forced draft are likely to start fires along the right of way.

Forest officers have found that high power telescopes are not always satisfactory in fire-lookout work. In some localities heat vibrations in the atmosphere are so magnified by the glass that clearer vision can be had with the unaided eye.

At the national conservation congress to be held in Washington, November 18-20, the subject of forestry will be handled by a main committee, with sub-committees which will report on federal and state forest policies, forest taxation, fires, lumbering, planting, utilization, forest schools, and scientific forest investigations.

Elk have been found in the Uinta national forest, Utah, for the first time in many years. Since they are not from shipments from the Jackson Hole country to neighboring forests, the state and federal officials are gratified at this apparent increase in big game, as the result of protection.

LAWN PARTY.

A very enjoyable lawn party was given Tuesday evening by Miss Ethel Thomas at her home on Billings road. The lawn was decorated to represent a Japanese garden. Games were enjoyed during the evening and shortly after 10 o'clock the guests adjourned to the house where refreshments were served. Vocal and piano solos were given by Edwin Wallace and Harold Cole.

Dust on electric light globes robs them of their light-giving efficiency.

HONOR GERMAN EMPRESS.

Unveil New Monument to Augusta Victoria at Sangerhausen.

Germany, that land of monuments, recently unveiled a most magnificent and elaborate statue honoring the Empress Augusta Victoria.

The sculpturing is the work of Arnold Kuenne, a famous Berlin artist. It is a bust of heroic size, surmounting a tapering shaft. The monument is of solid granite and required a long time to complete. It is considered to be one of the most beautiful monuments in all Germany, and during the unveiling exercises a magnificent tribute was paid to the empress, showing in what high esteem she is held.

This monument is situated in Sangerhausen and was placed directly at the foot of the Kyffhauser monument, surrounded by the famous rose gardens, which are said to contain upward of 18,000 rose trees.

POLICEWOMAN'S COSTUME.

Uniform of Blue Is Simple, Yet Distinguished and Odd.

The uniform worn by the policewomen of Chicago is unique and easily distinguished from the costumes worn by other women. The female officers carry neither a billet nor a pistol.

POLICEWOMAN IN UNIFORM.

Their dress consists of a vest, skirt and half length coat. The material is blue. The vest, buttoned down the front, is tight and fits close around the neck. The skirt is perfectly plain, with the exception of a hem at the bottom. The coat is likewise plain.

The officers are provided with a bag, which is attached to the belt. This takes the place of a hand bag. The hat is very different from those worn by civilians. Plumage and other ornaments are barred.

The policewomen in Chicago have been on duty long enough to demonstrate their worth to the city. They are especially active in protecting members of their own sex, and their beats are usually around some public amusement place or dance hall where young girls congregate, frequently unescorted.

WILLIAMS WILL CASE

Creditors Objected to Appointment of One Executor

A protracted hearing was held before Judge Flint at the probate court this morning on allowing and approving the will of George E. Williams late of Braintree and the appointing of an executor. It was brought out at the hearing that the estate was hopelessly insolvent, although it was supposed to amount to a million dollars.

There were a dozen or more prominent lawyers present at the hearing, representing creditors to the amount of between $600,000 and $700,000.

During the hearing it was intimated that much of the paper of the deceased was questionable, and while some of it was secured, a very large part was unsecured. It was also intimated that some of the notes had been raised and that the estate was a most complicated one.

In the will which had been filed for probate, Atherton Hunt, a Weymouth lawyer was named as executor, but there was considerable objection to his appointment on the part of some of the creditors. Others did not object and were willing that he should be appointed. One of the lawyers made a statement that the sum of $5,000 had been received by Mr. Williams shortly before he died and he wanted to know what had become of it.

Mr. Hunt resented the assertion that had been indirectly made that he knew something of this amount.

After considerable argument the court said that he felt that the wishes of the minority creditors should be respected. That if Mr. Hunt would decline to serve that it would appoint another executor otherwise the court would appoint special administrators with will annexed.

The main objection of counsel present was against Mr. Hunt serving alone as executor. In reply to a question by the court if it appointed Mr. Hunt alone, there would be an appeal, counsel intimated that there would. This would serve to tie up the estate for some time.

Mr. Hunt in reply to the court declined to resign saying that he would not get out while under fire. He also resented the intimation that had been filed by a letter at the probate office at Dedham, in relation to the $5,000.

From a show of hands about 90 per cent of the creditors were willing that Mr. Hunt should serve alone.

The court then said that it would appoint special administrators with will annexed and that one of these administrators would be Mr. Hunt. To this all agreed.

The question than came on the second administrator. Several names were suggested by the counsel present but there was objection on the part of some of the counsel to each. The court then suggested that counsel retire and agree upon the second man.

As this suggestion did not seem to be considered seriously by the counsel the court said that he would give counsel the court said that he would give counsel 48 hours in which to agree upon the second man and if they did not agree he would select the second man.

In the meantime the probating of the will was held in abeyance.

Ignorance, carelessness, and drink are the causes of a majority of the accidents by sea and land in the summer season. Even sunstrokes do not come to healthy and temperate people who work discretely. The most strenuous games are played in the hottest days without disaster. Men who take to the water and sail with skill and good judgment seldom run risks or suffer from the violence of wind and wave. Careful observers have noted the fact that in the autumn they who are most likely to suffer from neuralgia, rheumatism, and the like are the people who throughout the summer have kept cool and quiet, while they who have toiled and played and sweated go on to meet the approaching winter all the better for their cheerful exposure to the sun, the wind, and the weather. Something of everything, but not too much of anything, is an admirable rule for the summer days.—Christian Register.

—Florentine Pelletier, one of the engineers in charge of the construction of the Minot's lede lighthouse, died lately at his home in Plainfield, N. J. aged 88 years. He was a native of Boston.

—Broctkon women are said to be engaged in a crusade against high car steps because they object to displaying hosiery. It is suggested that if they padded it or darned it they might not be so squeamish.

Temperature of the Body.

The heat of the body varies at different ages and different times of the day. Except when you are suffering from fever you are never so hot as when you are born. The temperature of a newborn baby is about 102 degrees, but during the first day it rapidly goes down to 97½ degrees, rising again to a little above the average temperature of a grownup person, which is about 98½ degrees. The heat of your body varies as much as two degrees in twenty-four hours. The minimum is reached about 4 o'clock in the morning, when your vitality is at its lowest, and the maximum about 4 in the afternoon. People who work by night and sleep during the day, however, are coldest in the afternoon and warmest in the early morning. It is a remarkable fact that we nearly always die if our blood varies more than a few degrees either way. A temperature below 95 degrees or above 106 degrees is generally fatal.—Pearson's.

Criminals and Crime.

Is the criminal so because he wants to be so? No more wicked fallacy was ever foisted upon a credulous world than this. Nobody at any period of the world ever wished to be criminal. Every one instinctively hates and fears crime. Every one is honest by nature. It is inherent in the soul. I have never met a criminal who did not hate his crime even more than his condemners hate it. The apparent exception is when the man does ont consider his act a crime. He has killed because his victim exasperated him to it. He has robbed society because society made war on him. The offender hates his crime.

But he is not ashamed of it?

Now, that is true. He is not ashamed of it in the current sense. He hates it, he fears it, but it does not fill him with a sense of sin.—H. Fielding Hall in Atlantic Monthly.

Why Not Schools For Men?

No man ever feels the need of education so much as the man who sees opportunity for advancement open before him, but who does not dare to take it for fear that he can not rise to it. It is useless to say anything to such a man about neglected opportunities, and it is equally futile to say the same thing to the youth who is neglecting his studies. The first cannot go back and live his boyhood over; the latter cannot comprehend his danger, nor will he believe in his own possibilities, nor can he really study intelligently things for which he is not sufficiently mature. The few who mature early enough in life to go through technical schools or colleges are provided for. Can we not provide men's schools for those who mature normally?—American Magazine.

A City That Was a Failure.

Of all the seven cities of Asia perhaps Sardi has the most interesting and romantic history, and yet, with all its natural advantages, its wealth, its famous rulers, its wise counselors, its victorious armies, it was the greatest failure of them all, says the Christian Herald. The richest man in the world, Croesus, was king of Sardis; the wisest man, Solon, was her guest, and yet, through overconfidence and lack of watchfulness, time and again it was surprised, conquered and all but destroyed, until at last the disintegrating rock and soil from its own citadel, loosened by the winter rains and hurled down by destructive earthquakes, buried the city thirty feet deep from the sight of man. It became a dead city, and it was buried by the forces of nature.

Regulating His Sleep.

John Wesley recognized the evils of oversleeping and gave a recipe whereby one may find out how much sleep he really wants. It was derived from experience. "I waked every night about 12 and lay awake for some time, and I readily concluded that this arose from my being longer in bed than nature required. I procured an alarm, which waked me next morning at 7 (an hour earlier than I rose the day before), yet I lay awake at night. The next morning I rose at 6; notwithstanding, I lay awake the second night. The third morning I rose at 5, nevertheless lay awake. The fourth morning I rose at 4, as I have done ever since, and I lay awake no more."—London Chronicle.

No Matter Who.

A party of women were being escorted through the state house the other day by a bowing and scraping guide. The women were of the enthusiastic type and raved over this and that and said, "Oh, simply too gorgeous." Finally they were shown the portrait of a former governor.

"Oh, superb, isn't it?" said one of them, "and an excellent likeness too. A portrait of whom did you say it was?"—Boston Traveler.

The Fishless Fisherman.

"So you took a day off from your work and went fishing?"

"Yes," replied the man who insists on being cheerful.

"Have any luck?"

"Certainly. A day off is luck enough."—Washington Star.

A Wafer.

"What," asked the teacher, "is the meaning of the word 'wafer?'"

"A wafer," replied Maurice, aged nine, "is a kid without any father or mother."—Chicago News.

But Which Is Which.

Willie—Paw, what is the difference between firmness and obstinacy? Paw—Merely a matter of sex, my son."—Cincinnati Enquirer.

EVERETT C. BENTON

Candidate for the Republican Nomination for Governor

Everett C. Benton, of Belmont, last year surprised every one familiar with political conditions by entering the contest for the Republican nomination for Governor at the eleventh hour, and almost winning the nomination from a man who had been in the running for that office for more than one year at least. As the result of a brief campaign of a few weeks, he secured nearly 50,000 votes in the primaries and by the hearty support he later gave to his opponent at the polls, won the respect and admiration of all Republicans.

Mr. Benton's strong showing of last year, and his straightforward conduct and loyal support of his successful opponent have made him the logical candidate of the party at this time. Both his supporters of last year and many of those who then favored his opponent feel that he is today the most available man to lead the fight for the party next November.

He was born in Guildhall, Vt., Sept.

25, 1862, and was of humble parentage, coming from revolutionary stock. His inheritance was mental and physical rather than financial.

When he left the village school at the age of sixteen, he had before him the task of making a living and sought employment in the office of the old "Essex County Herald," where he served his apprenticeship and later worked as a journeyman printer. In the Boston Public Library may be found a sample of his work, which consists of "The History of Guildhall, Vermont," which young Benton himself wrote and printed Ambition urged him into larger fields, and when nineteen he arrived in Boston and secured employment in the insurance office of John C. Paige.

His strict application to the insurance business soon brought its reward, and he became head of one of the departments in the office, and with the reorganization which came on the death of John C. Paige, was admitted to partnership in its then extensive business. Together with his partners he worked untiringly, and his firm is now the largest general insurance office east of New York. Seeking further fields of activity, a few years ago he organized The Massachusetts Fire and Marine Insurance Company.

In addition to his experience in general business he is not without experience in the affairs of the State, having served in the Governor's Council and upon the Governor's staff.

He has always been a fighter in both business and politics, and one of his most memorable battles was in 1904. At that time Governor Foss being an enrolled Republican, was a candidate for Delegate-at-Large to the National Republican Convention which subsequently nominated Col Roosevelt as President. Colonel Benton displayed in this political fight the same vigorous and uncompromising qualities which have made him such a successful figure in business. He was loyally supported by his many friends, and was successful.

In his home town of Belmont he has offered himself for public service, and has many times been called to act as moderator at town meetings

He was appointed by Governor Guild a member of the Metropolitan Park Commission, and has consistently advocated, and caused to be adopted, rules and regulations permitting a freer use of the parks by the public, and making all the reservations more available to the people.

Some years ago he purchased the Cushing estate at Belmont for a family home, and after restoring the gardens, posted at the entrance invitations admitting the public Through his generosity his estate has been thrown open for benefits in aid of the Boston Floating Hospital Daughters of Massachusetts, Peabody Home for Crippled Children, Florence Crittenden Home, The Tyler Street Hospital for Babies, South End Day Nursery, the Cambridge Tuberculosis Work, and many similar charities The first funds for the purpose of installing nurses in the Boston Public school were raised at a benefit held on Mr. Benton's estate.

Colonel Benton in 1885 married Miss Willena Rogers. He has six children, two of whom are married

Colonel Benton is the most democratic of men,—in fact, it would have been hard for a man of his upbringing to be otherwise. His own early struggles have taught him to sympathize with others situated as he was, and who are striving to rise in the world. His life has been full of intelligent and successful effort to lend a hand, and he has exemplified in business, and in every relation of life, the theory that he prospers most who helps others to rise with him.

His election as Governor guarantees the state a constructive business administration. He will bring to the office of Governor the aggressive qualities and keen insight into business which have marked his entire career, and what is perhaps fully as important, he will never forget in his dealings with men to temper justice with human sympathy and broad charity.

NEWSY BRIEFS

Mr. McLeod, one of the government employees at the shipyard who has been on a visit to England, has returned to Quincy.

Col. Henry L. Kincaide has presented the Granite City club with some souvenirs which he brought from South America. They included a stuffed turtle, alligator and a coccanut.

This morning the weather was "quite fallish" and a reminder that the summer season has gone. While we always have some fine weather in September and October, the nights will be cool and top coats will not feel uncomfortable.

Councilman Sandberg who has charge of the outing of the Bird club on Friday promises all who attend a good time. It is probable that the party will land on Peddocks island for their dinner, and those who are unable to participate in the fishing trip will join the party there.

The Norwegian Society of Quincy will celebrate its ninth anniversary at Protection hall on Sept. 20. The affair will take the form of a reunion at which former members are invited The committee is L. A. Jacobsen, Gus Lodengaard, Andrew Anderson, A. E. Olsen.

GOLF RECORD AT WOLLASTON

Brady's 64 One Better Than Tom McNamara

Sixty-four is now the record for the 18 holes of the Wollaston Golf Club. This record was made by Mike "King" Brady on Tuesday while playing with W. S. Brophy. The previous record of 65 was held by Tom McNamara.

Brady was only one stroke better than par on the outward journey, a record he has often excelled, but he did wonderful work on the homeward trip with 29, making his total 7 better than par.

The work of Brady will be better understood from the following card of the Wollaston course, which compares Brady's score with par for each hole:

ACCIDENT AT SQUANTUM

Mr. Nelson of Nelson & Olson, painters, was badly cut today when he slipped on a ladder while painting a window frame on the house owned by Gustav Wunderlich of Jamaica Plain. In slipping Mr. Nelson was thrown through a window and received a bad gash on his forearm. Dr. Ballou was hastily summoned and took the man to the hospital in his automobile.

A few families have gone back to their city homes on account of the schools opening this week. Dr. Rund and Gustav Wunderlich returned to Jamaica Plain and T. J. Harper and family to Dorchester. They will keep their Squantum homes opened through the month of September and spend week ends there.

Advertiser's Aim Is Satisfaction

By HOLLAND.

ONE of the biggest retail merchants in the world, with stores in two of America's largest cities, and who naturally is one of the largest advertisers in the world, insists that his advertisement writers confine themselves to strict truth, and any promise made by one of his clerks is considered to have been made personally by the head of the firm.

A woman bought a fine tablecloth, and after she had it home there was a slight imperfection found. It was nothing to affect the wear of the tablecloth, but she took it back, explaining that she had paid a high price for the article and that she had intended it for her "best." She was somewhat apologetic for returning a purchase with such a slight imperfection.

"You are a stranger in this city?" asked the floorwalker, and the woman nodded. "I thought so," he said. "You do not understand our system. Had you kept that tablecloth you would have done yourself and us an injustice. When you buy here you must be satisfied. If you are dissatisfied for any reason you are not fair to us unless you tell us and give us a chance to satisfy you."

That spirit is behind big advertisers everywhere. It is another reason for doing business with advertisers.

GRILL ELLIOTT ON BOND ISSUE

Suggested That New Haven Road Sell Its Trolleys

PUT UP TO ITS PRESIDENT

Amount of Defalcation From Flour Be Followed as Plan For Raising Money—New Head "Not In Position to Give Opinion at This Time," He Tells Questioners

Boston, Sept. 10.—The question of the New Haven road's future policy in regard to the recommendations of the interstate commerce commission that the road divest itself of its steamship and trolley lines was put squarely up to President Elliott by Public Service Commissioner Anderson when the commission held its public hearing on the New Haven's petition for authority to issue $67,000,000 in bonds.

President Elliott, who admitted that the road was in a critical condition, was asked by the commissioner if he thought it fair to ask the commission's approval of a bond issue of this size when no mention had been made by the road of raising money by disposing of steamship and trolley lines in accordance with the advice of the interstate commerce commission.

To both these questions Elliott answered that he had been in his new position so short a time that he was not prepared to go into those phases of the situation.

"Don't you think," said Anderson, "that this board should take into consideration the requirements of congress and the other government boards in deciding this question?"

"I think," said Elliott, "that that is something for the commissioners themselves to decide."

"If you propose to comply with these mandates in regard to your subsidiaries is there any foundation whatever for your petition for the right to borrow this money?"

Elliott again stated that he was not in a position to give an opinion at this time.

At the conclusion of his remarks earlier in the hearing, Elliott was questioned at considerable length by Attorney Brown, counsel for the commission. He was asked as to the practices on other roads in raising money and was asked if he knew that several roads had in the past few years been able to raise amounts from their stockholders. Elliott said he was not familiar with any financing except that of the Northern Pacific.

He was then examined as to charges for depreciation, a subject which was made much of at the recent interstate commerce commission hearing.

Elliott said that on various roads different methods were used for charging on depreciation. In cases of locomotives, he said, he would charge on each year a fair amount based on the value of the engine.

He was then asked if his attention had been called to the recent investigation of his road by the commerce board. The witness said he had read Commissioner Prouty's report, but had not studied it carefully.

Leading stockholders, an array of counsel and officials of the New York, New Haven and Hartford railroad lined up in factions for and against the New Haven's proposed issue of $67,000,000 bonds when the new public service commission opened its hearing in the railroad commissioners' offices on the road's petition for authority to issue the bonds.

LOSS IS $2,250,000

Report on Hot Springs Conflagration Distributes the Blame

Hot Springs, Ark., Sept. 10.—According to a statement made public here by J. S. Speed, manager of the Arkansas Actuarial bureau, the property loss in the recent great fire was $2,250,000, with the insurance loss placed at $1,500,000.

Thirty-two and one-half blocks were burned, including 518 buildings. Of these eighty-three were brick, twelve brick veneered and 423 frame.

The report places blame for the rapid spread of the flames on poor building construction, inefficient water system, poor fire-fighting equipment, as compared with standard recommendations, and treacherous winds.

COMPLAINTS WILL BE INVESTIGATED

Inquiry on Child Labor Law Planned By Committee

Boston, Sept. 10.—Because of the widespread complaint of the effect of the new child labor law, particularly in the industrial centres of the state, the special house committee appointed to investigate conditions surrounding the employment of women and children in Massachusetts decided to make a tour of inspection in the leading textile centres for the purpose of securing first-hand information as to the attitude of employers toward the new statute.

Information was brought to the committee by certain representatives to the effect that hundreds of minors in their respective cities have been discharged because of the new law. They declare that in view of the fact that many employers have absolutely refused to continue the employment of minors under the restrictions imposed by the legislature, they felt it would be better to wipe the statute off the books.

New Orleans, Sept. 10.—Thirty-three earth tremors in twenty-four hours jarred all the diplomatic aspirations out of Armsted N. Collier, who had been appointed secretary of the American legation at Guatemala City.

With his wife he hastened home on the steamship Coppename, landing here, and is now enroute to Washington. Collier has served as secretary in the American embassy at London. He explained that the Guatemala post did not pay enough to justify the nerveracking experiences of earthquakes.

Addie Bennett's Old Beau

Ladies' Aid Society Goes on an Errand of Mercy

By CLARISSA MACKIE

The whistle of the excursion steamer growled a warning blast. There came the thunder of hoofs down the length of the wharf, and Jimmy Bowen's white horses, wheeled gracefully and brought the long bodied stage to a standstill at the gangplank.

From the stage there descended twelve women in gala attire, each one carrying a paper wrapped shoe box containing lunch.

The Queen City moved away from the wharf with a churning foam of propeller blades, steamed out of the harbor and turned down the sound toward New York.

Mrs. Hen Tucker put her particular lunch box under her chair, removed her hat and tied a green chiffon veil over her faded hair, and thereby gave to her sallow countenance a ghastly hue.

Mrs. Hen Tucker talked incessantly—rapidly, "like a house afire," said the long suffering Henry Tucker, and she talked with her lips and her eyes and nose and chin and often with her hands, all at one and the same time.

She was speaking now to the assembled members of the Ladies' Aid society of the Second Baptist church, bound on their annual outing to the great city, but today's excursion embraced an errand of mercy, and as the errand was Mrs. Tucker's idea they allowed her to talk about it as much as she pleased.

"As I was saying," babbled Mrs. Tucker after she had tied the green veil securely and permitted herself several deep inhalations of the salt air—"as I was saying, the idea came to me like a flash one day when I was watching Addie Bennett in church. Says I to myself: 'There's Ad Bennett, the only one of the girls who went to school with me who ain't married yet. Why ain't she married?' I asked myself, and I set out to answer the question—and I found the answer!"

Mrs. Tucker beamed triumphantly on her fascinated listeners. Susan Beers nodded drowsily and shook her fat shoulders.

"If you ask why Addie Bennett ain't ever married I can answer you that it's because she couldn't find a husband!" giggled Susan sleepily.

Mrs. Hen Tucker nodded approval of this sentiment, and, taking another deep breath, she resumed her narrative:

"I found Addie Bennett had had a disappointment in her life, and I heard of it through her aunt, Lyddy Smith. Aunt Lyddy spoke free as air about it, being as it wasn't anything that concerned her personally. Seem's if Addie had a beau fifteen years ago—Hiram Decker's boy, Rob—and for some reason or other they got mad at each other and Rob went away to New York. All of his folks have been dead for years, so he never comes down to Little River no more, but some folks who have met him say that he's never married, all on account of Addie.

"When I found that out I remembered that the Ladies' Aid was going to New York on their annual picnic, and I declared that I'd put it up to you girls to see if we couldn't find Bob Decker in New York today and let him know that Addie was waiting here. It would be a great thing for us to accomplish that—bring two loving hearts together again—what say?"

The "girls," whose combined ages would have aggregated 510 years, listened attentively. Mrs. Lew Shuster nodded approval of Mrs. Tucker's noble sentiments.

"I'm willing to do my share," she said practically. "I s'pose you got some plan all worked out, Annie?"

Mrs. Tucker shook her head expressively.

"I can't somehow think of what to do. You girls have got to help me out.'

"We better divide up into batches of two. Each couple will follow up a certain clue," said Mrs. Shuster in her decided voice.

Then they all talked at once, each one outlining a different plan for the finding of Addie Bennett's old lover and bringing about a reconciliation between them.

The Queen City entered the East river all too soon for their purposes, for there was so much of interest to be observed here that all thoughts of Addie Bennett and the errand of mercy popped out of their heads until Susan Beers, gaping up at the Blackwell's island bridge, made a suggestion.

"Wouldn't it be awful if we found he'd committed some crime and was in prison on this island? Maybe he's one of them men in striped clothes over there!" she pointed dramatically with a fat forefinger.

Miss Ophelia Otis stiffened at once.

"Rob Decker was my sister's husband's nephew," she said coldly. "It would be impossible for him to enter such an institution."

Miss Beers blushed painfully. "I was only thinking," she said apologetically.

"Seems to have a bad effect on you, Susan," tittered young Ethel Shuster impertinently. "Don't think any more, please!"

"Ethel!" warned her mother.

"I don't care, ma, but it does seem so funny to think of you all feeling so sorry for Addie Bennett. She went off on the train this morning wearing a new gray suit and a white hat, and she looked real sweet and happy. I don't believe she's mourning for Rob Decker."

"Keep quiet, Ethel! Don't let me hear you dictating to your elders any more. What do you know about Addie Bennett, anyway?"

Just before the Queen City paused at the pier to let off her passengers, Mrs. Hen Tucker blushingly suggested to her companions that they spend a moment in silent prayer for the success of their mission—the finding of a husband for Addie Bennett. So the twelve ladies closed their eyes and offered up silent prayer and thereby nearly lost an opportunity to leave the boat at this point.

When the steamer had faded into the mist of river traffic the band of mercy trudged up the long pier to the blazing city streets.

"We forgot to eat our lunch!" announced Susan Beers suddenly.

"For the land's sake! What shall we do now?"

With one accord they turned to Mrs. Hen Tucker.

"What shall we do, Annie?" they asked in chorus.

Mrs. Tucker pointed a work worn thumb over her shoulder.

"Take a cross town car to Broadway and eat our lunch in the park there. Then we can separate and look for Rob Decker."

They fell into marching order and approached the electric car.

"It's dreadful hot to go skylarking all over creation hunting for Rob Decker," grumbled Mrs. Peevey.

"It ain't never too hot to do a good deed," admonished Mrs. Tucker, wriggling her nose.

"I s'pose some of us'll miss that boat," complained Susan Beers, who showed signs of weakening.

"We can go home by train then," said Mrs. Tucker valiantly.

At this moment they boarded the car, and Mrs. Lew Shuster, who was treasurer of the society, tendered the conductor a dollar bill and requested him to let them off at the park.

He eyed her indifferently and walked away.

It was Mrs. Hen Tucker who recognized the square when they reached Broadway, and she led her sisters to the little breathing space.

So the loungers in the sunny square were treated to the singular sight of twelve hot and flustered ladies and one pretty young girl eating delectable lunches out of twelve shoe boxes.

At last it was over and they were free of the shoe boxes and away from the hungry eyed loafers and ragged boys who had watched them through the meal.

Silently they walked through the square to the busiest corner of the great street.

Here it was that temptation assailed them and the Ladies' Aid society forgot the errand of mercy.

A large sightseeing bus was drawn up at the corner, and the megaphone man was blaring forth invitations to them to come and fill the remaining unoccupied seats.

The twelve eyed each other furtively, and Ethel Shuster nudged her mother's elbow.

"Oh, ma," she whispered, "let Addie Bennett find her own beau. We won't get a chance like this for another year!"

The others heard the words, and as by one accord they moved toward the bus. In five minutes the Ladies' Aid society of the Second Baptist church were riding majestically through the city streets, Addie Bennett and her one time lover quite forgotten.

It was on the return trip that something quite remarkable occurred.

The megaphone man who had shouted himself quite hoarse during the journey uptown was enjoying a little cessation from his vocal labors.

He was an undersized man, rather stoutly built, with a dark, keen face. He had a quick, glib way of speaking, but it was his slightly nasal accent that caught the keen ear of Mrs. Henry Tucker.

"Seems like I've heard that voice before, and his face is familiar," puzzled Mrs. Tucker. Then, leaning across to Mrs. Lew Shuster, she asked sharply:

"Eva, have you ever seen that megaphone feller before?"

Mrs. Shuster turned her full dark eyes on the gentleman in question and studied his face solemnly.

"I declare—it might be Rob Decker!" she whispered shrilly.

"That's what I thought—did you ever!" Mrs. Tucker's face performed its tricks in bewildering succession. "I'm going to ask him!"

"Dare you to."

Mrs. Tucker, beside whom the man was standing, nudged his elbow. He leaned down and stared under her hat.

"Hey?" he asked and then, studying her face closely, repeated in a surprised way: "Hey? Hey?"

"Air you Rob Decker?" demanded Mrs. Tucker tensely.

"I guess I am. I thought I recognized familiar faces. Is this bunch from Little River?" he grinned.

"Yes, and I guess there's some of them you know or ought to know if you're Rob Decker! Just think of your being on this bus when we was going to hunt all over New York for you."

"Hunt for me? What for?" demanded Mr. Decker, quite forgetting his job at the megaphone.

"Because—oh, well—nothing," was Mrs. Tucker's enigmatic reply, and then Mr. Decker being reminded by an indignant passenger that his duties were being neglected picked up his instrument of torture and bellowed forth information of all sorts.

In the meantime Mrs. Tucker had conveyed the news to her companions that the lost had been found. Mr. Decker was on this identical motorbus—wasn't it wonderful? Miraculous?

There wasn't one of those devout ladies who doubted that the finding of Rob Decker on the sightseeing automobile was a direct answer to that moment of silent prayer.

They all bade a friendly farewell to Robert Decker, and Mrs. Hen Tucker had a few moments' private conversation with him. Her eyes twinkled and her nose twitched and her mouth laughed as she joined her companions and boarded a car for the boat landing.

It was not until they were aboard the Queen City that she gathered them in a corner and told them of her talk with Rob Decker.

"I hadn't much time to do it in, so I says to him, says I, 'Rob, do you remember Addie Bennett?' He blushed and says he: 'I do, ma'am.' 'Well,' says I, significant like, 'Addie's never married yet and I can guess the reason why. You ain't married and I can guess the reason why, too. It ain't too late to be happy, Rob,' says I. 'I'm coming down to Little River tomorrow,' says he with a smile, 'and you get a free ride on the rubberneck wagon whenever you come to New York, Mrs. Tucker,' says he, and he went off real grateful. Now, girls!" ended Mrs. Tucker triumphantly.

"Well, we did our errand of mercy and had some fun, too," said Susan Beers reflectively; "I used to know Rob Decker myself," she went on a little jealously.

"I believe he did ask after you," remarked Mrs. Tucker, "and I says to him, 'She's as fat as ever and she ain't ever married either.'"

Susan's pale blue eyes bulged indignantly. For the moment she hated Annie Tucker; but there came a time before the winter was over that she quite forgave the sharp tongued, interfering little gossip.

"So it's to be a real romance after all," mused Mrs. Lew Shuster.

"We can congratulate ourselves. But it was my idea," babbled Mrs. Tucker triumphantly.

Ethel Shuster came up, her eyes sparkling with excitement.

"Ma, what do you suppose?" she cried breathlessly. "Addie Bennett is aboard with Mr. Farnham, the school teacher, and she just told me they were married in Brooklyn this morning—and she said I could tell you all."

The Ladies' Aid society gasped for breath and in a body turned on Mrs. Hen Tucker.

"Now!" they cried explosively.

Mrs. Tucker winced.

"Whatever are you girls going to say to Rob Decker?" she ventured intrepidly.

"It was your idea," said Mrs. Lew Shuster coldly as she led them forth to congratulate the bride and groom.

But Susan Beers' pale blue eyes were shining happily.

"We must never let him know that we actually gave that wretch nearly $2,500, Edith. He would never forgive us. I admit that I was a fool and a ninny, so don't tell me I am. I can see by the way you are looking that you're just crazy to. It's all Roxbury's fault, anyway. Why should he get up and make a speech in London without letting us know? Just see how it has placed us! I think Mr. Brock is an angel to do what he has done for you and Roxbury. Yes, my dear, you will have to confess that Roxbury is a brute—a perfect brute. I'm sure, if you have a spark of fairness in you, you must hate him. No, no! Don't say anything, Edith. You know I'm right."

"I'm not going to say anything," declared Edith angrily. "I'm going to bed."

"Edith, if you don't mind, dear, I think I'll sleep with you." After a moment of deep reflection she added plaintively: "There is so much that I just have to tell you, deary. It—it won't keep till daylight."

Bright and early in the morning the tired, harassed night farers were routed from their rooms by a demand from the management of the hotel that they appear forthwith in the private office. This order included every member of Mr. Rodney's party, excepting the Medcroft baby. Considerably distressed and very much concerned over the probable outcome of the conference, the Rodney forces made their way to the offices—not altogether in an open fashion, but by humiliatingly unusual avenues. The Rodney family came down the back stairs. Brock was solemnly ushered through the public office by Mr. Odell-Carney and Freddie Ulstervelt. It is not stretching the truth to say that they were sour and sullen, but, as may be suspected, from peculiarly different causes. At last all were congregated in the stuffy office, very much subdued and very much at odds with each other. Mr. Githens was there. Likewise the gentleman from the bank and a prominent person from the department of police.

Miss Fowler glanced about uneasily and was relieved to discover that her treacherous jailer was not there to confront her with charges. It had occurred to her that he might, after all, have tricked her into committing a crime against the government.

It was quite noticeable that Mrs. Rodney and Katherine did not speak to the Medcroft contingent—in fact, they ignored them quite completely. Mrs. Rodney was very pale and very deeply distressed. She cast many glances at the red eyed and sheepish Mr. Rodney—glances that meant much to the further torture of his soul.

"I am sorry to inform you, Herr Rodney, that the rooms which you now occupy and those of your friends are no longer at your disposal. They have been engaged for from some time this day by a"—

"Look here," interrupted Odell-Carney bluntly, "if you mean that we are not wanted here any longer, why not say so? Don't lie about it. We are leaving today, in any event, so wot's the odds? Now, come down to facts. Why are we summoned here like a crowd of school children?"

The manager looked at Mr. Githens and then at the police officer.

"Ahem! It seems that Herr Grabhetz of the police department desires to ask some questions of your party in my presence. You will understand, sir, that the hotel has been imposed upon by—by these people. It seems, also, that the bank insists upon having some light thrown upon the methods by which Mrs. Medcroft secures money on her letter of credit."

"You are welcome to all that, sir," declared Mr. Odell-Carney, "but I am interested to know just why my wife and I are brought into this affair."

"Because you are guests of Mr. Rodney, sir, I regret to state. We have no complaint against you, sir. You are well known here. The—the others are not. They are—what you call it? Humbugs! It may be that they also have swindled you!"

Mr. Rodney at this point leaped to his feet and rushed over to shake his fist in the face of the insulting hotel man. But Edith Medcroft arose suddenly like a tragedy queen and spoke, her clear, determined voice stilling the turbulent spirit of her outraged host.

"One moment, please," she said. "This all can be satisfactorily explained. No wrong has been done. It will all be cleared up in time. We"—

"In time?" interrupted the manager. "Madam, this is the time. You are here with a man who is not your husband, yet who purports to be such."

"It may throw some light on the matter if I announce that the gentleman in question is my affianced husband." It was Miss Fowler who spoke. Every one stared at her as she moved over to Brock's side.

"If you will look in the offices you will find a telegram there for me," went on Mrs. Medcroft, pale, but absolutely confident. The manager called out through the door. Absolute silence reigned while the reply was awaited.

"No telegram for Mrs. Medcroft last night or today," announced the manager sternly as he glanced through the slim bunch of blue envelopes. "There are four here for a Mr. Brock, who has not yet arrived in"—

"Brock!" shouted three voices in one.

A tall man, forgetting his English and his eyeglass, sprang forward and grabbed the telegrams from the manager's hand. "Holy mackerel! Give 'em here!" he shouted. Two eager, beautiful young women were hanging to his elbows as he ruthlessly broke one of the seals. "The chump! It's from Rox! They're all from Rox—and they are two or three days old!"

Just then the unexpected happened.

The office door opened with a bang, and the real Roxbury Medcroft stepped into the room. He halted just inside the door and looked about in momentary bewilderment.

"This is a private"— began the manager, stepping forward. A flying figure sped past him; a delighted little shriek rang in his ears. He saw Edith Medcroft hurl herself into the arms of her own husband. At the same moment Brock bounded across the room and pounced eagerly upon the welcome intruder.

"This is my husband!" cried Edith, triumph in her voice, tears in her eyes, as she faced the astonished observers. "Now, what have you to say?"

CABIN POWER BOAT BURNED

Was Anchored at Mouth of the Neponset River

The burning of the cabin power boat of Frederick Sterling of Ashmont at the mouth of the Neponset river on Tuesday evening between 9 and 10 caused a loss of $2500.

The boat, a 26-footer, was at anchor. No one was near when the fire started and it was first seen by Bartholomew O'Brien of the police boat Petrel, attached to Station 11. Fields Corner. The police hastened to the spot and were forced to cut the hawser to prevent the flames spreading to nearby craft.

The boat drifted toward the Squantum shore, lighting up the bay and the vicinity of Commercial Point and Squantum for an hour. Several boats from Savin Hill and City Point responded, but were unable to do anything to save the craft and it burned to the water's edge, the hulk washing up on the flats near Squantum.

The owner is away in Nova Scotia. Mrs. Sterling said the boat was valued at $2500. It was equipped with electric lights and all modern improvements. They had returned from a vacation at Marblehead a few days before and spent much of their time on board.

CHECK FLAMES WITH DYNAMITE

MANY PERSONS ARE HOMELESS

Hundred and Fifty Cottages, Six Hotels, Church and Amusement Places Speedily Fall Prey to Fire Which May Have Been Outcome of Long "Cottage War" of Long Duration

Salisbury Beach, Mass., Sept. 10.—A second fire that threatens to destroy the entire south end of Salisbury Beach is raging this morning. Eight cottages were destroyed within a few minutes, and as the apparatus from surrounding towns and cities had returned after the conflagration of yesterday, there is little hope of saving the rest of the cottages.

Practically the whole central part of Salisbury Beach was wiped out in a conflagration that destroyed six hotels, a church and 150 cottages last evening.

The fire was by far the most disastrous of the many that have visited the beach, and the property loss is figured at $200,000. Only by the use of dynamite to destroy cottages in the path of the flames was it finally brought under control.

Hundreds are homeless. For hours women stood shivering in the biting wind that fanned the blaze to fury, and watched the tongues of flame lick up their homes. The Salisbury hotel, the only one left standing, has been thrown open to the homeless, and cottagers whose homes were not burned have placed them at the service of the sufferers.

Policemen have been called in from surrounding towns to guard the property of the hundreds who have been rendered homeless, but despite their efforts considerable property is said to have been stolen.

Many residents of the beach believe the fire to have been of incendiary origin. They connect it with the agitation that has been conducted throughout the summer against the Salisbury Beach associates, the owners of the beach, and cite many remarks that have been made by dissatisfied cottagers to the effect that they "would rather burn their cottages than let the associates have them."

The blaze started in a photographic studio, and was immediately followed by an explosion of flashlight powder. The photographer, Arthur F. Williams, suffered burns about the hands in an attempt to extinguish the flames when they started, and has not been able to tell how he first discovered the fire.

It is believed by many persons that someone, disgruntled at the Beach associates' policies, started the fire in the studio, which is near the centre of the beach, picking a time when everything would favor a disastrous conflagration. A high wind fanned the flames.

The Cushing House, the largest hotel on the beach, was in flames within a few minutes after the studio fire started, and Louis Blanchard, who was on the third floor of the building, jumped to the street. His condition is serious.

All efforts to check the flames, once they had gained a foothold in the Cushing House, failed. The blaze jumped the street to the south, and a moment later the Atlantic House was past saving.

From that time the fire gained in giant leaps, spreading north, south and west from its place of origin.

To the west the Essex House, the Rollaway dance hall, the postoffice building, Culver's dance hall, twelve large cottages, the Hotel Comet, the police station and the Cable garage fell successively before the onslaught of the flames. To the south, along the front of the beach, a large new roller coaster near the Atlantic House caught from that building and was soon consumed. Farther down the beach forty-five cottages were destroyed.

North of the Cushing House the flames had to work against the high wind, but they had gained such headway that they crept steadily on. The Ocean View House, the Newark House, Castle Mona and four large cottages were destroyed, and only dynamite prevented further devastation.

The hotels were still fairly well filled with guests and the cottage colony populous, despite a waning season, but except for the injury to Blanchard, no person was seriously hurt.

Although the blaze grew suddenly into a conflagration, aided by the flimsy construction of many of the cottages and the brisk impulse of a northeast wind, panic was absent. Excitement ran high in the hotels, particularly in the Cushing hotel, where the start of the blaze was immediately followed by an alarming explosion of flash powder, but the guests fled in an orderly manner. Many lost all their personal belongings.

FLYER GOES INTO DITCH

Many Lives Probably Saved Because of Train's Steel Cars

New Madison, O., Sept. 10.—An all-steel train probably saved a score of persons from being killed when the Pennsylvania flyer that left New York for St. Louis was ditched by a raised rail near Wylie's Station, four miles west of here, and thirty-five persons were injured. Three, it is believed, were fatally hurt and eighteen are in a hospital.

Running at a high rate of speed the train struck a defective rail about fifty feet from the approach to a small steel bridge at the edge of Wylie's Station.

The train ran along the cross-ties until the locomotive hit one side of the bridge, tore it from its foundation and fell with it half a dozen feet to the creek bed.

Six steel coaches were flung to the other side of the track and turned over in a corn field; the first near the edge of the little stream.

Injuries to pasengers were caused almost exclusively by falling and being thrown about in the coaches, though some were cut by flying glass.

SENATE PASSES TARIFF BILL

LaFollette and Poindexter Cast Their Votes With Democrats

Washington, Sept. 10.—The Democratic revision bill passed the senate amid a burst of applause that swept down from crowded galleries and found its echo on the crowded floor of the senate. The vote was 44 to 37.

Its passage was attended with surprises in the final moments of the voting, when LaFollette, Republican, cast his vote with the Democrats, and was joined a few moments later by Poindexter, Progressive.

The Democrats had counted throughout the long tariff fight upon losing the votes of Ransdell and Thornton, Democrats, who voted against the bill because it would put sugar on the free list.

Until the names of LaFollette and Poindexter were actually called, however, no one knew definitely the stand they would take, and their votes were greeted with enthusiastic applause.

Washington, Sept. 10.—Commenting on the success of Peters, the Republican candidate for the house in the Third congressional district of Maine, Senator Smoot, Rep., said: "It means that the people of the country do not like the Democratic tariff bill and will not have it long."

Senator James, Dem., said: "If some of the Democrats had not deserted to the Republicans the outcome might have been different."

Minority Leader of the House Mann said: "The results show first that the country is decidedly strong with the Republican party."

Senator Gallinger, leader of the senate, said: "It foreshadows the doom of the Underwood tariff bill and indicates the disappearance of the Bull Moose vote."

MARVELOUS EXHIBITION

Wollaston Farmers to Show Vegetables and Fruits

What its promoters claim to be the biggest event ever held in Wollaston will start Friday evening when the Wollaston Country Fair will open on the grounds and in the vestry of the Unitarian church.

The big attraction which is interesting the farmers of Wollaston, and vicinity, whether their garden be of several acres or confined to a flower pot, are the agricultural exhibits. Here will be seen what is grown in Wollaston, and it is declared that Wollaston will take foremost rank among the soil producing communities within 45 minutes from the hub of the universe for quality if not for quantity of productions.

The exhibits will comprise fuits, vegetables and flowers, livestock, poultry and pets. There will be awards for each class and several special prizes.

Among the interesting exhibits will be some curious plants brought from China and a dahlia show. There will be an arts and crafts exhibits, with many articles for sale.

In connection with the country fair will be the usual midway, operated under the name of "Joyland Park," and in charge of those claiming to be the greatest fun-producing trust in the world.

DISTRICT COURT.

Herbert M. Federhen was fined $10 for exceeding the automobile speed limit at Milton.

William J. Clarke was arraigned for assault on William J. Pfefferkorn at Weymouth. Case continued until Sept. 13.

Timothy J. Richie was fined $10 for drunkenness at Quincy.

There is a general feeling that Diggs and Caminetti should get about five years, while if they had merely crossed county instead of state lines, five dollars and costs would be about right.

There is more Catarrh in this section of the country than all other diseases put together, and until the last few years was supposed to be incurable. For a great many years doctors pronounced it a local disease and prescribed local remedies, and by constantly failing to cure local treatment, pronounced it incurable. Science has proven catarrh to be a constitutional disease and therefore requires constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, Ohio, is the only constitutional cure on the market. It is taken internally in doses from 10 drops to a teaspoonful. It acts directly on the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. They offer one hundred dollars for any case it fails to cure. Send for circulars and testimonials.

The couple left on a trip to New York where they will spend the week end, returning via the Hudson river route, and western Massachusetts. They will live at 12 Goddard street.

NO CLUE OF BURGLARS.

No solution of the mystery surrounding the $3000 burglary at the home of James H. Stetson on School street, and several hundred dollars worth of jewelry and cut glass at the home of Frank W. Neal on Summit avenue is offered by the police who are at work on the case.

William B. Watts, former deputy police commissioner of Boston, has been retained by Mr. Stetson and Wednesday evening was seen making an examination of the premises. Chief Watts at present conducts a detective agency.

Both breaks were made in the absence of the families and were discovered by the men on their return. A correct estimate of the goods taken at the Neal home will probably be furnished the police when Mrs. Neal returns today.

SHOULD BE BUILT HERE

But Ireland Hopes to Get Contracts for Ships

Robert S. Jackson, the principal designer for Workman and Clark, the largest shipbuilding concern at Belfast, Ire, arrived in Boston, Wednesday, on the steamship Laconia, to confer with the officials of the United Fruit Company relative to the construction of eight steamers, three of which will be assigned to the new service between Boston and the Panama Canal.

The contract will probably be awarded within a few days. The steamers will be the largest yet built for the trade to the tropics, and will have accommodations for a large number of passengers.

If the United Fruit Company want to be favored in the tariff bill on bananas they should favor American shipyards on contracts for ships.

Speaking in relation to commercial topics at the Essex County Board of Trade outing at Gloucester on Wednesday, Hon. George Von L. Meyer said that in order to restore the American flag to shipping in the foreign trade, the maritime interests must be granted a subvention as is the practice of European nations. Unless that is done it is useless to hope for the restoration of the American flag to foreign commerce. He had worked for such a subsidy when postmaster general, but the opposition of the middle west had defeated the project.

TROUBLE OVER GRAPES

Assault Case Placed on File on Payment of Costs

The trouble between the Williams and Jones families at North Weymouth, who reside in the same yard, grew out of an innocent grape vine. The same man owned both houses and the two families had been told they could each have the grapes. Mr. Williams was out picking grapes last Sunday when Mrs. Jones came out and ordered him off. Words followed during which it is alleged that Mrs. Jones took a broom and banged Williams over the head. Then Mrs. Williams appeared on the scene and the next minute the two women were pulling each others hair and calling each other names that would not look well in print.

The outcome was that Mrs. Lydia B. Jones had Arthur and Susie Williams summoned into court for assault. After hearing the evidence the court said that Williams should have separated the two women. He would however place the case on file on payment of $3 costs.

NUTMEG AND MARIE L.

A. C. Jones, owner and skipper of the class A yacht Nutmeg, is out with A. W. Finlay, owner of the Marie L, and refuses to have anything more to do with him, and as a result the relative merits of these two boats will probably be undecided. An effort was made to have the two boats fight it out Wednesday at Marblehead and settle the $500 sweepstakes, but Mr. Jones would have nothing to do with it.

—Secretary of the Navy Daniels naturally and properly objects to having criminal allowed to escape a jail penalty on the understanding that they will enlist in the navy. He thinks the courts could be in better business than in making an effort to break down the morals of an essential branch of our National police. It would seem as though a judge in sentencing any criminal should carefully consider the effect of that sentence on society in general.—Waltham Free Press.

SENTENCED FOR LARCENY

Drew Pay of Another Man at City Treasurer's Office

Edward Claxton of East Milton was arrested by Officer Curtin on Wednesday for the larceny of $10 from James Quinn and incidently the City of Quincy. Quinn it appears works on the Sewer department and his wages last week amounted to $10. The City Treasurer usually goes to the place where the men are at work to pay off, but the day before pay day, Claxton walked into the Treasurer's office at City Hall and wanted to know if James Quinn's money was ready. When asked where he worked Claxton said on the sewer, and as he represented himself as Quinn he was given the latter's money and signed the name of Quinn to the pay roll. Later it developed that he was not what he represented himself and his arrest followed.

He told the court that he had been drinking at the time which accounted for his actions. The court however found him guilty and imposed a sentence of three months in the house of correction. The default on a continued case against Claxton for disturbing the peace was revoked, and he was ordered to pay a fine of $10 or be committed. As he had no money he went to Dedham.

A meeting of the Loyal Ladies of Clan McGregor took place Tuesday evening in Clan McGregor hall.

FELL INTO QUARRY

Miraculous Escape at O. T. Rogers Plant

Injuries Were Slight

Horace Jackson of 129 Marlboro street had a miraculous escape from being killed this morning when he fell over the cliff at the O. T. Rogers quarry on Willard street, landed on solid rock 30 feet below and escaped with a slight scalp wound.

Jackson, was one of three men repairing a steam pump and was standing on the bank guiding a tag rope attached to heavy pipe. When the rope snapped he fell over the side.

Fellow employees who saw the fall were panic stricken and after they recovered from their momentary fright prepared to go to his assistance. A boat was rigged and they were lowered into the hole by the derrick. When they reached Jackson they were surprised to find him sitting on the rocks and able to talk. They brought him to the surface where he was treated by Dr. John H. Ash who had been summoned.

An examination showed that he had sustained a slight scalp wound, a few body bruises and deep scratches about the hands. Jackson, despite the pleading of his friends insisted on running his automobile to his home and when he arrived he acquainted his family with the details of the accident.

The police ambulance which had been summoned was not put in commission.

Jackson is the son of Walter Jackson, superintendent of the Quincy Quarries Co. and was formerly employed by W. G. Shaw as a chauffeur. He has been directing repairs to the steam pump at the quarry.

The Atlantic fleet cruises in the Mediterranean this fall. It is hoped that it does not have any friction with the Swiss navy.

President Wilson must have felt relieved that Huera did not give him 24 hours to come down to Mexico and apologize.

In view of the recent accidents, the modern railroad car needs about the same armor plate as a battleship.

The principal difficulty experienced in running the various state governments just now is that the govornors are coming home from the conference at Colorado Springs.

Aviator Pegoud may have looped the loop in an aeroplane, but your women friends should be discouraged from trying it at cattleshow.

Much bric-a-brac is being sold as souvenirs to returning tourists, who are willing to pay high prices provided these articles are sure not to be of any use in the household.

It is strange that parents and teachers don't realize how much they are under obligation to the children for being willing to go to school.

The proposed 10 per cent income tax will be a hard blow to the millionaires, but it is believed that if they patronize the bargain sales they can live a little cheaper than they do.

The newspapers are printing cuts of Americans taking the railroad train to get out of Mexico. Fortunately such cuts can always be had without sending a photographer further than your own railroad station.

The Mexican courts will undoubtedly hold their citizens strictly responisble for destroying American property, and will require them to make gentlemanly apologies for the error.

HUMAN VIGILANCE.

Public resentment against the frightful number fatalities on American railroads is compelling a widespread installation of block signals and steel cars. The drift of comment on the wreck at North Haven, Ct., which killed 26 people and injured more than that, seems to place the first blame on faultly equipment. But the factor of human vigilance needs equal attention and daily emphasis.

One of the editors of the Railroad Gazette recently complained that the railroads give more attention to mechanical equipment than they do to the instruction of their employes.

"It impresses the thoughtful passenger as ridiculous" he writes, "to constantly watch trainmen to see that their boots are blacked and their faces shaved, but at the same time to take no adequate measures to see that men charged with the safety of passengers are not daily disobeying vital orders."

A railroad official once said to the writer, that the engineman who has had some very narrow escape from a bad wreck often makes the best kind of employe. His theory was that the man receives a valuable lesson from the results of his own carelessness. "If you discharge a fellow for a single act of carelessness," he said, "you put on a new man who has not had the experience of danger, and who keeps on making the same mistakes."

Yes, but how about the moral effect on the whole force of allowing the rules to be disobeyed without any retribution? It is possibly true in occasional cases that a trainman may be so thoroughly scared by one bad experience as to turn him into a cautious operator. It is more likely that the man is innately reckless, and will keep on until he kills both himself and his passengers. And the moral effect of dismissals must be exceedingly wholesome for the rest of the force.

RELIGIOUS JOURNALISM.

In millions of families, the denominational newspaper was long as fixed a feature as grandmother clock. If The Evangelist, Zion's Herald, or The Observer hadn't turned up Sunday, the children had nothing to read but Barnes' Notes and Pilgrim's Progress. Although the latter had exciting pictures of Apollyon and Giant Despair, yet there was usually a puzzle corner in the religious papers.

Recent changes in this field of journalism suggest how different it is today. Some papers have been given up, others are consolidating. The union of two Baptist journals, The Watchman and The Examiner, founded respectively in 1819 and 1823, is the most recent upsetting of these old family landmarks.

The old denominational weekly might involve endless drudgery of detail work. But there was a sure, steadfast audience. They would as soon neglect to pay subscriptions as forget to turn up at the accustomed pew at 10.30 Sunday morning. It was not necessary to send the most popular teacher to Europe to get new subscribers, nor to offer shiny tin clocks or rickety carpet sweepers as premiums.

Those days of sectarianism were like the intense faith of the Scotch Covenanters. The church paper was not supported so much for reasons of obligation, as because people were keenly anxious to know about the progress of their own branch of the church.

Now the sectarian spirit is weaker. Church people are not thrilled by learning that a new society of their own faith has been started at Jonesville They wish to read about humanitarian progress, and to receive spiritual inspiration.

Consequently the religious journals have grown more human. There are fewer of them, but they show better newspaper work, and are more alive to the vital problems of the day.

The Horse Needs Real Defenders; Abuse Due Mainly to Vanity

By E. H. PACKARD, General Field Agent of the American Humane Education Society

THE habitual crimes perpetrated against our friend, the horse, throughout this country and especially in the large cities, if realized by the public at large, would shock the makers and enforcers of laws into drastic action.

THERE IS NO WORSE BLOT UPON CIVILIZATION THAN THE WIDESPREAD INHUMAN, INCREDIBLY WASTEFUL TREATMENT OF HORSES BY ALL CLASSES OF PEOPLE.

Nothing but the publicity exposed evidence of the camera—in fact, nothing less than a PERSISTENT PUBLICITY CRUSADE directed at GUILTY OWNERS AND DRIVERS OF HORSES—will put an end to this shameful holdover of barbarism.

It can be proved that a VAST MAJORITY OF HORSES ARE WICKEDLY TORMENTED.

These conditions are due partly to ignorance and thoughtfulness, but MAINLY TO HUMAN LOVE OF DISPLAY AND TO GREED. Yet, with respect to the last named consideration, there is the very reverse of economy in denying a horse common comforts, which mean health, strength and willingness to work. Love of display robs the horse of his fly fighting tail, gives him the tight, torturing overcheck rein; the close, monogrammed blinders—which actually do "blind" him in time—and the absurdly heavy harness.

HORSES NEED OUT AND OUT FIGHTERS FOR THEIR RIGHTS. THE ANIMALS' FRIENDS ARE TOO APOLOGETIC.

Influential animal tyrants BULLDOZE THE PUBLIC AND FLOUT ALL HUMANE SUGGESTIONS; hence these cruelties continue to exist.

THAW THRUST OVER BORDER

Canada Rids Herself of Troublesome Matteawan Fugitive

IS HELD IN NEW HAMPSHIRE

Speeds Aimlessly For Fifty Miles Before Being Halted at Colebrook—"Detained," but Charged With No Crime—Special Guard Furnished to Prevent Being Kidnapped

Colebrook, N. H., Sept. 11.—Harry K. Thaw, fugitive from Matteawan, slept on American soil last night, barricaded in a hotel room here, after one of the most exciting days in his career.

Thaw's lawyers late yesterday afternoon applied for a writ of habeas corpus before Superior Judge Chamberlain. He will hear the application today.

Sheriff Drew admitted that he was holding the prisoner without any warrant and was worried lest he be forced to release him.

"Any action I may take in the Thaw case will be governed largely by the recommendations of Attorney General Tuttle," said Governor Felker at Portsmouth.

Felker said he had received no official notification as yet of Thaw's presence in the state. Attorneys for Thaw had, he said, telephoned him from New York asking for a hearing in behalf of their client before any action on the proposed extradition proceedings against him should be taken.

"In this, as in all other matters of the kind, I rely on the attorney general for legal advice," the governor said. He added that, in his opinion, it is discretionary with the governor whether to grant a hearing or not.

Thrust unexpectedly over the Canadian border despite the writ of habeas corpus demanding his production before the king's bench in Montreal next Monday, Thaw was for three hours a free man, and during that time drove madly in an automobile for fifty futile miles through the hills of Vermont and New Hampshire. Near noon he ran into the arms of a New Hampshire sheriff and was brought to Colebrook, where he retained counsed to resist extradition.

William T. Jerome rushed to Colebrook on a special train and will assume charge of the case for New York state, seeking to have Thaw, as a ward of the state, returned to Matteawan.

Meanwhile Thaw is "detained," charged with no crime, held on no warrant. Fearing kidnapping, at the hands of officers from New York, he asked for a special guard, and Chief of Police Kelley swore in twelve special deputies, all armed. They patrolled the streets about Thaw's hotel.

The fugitive telegraphed lawyers far and near and purposes to fight the return to Matteawan to the bitter end. He is afraid of Jerome, however, and when he heard that his former prosecutor was coming, asked for the special guards.

Thaw's removal from the immigration quarters at Coaticook was sudden and dramatic.

Three men who said they represented G. J. Doherty, the dominion minister of justice and acting minister of the interior, appeared before 8 o'clock. Thaw was asleep. They awoke him, commanded him to dress and, after a struggle in which he tried to brain one of them with a glass tumbler, took him to the border.

Thaw screamed as they brought him down the stairway. "Don't let them kidnap me," he cried. "Save me, for God's sake."

Silent, determined, the officers held him firmly and, struggle as he might, he had to go. A few minutes after 8 o'clock he was on his way to the border. Instead of a protracted legal battle in the Canadian courts, his case, as far as Canada was concerned, was over in a twinkling.

Thaw's appeal against the order of deportation returned last week has been denied and writ or no writ, Canada was to be rid of him at once.

Back on American soil again and temporarily a free agent, Thaw hardly knew what to do with his newfound liberty. In the absence of such guiding counsel as he has grown accustomed to in the last five years, with no one to lean upon, he marked for himself the erratic path of his automobile journey out of Vermont and into New Hampshire, which ended with his detention in a Colebrook hostelry.

The matter of Thaw's extradition from New Hampshire is uncertain. His lawyers contend that there must first be produced a requisition warrant from the governor of New York. Attorney General Tuttle is on the scene and he will doubtless make a report on the case to Governor Felker.

Fourteen Lives Lost When Disaster Overtakes Zeppelin Airship

Helgoland, Sept. 11.—Torpedo boat destroyers remain at the scene of an airship catastrophe, in which fourteen officers and men out of a crew of twenty-one perished when the new German marine dirigible, Zeppelin L-1, while flying from the German coast to this island, was wrecked in a hurricane.

The airship when struck by the gale was flying at a height of from 4200 to 5000 feet. The entire amount of water ballast was thrown overboard, but the airship failed to respond, and fell into the sea.

This is the twelfth accident of a serious character which has befallen the Zeppelin type. For nearly twenty years Count Zeppelin has been working on the perfection of his dirigible, despite the constant series of reverses.

PERRY IS HONORED BY RHODE ISLAND

Centennial of Great Victory Fittingly Observed

Newport, R. I., Sept. 11.—Three volleys from a naval firing party crashed over the grave of Commodore Oliver H. Perry and a bugler from the coast artillery company at Fort Adams sounded taps while a great crowd stood with bared heads as Rhode Island honored the centennial of the commodore's victory on Lake Erie.

Beside the grave was the hero's sword which had been escorted through the streets by detachments representing the army and navy, the Grand Army and various civic bodies. The sword rested on a gun caisson covered with a blue flag on which were the famous words: "Don't give up the ship." Bishop Darlington of Harrisburg delivered the eulogy.

At the hour when the British surrendered to the commodore at Lake Erie the batteries at Fort Adams and training station thundered a salute of twenty-one guns. The house where Perry was born in Washington square was gaily decorated.

Portion of the $50,000,000 Crop-Moving Fund Given to Banks

Washington, Sept. 11.—The treasury department has deposited about $5,000,000 of the $50,000,000 of government funds to be distributed to assist in moving crops, principally in Washington, Baltimore and southern cities.

Delay in getting the money out, it is said, is due entirely to the banks, many of them erroneously filling out the form desgned to protect the government. The work is now said to be progressing and as fast as the security is being approved the money is being distributed.

OPEN LETTER TO JUDGE AVERY

Alex D. Smith Writes Relative to Cleaning Granite

Hon. Albert E. Avery,
Judge District Court:

Dear Sir: I did not hear you speak the words last Monday morning, saying I should be restrained from using any more acid on Granite, hence this letter.

I would like, Judge, if you could spare one hour, to have you come to South Quincy, to any yard where their is an old monument. If I cannot restore it to its first natural beauty quickly and artistically without any yellow or other imperfections (whether it be six hours after, six days or six months) then I should be restrained from using the acid.

If you prefer to go to South Braintree and look for yourself, or telephone if you like. I hear you say, I don't have to go to Braintree; I can see our Court House and City Hall. I own I am beat on the Court House. Nothing short of a miracle could do it. The stain is at least three quarters of an inch in the stone. It is too much for any cleaning process that I know of. One can clean it but the sun will draw it out again. It can be kept white with twa days labor once a month. This is the only solution I can give you.

City Hall is quite different, City Hall is not finished. It only got one wash, and I have always found a yellow tinge appear after the first wash, which absolutely disappears after second wash.

I am perfectly willing to go up against any man in or out of Quincy in the cleaning process and take a chance. I have the best cleaning fluid known to the business which I have greatly improved since I first started to use it.

Hoping you will pardon the liberties taken, I remain respectfully your humble servant.

Alex D. Smith.

TO PARADE IN BOSTON.

A meeting of the Sons of St. George was held Wednesday evening in Clan McGregor hall. It was voted that the members attend the convention of the Supreme lodge in a body. The convention is to be held in Boston on October 7. In the evening the local members will participate in a parade through Boston's streets marching to Tremont Temple, where a mass meeting will be held. Although Feb. 20, 1914, is a long time ahead the order is beginning to make preparations for the minstrel show and ball on that date. The committee promises that the success of this one will eclipse that of all the others.

ACTIVITY OF THE EAGLES.

Plans for the organization of a building association and the erection of a clubhouse and hall were considered by John Adams Aerie of Eagles Wednesday evening. Over 100 were present and in the absence of President John J. Feeley, Vice President Frank J. Duff presided.

So successful was the report of the committee that had charge of the Labor Day clam bake it was voted to present them with an emblem at the next meeting.

A communication from the Brockton aerie extended invitations to the officers to attend their clam bake at Sylvan grove, New Bedford.

John A. McDonnell, conductor of the degree team is in New York for an indefinite period, and Hugh McLeod was temporarily chosen for the office.

Past President James J. Mellen who recently returned from the National convention at Baltimore gave a lengthy report on the proceedings which will be considered at the coming meetings.

A Little Talk On Good Flour

THE People are usually right. Years ago their demand for white flour caused expert food specialists to give wheat flour the most critical and through tests and analyses.

Many varieties of wheat were milled, the different parts of each microscopically examined, made into dough—baked into bread. The results were tabulated and compared.

These results proved the people were right—the whitest flour made from the best hard wheat contained the most gluten—the highest food value—made more loaves—ran more evenly—could always be depended on. The woman who always bought this kind never had a baking day failure. Her oven might not be just right, but somehow the bread always was. Such flour is less affected by temperature than the ordinary blended, carelessly ground kind.

In making IVORY WHITE FLOUR the manufacturers have taken advantage of what people want and science has shown how to attain.

IVORY WHITE FLOUR never varies and your bread may always be good. Order a bag today.

HIGH SCHOOL RECORD

Enrolment is Now Over 900 Mark

Furniture For Adams

The enrolment of the public schools has gone steadily forward, and a considerable gain has been shown since the figures were published last week.

The High school has gone far in advance of the 900 mark for the first time in its history, and new pupils are being enrolled every day. In every room on the lower floor chairs have been placed in front of the rows of school desks, to accommodate the overflow and even the science lecture room is now utilized as a study room to its full capacity. Certain rooms, of course, like the laboratories, drawing rooms, gymnasium, etc., are not available as study rooms, but aside from these every room in the building is being utilized to the utmost. After two or three months have passed, the usual withdrawal from school which takes place every year will make the conditions more workable.

The Industrial School has been provided for by taking out some of the chairs in the gallery of the hall and putting the drawing tables in their place. This arrangement will continue only five or six weeks, until it is possible to remove to the old Adams building.

One result of the increased attendance has been a large increase in the business of the school lunch room. Practically all the food sold at the counter is made in the school kitchen and is sold at a price just sufficient to cover all expenses. The receipts at the present time are in the vicinity of $25 per day. There is probably no school lunch room in the state where food is more carefully selected or where the business is conducted with greater skill or economy.

Isaac Goddard, instructor in manual training, has been ill since the first of September and has not yet met his classes, nor have the grammar school classes in manual training yet been organized. It is expected that Mr. Goddard will take up his work next Monday.

Miss Zeller of the German department returned from Europe last week and began her work on Monday, her place having been taken in the meantime by her brother.

ADAMS SCHOOL.

The furniture for the new Adams building came to the school this week, and is now being put in place. The furniture is supplied by the Heywood Bros. and Wakefield Company and is of the same type as that furnished for the Wollaston school. The building only awaits sewer connection to be ready for occupancy. In the meantime the old building has received a coat of paint and new gutters and will after its occupancy by the Industrial school be painted on the inside by boys of the pre-vocational class.

VOCATIONAL CLASSES.

All the pre-vocational classes have started their work in a very promising way. Harold Dempsey who was with the class of boys last year, left on Friday to take up similar work in New Britain. His place has been taken by Stanley Blanchard, who like Mr. Dempsey was trained at the Fitchburg Normal school. There is an increasing amount of this kind of work done in the public schools each year, and teachers in this specialty are in rapid demand.

EVENING SCHOOLS.

Advertisements of the evening schools will be posted next week and the Superintendent of Schools is already making plans for the work. For four successive years now, the evening school attendance has shown a good increase, that increase existing in all departments and being entirely aside from the Industrial classes.

The schools will open this year with the same courses as last year, except that no school will be opened in the Lincoln building, and civil service work will be offered again at the High school in conjunction with the commercial course.

FIRES STARTED.

For the first time this school year, some of the schools found it necessary to have a fire under their boilers this morning, to raise the temperature above the minimum of 60 degrees.

SCHOOL CENSUS.

The anual school census is now being taken by Charles H. Johnson, and it is likely that an increase will be shown equal to that of previous years.

FORMER TEACHER.

Winfred C. Akers, who was a submaster at the Quincy High school under Frederick A. Tupper in 1893 and 1894, and for the past ten years headmaster of the High school at New Britain, Conn., has succeeded former headmaster George P. Hitchcock as headmaster of the Brookline High school commencing his duties with the opening of school this fall. Mr. Akers was born in Andover, Me., and was graduated from Wesleyan University in the class of 1893. In addition to Quincy he taught at Providence, and Somerville and Holyoke.

KEEP OUT OF DEBT.

A most excellent rule to be adopted by the average business man, or by one just starting out in life, is "Keep out of debt." By this we do not mean that a man should never get in debt. It is occasionally necessary in the case of most men. Frequently the privilege of getting into debt is a blessing in disguise. A business man must have merchandise. He gets into debt for it, i. e., he buys on credit. The greater part of the business of the world is done on credit. One wants to buy a home or he desires an education. He lacks funds. He gets in debt for them. In these and in some other cases indebtedness is considered justifiable. What we do mean is unrestrained indebtedness—the habit of plunging into debt upon any and every occasion for things we do not want. Franklin once said that what we do not need, however cheap, is dear at any price.—Walden's Stationer and Printer.

VALUE OF GOOD BOOKS.

Good books make good citizens. The man who has a collection of books in his home, no matter how small it may be in actual volume, is paving the way for his children to become useful men and women. If I had my way no home would be without its quota of books. And they should be the property of that home. I cannot too strongly emphasize the importance of owning good books as well as reading them. There is no feeling quite so satisfactory as the pride one takes in the possession of one's own library, even if not large, and it gives to the home a distinctive atmosphere which could come from no other source. In these days of popular prices and expert production, when well bound books by the best authors are within reach of all, there is little reason for the failure of every home to have books, own these books and read them. That is the advice I give to all. As I pointed out in the beginning, good books make good citizens. That means that you must first have them and then read them. Just as the newspapers keep man in touch with the work of the world day by day, so do books bring him into broader touch with the progress the world is making in art, literature and the sciences.—Rudolph Blankenburg.

When Servants Were Fined.

What would servants of modern times say to the following rules and regulations that were adopted over 300 years ago in the household of Sir J. Harrington, the translator of Ariosto?

A servant absent from prayers to be fined twopence; uttering an oath, a penny; leaving a door open, a penny; a penny fine for any beds unmade, fire unlit or candle box uncleaned after 8; any one breaking any of the butler's glass, a shilling; twopence fine for any one who has not laid the table for dinner by half past 10 or supper by 6; any one being absent without leave, fourpence fine, a penny fine for any follower visiting the cook; a fine of a penny for any visitor's room left untidy for four hours after he or she has dressed; a penny fine if the hall be not cleaned by 8 in winter and 7 in summer; a fine of threepence if the stairs be uncleaned every Friday after dinner.

All these fines were deducted from the servants' quarterly payment of their wages.—London Standard.

Red Hair and Temper.

"All mankind," said Major Hurst, a well known English student of eugenics, "may be divided into those who are red haired and those who are not red haired. It is a fundamental difference." In almost every case of a red haired child the major has succeeded in discovering a red haired ancestor, and he thinks that practically the whole of the red haired population springs from a single red haired man far back in the past. Here are some of his conclusions:

In order for red to appear it must be in the ancestry on both sides.

A red father and a dark mother, or vice versa, hardly ever have a red child.

Two reds always have red offspring. But it is exceedingly rare to find two reds marry, as they seem to have a mutual antipathy.

It is a popular fallacy that red haired persons have any distinctive temperament. They are no more hot tempered than other people.

A Story of Talleyrand.

During the troublous days of the French revolution, when aristocratic heads were dropping in the basket in the name of liberty, fraternity and equality, Talleyrand lived and prospered by virtue of a marvelous ability to tell just the psychological moment to jump off one band wagon and aboard another.

The name of this French diplomat has been kept alive more than have those of most of his contemporaries by a vast number of anecdotes in which he figures. It was Talleyrand whom Mme. De Stael, homely but brilliant, tried to corner by asking him if she and the beautiful Mme. Recamier were to fall into the water, which one he would rescue. And Talleyrand smiled in his most languishing manner and replied:

"Ah, madame, but you swim so well, you know!"

Wangen's Fountain of Wine.

A fountain of wine is one of those historical extravagances which are generally associated with the name of Nero, yet on every July 13 the public fountain of Wangen, in the Alsace wine country, flows with wine. In the middle ages the commune of Wangen was sentenced to make an annual payment to the monastery of Strasburg of 400 measures of wine. In 1793 the payment was abolished by the Directory. Under Louis XVIII. two merchants secured the transfer of the payment to them, by means of forged documents, for £650, but the commune commenced proceedings against them, in which it was victorious on July 13, 1830. Since that date a communal festival has been held on that day, and from the public fountain erected to commemorate the victory wine flows for one hour in the day.—Westminster Gazette.

No Complaint to Make.

It was at the vaudeville. The girl with the excruciating voice had just finished her song.

"Just think!" groaned Brown to the stranger beside him. "We paid real money to hear that!"

"I didn't," was the placid response. "Came in on a 'comp.'"

"But you had to spend car fare to get here, did you not?" asked Brown.

"Nope," replied the uncomplaining one. "I live in walking distance."

"But," persisted Brown desperately, "at least you hoped to be entertained, not punished."

"No. I didn't care," grinned the stranger. "I came to get away from home. My wife is cleaning house."—Judge.

Her Rule.

She was giving orders at express rate, for they were married, and he, as a rule the most meek and submissive of men, was, like the proverbial worm, beginning to turn.

"Do you think," he inquired, "that you rule the whole of the universe?"

"No," she snapped; "but I rule the first letter of it."—London Answers.

There is more Catarrh in this section of the country than all other diseases put together, and until the last few years was supposed to be incurable. For a great many years doctors pronounced it a local disease and prescribed local remedies, and by constantly failing to cure local treatment pronounced it incurable. Science has proven catarrh to be a constitutional disease and therefore requires constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. FASHIONS IN NEW YORK.

Patent Leather Hats and Roses—Upstanding Lace and Maline—the Butterfly craze—Peg-Top Outline.

If ever clothes are of absorbing interest it is at this time of year, when all the smart places on Fifth Avenue and its neighborhood are humming with sartorial excitement. Invitations to view the latest productions are eagerly accepted for everyone from modest little Mrs. Newlywed to opulent Mrs. Midas is planning new togs.

THE BUTTERFLY CRAZE.

Butterflies have taken things by storm, they have lighted upon hats, dresses, trimmings and lingerie and in each place they seem a bit more enticing. Bows are shaped like butterflies, and the most popular finish for a pretty frock is a butterfly of lace, net, satin, or silk just at the waist line, or a little above, at the centre back. Butterflies of lace or net wired to maintain their outline perch airily on hats at any point where they are most becoming and vie with the upstanding flaring cuffs of lace which are the craze of the moment on hats of velvet.

Butterfly bows of embroidered linen are the latest thing in neckwear. These are of course, not wired. but rely upon their cut and garniture for effectiveness many are in colored batiste with white embroideries, others reverse this arrangement.

PATENT LEATHER CREATIONS

Round hats in modified sailor or Derby forms, built of patent leather appeal not only for automobile and sporting purposes, but for general wear principally because of their novelty. Paris is making great use of black roses made of patent leather combined with black moire ribbon, also of patent leather foliage in black or green combined with satin roses. Wide belts of flexible leather in suede are very much worn here and a few of the enamelled ones also, though the dull leather is prettiest in the four to eight inch widths which are popular. Buckles for these are for the most part leather covered, though metal effects are often used. Buttons covered with the dress material or with satin, especially in ball and acorn forms are extensively used for trimming purposes.

PEG-TOP EFFECTS

The peg-top outlines heralded earlier are evidently in to stay. Skirts are built with outlines as near as possible to the peg-top trousers, but softened owing to the drapings, and gatherings or pleatings at the waist. Bodices and sleeves are loosely adjusted but fit smoothly at neck and wrist where ruffles, or upstanding collars of shadow or venice laces give becomingness. Girdles so wide that they cover the waist nearly to the shoulder line, apron and ballet drapings, and sashes to add a bit to the bulk at the centre of the figure, all help to give the peg top, or spindle outline which no longer seems grotesque if it is well worn and managed.

NEW LINGERIE.

Lingerie is, of course, of especial importance since the outlines beneath the outer garments make all the difference in the effect produced. Skirts of embroidered pique are the latest idea practical and modest now that only one skirt is used. The new corsets just launched for the season. are long over the hips, short topped, and loose and very comfortable at the waist and if selected in the right model,—for one is offered for every type of figure —are guaranteed not only to wear well, but to insure correct carriage, while the outlines produced are those authoritatively endorsed at fashionable centres. Warner's rustproofs are a boon to the average woman, who can find them at her favorite shop, and be sure of a perfect model for her individual figure.

FUR TRIMMINGS.

Smart trimmings show touches of fur on al sorts of garments and somehow now that the eye is accustomed to it, a collar of fur on a wrap that is principally lace, looks all right.

The woman who possesses any sort of fur, can make use of it by having it redressed and dyed, and small attention need be payed to naturalness of coloring. Any tint goes if it's the wanted shade for blending or contrasting effect. Narrow lines of fur trim many of the new blouses to wear with tailored suits, and edge the tulle draperies that trim so many frocks.

PUBLIC LIBRARY NOTES.

A particularly instructive set of twenty large photographs is now on exhibition at the library. The first in the collection, a view of Athens showing Mount Lycabettus from the Parthenon, is followed by a famous masterpiece, the Nike from Samathrake (Winged Victory.) The next few pictures are of Rome, including far-famed ruins and statues.

The three following are of statues from Venice and Florence. One exceptionally fine view shows the city and bay of Naples with Vesuvius in the back-ground. The next two photographs are remarkably clear, one showing the Bridge of Sighs in Venice and the other, the Cascade of Mamove in Italy.

The last few pictures are of famous paintings from the Louvre and the Royal Gallery, Dresdon, including: "Portrait supposed to be Lucrezia Crivelli," "Mary Salome," "Francisco de Moncada," "Pope Innocent X," "The Chase" and "Oxen going to work." These pictures are exceptionally large and are well worth seeing. This exhibit remains through Saturday evening, the seventeenth.

THREATS MADE ANONYMOUSLY

Followed by Series of Fires at Salisbury Beach

THREE INQUIRIES ARE STARTED

Men Who Bought Strip of Beach and Won In Court When Cottagers Made Protest Think at Least Two Fires Were Incendiary—Bitter Feeling Has Existed For Some Time

Salisbury Beach, Mass., Sept. 11.—Separate inquiries into the origin of the four fires here since Tuesday afternoon which destroyed property with a loss variously estimated at $150,000 to $500,000 are now under way.

The investigations will follow the stories of threats made after the Salisbury Beach Associates, who own the beach, had acquired the four-mile strip of land and raised rents more than 100 percent for the land upon which the cottages rest. Walter Coulson, president of the associates, openly charges that at least two of the fires were incendiary.

The inquiries, each independent of the others, are being made by the town of Salisbury, the state police and the associates. The town is represented by Chief Beckhart, and the state police by State Officers Barrett, Flynn and Griffin.

Relief stations have been opened here for the victims of the fires. Automobiles full of provisions are making constant trips from Newburyport, and the work of feeding the destitute is rapidly going on.

A high northwest gale kept starting small fires on the roofs of the houses still standing, and a large corps of men went about putting out fires among the buildings. Another corps cut down the half-burned telegraph and telephone poles, which swayed and endangered the lives of people passing about the beach.

The bar of the Salisbury House, the only one remaining of the four licensed places here, was closed by order of the police.

The bitter feeling which has existed between the cottagers and the Salisbury Beach Associates commenced when the latter, composed of Lawrence business men, bought up the whole strip of beach and raised the land rental.

The cottagers were later instrumental in having a law passed making Salisbury Beach a state reservation, but the associates carried the matter through the supreme court, which ruled that the law was unconstitutional and that the beach belonged to the associates.

Following this decision, threats to burn the houses on the beach were made to the associates through anonymous letters. It is the belief of members of the associates that Tuesday's fires are the direct outcome of these threats.

Heaps of smoking ruins are all that remain of nearly 300 cottages and seven hotels that were in the path of the flames.

To prevent looting twenty-five citizens have been sworn in as special police, and are armed as they parade the scene. They are assisted by all of the regular police force of Salisbury, and by Chief Mack and two automobile loads of policemen from Haverhill as well as by officers from Newburyport. Complaints have been pouring in of the looting of the effects of destitute families.

WON'T SURRENDER BOOKS

Secretary of Western Fuel Company Prefers to Go to Jail

San Francisco, Sept. 11.—Rather than surrender the books of the Western Fuel company to Judge Dooling of the United States district court, David C. Norcross, secretary of the company, gave himself up to the United States marshal.

Dooling held him in contempt of court and sentenced him to jail until such time as the books be produced, but later released him on $3000 bonds, pending habeas corpus proceedings. Norcross already was under a $2000 fine for a similar charge.

MISSING A MONTH

More Than $100,000 In Jewels Stolen From Chicago Millionaire

Chicago, Sept. 11.—Jewels said to be valued at more than $100,000 were stolen from the home of a millionaire resident of Winnetka, a North Shore suburb, it was learned from private detectives who have been working on the case a month.

They admitted the extent of the theft after the operations became known, but refused to divulge the name of the victim. The detectives asserted the whereabouts of the thieves are known and promised arrests later.

"B G TIM" IS FOUND

New York, Sept. 11.—"Big Tim" Sullivan, missing for a week, is safe at Riverside Inn, Smithtown, L. I., according to the announcement of Frank O'Brien, who owns the inn.

O'Brien is a long standing friend of "Big Tim." He telephoned friends here that the East Side leader was all right. A crowd of Tammanyites went to Smithtown to see Sullivan.

MULHALL EVIDENCE ATTACKED BY EMERY

Says N. A. M. Had Right to Seek to Influence Legislation

Washington, Sept. 11.—The case for the National Association of Manufacturers was summed up before the house lobby committee by James A. Emery, its chief counsel, who attacked vigorously the story of Martin M. Mulhall, former lobbyist for the association, and declared that representatives of the association had exercised only the rights of every citizen in seeking to influence legislation.

Emery made a long statement regarding the activity of the American Federation of Labor in behalf of men running for national and state offices. He quoted from editorials and articles by Samuel Gompers showing the position of labor, praising men in congress who coincided wih the views of labor and condemning others who did not.

The house committee was informed that former Representative Watson, involved in the Mulhall case, would not take the stand.

Fleming was one of the best known members of the Masonic order in America. He was born in Portland, Me.

BILL IN JOINT CONFERENCE

Finishing Touches Are Being Put on the Tariff

GOES BACK TO THE HOUSE

LaFollette Expected to Continue His Fight as One of Conferees—Measure Will Be Before President In Short Time—House Leaders Appear to Be Slightly Confused

Washington, Sept. 11.—The Democratic tariff revision bill as it passed the senate, changed in many particulars from the form in which it left the house over four months ago, went back to that body yesterday, and today found its way into a joint conference committee, where the final touches will be given to it.

The senate stole a march upon the house when, immediately after passing the bill, it was decided to "insist upon its amendments" and ask for a conference. Under this procedure, when the bill went to the house there was nothing for the house to do but accept the amendments or meet the request of the senate for the appointment of a house committee.

Preliminary conferences within the last two weeks between Representative Underwood and Senator Simmons, the tariff leaders of the two bodies, have led to an understanding that little time will be consumed in the conference discussion of the bill. It is predicted the measure probably will be ready for the president within ten days.

Republican protests against the appointment of Senator LaFollette, who voted for the bill, as one of the Republican conferees on the measure brought a declaration from Senator Simmons that LaFollette's appointment was entirely fair to the Republican side.

"While LaFollette voted for the tariff bill he voted against most of the amendments we offered," said Simmons, "and these amendments are the subjects which the conference committee will consider. We do not feel that his presence adds to the Democratic strength on the committee, as he has opposed many of the changes we have made in the bill."

How far LaFollette is to influence the final character of the bill in conference is the problem eagerly discussed at the capital.

The very fact of his getting a place on the conference committee is taken to indicate that the original insurgent has "just begun to fight." His cutting the last ties of party regularity by voting, alone of all Republican senators, for the Democratic tariff program is construed as meaning that he expected to be heard more attentively in the conference than on the floor.

Just as the Underwood bill passes the senate and goes to conference, it appears that the ideas of the house leaders, including Underwood himself, the author of the bill, are in a state of confusion.

This fact came out during the discussion on the floor of the house relative to an appropriation of $100,000 for tariff investigations, to be made by the bureau of foreign and domestic commerce. Underwood stated that the work of this bureau would be of the utmost value. Then occurred this colloquy:

Hardwick—Why is it necessary or desirable to find out the cost of production in foreign countries of articles dutiable in the United States under any Democratic theory of the tariff?

Underwood—Well, the Democratic theory of the tariff, of course, is not to place a tariff on the difference in the cost at home and abroad, but to write a competitive tariff—

Hardwick—No; that is not the Democratic theory.

Underwood—Well, it is to write a tariff for revenue only, which of itself means a competitive tariff—

Hardwick—Not necessarily.

Underwood (continuing)—Because there cannot be a tariff for revenue only unless it is competitive; I mean as to articles that are produced both in this country and abroad. Of course as to articles only produced abroad it can be, but that is not competitive, because there is nobody to compete with.

At this point the discussion grew so involved that both men felt inclined to abandon it. Sharp-eyed Republicans, however, have picked out this little debate as an illuminating commentary on the "fundamental principles of Democratic tariff revision."

TURNS FOUR SOMERSAULTS

English Birdman Goes Pegoud Three Better and Lands Safely

London, Sept. 11.—Kent, an English aviator, unwittingly emulated the feats of Pegoud, the French airman, in turning somersaults with his machine in the air near Farnham.

Kent was 2000 feet in the air when his engine stopped. He lost control of his machine, which turned four complete somersaults. Kent then secured control of the aeroplane and descended in a steep spiral, landing safely.

The Black House

A Mystery Solved

By ALICE GRAY

I was one of the detectives on duty at the Ramercliff-Halsey wedding receptions, where thousands of dollars' worth of beautiful gifts were displayed in the library and adjoining study, and my duties had confined me to these rooms, where a pageant of brilliantly gowned women and somber clad men passed in and out.

It was a marriage of youth, beauty and great wealth with talent and more wealth, for Dr. Ramercliff had a national reputation as a specialist in diseases of the brain, and it had been a matter for universal surprise when the grave and studious physician had stepped from the seclusion of professional life to court the brilliant young debutante and win her.

Now the bride had retired to don her traveling gown. They were to leave on the western express, and their destination was a secret.

Presently they came, and I shall never forget Dr. Ramercliff's look as he passed out of the door with his beautiful bride. His handsome face expressed maniacal triumph.

A feeling of uneasiness possessed me for days afterward, and I was not surprised when Benjamin Halsey, the father of the bride, paid me a visit in my private office.

He was looking haggard and worried, quite unlike the happy, genial gentleman who had presided at the wedding of his motherless daughter.

"Blair, I need your help," he said when we were alone.

"What is it, sir?" I inquired.

"You were at my daughter's wedding reception three weeks ago. You saw my daughter leave the house with her husband?"

"Yes."

"They have disappeared—completely disappeared."

"Well?" I was still wondering at his anxiety.

"Read that," he said, thrusting a tattered bit of paper into my hands.

It was a piece of brown wrapping paper, and on it were a few scrawled words: "Oh, father, come! This terrible black house! I am going mad! He is coming now! I must hide this! Bessie."

"You believe that your daughter wrote that?"

"I do. It is her handwriting. It was received in my mail this morning, the envelope bearing a blurred postmark, and in addition to my name and address were the penciled words, 'Whoever finds this please mail at once.'"

He produced the envelope, and I studied the postmark through my strongest glasses.

"Looks like Woodrift. That's a little village down on Long Island," I said finally. "I'll go down there at once. You believe that both of them have met with foul play?"

He shook his head doubtfully. "Read that note over again, Blair. It's some of Ramercliff's work, I fear. I should never have allowed Bess to marry him. He is almost mad himself over his profession, but he fascinated her. You will go at once, Blair?"

"Within the hour." I decided, replacing the time table in my pocket.

It was 4 o'clock when I reached Woodrift, a little north shore village, surrounded on three sides by oak forests and on the fourth by a shallow harbor.

I made casual inquiry among the loungers about the postoffice and hotel where I put up, but none of them had seen any strangers thereabouts. The postmaster did give me a clew.

"The old Vale place was taken by strangers several months ago, but I don't believe any one is there yet."

"Who is the caretaker?"

"Search me!" said the postmaster, returning to his neglected duties. "Some queer foreigner who lives in the barn and buys his supplies over to Oakville."

I chose to take my first view of the Vale place by moonlight. I had traversed perhaps half a mile along the gloomy wood road, where moonlight fell in silver patches on the carpet of thick leaves, when a man passed me, going swiftly toward the village.

He paused and peered at me for an instant.

"Where you go?" he asked thickly, and I smelt whisky on his breath.

"Oakville," I said sharply.

"Oh," he said, with his foreign accent. "You on wrong road. Go back quarter mile, turn to left."

"Thanks," I murmured ironically, for I recognized the caretaker of the Vale place and his evident desire to lure me away from the house, which he was leaving unguarded.

To allay his suspicions I walked back with him and allowed him to place me on the right path. When he was out of sight I retraced my steps and, after walking for perhaps a mile, always following the more untraveled road, I finally came upon a high brick wall that wound around among the trees encircling the dark bulk of a large house.

It was a lonely spot enough, the woods closing around the house within the wall. The moonlight fell in patches on the ground, overgrown with coarse grass and briers. The shutters of the house appeared closed, but against the night sky I saw a thin trail of smoke from one of the chimneys.

As I studied the house I noticed a strange radiance that seemed to be diffused from the roof, a soft, steady, golden glow such as might be produced by a skylight in the ceiling of a brilliantly lighted room under the roof.

I swung myself into the branches of a huge oak tree that overhung the flat roof and was soon creeping on hands and knees over the tin covering the edges. Beyond that was an expanse of sash such as is used in greenhouses occupying almost the entire roof.

"Another freakish New Yorker," I muttered to myself as I hung over the edge of the glass roof and peered down into the lighted space.

Beneath me was a large room furnished as a bedroom and a study. There were a large table heaped with books and papers, a desk and comfortable chairs. The walls were lined with bookcases filled with volumes bound in uniform dark covering.

It was a workroom, the workroom of a student.

The student was Dr. Ramercliff. He was sitting at the desk absorbed in writing. He had already filled sheet after sheet of paper, all of which were scattered over desk and floor.

Suddenly he leaned back in his chair and an agonized expression convulsed his face. He reached his hand toward a small vial, shook some pellets into his mouth and dropped back in his chair, one hand gripping his heart. His eyes closed and he breathed heavily. Was his seizure a heaven sent opportunity for me?

I slipped back to my tree, gained the piazza and found entrance through a front window. I pried open the wooden shutters, smashed the glass with the butt of my revolver, turned the catch and raised the sash. As I entered I seemed to be smothered in folds of heavy drapery. Kicking myself clear, I found myself in total darkness.

I drew out my electric torch and pressed the button. "Heavens!" I shuddered as I realized my surroundings.

I appeared to be in a mortuary chapel, for walls and ceiling were paneled in black, the carpet was of thick black pile, the furniture of dead black lusterless teakwood, cushions, draperies—everything in that horrible room was the same grewsome black.

I opened the black enameled door and entered a black hall. I passed through a black library and a black dining room, and my nerves were a-tingle with horror.

The kitchen was a cheerful apartment compared to the others, for it was slate gray.

Up the black painted stairs I crept, feeling a strange depression stealing over me, the unwholesome influence of the dreadful house; through a black upper hall to the nearest black paneled door. There I paused.

What would I find within this grewsome place where Dr. Ramercliff, plainly a lunatic, had taken his beautiful bride, petted daughter of the millionaire?

I turned the handle and entered a black boudoir.

Stretched on the couch, face downward, her face buried in black sofa pillows, was a slender form garbed in black.

Her hair was white as snow.

I turned the light upon her, and I placed my hand on her arm, and she screamed with terror.

"Go away!" she cried. "Oh, go away!"

"Mrs. Ramercliff," I said—"Miss Halsey—Bessie!"

At the last word she turned and lifted her beautiful white face to me, a face wild with fear. Her black eyes widened, and she gave one great glad cry.

"Oh, take me to father!" And then she sank back unconscious.

I did not stand upon my going from that place. I gathered the poor little bride in my arms and carried her down the stairs and out of that awful house.

I was able to get a team that would take us to Oakdale, where I hired a motorcar, and about midnight we drew up to the Halsey residence, the white haired bride with my handkerchief tied over her lovely locks, garbed in black, and I the young detective with my first great case.

Mr. Halsey was in his library, and I shall never forget his glad face when I restored his daughter to him.

I remained long enough to hear her story, and then I left father and daughter together, for I must journey once more down to Woodrift and ascertain if that insane bridegroom had succumbed to the seizure I had witnessed from the roof.

He was dead when I reached the black house, a victim of heart disease. And so perished a brilliant mind that was destroyed by its own intensity.

Bessie's story was pitiable enough.

Her husband had taken her to the black house, and as coolly and impersonally as he might have watched the struggles of a butterfly impaled on a pin he studied the effect of color on the brain. In the dense black atmosphere of the black house he calmly watched the slow killing of the beautiful girl. He had told her of his intention, and she had struggled desperately to get a message to her father. Once she had escaped and reached the road, but when she found them in pursuit she tossed her letter into the bushes and allowed herself to be recaptured, but her message had gone forth.

That was all. Mrs. Ramercliff recovered her health and beauty, and the secret of her disappearance was never divulged.

Benjamin Halsey kept his word. He rewarded me. He made me the richest man in the world, for I married Bessie afterward.

GUARD AGAINST MONSTER BERGS

Scientific Experts Work For Safety on the Seas.

OLD METHODS ARE FAULTY.

Taking Temperature of Water Futile on Swift Steamers—Dr. Coplans Invents a New Device Which May Prevent a Second Titanic Disaster—Use of Submarine Bells.

Since the terrible Titanic disaster scientists and engineers have been devoting much time and attention to devising means by which ships may detect the vicinity of icebergs. The old method consisted of lowering a thermometer into the water when the iceberg zone was being approached, the distance of the icebergs being judged according to the temperature of the water in the vicinity.

Since the increase in the speed of big liners, however, this method has been found to be quite inadequate, being neither safe, quick nor accurate. One of the most reliable inventions for detecting icebergs at sea seems to be that of Dr. Coplans of the University of Leeds, who has invented an apparatus which detects the presence of icebergs by giving readings of the saline contents of the water. The nearer an iceberg is to the ship the less is the amount of salt held in solution in the water. In conjunction with the United States and Canadian governments Dr. Coplans has been carrying out a series of experiments on these lines which is expected to have most important results and which should do much toward rendering impossible such disasters as that which overtook the ill fated Titanic.

One Curious Phenomenon.

Another invention of which high hopes are entertained is what is known as the microthermometer, an instrument enabling very much closer readings of the temperature of the water to be obtained than is possible with an ordinary thermometer. It is also self recording.

It is a curious fact, by the way, in regard to this instrument that when an iceberg is being approached the instrument actually records a rise in temperature, this, however, being followed by a rapid fall. The explanation is that the water from a melting iceberg, leaving the berg at its coldest, gradually travels outward and becomes warmed by the absorption of heat from the sun.

Submarine sigaling, too, for the prevention of disasters in foggy weather is also being closely studied by experts, for it is recognized that there is much room for improvement in the signaling apparatus used at the present time on board ship. Foghorns, sirens and other apparatus used for sending sound through the air to or from ships at sea are regarded as very unsatisfactory, and it is estimated that in ten years no fewer than 1,000 vessels were wrecked, resulting in the loss of 500 human lives, owing solely to aberrations of sound or to echoes.

Submarine Bells Heard Far.

The modern system of submarine signaling consists of bells sunk in at least twenty feet of water, operated by electricity or pneumatic or hydraulic pressure. It is said that a submarine bell can be heard at a greater distance than any foghorn, siren or any other generally used air signal or device, and it is recorded that one of these bells was heard at a distance of from ten to fifteen miles.

The receiving apparatus is very simple, consisting of two cast iron tanks, which are placed below the water line on either side of the ship's bows and in contact with the shell of the ship. In each tank is the microphone, which is connected by an electric telephone system with the bridge. There the navigating officer has suitable receivers and switches which enable him to listen on either side of the ship. If he alters the course of the ship on hearing the bell so that the intensity of the sound is equal on both sides of the ship then the bell lies straight in front, and according to the intensity of the various sounds he is able to avoid danger.

BOY STEEPED IN CRIME.

Lad, Aged Six, More Trouble to Police Than Ten Adults.

Richard Tuclovsky, six years old, of Racine, Wis., has been committed to the State Industrial School For Boys, there to remain until he has attained the age of twenty-one.

Richard, despite his youth, has caused the police more trouble than any ten grownups, his crimes ranging from plain burglary to highway robbery, in which he used an unloaded revolver. Twenty times has Richard's name been entered on the police blotter for crimes that would have placed older boys behind prison bars.

Threatening other children with a knife induced summary action. The commitment is of the youngest subject in the state's annals of criminology.

Divorces Ninth Husband.

Mrs. Elfen Deeming Grangerow, a wealthy Umatilla Indian of Oregon City, Ore., obtained a divorce from her ninth husband, Grant Nicholas Grangerow, and voluntarily settled upon him as "alimony" $2,000.

THE HUSBANDS OF EDITH

CHAPTER XV.

What? Another Husband.

IT was a perfectly natural, but not an especially obvious question. The little manager threw up his hands and cried out in a sad mixture of French, English and Helvetian:

"What? Another husband? Madam, how many more do you propose to inflict us with? We cannot allow it! The management will not permit you to change husbands the instant a new guest arrives in the house. It is not to be heard of—no, no!"

"Are you afraid that the books won't balance?" asked Brock, with a joyous grin, a great load off his heart. "Ladies and gentlemen, permit me to introduce Mr. Roxbury Medcroft, my friend and fellow conspirator. He is the husband of this lady, not I. I am to be the husband of this lady, thank God!"

There was a moment of absolute silence—it may have been stupor. The two audiences faced each other with emotions widely at variance. It was Mrs. Rodney who spoke first.

"Is this true, Edith?" she quavered.

"Yes, yes, yes!" cried Edith, her eyes dancing.

"Then, what are you doing here with a man who isn't your husband?" demanded Mrs. Rodney, suddenly aflame.

"I can explain everything to you later on, Mrs. Rodney," interposed Mrs. Odell-Carney calmly. She had divined at least a portion of the truth, and she was clever enough to put herself on the right side. Edith cast an involuntary look of surprise at the English woman. "I have known everything from the first. Mrs. Medcroft and I are closer friends than you may have thought." She gave Edith a meaning look and a moment later was whispering to her in a private corner of the private office: "My dear, I don't know what it means, but you must tell me everything as soon as possible. I am your friend. Whatever it all is, it's ripping!"

Medcroft finally waved every one aside in the most degage manner imaginable.

"Don't crowd me! Hang it all, I'm not a curiosity. There isn't anything to go crazy about. My friend, Mr Brock, has just done me a trifling favor. That's all. The whole story will be in the London papers this morning. Buy 'em. I'm going up to my wife's room to see my baby. I'll come down and explain everything when I've had a bit of a breathing spell. It's annoying to have had this fuss about a simple little matter of generosity on the part of my friend, who, I've no doubt, has been a most exemplary husband. I'll see to it, by Gad, that he receives the proper apologies. And, for that matter, my wife may have something to say about the outrage that has been perpetrated."

"When did you arrive, old man?"

"Last night on the 12:10. I registered as Smith. It was so late that I decided not to disturb Edith. They said in the office that you'd gone to bed, Brock. Now that I recall it, they said it in a very odd way too. In fact, one of the clerks asked if I had it in for you too."

"You were here all night?" murmured Constance in plaintive misery.

"Well, not precisely all night, Connie. Half of it," replied Roxbury. "Brock, you ass, I telegraphed you I was coming and asked you to meet me at the station. I telegraphed twice from London and"—

"Don't call me an ass," grated Brock. "Why didn't you send 'em to me as Medcroft? I haven't been Brock until this very morning."

"'Pon my soul, Brock, it was rather stupid of me," he confessed sheepishly. "But, you see," with an inspired smile, "one of 'em was to congratulate you on winning Connie. By Jove, you know, I couldn't very well address that one to myself."

"But—but he hadn't won me," stammered Constance Fowler.

"Edith," said Roxbury, deep reproach in his voice, "you wrote me that a week ago." Edith merely squeezed his arm.

Odell-Carney came forward and extended his hand. "Permit me to introduce myself, sir. I am George Odell-Carney. It has given me great pleasure to serve you without knowing you. In my catalogue of personalities you have posed intermittently as a demmed bounder, a deceived husband, a betrayed lover, a successful lover and a lot of other things I can't just now recall. Acting on the presumption that you might have been a friend in distress, I worked hard in your interest. Now I discover, to my gratification, you are a perfect stranger, whom I am proud to meet. Permit me to offer my warmest felicitations and to assure you that Mr. Brock will make a splendid brother-in-law." He hesitated a moment and then went on: "So you are the chap that really put in those offended memorial windows. 'Pon me word, sir, they are the rottenest"—

"Carney!" came the sharp reminder from his wife.

"I should have said," revised Mr. Odell-Carney, "you are the chap who played the deuce with the building grafters in the county council. Remarkable!"

"Yes," said Roxbury, striving to grasp something of the situation as it appeared to the other. "We beat them. The bill is lost. It will never go to the council. The subcommittee will not recommend it. Thanks, Brock, old man. You have saved London a good many millions, I daresay. It was you who did it after all."

Before noon the hotel was agog with the full details of the remarkable story. Cabled dispatches in the newspapers gave the gist of the clever trick played by the Medcrofts, and the whole of England was to ring with the stories of Mrs. Medcroft's pluck and devotion.

The management of the Tirol implored the Medcrofts to remain—forever! The bank and the police were profuse in apologies and explanations, and Mr. Githens departed by the first train.

Freddie Ulstervelt, killing two birds with one stone, arranged a splendid dinner for that night in honor of the prodigal husband of Edith and also in open compliment to the vivacious Mlle. Le Brun.

Later in the day it occurred to him that he might just as well kill three birds as two, so he planned to announce the betrothal of Miss Fowler and Mr. Brock, the wedding to take place a fortnight hence in Mayfair. The Rodneys were invited to "stop over" for the spread. It is left for the reader to supply the answer to this simple question:

Did they stop over?

Editor Daily Ledger:

I have been much interested lately in the articles in your columns about the "Regicides" Goffe, Whalley and Dixwell.

I quote from an address made many years ago by a gentleman who was always interested in the history of Quincy. I will merely add a few dates and facts of a simple nature to make the address plainer.

Charles I was born in 1600. Died 1640. Came to throne March, 1625, the year Capt. Wollaston located his settlement at Merry Mount, (Quincy.)

The old Braintree records give the name of "Thomas Revill" as having been paid 30 shillings "for keeping Wiliam Dimblebee and ringing the bell and sweeping the meeting house." It is pure conjecture to say he was the exile Mr. Whitney referred to, but he might have been.

I always heard it said that this Regicide, or exile or spectre, whichever he may have been lived in "Cranch Pasture," as it was called, that is as I understand the term, the Whitwell street section.

I have had the cellar of the house of Richard Cranch pointed out to me by a reputable historian. It was located off the left side of Whitwell street, a few hundred yards from Granite street. He was the first post-master and the manuscript history of the Vassal family, by Miss Quincy in the Boston Public Library says, he planted the large English elm trees which shade the driveway where my mother lives on School street and it has also been told to me by an old lady, now deceased that he had the post office on School street, next to Dr. Pattee's residence and that she remembered how it looked. In fact she described it to me.

Yours truly,
James L. Edwards.

"I rise at your request, Mr. President by the side of the poet of the day (Christopher Pease Cranch) and not failing to catch the inspiration of his fancy and the beauty with which he has entertained us turn to the musty rolls of tradition for an incident which may be recalled as we commemorate the fathers of our town and those eminent in character and life, who have trodden its soil.

"Of this latter class one who has been passed over whom, two centuries since the court and ministers of the second Charles would hardly have spared. It has been reputed that our forests and rocks became the shelter and resting place of one of that large body who, favoring the sect of the Independents brought Charles I to the block and the restoration of his son to the throne following, fled for their lives from England.

"Some years since I gathered from the lips of an aged citizen of this town whose numerous descendants are yet with us, who was remarkable for his retentive memory, and exceeding accuracy in all matters of fact, this tradition.

"His childhood he told me, had been with those who had conversed with this lonely exile for liberty. Within his own memory there had stood on a hillock, not far from the spot where we are assembled, the humble abode of the old refugee. Here, as said, tradition, under the assumed name of Thomas Revel, he lived and died, and his funeral was honored by the attendance of his Excellency, the Provincial Governor, and of distinguished men from the neighboring metropolis of Boston.

"I stand not up to claim for this ancient personage a place among the Regicide Judges. The historian of the United States, whom we hoped to have seen with us this day, has not written his name with those of Whalley, Goffe and Dixwell, known to have been those of the judges who found shelter in America, dwelling first in Massachusetts, and afterwards fleeing to Connecticut. But the restoration of Charles II made other victims than the judges a sacrifice to the memory of his beheaded father, else Peters, for instance, the friend honored and beloved of Roger Williams, might have escaped the gallows.

"And if not one of those who sat in judgment on King Charles I doubtless our exile was one of those who for their principles and in their cause fled to our shores. It was enacted concerning the oracle of Pythos that though it uttered doubtful response, they should not be utterly disregarded.

"So, without blindly revering should we ever yet regard the voice of tradition. On the strength of the tradition cited and for the sake of adding another name whom this day brings to mind, I propose, sir, the memory of Thomas Revel, an exile for civil liberty from his own land to this place.

"May the principles of freedom for which with the Stuarts he contended, live ever on the soil that became the home of the Puritan and English Independents."

DUGGAN--KEENAN NUPTIALS

Both Well Known Young People at West Quincy

Miss Mary Esther Keenan, a supervisor at the Main exchange of the N. E. Tel. and Tel. Co. and Daniel E. Duggan, captain of the senior team of the Quincy A. A. which competed in the national basket ball championships at Chicago, Ill., were married at the St. Mary's parochial residence by Rev. Fr. William J. Duffy, Wednesday evening.

Miss Mary Barry of Dorchester was bridesmaid and Peter Duggan, a brother of the groom was the best man.

The bride was dressed in white duchess lace over bridal satin and wore a veil caught up with lilies of the valley. She carried a shower bouquet of lilies of the valley. Miss Barry, the bridesmaid, was dressed in blue chiffon over blue silk and carried pink roses.

A reception was held at the home of the bride's mother, Mrs. James M. Keenan, 209 Willard street and the couple were assisted in receiving by Mrs. James M. Keenan, Mr. and Mrs. John R. Duggan and Mr. and Mrs. Edward Keenan. The house was tastefully decorated with Japanese lanterns and at the wedding supper were guests from Dorchester, Roxbury Braintree, Jamaica Plain and Boston.

Mr. and Mrs. Duggan were the recipients of many presents, conspicuous among them being tokens from the operators at the Main exchange.

The groom is president of the St. Mary's C. T. A. & M. R. Society and is a very popular young man. He has been prominently identified with athletics since his schoolboy days at the Gridley Bryant school.

After a honeymoon trip to New York and Washington, D. C. Mr. and Mrs. Duggan will live on Waldeck road, East Milton.

President Wilson is said to look tired, but probably not so much so as the patriots who are waiting for a chance to interview him about that post office.

PRINCE OF MONACO HERE

Views Gambling With Disfavor and Favors Woman Suffrage

New York, Sept. 11.—Albert Honore Charles, Prince of Monaco, arrived in his steam yacht L'Hirondelle, a yacht that is a floating museum, equipped with all that is needed for sounding the ocean's depths, the reigning prince of the world's smallest principality for the last twenty-five years having devoted himself to the exploration of the ocean—a work that has won for him the ribbon of the French academy of sciences.

"No, I have not the power to stop gambling at Monte Carlo," he said, when someone asked him about the famous Casino. "It cannot be avoided. Personally, I do not approve of the games.

"I have been interested in science from youth. Even then I loved the sea from scientific rather than its military interest, although I was an officer. But I am an antimilitant, and, strange to say, also a woman suffragist, for which I have provided in my constitution. I look for universal peace, as every scientist should, for science builds up, while war pulls down."

PEARY RECORD RETURNED

Deposited by Explorer In Greenland Cairn Twenty Years Ago

New York, Sept. 11.—The government of Denmark sent to Admiral Peary the record he deposited in a cairn at Navy Cliff, on the northeast coast of Greenland, in July, 1892.

Twenty years later, in July, 1912, the record was recovered by the Danish explorer, Knud Rasmussen, who delivered it to his government for official transmission.

The first crossing of Greenland from west to east was made by Peary in 1892. He and his only companion, Riyind Astrup, completed a cairn on Navy Cliff, and placed in it a record, leaving a request, printed on its back in various languages, that its finder note the time and place of finding and forward it to an indicated destination.

Rasmussen found the cairn in 1912; took Peary's record from it, noted that it was taken July 22, 1912, and delivered it to his government.

SAY UNION WORKED WITH COMPETITORS

Claim of Counsel For West Virginia Coal Operators

Washington, Sept. 11.—Attorneys for West Virginia coal operators undertook to demonstrate to the senate investigating committee that demands of the miners leading to the recent strike in the Cabin creek and Paint creek districts were a part of a scheme by which outside operators sought to take the great lakes coal trade away from West Virginia.

The minutes of the annual meetings of the United Mine Workers and various official reports made by the union officials during the past ten years were incorporated into the record, the lawyers declaring that they showed the union was working hand in hand with the outside mine interests.

BECOMING DEAF MUTE

Little Daughter Brings More Sorrow to the Queen of Spain

Madrid, Sept. 11.—Another cloud of sorrow has settled down upon the royal house of Spain. Princess Marie Christiana, aged 2, has become totally deaf and is gradually losing her sense of speech. Her 5-year-old brother, Prince Jaime, is deaf and dumb.

Queen Victoria is heartbroken, and for three weeks has daily prayed in the chapel of the castle, imploring divine intervention against the approaching affliction. Special prayers are also said throughout the country.

King Alfonso and Queen Victoria now have five children, three sons and two daughters. Another child was still-born.

Biello had given presents of baby carriages and pictures to depositors, to swell the bank's receipts.

THE SHEPARDS AS HOSTS.

Former Miss Gould Continues Her Philanthropic Activities.

There is probably no woman in America possessing great wealth that does as much for the poor of the land as does Mrs. Finley J. Shepard, formerly Miss Helen Gould. One of the most successful outings was recently given at her magnificent summer home at Tarrytown, N. Y. Five hundred mothers and children who were in charge of the Volunteers of America were guests on this occasion, and the mothers rested throughout the entire day while the tots played games and were served a good dinner.

Since her marriage to Mr. Shepard the former Miss Gould has not ceased her charity work one iota and keeps herself busy devising new methods to make other people happy. Since his marriage Mr. Shepard likewise has become much interested in the philanthropic activities of his wife, and on such occasions as the dinner at Tarrytown, when the couple had 500 guests for a single day, he is always on the scene, taking part in the games with the children and seeing to it that everything passes off smoothly.

Prior to her marriage the work in which Miss Gould was most interested was the organization of Young Men's Christian associations for sailors and railroad employees. In nearly all of the principal railroad centers and seaports such associations have been established by the co-operation and financial aid of this heiress, and the high esteem in which she is held was attested on her wedding day, when a handsome gift was received from these Christian associations.

Mrs. Shepard has made a deep study of charity work and employs a large office force to consider each application for aid which is received and to sort out the worthy ones from the unworthy ones—she receives many of each kind—and to help the deserving.

A splendid idea of its great size can be conceived by comparing the seven seated touring car which is shown in the hole with the height and breadth of the valve. The hole itself is nearly twelve feet high and nine feet wide, large enough to drive two small automobiles through at the same time.

UNKNOWN BODY FOUND

On Railroad Near West Street Crossing

Head Was Sixty Yards Away

The decapitated body of a man with both arms and one leg broken was found on the tracks, near the West street crossing, about 1 o'clock this morning by A. C. Backman of 44 West street. The body was fully clothed but contained nothing by which he would be identified.

Police circles were notified and the body was removed to the Hall undertaking rooms where it will remain pending identification.

The man was 5 feet, 7 inches, in height, and weighed about 200 pounds. He had black hair, a black mustache, and a close cropped beard. He had on fleece lined underwear and wore dark blue clothing.

Mr. Backman was walking from Braintree when he found the body on the side of the tracks. About 300 feet from the crossing. A dark brown cap lay between the rails a short distance beyond. Mr. Backman immediately started for police headquarters and when about 60 yards from the spot where the body was found stumbled over its head.

Dr. Fred E. Jones, medical examiner, viewed the remains and said that heavy bruises under the left shoulder indicated that he had been struck by an engine, and was probably thrown beneath the forward wheels.

AN HONOR TO PRESIDENTS

Goffe Helped to Make Possible Their Presidency

The movement to change the name of Goffe street is attracting the attention of historians and Boston newspapers. The Transcript says editorially:

"The dispute now raging in Quincy as to whether the name of Goffe street shall be changed to Presidents Lane revives one of the most striking historical traditions of New England. This street in Quincy was named for the regicide judge who fled the vengeance of Charles II, and who was supposed to have been secreted in the vicinage of the way which bears his name. The tradition seems to be not wholly authenticated, but it is by no means impossible that the regicide should have been harbored near this spot, for Goffe and his companion, Whalley, were harassed by two of the king's officers, Majors Kirke and Kellond, and led a wandering existence. they appeared in Cambridge for a time and were received with every mark of respect. The incident of the Indian attack on the village of Hadley, in which the demoralized settlers were marshalled and led to a successful resistance by these two battle-worn veterans of the Lord Protector's army, has begotten the legend of their reappearance in hours of the nation's crisis when New England has been summoned to rise to great destinies. The regicides who sat in council to wrest popular liberties from a treacherous Stuart have become the guardian spirits of the fulfilment of their dreams not in old England, but New England. Quincy, which has honored her Presidents before, will honor them quite as truly in honoring one of Oliver's soldiers who helped to make possible their presidency."

While many dogs have been restrained from running at large in compliance with the order passed by the City Council there are still quite a number seen on the street whose owners doubtless have not seen the notice or are paying no attention to it. Chief of Police Burrell however is taking steps to strictly enforce the order.

CITY HALL OUTING

Clambakes at Elcock's Grove Always Enjoyable

The annual outing of the city officials and clerks at City Hall is planned to take place Saturday afternoon. The objective point of the picnicers is Elcock's grove, Braintree. City Hall closes at 12 o'clock noon and it will not be long after that hour when the party will be on its way to Braintree. As soon as they arrive the immediate attention of their appetites will be satisfied with a clam chowder. This over the party will repair to an adjoining field where it is planned to hold a series of sports. There will be running races, etc., and probably a game of base ball.

The grove borders on Braintree pond but restrictions placed upon the pond which is the source of water supply for surrounding towns will prevent any boat parties or bathing. They will however have the privilege of sitting on the bank and watching the water.

Somewhere in the vicinity of 4 o'clock the welcome announcement will be made by Mike Shea that the bake is ready and then the steamed clams, lobster, chicken, sweet corn and other good things will catch it for fair. The chances are that no one will feel like indulging in any active athletic events after partaking of the bake, although a few running races may be held to aid digestion. The start for home will be made so that City Square may be reached before dark. All that is needed to make the day a success is pleasant weather and the weather clerk has promised this.

NEPONSET PLAYGROUND.

The Park Commissioners of Boston have accepted the large tract of meadow land near the Hallett & Davis piano factory in Neponset and will develop it for playground purposes. It will be named for William Wood, the donor, a wealthy retired man of Milton. The land has been in the Wood family for three generations and has been in general use for several years. A swimming tank will be installed and the commissioners contemplate making it the most attractive recreation ground in Boston.

COW KILLED.

Another chapter to the Quincy mad dog scares was added to the records of the police department Thursday. Two cows that were bitten a few weeks ago showed symptons of rabies when examined by Dr. Francis Abele and Dr. Harry Pierce of the State Board of Health. One was shot by Officer Malone and another was removed. Chief Burrell made an appraisal before they received the final attentions of the department.

GRANITE AVENUE BRIDGE

Railroad Tracks at Both Ends

May Stop Street Railway

One fact which may be a serious obstacle to the street railway extension from West Quincy and East Milton to Dorchester and Boston, when the new Granite avenue bridge is completed, is the two branch railroads, the Granite branch from Atlantic to East Milton, and the Milton branch from Neponset to Milton. For this reason it may be difficult to interest the street railways. Certainly the N. Y., N. H. & H. R. R. would object to grade crossings.

The Boston Transcript says: "The Boston bridge department is not concerned with the building of the Granite avenue bridge, but Division Engineer Fay is the enginer in charge as the choice of the special bridge commission created by legislative enactment, consisting of the mayor of Boston, the chairman of the County Commissioners of Norfolk, the chairman of the board of selectmen of Milton and the mayor of Quincy.

"The new bridge will have a waterway fifty feet wide in the clear, while the structure itself will not be less than forty feet wide and the approaches not less than fifty feet. The bridge will be built of steel on a masonary foundation and will have a bascule draw span which lifts in a vertical position. The cost of the structure is limited by chapter 771 of the acts of 1913, to $70,000.

"The present bridge is about two hundred feet long and thirty feet wide and is built of piles and timber. The draw span is twenty-two feet wide with a waterway of thirty-six feet.

"Granite avenue is an old thoroughfare that connects at the Boston end with Adams street, the ancient road through Dorchester to Boston, and on the south is a direct route from Dorchester through East Milton to West Quincy and Braintree. The road formerly was used much by heavily-loaded stone teams carting stone from the Quincy quarries to Boston, which followed this road to avoid the climb over Milton Hill or the more distant route thrcugh Atlantic and Neponset.

"The Granite-avenue bridge is not far from the terminus of the first railroad in America, that built to haul stone from the West Quincy quarries to the Neponset river. At present there is considerable heavy traffic over the road and the old bridge.

"The new bridge is not so important to Milton as it is to the places farther south, as comparatively little Milton traffic goes over it. With the erection of a wide bridge capable of carrying street cars, the possibility is opened, however, of a street railway line from Adams street, Dorchester, over Granite avenue to East Milton where connection is possible with the street car lines to West Quincy and elsewhere. It was with this possibility in mind, as much as on account of the existing traffic, that the construction of a new bridge was asked. A part of Granite avenue in Milton is State highway."

Plans for the new bridge have been completed. After a license is granted by the Port Directors of Boston, the approval of the War Department is necessary.

Mrs. N. Esther Hobbs, wife of Harry E. Hobbs of the Metropolitan police force, died Thursday at the Quincy City Hospital, aged 31 years. For several months she has been suffering from diabetis and was admitted to the hospital on Tuesday. She is the daughter of Mrs. Marion Feeley of 121 Main street and is survived by a family.

ACCIDENT MANY YEARS AGO

Memorable Date in Life of Benjamin King

Today is a memorable one with Benjamin King, custodian of the cottage of John and Abigail Adams, for it was 65 years ago today that he met with a most serious accident and for several days his life was dispaired of. At that time Mr. King was a fireman on the old Boston & Worchester railroad. On one of the outward trips the locomotive left the iron near Brookline and rolled down the embankment. The engineer, Silas E. Ellis, was immediately killed. Mr. King was buried beneath the debris and when found part of the boiler was resting upon him, the escaping steam which badly scalded him about the arms and body.

Mr. King was finally taken out and removed to a Boston hospital where for seven days his death was momentarily expected. He had a remarkable constitution and with the aid of one of the most noted physicians of Boston at that time he was pulled through and eventually recovered. The date of the accident was Sept. 12, 1848, and has always been firmly fixed in his mind.

John D. took no holiday Labor day. No doubt he feels the need of econ-only to pay his new income tax.

Those North Weymouth grapes must be sour. Certainly not worth the cost of court proceedings or the unpleasant notoriety.

Success to the Rivadavia which will now be put to severe tests. May she prove both speedy and economical.

It is only a few years ago that a new High schoolhouse was built, and more recently that its capacity was doubled, yet the school authorities tell us the large building with forty or more rooms is taxed to its full capacity. The school housing problem is certainly an ever present one in Quincy.

The gross receipts of the Citizens' Gas Company for gas are now in excess of those of Water department of the city for water, and return a good dividend. The success of the Gas Company has been achieved in a few years, and the city should take a lesson in finance.

Wonder if other streets will stand the historical test to which Goffe street has been put. Probably Gen. Washington never rode over Washington street, and Presidents Garfield and Arthur never knew the honor conferred on them in the City of Presidents. Does any one claim that Wilson street, or Wilson avenue, Wilson court, or Wilson place were named after the present President? Quincy has a Taft street, but somehow Roosevelt has been overlooked.

BACKING UP THE TEACHER.

The mistress of a certain home said to a caller the other day, referring to the operations of her small boy, who may for the occasion be called Johnnie:—

"I hope wou will pardon the looks of my home. Johnnie just takes the hammer to everything."

Then Johnnie came in. His mother issued various orders. No doubt feeling that they were unnecessary and injudicious, Johnnie declined to obey. His mother remarked apologetically, "He'll go to school this fall. The teachers will straighten him out."

There are many families that feel they can't afford to spend time disciplining their children, when they are hiring school teachers to do the job. When the Johnnies turn up at public school on some early date in September, they do not readily yield the position of independence which they have acquired in the home. Able to have his own way with his parents, it appears fundamentally unjust to them that the teacher is not equally good natured. Johnny has first experience with real authority.

He reports his observations at home. His parents are aghast at the heartlessness and favoritism shown by the teacher. Soon the irate parent appears at the school superintendent's office. Rumors of the fray reach the other children, and an undertone of insubordination develops.

When a parent was asked one day if she had ever met her boy's teacher, with whom she had had differences, she remarked that she never had and never wanted to see her. When the teacher was asked a similar question, she made substantially the same reply.

These two forces, the school and the home, are supposed to be working jointly to develop the best that is in child nature. Much is accomplished in Quincy along these lines by the Parents and Teachers Associations in the different districts.

SONG OF LONG AGO.

A song of long ago—
Sing it lightly; sing it low;
Sing it softly, like the lisping of the lips we used to know,
When our baby laughter spilled
From the glad hearts ever filled
With music glad as robin ever trilled!

Let the fragrant summer breeze,
And the leaves of locust trees,
And the apple buds and blossoms, and the wings of honeybees,
All palpitate with glee
Till the happy harmony
Brings back each childish joy to you and me.

Let the eyes of fancy turn
Where the tumbled pippins burn
Like embers in the orchard's lap of tangled grass and fern.
There let the old path wind
In and out and on behind
The cider press that chuckles as we grind.

Blend in the song the moan
Of the dove that grieves alone,
And the wild whir of the locust, and the bumble's drowsy
drone.
And the low of cows that call
Through the pasture bars when all
The landscape fades away at evenfall.

Then, far away and clear,
Through the dusky atmosphere,
Let the wailing of the killdee be the only sound we hear.
Oh, sad and sweet and low,
As the memory may know,
Is the glad, pathetic song of long ago!

—James Whitcomb Riley.

SAID ABOUT WOMEN.

Nothing displeases women more than an austere and self contained character. They see that they have no hold upon it. Its dignity awes them. Its pride rebels. Its occupations keep them aloof.—Hippolyte A. Taine.

No woman is so bad but we may rejoice when her heart thrills to love, for then God has her by the hand.—J. M. Barrie.

Her eyes are homes of silent prayer.—Alfred Tennyson.

Flattery is their nature. To coax, flatter and sweetly befool some one is every woman's business. She is none if she declines this office.—William Makepeace Thackeray.

IMPEACHMENT FOUND LEGAL

Sulzer Cannot Exercise Gubernatorial Functions

DECISION OF SUPREME JUSTICE

Sends Banker Robin, "Pardoned" Felon, Back to Prison—Assembly Declared to Have Right to Divest Executive of His Power—Protection of Popular Rights

Kingston, N. Y., Sept. 12.—Supreme Court Justice Hasbrouck decided that Governor Sulzer was regularly impeached and while awaiting impeachment trial was divested of the right to exercise his executive functions, including the power to pardon.

The question of the legality of Sulzer's impeachment came before Hasbrouck in connection with habeas corpus proceedings brought to compel the New York city authorities to honor Sulzer's pardon of Joseph G. Robin, the banker convict. He decided that Robin's pardon was invalid, quashed the writ and sent Robin back to prison at Blackwell's island.

Attorneys representing Sulzer and Robin had argued that the impeachment was illegal, because voted by the assembly at a special session which was not called expressly to decide that question. The court refused to sustain this contention. The decision upheld the argument of the New York corporation counsel, who maintained that the assembly when it impeached acted in a judicial and not legislative capacity and was properly in session.

Hasbrouck's decision was the first ruling made by any court on the legality of the impeachment, which was voted Aug. 13. Arguments on the validity of the writ of habeas corpus were heard here Monday.

"The power conferred upon the assembly to impeach the governor," says Hasbrouck, "is a judicial power. The power of impeachment, therefore, cannot be participated in by the governor or senate, and therefore does not constitute a legislative subject.

"Having no power in the premises, an acting governor could not call the assembly into session for the purpose of impeaching an absent governor. Neither is the assembly shorn of its power by the summons of the legislature in extraordinary session.

"The whole design of constitutional government would fail of protection of popular rights and relief from oppression and wrong against those in exalted place if there were no independence or power in the assembly to make impeachments.

"The assembly is the assembly, whether in regular or extraordinary session, or whether self-convened. It is the sole impeaching functionary, and in its exercise of power it is beyond the let or hindrance of the executive or the courts. It is reserved for the state for its preservation and the destruction of its enemies and is beyond he control of every court, except the court empowered to try the impeached and find his guilt or innocence."

AMASSED A FORTUNE

Farley, King of Strike-Breakers, Dies of Tuberculosis

Plattsburg, N. Y., Sept. 12.—James Farley, known the country over as the "King of Strike-Breakers," died in his home here of tuberculosis. The announcement gives his age as 40.

Farley started work at 15 as attendant in a Pittsburg billiard room. He worked as bartender, night clerk, day clerk, and at 18 was made manager of the hotel. He eventually became a strike-breaker for the Brooklyn Rapid Transit company. At 24 he received a salary of $35,000 from the transit company, but left it in 1899, becoming a professional strike-breaker. He was shot at many times and carried two bullets in his body for years. In all big railroad strikes he always took out the first car himself.

In 1905 he took charge of breaking a strike in New York, for which he received a retainer of $1000 a day. He was strike-breaker-general for ten years and amassed a fortune of $1,000,000. At times he had on his payroll from 30,000 to 40,000 men scattered all over the country.

Farley retired from the strike-breaking business in 1908, bought a farm in the Adirondacks and bred racing horses.

Since he was stricken with tuberculosis he has feared an attempt on his life and had an armed guard of ten men.

VEIL CATCHES FIRE

Bride Burned and Panic In Church During Wedding Ceremony

Westbrook, Me., Sept. 12.—Had it not been for quick work by the attendants at the wedding of Miss Mary Sullivan and John Murphy of this city, at St. Hyacinthe Catholic church, the bride would have been seriously burned when her veil caught fire from a candle. As it was, she was severely burned, but was able to proceed with the ceremony.

The ceremony was about to begin when Miss Sullivan's veil came in contact with a lighted candle. There was a flash of fire and a scream from the bride-to-be, followed by screams from those in the audience. In a moment there was a minature panic.

The attendants rushed to Miss Sullivan's assistance, but before they could extinguish the fire it had burned her veil, communicated to her dress and scorched her hair.

Melrose, Mass., Sept. 12.—Stumbling head foremost down a deep, narrow hole between the solid ice and wall of the Fells Ice company where he was emfployed, Marshall Jollimore, 25, was so tightly wedged in that it took the Melrose police and fire departments and his fellow employes forty minutes to pull him out through a hole chopped in the walls of the building.

He was dead when extricated, but whether from strangulation, freezing, fractured skull or cerebral hemorrhage will not be known until the medical examiner performs his autopsy.

THE WOLLASTON COUNTRY FAIR.

The Wollaston Country Fair promises to be a most interesting and instructive affair. There will be a fine display of Wollaston fruit, eggs vegetables and preserves, as well as of useful and ornamental articles. The live stock, such as poultry, dogs, calves, cats, guinea pigs, etc., will be exhibited the second day. There will be awards for best exhibit of fruit, vegetables, flowers and live stock.

Our fellow citizen, Willard E. Keyes of Beale street will offer special prizes for the following:

One prize for 6 tomatoes (judged by weight.)

One prize for the best Wollaston grown peaches, (judged on not fewer than 6 or more than 12).

One prize for the best Wollaston grown pears, (judged on not fewer than 12 or more than 24.)

One prize for Buff Orpington pullets.

Frederick H. Bishop as chairman and Arthur W. Rohn as manager of exhibits have spared no pains to make this a real country fair, showing what the farmers of Wollaston, big and little, are able to raise in their back yard.

Four handsomely decorated Rambler cars of the 1914 model, were about City Square Thursday afternoon advertising the country fair. One of the cars represented a group of five from Pumpkinville. Five girls were dressed in costumes of yellow with hats to match, the crown of each hat being a crepe paper pumpkin. The second car also held five young ladies and was labeled the chrysanthemum girls. These were all dressed in red, while from the top of their hats protrude a crepe paper red chrysanthemum. The third car, a motor truck was decorated with corn stalks, and the fourth was decorated with crepe paper and bore the sign, joy riders from Pumpkinville. In addition to the decorations mentioned the cars were also attractively trimmed with colored crepe paper. They stopped long enough in City Square to be photographed.

COMMUTER WINS PRIZE.

For the past six weeks, the New York Evening Sun has been conducting a contest with the object of finding the oldest commuter, that is the one who has commuted daily for the longest time; the commuter who has made the greatest mileage in one year; and the commuter who has made the greatest mileage in five years. The prize for each class was a six months commutation ticket. Mr. J. J. Maroney, of Hartford, Conn., won the prize for the commuter who has traveled the greatest distance in a period of five years. Mr. Maroney's record shows he has been commuting from Hartford to New York City since August 25, 1908 and up to the middle of August, 1913, had made the round trip between these two cities, 220 miles, 1,414 times, or a total distance of 311,080 miles. Mr. Maroney was the only winner by more than a narrow margin. He started commuting between Hartford and New York eleven years ago, and in that period missed his train to New York only twice, and has not once failed to make his returning connection.

THE GREENHOUSE INDUSTRY.

The greenhouse industry of Massachusetts is one of the highly important branches of its agriculture. The Experiment Station has just issued a bulletin which should prove of great value to all those engaged in it and, especially, to such as are contemplating putting up new houses. This bulletin is No. 144, "The Relation of Light to Greenhouse Culture," by George E. Stone. It shows the highly important relation of light to the development of greenhouse crops, and to the prevention of disease in such crops, and it shows how different types of construction affect the light. All growers of lettuce, cucumbers, roses, carnations, or other forced crops should find suggestion of value. The bulletin will be sent at once to all greenhouse men in the state whose addresses we have, and may be had by others interested on application. Massachusetts Agricultural Experiment Station, Amherst, Mass.

Aiding the Poor the Only Way For the Rich to Be Happy

By Cardinal GIBBONS Baltimore

THE PRINCIPAL BLESSING POSSESSED BY THE WEALTHY IS THEIR ABILITY TO AID THE POOR.

There can be NO PLEASURE by the wealthy NOR ENJOYMENT OF THEIR WEALTH unless they aid those less fortunte. Their money means only to them WHAT THEY CAN DO WITH IT, and there is only ONE WAY in which they may derive pleasure from it. That one way is to relieve the distress of the poor, to feed the hungry, to care for the homeless and to aid God's work.

WEALTH INVOLVES A VERY DEEP RESPONSIBILITY. A man is only the trustee of what he possesses, and he must in the final accounting explain his stewardship. It is the duty of the wealthy to sympathize with and aid the poor and the suffering, and if they SHIRK THAT DUTY they must in the end account for it.

THE POOR LIKEWISE HAVE A DUTY. They should be reconciled to their position and bear up, resigning themselves to God's will. They should do the best they can by GIVING THEIR BEST SERVICES TO THE BETTERMENT OF THE COMMUNITY AND LIVE WITH THE WEALTHY IN HARMONY.

America Beats the World

By the Right Rev. P. J. DONAHUE, Bishop of Wheeling, W. Va.

THERE IS NO PLACE IN THE WORLD THE EQUAL OF THIS FAIR LAND.

This republic has made itself more felt in Europe in COMMERCE, in INVENTIONS, in ENTERPRISE and in ADVERTISING METHODS than any country or any THREE COUNTRIES OF EUROPE JTSELF. Americans seem to hold the field through all the gamut from beef, machinery and manufactured articles down to dentistry and mixed drinks.

AMUSEMENTS

DOINGS ON THE STAGE IN BOSTON AND VICINITY

PARK THEATRE.

Charles Frohman, at the Park theatre, Boston, beginning Monday evening, September 15th, will present for its first performances outside of New York, "The Conspiracy," the police-detective play by John Emerson and Robert Baker which it will be recalled ran the whole of last season at Mr. Frohman's New York Garrick theatre. "The Conspiracy" is credited with an abundance of thrills as well as amusing situations to relieve the excitement. The story involved in "The Conspiracy" is an extremely absorbing and exciting one. It largely concerns the plight of a young girl only recently escaped from the horrors of white slavery, and her efforts, aided, by her brother, an assistant district attorney, to wipe out the "Scarlet Band," as white slave gang was called. The girl becomes a stenographer to the Band's leader to whom she is unknown and to save her brother's life and later her own, in self defense she kills her employer. In hiding she later enters the employ of an old newspaper writer, Winthrop Claverin; whose ability as a composer of stories for the Evening Journal, based on crimes in New York, has made him a shrewd amateur detective. To the girl, Claverly innocently dictates his story of the very murder she herself committed. He discovers her guilt in a very surprising and thrilling way. In rapid sequence incidents approach a climax, leaving the audience breathless but pleased. Mr. Frohman sends to Boston the original Garrick theatre cast including, besides Mr. Emerson Mary Keener, Roslyn Mundell, Helena Rapport, Julia Blanc, Francis Byrne Georgis Majeroni, Langdon Gillett, Conrad Cantzen, Warren Cook, Willard Barton and P. E. McCoy. The scenic equipment is an elaborate and unusual one.

KEITH'S THEATRE.

One of the biggest successes in vaudeville this season has been registered by Jack Norworth, the song writer and comedian, who since his separation from Norah Bayes has been going it alone on his account. A week ago at Atlantic City he gave an entertainment that broke all records for that resort. He was immediately booked by Mr. Keith for his Boston house and begins his engagement here next Monday for one week. Mr. Norworth will be the feature of an exceptionally strong bill which will include Lovenberg's Six American Dancers in entirely new stage settings; the Duffin-Redway Troupe in sensational casting feats; William Weston and Company in a sketch that ends with a big surprise; Leo Zarell Trio in humorous acrobatics; the Famous Four Huntings in their big scream called, "Fun in a Crazy House," Carmen Ersell late of the "Duke of Luxembourg," and the Hurah Company in sensational skating feats.

CASTLE SQUARE THEATRE.

A play new to Boston will be the attraction at the Castle Square next week. Its title is "Bachelors and Benedicts," its author is Jackson B Haag, and in plot scenes and characters it is genuine comedy. It is Mr Craig's policy to vary his repertoire with an occasional new play and he will give "Bachelors and Benedicts" with the certainty that it will not fail to please both because of its originality and its novelty. The scenes of the play take place in the home of Leslie Gilbert just before and six months after his marriage. In them the dramatist depicts life, and he has succeeded in transferring it to the stage very realistically. His dialogue is filled with a profusion of witty lines and in the end Leslie Gilbert finds that his marriage has after all not been a disaster, and Dorothy Allerton that after all there are many worse husbands than Leslie Gilbert. The plot of "Bachelors and Benedicts" is remarkably true to life, the action is spirited, and the dialogue is lively. I should keep the audience in continuous good spirits, and alert with smiles and laughter. The husband and the wife will be played by Mr. Carleton and Miss Olsson, and in the other roles all the members of Mr. Craig's company will appear.

PLYMOUTH THEATRE.

May Irwin, who has made the Plymouth Theatre, Boston, the laughing centre of the city, continues to delight large audiences in her screamingly funny play "Widow by Proxy." On next Monday this jolly comedienne whose good nature is as infectious as the measles, will begin the third and second last week of her engagement. While there is every reason to believe that she could easily remain in Boston for a long time, the prearranged bookings in her tour make it impossible. Therefore if you have not yet witnessed "the nation's greatest laugh producer" you had better take advantage of the last remaining opportunities. To see Miss Irwin is to enjoy the season's biggest laugh. Masquerading as the widow Pennington, in order that she may obtain a legacy left by an uncle of her friend's supposed dead husband, she is cast in a role that fits her like a glove. There is never a dull moment during the three acts of compelling laughter. The matinees are as usual, Thursday and Saturday.

TREMONT TEMPLE.

Have you seen "Les Miserables?" is the question that is being asked by those who have viewed this remarkable photo-drama, now running at the Tremont Temple. On next Monday the pictures begin the third week of its engagement. Already more than 30,000 people have been thrilled by this spectacular drama, which has marked an epoch in motion pictures. The presentation, in motion photography of this remarkable novel, has caused many people to seek the dust-laden book shelves in search of Hugo's masterpiece. The book just now is in big demand. The present production however, offers the public a complete narrative of this world-famous story. For clarity and vividness the pictures are remarkable. If you would witness the supreme achievement in motion photography, as well as view, in almost life-like form the characters of the world's greatest novel, don't fail to see this production There are daily matinees with a popular scale of prices.

VISIT FROM BROCKTON.

Worthy Matron Mrs. John Sullivan and ten members of Brockton Ladies circle of Moose were the guests of Quincy circle in Electa hall on Thursday evening. They extended a cordial invitation to their dance on Oct. 10, which will take place in Smith hall, Worthy Matron Mrs. Albert J. Williams presided and four applications were received. Dancing followed the meeting.

CAR SICKNESS.

Car sickness is a very disagreeable affection, sometimes akin to seasickness, and yet differing from it in several particulars.

In seasickness it is rare to find the very old or young affected. If children are seasick they are very quickly over it, and running about at play as usual, but baby will sometimes suffer from car sickness in its baby carriage, and the very old are not immune.

The symptoms of the two disorders are very much alike, says the Youth's Companion. They consist of pallor, quick pulse, clammy skin, giddiness, nausea and vomiting.

Women are more subject to car sickness than men, and this is equally true of seasickness, and one strange feature of car sickness that has been noted by physicians is that it is frequently handed down through the women of a family from generation to generation.

If an individual is immune all through childhood and early life, but develops car sickness as an adult, the fault will probably be found to rest with the eyes, and to avoid it travel with the eyes closed, or better still, to start with properly fitted glasses.

It is easy to understand why this should be so. When the eyes need glasses the whole nervous equilibrium of the body suffers, even under the best conditions, and when to this struggle is added the vibration of the cars and the temptation to watch passing scenery through the windows, the struggle turns into active revolt of the whole system against imposition.

The proof that car sickness and seasickness are not quite the same thing is found in the fact that a person may be a good sailor and yet suffer dreadfully with car sickness and vice versa, while its occurrence in babies would go to show that the sense impressions—that is to say, the impressions gained by the ear, the eye or the nose—are not at the root of this disorder, because in very tiny babies the sense impressions are undeveloped, or, at the best, very feebly developed.

As a further proof of this, car sickness often comes on during sleep, and when this occurs the eyes, of course, are not the cause in that particular case.

The symptoms of car sickness may be of a most appalling violence, the state of collapse being so extreme that death is often feared. It is comforting to know that this fear is unfounded and that, although people may be dreadfully ill, they rarely, if ever succomb.

—A London magistrate, in sentencing some suffragettes the other day, said, "You are becoming anarchists." American newspapers came to the same conclusion some months ago, but it occasionally takes an obvious fact a long time to penetrate the judicial mind.—Milford Gazette.

Late at the Play.

We know from Pepys and from passages in the plays of contemporary dramatists that the manners of theater audiences in the restoration epoch were not nice. but there is no reason to believe that even the fops habitually arrived at the theater late. Mr. Sparkish, Mr. Novel and their fellows would talk loudly while the play was going on to show the superiority of their wit to the poet's, but they likely were on hand early to lose none of the fun. In later epochs of English theatrical history theater going was a serious undertaking, not a mere pastime. One can tell from the beginnings of old plays that the authors counted on audiences closely attentive from the first. Lady Randolph is the first speaker in "Douglas," Orestes in "The Distressed Mother," Almeira in "The Mourning Bride." The custom of "playing the audience in" with a short piece was of still later origin. Perhaps about that time the habit of going late to the theater became common. "Half price" for late comers was a custom of Thackeray's time.—Westminster Gazette.

Cruikshank at Eighty.

"Among the many people whose acquaintance I made in Richardson's rooms was old George Cruikshank. I happened incidentally to remark that I wasn't very well, when Cruikshank in his genial manner exclaimed: 'What? Not well? A powerful young fellow like you ought to be ashamed of yourself to talk of being unwell! Here, let me see you do this.'

"He sprang up, took the tongs and poker from the fireplace, crossed them on the floor like two swords and then, whistling his own air, danced a highland sword dance with great agility and accuracy, keeping it up for at least a quarter of an hour. As he threw himself into a chair, somewhat exhausted by his efforts, he said, 'Now, then, when I'm dead you can say you saw old Cruikshank when he was over eighty years of age dance the sword dance in Dr. Richardson's room.'"—From "Pages From an Adventurous Life."

Punished the Selfish One.

The Bale-Geneva express, says the London Standard Geneva correspondent, was overcrowded the other day and several travelers had to stand in the corridors of the second class coaches. One tourist saw a seat vacant, but covered with luggage, and asked a passenger sitting near whether the seat was "occupied." "Yes," replied the stranger, "the man is in the restaurant car, and will return soon."

There the matter ended until the express reached Lausanne, when the owner of all the luggage prepared to get out.

"Pardon me," said the tourist, "that luggage does not belong to you," and called the guard. The latter sided with the tourist, and the whole matter was placed before the station master. The selfish traveler had to prove, piece by piece, that the luggage on the seat belonged to him, and he finally was obliged to pay for two second class tickets.

The Charm She Wore.

Many are the charms adopted by society women with a grain of superstition in their makeup, and one of the most unique is that worn by a young matron who spends much of her time at Atlantic City. Attention being called to her curious pendant—a polished substance set in pearls and suspended from a slender gold chain—she was asked what manner of stone it might be. "Stone?" she laughed. "It's just plain, ordinary wood. You see, I have a most unfortunate tendency to boast, and at such times caution tells me to knock wood. Oftentimes there is no wood at hand, so all I have to do to save myself from my rashness is to tap my little locket. Simple, ain't it?"—New York Tribune.

Beautiful India.

India bears the same relation to the orient that Italy does to Europe. It is the home of palaces, temples and monuments; it is the home of beautiful art work in many materials. Most of its cities have a splendid historical past that is seen in richly ornamented temples and shrines, in the tombs of its illustrious dead and in palaces that surpass in beauty of decoration anything which Europe can boast.—"The Critic In the Orient."

BOSTON SEWAGE NUISANCE

already appointed committees to secure an abatement of the nuisance in Quincy bay.

John R. Nelson, chairman of the committee, reported that he found public sentiment very strong in favor of securing an immediate abatement of this nuisance. It now seems probably that if the City of Boston and the Metropolitan Sewer commission do not take prompt action that the matter will be taken up in the next Legislature.

Mr. Nelson in his report to the association said:— "At a recent meeting of the committee we had the pleasure of having with us John Q. A. Field, a former city official, ex-County Commisioner and president of Quincy Savings bank. He is very strongly in favor of the plan of securing immediate relief from the sewage nuisance. He was a member of the Quincy board of selectmen when the Moon Island sewage plant was installed. The City of Boston proceeded without any consent from Quincy by buying up the land necessary to put in the sewerage plant. Mr. Field said he believed that there was no question that this sewer was now a nuisance and that the City of Boston should be compelled to abate it.

"Our committee called upon Mr. Dorr, head of the Boston sewer department and he explained that tests were now being made of treating sewerage chemically and that in a small way this had proven a success. Mr. Dorr said that if Boston made a larger appropriation for this purpose that the matter would be taken up of experimenting with 1,000,000 gallons of sewerage a day. The matter of ever taking care of all the sewerage was one that it would take at least five or six years to put through if the experiments proved a success.

A plan was presented showing that the Metropolitan sewer which has a continuous flow emptied into the bay about three-quarters of a mile from Houghs Neck and that on the incoming tide it was possible for this sewerage to back up into the Adams Shore and Norfolk Downs shores where complaints had been made of the presence of sewage. The plans also showed the Moon Island plant where the sewage is stored in tanks until one hour after high tide when the tanks are emptied on the outgoing tide. In this way little or none of the sewage comes back with the incoming tide but the plant is considered a nuisance that should be abated by having the sewage emptied at least five miles at sea.

HOUGHS NECK ASSOCIATES.

The activity of the Houghs Neck Associates in past years will probably be as large a factor this year as in the past and the political committee reports that there are 214 voters living there and that 75 are eligible for registration. An effort will be made to register these men for the primaries.

A committee of the association has been appointed to confer with the School Committee relative to enlarging the Atherton Hough grammar school, and also to make arrangements for lighting it so that a Parent-teachers Association can meet in the building. This privilege is now enjoyed in all other parts of the city.

A husking bee and ance will be given this fall and the committee in charge is Henry W. French, James E. Wall, Daniel E. Fenner and Michael F. Coughlin.

THE TEN MISTAKES OF LIFE.

An English paper is said to have given what are called "the ten mistakes of life," as follows:

To set up our own standard of what is right and wrong and judge people accordingly.

To measure the enjoyment of others by our own.

To expect uniformity of opinion in this world.

To look for judgment and experience in youth.

To endeavor to mold all dispositions alike.

To look for perfection in our own actions.

To worry ourselves and others with what cannot be remedied.

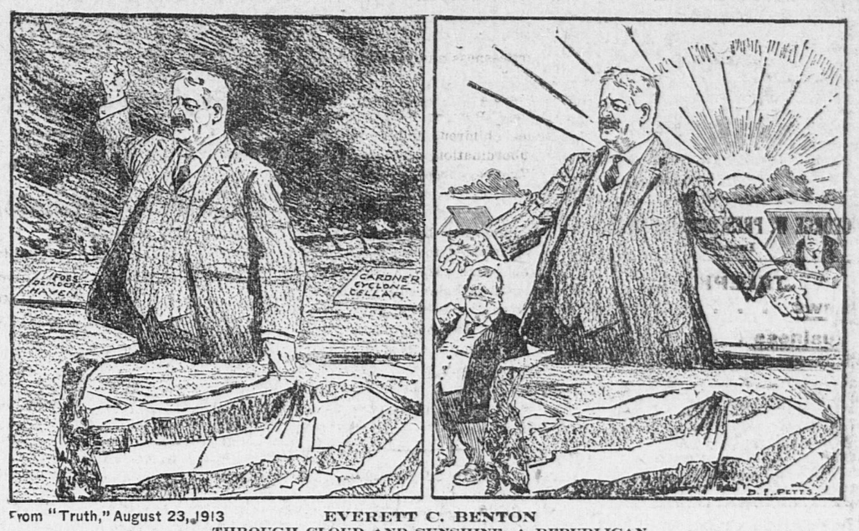

To refuse to yield in immaterial matters.

To refuse to alleviate, so far as lies in our power, all that which needs alleviation.

To refuse to make allowance for the infirmities of others.

SAY IT FAST.

Somebody asks, "How fast can you say this?" Well, try it. We have and our tongue is as flat as a shingle:

"A pickle peddler pushed his pushcart full of pickels o'er a puddle but ne'er a passer purchased e'en a piddling pickle from that pushcart in the puddle as the passers passed. Peeved at this, the pickle peddler pushed his pickle pushcart into a passer who, the pickle peddler promptly punched, praying petulantly as the prostrate pickle peddler picked a pickle from his pushcart, poised and in a passion put the pickle in the passer's paunch with a punch that that poor person punted o'er the puddle and on the prostrate pickle peddler's pushcart fell.

Pausing importunate, the pickle peddler peeled to paste the passer who had pushed his pickle pushcart in the puddle and pertinent proposed to pickle that poor passer so that pickle peddlers might a puddle pass without a passer pausing e'en to push the pickle peddler's pushcart full of pickles o'er.

NEW BOWLING LEAGUE

One to be Organized Composed of Amateurs

The approaching cool season has stimulated the interest in bowling and an amateur league, consisting of the Colonials, Red Men, Orients, St. Mary's end probably others, is being organized in addition to the Old Colony and Fore River leagues.

The amateurs have gone into the bowling centres with their usual enthusiasm and last season rolled on several independent teams which totaled high scores and fine singles. This will be the first regular amateur organization in Quincy, and because of that is receiving fine support.

The Fore River league meets Tuesday evening for reorganization and if the last season showing is bettered the sport will become more popular than it has been. The league, representing all departments at the yard, has some fast bowlers, including Paul Poehler, the champion.

Rubber Contest May Wind Up Baseball Season

What will probably be the last base ball game in Quincy this season is scheduled for Saturday afternoon on the Ward Three playground between the Colonials and the Red Men. The teams have one game apiece and the rubber contest should be a fast amateur game. Both teams have enviable records and displayed exceptional ability this summer. Several games have gone over the nine innings and the fans would not be surprised to see the game end inside of 2 to 0.

There is more Catarrh in this section of the country than all other diseases put together, and until the last few years was supposed to be incurable. For a great many years doctors pronounced it a local disease and prescribed local remedies, and by constantly failing to cure local treatment pronounced it incurable. Science has proven catarrh to be a constitutional disease and therefore requires constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, Ohio, is the only constitutional cure on the market. It is taken internally in doses from 10 drops to a teaspoonful. It acts directly on the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. They offer one hundred dollars for any case it fails to cure. Send for circulars and testimonials.

$1000 BANKNOTES STUFFED IN PILLOW

Cambridge, Mass., Sept. 12.—Mrs. Bridget Doherty, who, until her death last week, lived alone and apparently in poverty in this city, left a comfortable little fortune of between $7000 and $8000.

This fact was not discovered, however, until the administrator of her estate, John H. Hurley, had carefully searched her modest apartment. His first scrutiny disclosed a small box containing $262 in currency and specie. He came next upon four bankbooks, showing an aggregate deposit of more than $5000.

Further search did not reveal anything of material value until a neighbor suggested that he open the pillows of Mrs. Doherty's bed. Plunging his hand into the feathers, he brought forth two crisp banknotes, each for $1000.

Hurley is now looking about for Mrs. Doherty's heirs.

Oklahoma City, Ok., Sept. 12.—In advance of the trial, Governor Cruce has served notice that even should Lou Green, negro, charged with having killed two policemen at Guthrie last week, be convicted, he would not permit him to be hanged.

Cruce is opposed to capital punishment. A delegation of Guthrie citizens waited on him to ascertain what action he would take in the event of Green's conviction.

SUCCUMBS TO HEART FAILURE

Mayor Gaynor's End Comes With Shocking Suddenness

EXPIRES ON AN OCEAN LINER

Had Started on Voyage to Europe In Hope of Regaining Strength—Enemy of Police as Judge—Many Ups and Downs as Head of City of New York—Son With Him at the End

New York, Sept. 12.—William J. Gaynor, mayor of New York city, died suddenly on the steamer Baltic when the steamer was within a few hundred miles of the Irish coast.

While the cause was given as heart disease, it is known that the mayor never recovered from the shock of his attempted assassination in 1910, the bullet never having been removed from his neck.

His sudden death at this time is expected to make practically sure the election to the mayoralty chair of John P. Mitchel, at the head of the anti-Tammany forces. Had Gaynor lived he would have made a strong effort in a three-cornered fight as a candidate for re-election. It was in the hope of regaining his strength that he began his voyage to Europe.

Mrs. Gaynor and seven children survive the mayor. The youngest, Ruth, is 9 years old. The oldest is Rufus W. Gaynor, who was with his father at the time of his death. The others are Mrs. W. S. Webb, Jr., Mrs. Harry K. Vincent, Norman, Helen and Marion.

A message last night from his son, Rufus, who was his father's only traveling companion, said:

"Father died at 1 p. m. on Wednesday, the 10th. His death was due to heart failure. He was seated in his deck chair at the time, and the nurse and the ship's doctor were with him. I discovered him unconscious in his chair, though still alive. He died about three minutes later, without recognizing any of us. Everything possible was done, but he seemed to go as a candle flickers out. Am all right and am trying to arrange to bring the body back on Lusitania, sailing from Liverpool on the 12th."

Gaynor's Career

William Jay Gaynor was born on a little farm at Oriskany, N. Y., in 1851. Although he grew up accustomed to hardships, he inherited his father's love for knowledge, became a mathematician, studied law in Boston, and then began his career in New York.

There will always be varying opinions as to the place Gaynor occupied in the roll of New York city's chief executives. Seldom has there been an administration so hard to analyze as his; almost never has a mayor's popularity with the masses fluctuated with such startling suddenness as has been the case with Gaynor.

But whatever the verdict it cannot be denied that Gaynor was a very busy mayor. His proclivities for letter-writing, and his eagerness to express his often original views on all sorts of subjects kept him continually on the jump. The mayor wrote more personal letters from the city hall than any other man who ever held the office. This course made him many friends, but it also involved him in numerous controversies.

In numerous public utterances he emphasized his purpose not of repressing gambling, liquor law violations and the social evil altogether, but of preventing their outward manifestations. He took the stand that gambling, drinking and prostitution were puzzling problems and that his main intent was to prevent their being used as a means of blackmail by the police.

Gaynor took credit to his administration for reducing the number of arrests, for preventing extortion from saloon keepers, and for preventing unlawful entries into houses, a practice common in the collection of evidence against gambling and other vicious resorts.

Before he was assigned to the New York appellate division, Gaynor was regarded as one of the most efficient trial judges in the second department, with marked ability to facilitate the business of the court. He was sometimes irritable and lacking in what lawyers are pleased to call the "judicial temperament." He would instruct young lawyers, abuse old ones, and set aside legal precedents.

One of his chief targets was the police department, whose tyranny, he said, was worse than that of the Russian police. It would be difficult to say how many times he discussed police despotism "and the threatened overthrow of free government" in his fecisions.

One little known fact of Gaynor's early youth was his early training for the Roman Catholic priesthood. He entered the Order of the Christian Brothers when he was 13 years old. His health failing, he went to Boston, where he taught school, wrote special articles for the newspapers and studied law. In 1873, 22 years old, he moved to Brooklyn.

Gaynor went to work as a reporter on the Brooklyn Argus, then in its prime. Flatbush village at that time was a mess of corruption. Gaynor studied it, and dug to the light foul nests of graft and rascality. In 1875 he entered politics and his rise after that was rapid.

Mayor of New York Dies Suddenly In Mid-Ocean

Mayor Gaynor, in the first year of his administration, came near death when he was shot in the neck and seriously wounded by a discharged city employe, James J. SLAIN WOMAN IDENTIFIED

Birthmarks on Body May Solve New York River Mystery

New York, Sept. 12.—The woman who was murdered and whose body was cut up and thrown into the Hudson river was identified as Mrs. Casper Janin of this city.

Although the head, arms and legs are missing, the body was identified by a mark on the back. The woman's husband made the identification and told the police she had disappeared from her home on Aug. 14.

Casper Janin, the husband, told the police that he and his wife lived in Barcelona, Spain, up to about three years ago, when the woman left him and came to this country. Janin said he followed her soon after and found her living at a house on West One Hundred and Fourth street, New York.

Janin was positive that the marks on the back of the body, which he said were birthmarks, offered an unmistakable means of identification.

The police immediately set out to find the man whose name Janin gave them as the proprietor of the house on West One Hundred and Fourth street.

GOMPERS DENIES HE SWUNG LABOR VOTE

Did Not Promise to Deliver It to Democratic Party

Washington, Sept. 12.—Denying that he had promised in 1908 to deliver the vote of labor to the Democratic party, President Gompers of the American Federation of Labor, before the house lobby investigation committee, declared that a legislative committee of three, consisting of Vice President O'Connell, Secretary Morrison and himself, determined the attitude of the federation towards candidates for political offices.

Sometimes, he said, heads of unions were consulted. The labor leader also denounced Socialism.

GUARDS ARE ACQUITTED

No One to Blame For Suffocation of Eight Negroes In Cell

Richmond, Tex., Sept. 12.—Sergeant Wheeler and M. Fain and R. H. Stewart, guards at the Harlem state convict farm, were acquitted in a hearing before a justice of the peace here of charges of negligent homicide in connection with the death of eight negro convicts, who were suffocated in the "dark cell" at the farm.

Twelve negroes were confined in the cell, which afforded only a few small holes as a means of ventilation, for infraction of prison rules. In the morning it was found that eight had died during the night.

Labor Law Sends More to School

Boston, Sept. 12.—The child labor law is again a subject of hot discussion owing to the provisions regarding school attendance. The law, in the opinion of the new commission on labor and industries, practically provides that all children under 16 who are not at work under the provisions of the statute must attend school.

The Returning

"Whither so fast, ye anxious ones?
Whither so fast, I say?
Your haste is such it hath the look
Of one who is running away.
Why from the land of the incas' gold
Do ye hurry thus to roam?"
And the answer comes in a shriek, a shriek,
"Because we want to get home!"

"Why do ye crowd the sailing ships,
Ye panting refugees?
Why do ye flock to the border line
Each hurry way to seize?
Why without baggage do some come,
As though sent by a scare?"
"Because we'd get out of Mexico,
For it is not healthy there."

"Why do ye e'en to the steerage go
So that ye get across?
Why do ye fortunes leave behind
For the hand of fate to toss?
Why stay ye not and stick it out
And hang on to the bat?"
"Because we would fain be in a land
Where we know where we are at."

MAKE MONKEYS HUMAN, PLAN OF SCIENCE FARM.

Simians Will Be Imported From Africa to Canary Islands.

Monkey politicians and orators and simian prima donnas may be a common thing in the course of a few years if an experiment to be made by scientists proves successful.

According to the Journal of the American Medical association, scientists who have struggled for years to prove or disprove the Darwinian theory and incidentally have worked out medical problems and cures with the aid of monkeys are now planning to establish a monkey farm on the Canary islands, where the simians may be more closely studied.

Fear that in a few years the monkeys will be almost extinct has caused the movement for the experimental station. Science and medicine would sustain a severe loss if such a state of affairs should exist, says the Journal.

The primates are to be transported from Africa and allowed to live in their natural state. A study will be made of their language and their ability to learn to talk, gesture and sing. They will be taught color perception, and the influence of certain colors upon the nerves of the monkeys will be studied and an attempt made to apply the same tests to human beings.

One of the main studies will be the hypothesis of a double origin of man, the belief universal among savages being that anthropoids living in the trees of their front yards are not brutes, but men like themselves.

The propagation of the simian is an important factor in the study of medicine and the discovery of serums and cures for human ills. Numerous tests have proved, says the Journal, that diseases which are prevalent in mankind exist also in monkeys, and the simian will react to the test practically the same as man.

As an example it was a monkey who first taught that bovine tuberculosis could be transmitted to human beings, although not as easily as in monkeys. Four species of simians will be taken to the Canary islands, the gorilla, chimpanzee, orang outang and gibbon, as these have proved to have more human traits than other anthropoids.

TINTED BREAD THE LATEST.

Pale Blue Lobsters Also Among Newest Fashionable Food Fads.

The latest diet craze in London is to have your food as highly colored as possible, and from Germany comes the pale blue lobster, the invention of a learned professor named Kornfeld. Red lobsters being too commonplace to whet the jaded appetites of society diners, the professor hit upon the brilliant idea of adding an alkali to the water in which the lobsters are boiled. As a result, they come out a pretty pale blue, and the smart set are able to breathe again.

Lobsters are not the only food that German aristocrats wish to be highly colored. Rose colored soup and tinted bread also enter into the menus.

Apparently there is a scientific reason for this latest fad in diet. An eminent medical man gave it as his opinion some time ago that a person's character can be gauged by the kind of colors he prefers in his foods. Thus if you are very fond of yellow colored foods you are probably a person of somewhat low and vulgar tastes, but if you choose dishes of a brown or chocolate color you show yourself to be a person of refinement.

AN UNCLE SAM WEEKLY.

Mr. Hobson Would Have It Break All Circulation Records.

Representative R. P. Hobson of Alabama has evolved a comprehensive plan which proposes to embark the government in the newspaper business.

Hobson has asked the house to pass a bill appropriating $75,000 as the initial expense for the publication of a weekly journal to be devoted to the executive departments. The journal would, according to his plan, publish everything of interest that happened in and about the various departments of the government.

Hobson proposed that the journal should break all records as far as circulation is concerned. He would have the government issue 8,895,000 copies of it weekly. Each senator would be allowed to distribute 25,000, and members would have 15,000 each. The overworked frank would carry the journals to their destinations.

The Yellow Claw

Was It the End of It?

By CLARISSA MACKIE

Perkins entered his employer's private office and laid a square paper wrapped package at Murray's elbow.

"By parcel post, marked 'Personal,'" he murmured apologetically and went away as silently as he had come.

John Murray stared at the package with incredulous eyes. Suddenly his jaw set firmly and he jumped up and, locking the door to the outer office, went to his safe and took from an inner compartment two other packages of the same size and shape as the one Perkins had just brought in.

With the three packages ranged before him on the desk, John Murray studied them with knitted brow.

They were exactly alike. He opened one of the packages.

Within was a square box of Chinese red lacquer, with a powdering of gold on the lid. The box was perhaps ten inches square and three inches deep.

Murray lifted the lid and gazed long at the strange contents of the box.

On a bed of red silk lay a hand—a hideous, claw-like hand—with long, transparent nails. The thing was made of yellow wax, but so perfect was the workmanship and so faithfully had the artisan carried out his idea that the yellow hand seemed like that of a living human hand, a veined and knotted hand, with muscled fingers half curled, as if in malignant desire to clutch, to strangle, to kill.

There was nothing else in the box save the yellow, claw-like hand.

With set lips Murray opened the second box and disclosed a facsimile of the waxen hand and the third box and saw still another hand. But this last hand contained in the box just arrived was closed, as though it held something in a death grip.

Murray shuddered a little, for he knew that the throat which the Yellow Claw longed to grasp was his own.

He knew that the death grip was intended for his own strong, brown throat.

Murray knew that he had received the three warnings and that if he did not obey the last one—well, he drew a sharp breath and walked to the window—well, if he didn't heed the third warning, why, he would disappear as mysteriously as Henderson had vanished three months before or as completely as Moore had dropped out of sight six months ago.

"I will speak to Swinnerton. He must advise me," muttered Murray as he thrust the boxes back into the safe and locked the door.

As he spoke there came a rap at the office door.

He turned the key and admitted Perkins, who darted little, snaky glances around the room as he delivered his message:

"Mr. Swinnerton to see you, sir."

"Send him in, please," said Murray shortly and he pushed forward a deep chair for his visitor, who entered almost immediately. Tom Swinnerton was a tall, thin, anxious looking young man with fair hair tousled over his fine forehead. He sank down in the chair and tossed his hat on the desk.

"Hope I don't bore you, Murray, but I've heard from them," he said with a nervous laugh.

John Murray uttered a faint echo of the laugh.

"I'm in the same box, Tom. I've heard three times."

"My God, Murray!" gasped the other. "You don't mean—why, what are you going to do about it?"

Murray shrugged his shoulders. "The third call came only half an hour ago."

"I've heard twice. I came to ask your advice," shuddered the younger man, fixing his anxious eyes on Murray's strong face.

"There's only one thing to do, Tom, after all"—and Murray turned suddenly and sat down close to his visitor. He spoke in a whisper: "You know we four, Moore and Henderson, you and I, promised to obey the call of the Yellow Claw at any time in return for which they allowed Henderson to go free after that fiasco of his up the river. Those were rough days for foreigners in China, and, well, I don't believe any one of us expected to be called upon to do what the Yellow Claw demands. Henderson must have refused and Moore as well, for you know they have both disappeared."

"Well, what is the one thing to do, John?" asked Tom after awhile.

"Go down into Chinatown, find out what they want and then decide what is best to be done."

"When shall we go?"

"Tonight is best. I've had my last call. The third hand held a garroter's cord. Jove, they're an uncanny set, these Chinese!" Murray arose and paced the floor.

"Why Chinatown? We don't know where to go," objected Tom.

"They've come by parcel post. I've investigated and can tell you the very station from which they were mailed. And I'm pretty sure that when we get into Chinatown there will be some one looking out for us to take us to the Yellow Claw."

* * * * * * * *

The two men dined in silence, and when the early twilight was falling they walked slowly up Dupont street, touching elbows with slant eyed Asiatics who had formed this foreign settlement in California's largest city.

As they passed a dark alley a Chinese stepped forth and held out a lean hand toward them.

"Come," he said in a shrill whisper, and the two followed, knowing that they had received the dreaded summons.

Down the alley, lighted at long distances by small smoky oil lamps above grim doorways, through a broken arch, a turn to the left, through a swiftly opened door, down an ill lighted passage, at the end of which were broken steps leading down into a black void. Their guide produced a candle, lighted it and led the way down other steps into the bowels of the earth. At last he paused before a black painted door and rapped softly three times, then three times again.

The door swung inward and disclosed a dimly lighted room.

Under a canopy of richly embroidered satin there sat on a cushioned teakwood chair a dignified figure clad in a Chinese robe of stiff brocade. On the breast of the tunic hung a heavy chain of amber beads and from the beads there swung a life size waxen hand—the replica of the three that John Murray had received, and of the two that had come to Swinnerton.

The face of the man in the chair was hidden under a queer mask of painted porcelain, but his bright dark eyes shone through narrow slits beneath the painted brows.

Murray looked around to find that the door was closed and their guide had disappeared. They were alone with the grim figure in the chair.

"Advance," mumbled the figure in English, and the two obeyed mechanically. Murray's hand rested on the revolver in his coat pocket.

"You have come in obedience to the beckoning of the Yellow Claw," went on the voice monotonously; "are you prepared to keep your promise made to the most high Feng Soy?" His voice dropped to a whisper as he added a few words of secret import. A dead silence followed his speech.

"What is it you wish us to do?" asked Murray at last.

Again the personage bowed his covered head and whispered short abrupt sentences that caused his heroes to stiffen with horror.

Their faces were white like drifted snow when they lifted them to the impassive porcelain mask. Swinnerton's eyes were fixed on the bright dark eyes of the personage with a strange intensity; it was as if he was trying to wring some secret from the keeper of the Yellow Claw—as if he was racking his memory for some clew. Murray broke the silence.

"And if we refuse?" he asked.

"If you refuse," answered the voice, "Henderson and Moore will no longer be alone."

Tom was laughing and in either clutched hand was a revolver; his long neck was thrust forward and his head nodded waggishly at the personage.

For the first time the figure in the teakwood chair moved, the hands sought folds of the voluminous robes and flashed out again.

Four revolver shots deafened the air, and when the smoke had cleared away Swinnerton was sitting on the floor with a bullet through his arm, while the teakwood chair was empty.

On the silken carpet before the dais was a huddled form under folds of stiff brocade.

Murray leaned over his friend and assisted him to rise.

"Tom, are you badly hurt?"

"A scratch on my arm. I believe Perkins is dead. Better look and see," returned the other with a dry laugh.

"Perkins! What are you talking about?"

"Why, I guess you'll find that the Yellow Claw is nothing less than your confidential clerk, Perkins. I thought his face was familiar, but couldn't place it. Remember Blake, the renegade white man who got Henderson into that trouble up the Yangtze?"

"Yes, of course; but Perkins"—

"Perkins is Blake, and the rascal has been working us four to the limit. Must have robbed and murdered Moore and Henderson. Both wore handsome jewelry and carried large sums of money when they disappeared. Let us get out of this."

"But the Yellow Claw?" protested Murray, unconvinced that all these years of uneasiness and the last few weeks of terror had been inspired by the machinations of his snaky eyed clerk.

"Perkins is the Yellow Claw. It doesn't exist outside of China. That's my best bet. He's used his knowledge to blackmail us, and he may be the tool for treasonable powers higher up. Remember the sums of money he demanded? Whew!"

Murray stepped to the prostrate form and turned it over. The porcelain mask fell away and disclosed the dead face of Perkins. The waxen hand at his neck was red with blood.

Without another word the two Americans left the room. Together they fled silently by strange passages and through crooked corridors, darting blindly here and there, up darksome stairways, until, guided by a watchful Providence, they found themselves in a dim courtyard that was peopled only in the shadows. No one stayed their flight, for no one cared. Each had his own affairs, and murder was a common thing.

Finally they came to the Signal building, and Murray helped his companion up to the office and telephoned for a physician to attend to Swinnerton's wounded arm.

"Now to live," muttered Swinnerton with a grim smile. "The Yellow Claw is dead."

But Murray shivered as if he felt the cold breath of some evil premonition.

"I am not so sure about that," he said slowly.

ARRAIGNMENT IS POSTPONED

Thaw Remains In Custody of Sheriff For Safety

ARMED MEN ARE GUARDING HIM

Squad of Sympathizers From Canada Appear In Colebrook, Apparently to Render Assistance to Fugitive If Possible—Canada Ready to Bar Evelyn Thaw as an Actress

Colebrook, N. H., Sept. 12.—Twenty-five Canadians, several of them opponents of William T. Jerome after his arrest in Coaticook, Que., on a charge of gambling, and others from Sherbrooke, where Harry K. Thaw received such an ovation in court, have followed the fugitive across the border into New Hampshire and revived with their coming the intense partisan feeling so evident while Thaw was in the dominion.

Their presence in Colebrook enlivened what was otherwise a typical Thaw day for those who have been following the erratic course of Stanford White's slayer since his escape from Mateawan on Aug. 17. There was no court proceedings, Thaw's arraignment being put off by mutual consent until today and Thaw's lawyers, apparently thinking him safer in the custody of the sheriff than at large, abandoned their attempt to release him on a writ of habeas corpus.

The guards about Thaw's hotel were increased last night from twelve to twenty. All were armed and under the direction of Chief of Police Kelley. The chief appointed his first deputies after hearing stories that officers from New York might attempt to spirit Thaw away. He augmented them in the face of rumors that the Canadian contingent might essay the same thing with the idea of snatching Thaw from Jerome's hands and at the same time rebuking high dominion officials responsible for Thaw's sudden departure.

Groups of Canadians stood about the hotel corridors and on the street corners throughout the day and closely followed Thaw on the two trips he made from his room. The first of these was to the barber shop; the second to the office of his chief counsel, Thomas Johnson.

Two automobiles, engines running, stood at the curb in front of the office all the time Thaw was within. This so alarmed the police chief that he and his men completely surrounded Thaw when he was brought down, and escorted him to the hotel.

Unless more delay intervenes Thaw will be brought before Justice Carr today on the complaint that he is wanted in New York for conspiracy. Counsel for New York will ask that he be remanded until a requisition warrant can be presented to Governor Felker, and that he be removed to the county jail at Lancaster.

Then will begin the real fight against extradition. In preparation for this, Thaw has retained still another lawyer, N. E. Martin, a close associate of Governor Felker.

Attorney General Tuttle is still here. He declined to discuss reports that the governor would refuse to honor any requisition papers signed by Martin Glynn as acting governor of New York.

Requisition papers signed by Acting Governor Glynn of New York, asking the governor of New Hampshire to turn over Thaw to the New York authorities will reach Governor Felker at Concord tonight, and action in the Thaw case is expected to follow immediately.

Evelyn Thaw May Be Barred

Ottawa, Sept. 12.—Evelyn Thaw, who has been engaged for theatrical appearance in Toronto and Montreal, may not be allowed to cross the Canadian border. The Canadian authorities have placed the matter in the hands of Immigration Commissioner Robertson, who took an active part in deporting Harry Thaw, and he is considering the advisability of refusing her admission as an undesirable.

It is held that she is being brought from the United States for the purpose of exploiting financially the unpleasant notoriety which she and her former husband, Harry K. Thaw, have acquired during the last five years and which has recently been considerably stimulated by Thaw's arrival in Canada.

The Canadian immigration law authorizes officials to refuse admission to Canada to those whose mentality, morals, finances or general record are under suspicion. The provision is believed to be wide enough to close the door against Evelyn Thaw.

Ban on Thaw Films

Boston, Sept. 12.—Pictures of Harry Thaw's escape from Matteawan to Canada and of his dramatic dashes on both sides of the border, as well as his arrarignment before the court, will not be permitted in any Boston theatre or motion picture house, according to an edict from Mayor Fitzgerald's office.

L Road Salary List $430,000

Boston, Sept. 12.—The making public yesterday of the salaries of sixty of the minor officials of the Boston Elevated Railway company developed the fact that that corporation spends $430,000 each year in paying salaries to 111 of its officers.

Finger Prints a Sure Test to Identify Criminals and Prisoners

IN the slang of the cult a finger print is either a "whorl," a "loop," an "arch" or a "composite," the last being a broken or irregular combination of two of the other classes.

So distinctive are the markings of these different classes that an expert needs but a glance to distinguish between them, says Collier's Weekly. Two brothers, members of a vaudeville team, whose resemblance to each other is so pronounced that even their manager cannot identify them, were brought some time ago to the New York police headquarters, which are in charge of Inspector Joseph Faurot.

One was taken into the finger print room while the other waited outside. The captain in charge was asked to scrutinize carefully the man who stood before him. As he shook hands with the young man he took careful note of the other's right thumb. The young man then left the room, and his exact counterpart stepped in.

"Is this the man you just saw?" asked the manager, who had planned the test.

The expert caught up the young man's right hand and glanced swiftly at it.

"No," he said. "The first man had a whorl. This man has a loop. They are not at all alike—the thumbs, I mean."

It has taken a score of years to bring these facts concerning finger prints into general acceptance. The while idea appears to have been so startling that every one suspected a "catch" somewhere. Perhaps the most difficult thing to believe is that the markings of the fingers are ineradicable; that they cannot be effaced even with a grindstone.

But in point of fact this has been tried, and just as often it has failed, for the lines extend downward through all the layers of the cuticle to the flesh itself. Though the surface of the fingers were rubbed away until the nerves were raw and the blood started, the record would be all the clearer, because in the process the person seeking to destroy the marks merely would have cleaned out the small secretions from between the minute ridges without destroying the marks themselves. The only way to remove the lines would be to bite out or cut out the ball of every digit, and if any living man had the stoicism to subject himself deliberately to such frightful torture the mutilation would mark him as a criminal more unmistakably than before, and he would only defeat his own object.

Something of the lingering feeling that taking finger prints is work for a stage detective may be because the first wide attention that the idea received in the United States was in fiction. Eighteen years ago Mark Twain, in "Pudd'nhead Wilson," told the story of how a village collector of finger prints not only fixed a murder upon the murderer, but at the same time proved that two babies had been changed in the cradle. It was pure fiction, but entirely plausible.

In order that the records of all known criminals may be quickly available, copies of the finger prints, together with the other records taken by the police of the different cities, are kept on file in the national bureau of criminal identification in Washington, a bureau that is maintained by subscriptions from the various chiefs of police throughout the United States and Canada.

So valuable has this great reference library become that today detectives sent out to investigate the scene of a crime first look for any hand print the criminal may have left behind on furniture, door jamb, window pane or on articles which he fingered and then discarded. Often no trace is visible to the naked eye. But the finger print expert makes a closer examination. The dark surfaces that might have been touched are dusted with powdered prepared chalk, the light surfaces with prepared lampblack. The powder is then shaken off, and if the print is there it will stand out clear and distinct.

SYSTEM IN THE HOME.

Too many housewives go through the day without system. They never have time for anything. One matron has set out to profit by her New England mother's experience. She is determined to keep house systematically and pleasurably, and she has evolved three rules for herself as fundamentals:

First. To have only necessary things in her house—meaning that every article of furniture shall be either useful or beautiful.

Second. To have a place for everything, and see that everything is in its place—which isn't entirely remote from the first rule.

Third. To perform the regular duties of the day in the same frame of mind with which she has made her own toilet—taking them entirely as a matter of course.

At the beginning of the week she prepares a list of certain things, things, perhaps, that have been "hanging over" for a long time. She tries to eliminate one thing from the list each day.—New York Evening Post.

BY-LAWS ARE AMENDED

Members Must Be Land Owners or Residents

Amendments to the by-laws of the Squantum Improvement association brought out a large attendance at the regular meeting this week and there was a lively session. The change of by-laws affected the membership, officers and payment of dues. The changes were recommended by the executive committee.

The principal opposition came upon the matter of membership. The executive committee recommended that those who own land or are winter or summer residents in Squantum should be the only ones entitled to full membership. Associate members were recommended but without the power of voting.

The change was opposed by C. E. Carlson and James Hagan. Mr. Carlson said he had secured a number of very desirable members for the association who lived outside of Squantum. He said he believed that residents of Quincy should join the various associations. He favored Squantum residents joining Atlantic and Norfolk Downs and other associations and said that the members of those associations yould not feel like joining the Squantum organization if they were deprived of voting power.

W. N. Kenyon and William A. Reed defended the position of the executive committee. They said they believed that Squantum residents could best conduct their own affairs and that if there was a large outside membership with voting powers that this membership might be united on some important movement and that the voice of the majority of members of the association who were Squantum residents might be overthrown.

The matter was put to a vote; a two-thirds vote being necessary to pass the by-law. The vote resulted 34 yeas and 11 nays and the change of by-laws was adopted.

There was but slight opposition to any other changes and the entire list of amendments as recommended by the executive committee were adopted.

W. N. Kenyon, chairman of the mosquito committee reported that one of the contractors who had figured on the drainage of the marsh lands on the east side of the Squantum causeway had submitted estimates. This firm agreed to ditch the land so that there would be no pools left for the breeding of mosquitoes, for $12.50 per acre. Mr. Kenyon estimated that there were 65 acres in this tract and that the entire cost of ditching this land would be about $800. He said that he believed that the Quincy Board of Health could compel the owners of this land to do the work without a dollar expense to the city or the taxpayers. He said he hoped to take the matter up with Dr. Jones of the Quincy Board of Health.

C. E. Carlson, chairman of the street railway committee, reported that in a further survey of the curve at the corner of Hancock street and Sagamore street, Atlantic, it was found that the curve would need more than a 40-foot radius, and that some private land would have to be purchased to make this curve. He said he was soon to have another conference with Mr. Gammon regarding the taking up of this work.

Frank Anderson, Charles Watts and William A. Reed were appointed a committee to look after the complaints about non collection of refuse.

HEPTASOPHS VISITATION.

Granite Conclave of Heptasophs had a visitation Thursday evening from their newly elected District Deputy Supreme Archon, T. J. Galvin of Hyde Prk. Arrangements were also completed for the annual clam bake which will take place at Elcock's grove on Sept. 20. "Mike" Shea will have charge and the committee includes James Giles, John Kalson, Joseph J. Mullen, William Ryan and Fred Sadler. Mr. Galvin spoke on the new insurance adopted at the last National Convention at Louisville, Ky.

BOY RUNOVER.

John Mullen, aged about 9 years, of South Quincy, was run over Thursday afternoon on Franklin street while on his way home from school. The boy was in the street and did not see the coming automobile until too late to prevent his being run down. The driver of the car did all in his power to prevent the accident but was unable to . The car is reported to belong to Oscar Swanson, and after the accident the boy was taken in the car to Dr. Reynolds. After having his injuries dressed he was taken to his home.

AUTO PLUNGES INTO WOODS

Two Men Seriously Injured on Eliot Street, Milton

As a result of an automobile accident at Milton Thursday night two men are at the Boston City Hospital in a dying condition. The two men are George A. Wilbur, aged 35 years of 476 River street, Dorchester, the owner of the machine, and Henry Haskill aged 26 years of Wellington Hill, Mattapan. Wilbur has a fractured skull while Haskill has a broken collar bone, several fractured ribs, a lacerated chin and a fractured skull. The uto, a car of the runabout type was speeding down Eliot street and plunged over a grassy slope and broke through the bushes and dropped fifteen feet into Columbine woods. Haskill who is said to be an expert driver was at the wheel but it is not known what effort he made to stop the car.

Persons who saw the passing car remarked upon its speed and as it approached a corner without slacking up the onlookers were not surprised to see it leave the road and plunge into the bushes.

Help was near at hand but it was some minutes before the men were taken from the overturned car unconscious. Physicians were summoned and the men removed to the City Hospital, in the Milton police auto.

The general opinion is that the car was making at least 50 miles an hour when the accident happened.

ELEVATED SALARIES.

Two Quincy men are on the salary list of the Boston Elevated submitted at the hearing on Thursday. Mr. Feeney commented as follows:

E. C. Hultman, consulting engineer, now receives $3000 a year. He was getting $1500 in 1906, but had risen to $4000 last year. He is the only man on the list presented who shows a cut-down.

M. T. Spillane, claim adjuster, was raised on Aug. 1 of this year to $3000. He has risen by constant small amounts since 1902, when he was receiving $1200.

WHO FOR SENATOR.

There seems to be but little local interest in the coming primaries on Tuesday, Sept. 23, although the various politicians are doubtless busy working on a still hunt for votes. One of the most interesting contests is that for the Republican nomination for Senator and both Mr. Thomas and Mr. Langelier are doing considerable hustling.

HISTORICAL VISITORS.

An automobile party from Michigan stopped for an hour or more in City Square this morning while the party of two ladies and two gentlemen visited the old Hancock cemetery. They also took a look at City Hall and one of the gentlemen was heard to remark that if that was Quincy granite he did not admire it. He however thought the First church had a fine ancient look. From City Square they went to the President Adams birthplaces.

DISTRICT COURT.

Vincenzo Salmoni was arraigned for assault on Antonio Parisi at Quincy. Satisfaction was acknowledged and the case placed on file on payment of $4.70 costs.

John Leary was fined $10 for drunkenness at Quincy.

The continued case of Michael Cass for assault on his wife was called and dismissed.

OUTING OF BIRD CLUB

Will Fish Near Boston Light and Have a Dinner

The Bird club, composed of ex-presidents of the Board of Trade and City officials and others are holding their annual outing today. The early morning did not give promise of being a very pleasant day but the sun came out before noon and the remainder of the day promised to be pleasant. The party left the Baker Yacht basin at 9 o'clock in Councilman Sandberg's auxiliary sloop. Boston light was the objective point which was reached in due season. Anchors were dropped overboard, lines baited and the party got busy with the fish. A wireless received at the rooms of the Board of Trade this noon said that the water was a little choppy and all of the party were well and none were sick up to that hour. There were some however who did not feel overjoyed and they had just as soon have been on dry land as on the water, and for that matter they had just as soon have gone overboard as not.

It was hoped that enough of the finny tribe would be captured to make a chowder but in the absence of fish there was enough in the eatable line so that there was no donger of starving.

After having their fill of fishing the sloop was headed towards Peddock's Island where a landing was made in the early afternoon and everybody got busy getting dinner ready. The homeward journey will be made in the late afternoon.

Chief of Police Burrell is causing a copy of the order passed by the City Council Monday evening restraining dogs to be left at the house of every owner of a dog and the order will be strictly enforced.

The State Committee of the Democratic party has made arrangements for an open meeting in Electa hall Tuesday evening. Hon. David I. Walsh candidate for governor is expected to be among those present.

The many friends of Thomas G. Smith, who underwent a serious operation at the City Hospital a few weeks ago, will be pleased to learn that he has so far recovered that he is able to be about.

WEYMOUTH FAIR.

The 49th annual fair of the Weymouth agricultural society opened Thursday at South Weymouth with a large attendance. The opening day was known as childrens' day and all of the schools of the town were closed. One of the features of the opening day was a decorated automobile parade and there was a short address from the grand stand by Mayor Fitzgerald of Boston. Another feature was an aeroplane flight by Miss Ruth Bancroft Law. She attained an elevation of about 2500 feet and remained in the air fifteen minutes circulating the grounds several times.

WHAT HE WOULD NOT DO.

It is the man who looks for trouble who generally finds it. When the late Bishop Dudley was about to transfer the field of his labors to Kentucky some of his friends were inclined to remonstrate.

"So you are really going to Kentucky?" said one of these.

"Yes, indeed," replied the bishop.

"But do you know what kind of a state that is?" inquired the anxious one. "Why I saw in the paper that in a Kentucky town one man killed another dead for just treading on a dog. What are you going to do in a place like that?"

"Well," replied the bishop calmly, "I am not going to tread on a dog."

—Another incentive for cultivating a habit of cheerfulness is furnished by Johns Hopkins hospital specialists, who in a bulletin declare that appendicitis and other intestinal diseases are due to gloomy spirits. Mental worry, they say, is one of the most frequent causes of this disease, and that one of the best preventitives for appendicitis is to smile continually and habitually. Now look pleasant, please.—Taunton Herald.

FLOWERS AS FOOD.

In India the Natives Eat Bassia Tree Blossoms Uncooked.

In these days one would hardly call a dinner of rosebuds a feast, nor should we be inclined to accept an invitation to dine on the blossoms of the pumpkin vine. Yet some Indians, like the old Aztecs, used to esteem these flowers, when properly prepared, a great dainty.

So, in the same way, do natives of many parts of India depend for food upon the blossoms of the bassia tree. They do not need even to cook the flowers, but make a good meal of them raw. These blossoms are described as sweet and sickly in odor and taste. They are sometimes dried in the sun, when they are kept and sold in bazaars as a regular article of diet.

The trees are so highly esteemed that the threat of cutting down their bassia trees will generally bring an unruly tribe to terms. This is perhaps not to be wondered at when it is considered that a single tree will yield from 200 to 400 pounds of flowers. The Parsees cook the flowers and also make sweetmeats of them.

"Nobody would be inclined to deny that smoked fish and smoked meat are agreeable varieties in our bill of fare, but few, perhaps, would feel ready to plead guilty to a taste for smoked flowers. And yet, when we give to the clove its well earned place among flavorings we are making use of a smoked flower bud. The buds grow on a small evergreen and are plucked from the ends of the branches before they expand. Then they are dried in the sun and smoked over a wood fire to give them the brown color.—Philadelphia Press.

USELESS THINGS.

Ghosts of the Past That Were Formidable In Their Time.

"An enumeration of the useless," says Richard Jeffries, "would almost be an enumeration of everything hitherto pursued."

What a pile of junk the men of the world labored to produce!

Heap up all the books that are of no possible use, the contents of ancient libraries, books of heraldries, theogonies and discarded sciences, books of wrangling and tedious arguments the world has willingly forgot, and the myriads of chaff products that pour like a ceaseless Niagara from the modern press; heap them up into one mountain, and from its top you could look down upon the Himalayas.

Think of the ruined cities of the orient, the ghostly temples of Egypt, the broken fragments of castles by the Rhine and the Danube, the Coliseum, the Golden House of Nero, the Garden of Hadrian at Tivoli! Think of the useless sciences men studied, the faded religions they once believed, the inconsequential wars of history, the reams of antiquated law, the gold gathered together only to be misspent! Think of the useless passions, dreams, thoughts and desires of men!

One is sometimes tempted to think that we front the great questions of life, love and death as freshly, with as little advantage from experience, as the cave man.—Dr. Frank Crane in Woman's World.

No Promotion.

The late Bishop Doane of Albany, a strict conservative, had his own views as to woman's place in the world. No feminist this good Tory bishop, no advocate of "newness" of any sort.

Bishop Doane believed in marriage of the real old fashioned kind, and to bridegrooms at weddings he used sometimes to make a little speech.

"My young friend," he would say to the pale and nervous bridegroom, patting him on the back, "you are now embarking on a long, hazardous voyage, and I bid you remember the Finnish proverb.

"For the Finnish sailors have a proverb to this effect:

"'The man who on the ship of matrimony signs as mate will never get promoted.'"—New York Tribune.

Better Than a Clock.

"My father," said the small boy to the lady who was calling on his mother, "is a great man. He knows what time it is without even looking at his watch."

"What do you mean, Tommy?" queried the visitor.

"Oh, when I holler out an' ask him what time it is in the morning, he always says it's time to get up. An' when I ask him what time it is in the evenin', he allus says, 'Time to go to bed, Tommy.' Oh, I tell you my father is a great man!"—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

Her Forebodings.

"Why are you worrying, dear?" he asked after they had got things settled in their cunning little bungalow.

"I was just thinking that if you turn out to be as great as I expect you to be and we have any children, they will have to take their places among the idle rich."—Chicago Record-Herald.

Not All Blank.

"How about this shooting?"

"My client's mind is blank, judge. That ought to be sufficient excuse to get him off."

"I might consider it if the cartridges had been blank too."—Kansas City Journal.

Fear and Danger.

Nervous Old Lady (to deck hand on steamboat)—Mr. Steamboatman, is there any fear of danger? Deck Hand (carelessly)—Plenty of fear, ma'am, but not a bit of danger.

Anxiety never yet successfully bridged over any chasm.—Ruffini.

GRAND COUNTRY FAIR

Wollaston Farmers Make Big Exhibit

First Prize to Mr. Barber

The Wollaston Country Fair opened in all its brilliancy Friday evening on the grounds and in the vestry of the Wollaston Unitarian church, attracting hundreds of people to view its many exhibits.

The exhibits attained a magnitude little expected, and contained many curious and unusual specimens both for shape, size and rarity.

That Wollaston contained so many gardens with such a variety of products was not imagined by the average onlooker, until he had examined the exhibits.

One attracting attention was a tall stalk of corn some 12 feet in height exhibited by Forrest Burgess.

A rare specimen was a Chinese summer lilac exhibited by E. W. Campbell. This was brought from China three years ago by attaches of the Arnold Arboretum, and has just been made hardy enough to withstand the rigor of this climate.

The first prize for collections went to Joseph K. Barber who had a large variety of fruits, vegetables and flowers.

Frederick H. Bishop was awarded second place and Mrs. M. G. Berry received a special prize for her collection.

The judges were Mrs. H. H. Kitson, Mrs. Charles R. Safford and William J. Patterson.

The live stock, poultry and pets will be placed on exhibition Saturday afternoon and evening when they will be judged by experienced officials.

CHANGES ON SCHOOL BOARD

Probably Two New Members at Next Election

Herbert F. Barker, who represented Ward Six on the School Committee, preceding Dr. Bruce, may be elected a member at large at the coming city election to succeed Dr. N. S. Hunting whose term expires this year. It all depends upon whether Dr. Hunting cares to accept another term. If he does, no friend of the schools will oppose him, for his services have been most valuable. If he doesn't care to serve any longer, then there is available an excellent candidate in the person of Mr. Barker. The latter is not seeking the position, but a party who is in a position to know informs the Ledger that Mr. Barker will accept the honor of a place on the board provided Dr. Hunting cannot be induced to remain.

Two other terms will expire this fall, those of J. L. Miller and Arthur B. Foster. The latter will be a candidate for re-election and it is doubtful that he will have any opposition, his services having proved satisfactory to Republicans and Democrats alike. Mr. Miller, who represents Ward Three will not run again. Alexander Clark, Alfred O. Diack and Alexander Falconer have all been mentioned for the position, and in all probability one of them will be nominated, but as yet no selection has been attempted. The election of any one of them would help keep the schools out of politics.

TWO SALARIES.

Testimony at the Boston Elevated arbitration proceedings on Friday brought out the fact that Eugene C. Hultman of Quincy receives a salary of $6000 instead of $3,000. Auditor Neal was asked:

"Do any of the men on your list draw money from the West End?"

"Yes, a consulting engineer and one other. I did not include their salaries in my list because they are not Boston Elevated, but are 'salaries on a lease.'

"Parkman & Dexter and their consulting engineer have been allowed a certain amount, with $8000 for their organization expenses."

"Who was the consulting engineer?"

"Mr. Hultman."

"How much does he receive from the Elevated and the West End?"

"I think $6000."

"He is the only man who appeared to have been reduced in salary on yesterday's list."

ALL KINDS OF FISH CAUGHT

On Trip of the Bird Club to Light

Prize to W. H. Teasdale

The Bird club returned to Quincy from their annual outing Friday night in the vicinity of 8 o'clock. The day had been a fine one and aside from a little indisposition on the part of some of the party while the good sloop Marion was anchored off Boston Light everybody had a good time.

Edward Richardson, for many years chief baker at the Hodges bakery, was the man in charge of the eatables and he did his job well, assisted by one of his company of Sons of Veterans. The sloop was gaily decorated for the occasion. From the top mast there were flying flags of the international signal which spelled the words "Bird Club."

The start was made from Baker's yacht basin and when the party arrived on the scene they found the sloop on the stocks having her bottom cleaned of sea growth. She was already for launching so the party boarded her and had the experience of being launched.

No time was lost in heading for Boston Light where the fishing took place. There was considerable controversy as to who caught the largest fish, but it was finally conceeded that the Hake caught by William H. Teasdale, chairman of the Board of Health was the largest in length, and he also caught the first fish. The smelt caught by President Hamilton of the Board of Trade was the smallest. All kinds of fish were caught, with the exception of a whale, although one of the party thought he had a whale on his line once. It however proved to be the ships anchor which he had caught.

It was about 3 o'clock when a landing was made at the west end of Peddocks Island for dinner. The abandoned hotel at this point was used for headquarters, and while dinner was being made ready a small boat went to Germantown and came back with a load of sweet corn. Everybody was hungry by the time Ed. had the dinner ready, to which everybody did justice. There was steamed clams, fried clams, clam chowder, fried skulpin, sweet corn and various other good things, more than enough to feed the party of about 25 which dipped into the good things.

As stated above home was reached in the early evening and the day was pronounced to have been a delightful one. In the party were Mayor Stone, President John L. Hamilton, ex-presidents Walter E. Piper, Charles C. Hearn, John R. Richards, Thomas L. Williams, and J. W. Pratt of the Board of Trade, Secretary John O. Hall, Councilman Edward J. Sandberg skipper of the Marion; Tax Collector Oscar S. Sandberg, John Stuart, Dr. John H. Ash, Albert L. Whitman, the live wire; Harold Richards, Thomas J. Lamb, Henry Sandberg, William H. Teasdale, Councilman Charles A. Ericson, A. W. Pierce, Edward Richardson, the chef, his son and three members of the crew of the Marion.

The Canadians can't be expected to favor Thaw's freedom when it is such an honor to have him in their jails.

A play is not considered interesting in New York now, unless all the Ten Commandments are broken in full view of the audience.

Confidential Agent Lind may be able to clean up the Mexican mess. but it is not believed he would succeed in establishing stable government in New York state.

With a heavy income tax coming, the multi-millionaires are getting ready to take the poor debtor's oath.

It is hoped the teachers do not train the children to write too well, as they would be regarded as eccentric when they get to college.

IS THE COLLEGE MAKING GOOD?

Under the above title in The Outlook, Edward Bok, recently gave the educational animals a vigorous stirring. Mr. Bok analyzed 549 letters received by him from college graduates, the same being sent in response to questions sent out by him. He complains primarily of the bad English and spelling in these letters.

A lively discussion has resulted, in which many college professors and graduates criticise Mr. Bok for attaching too little weight to liberal culture. But any editor who has ever had the job of shaping up the rough, raw English of even educated people, will find much force in his statement.

This is a day when grammar is not fashionable. The high school student is asked to discuss the question "Was Hamlet really mad?" or "What indications of social and economic progress do you find in Chaucer's poems?" But he may not know the difference between a verb and a preposition.

In many high schools the pupils would look blank if you mentioned the "nominative case." Many educators hold that if young people hear good English in school. and if bad English is corrected. the young people will insensibly acquire correct habits. and that rules are not needed.

They forget that the world is full of bad grammar. Even the college graduate needs a clear perception of sentence structure, if he is to stand up against the flood of ignorant speech one hears daily.

A high school graduate was heard the other day saying, "Whose be all them things?" If the high schools won't make a more serious effort to correct this linguistic slovenliness. the colleges will have to do it, if their graduates are not to seem unkempt in speech and composition.

GARDEN PARTY ENJOYABLE

Held By the Park and Downs Congregational Church

A very successful garden party, that opened the social season for the members of the Park and Down's church, was held on the lawns of C. F. Bryant of Beach street and J. A. Boone of Muirhead street by the Womens Giuld

The grounds were prettily decorated with large numbers of Japanese lanterns, and here and there over the lawn were scattered small tables at which ice cream was served by Mrs. Fred Robinson and Mrs. F. J. Brown.

From a table tastefully decorated with sabin, and placed under the trees, coffee was poured by Mrs. James D. Willson and Mrs. J. A. Boone.

Mrs. E. M. Brown was in charge of the cake table where a large supply of this desirable article was on hand. At this table also was a large guess cake presided over by Mrs. Celia McKay.

Many pleasant games were enjoyed under the direction of Mrs. Crocker and Mrs. Arthur F. Capen. Mrs. Gilliatt and Mrs. Knowlton were the matrons.

Dressed in the garb of an Indian maiden Miss Miriam Chase sat at the door of her wigwam where she read palms and sold baskets.

The entire affair was a brilliant success and bodes well for the coming social events of the church.

NEW LOCATION.

Henry E. Emerson whose carriage building shop has been located on Hancock street near the head of Cottage avenue for many years, is obliged to seek a new location as the buildings at present occupied by him are to be torn down to make rooms for the new block which Henry L. Kincaide is to erect on that site. He has been fortunate in securing a location in the Packard buildings on Cottage avenue used by Frank C. Packard for many years as his extract buildings. Work putting these buildings in shape for the new business has already been started. The moving of the Emerson plant to the new location will make Cottage avenue more of a business street than it has heretofore been.

NOT IDENTIFIED.

The badly mutilated body of the man found on the tracks near the West street crossing early Friday morning is at the Hall undertaking rooms awaiting identification.

The man is apparently an Italian and the neatly cropped beard, and pressed clothes denote that he probably was returning home when a train struck and killed him.

MORE BATTLESHIPS.

Two and perhaps three dreadnoughts will be asked of Congress by Secretary of Navy Daniels. The secretary was in conference on Thursday with Chairman Padgett of the House naval affairs committee over the navy building program for next year.

JEROME ALMOST CAUGHT NAPPING

Fooled by Simple and Open Scheme to Kidnap Thaw

PLANS LAID BY CANADIANS

Fugitive Was to Be Taken For "Drive" and Put Aboard Yacht at Portsmouth—Hearing Before Governor Set For Next Wednesday—Court Proceedings Are Postponed

Colebrook, N. H., Sept. 13.—A third attempt to kidnap Harry K. Thaw from the New York state and New Hampshire authorities and put him on a yacht was frustrated by the watchfulness of William T. Jerome. The plan was to take Thaw to "drive" in an automobile.

So simple was the plan and so openly and frankly was it started that for a time the suspicions of Jerome were disarmed, but when he learned through Detective Lanyon that there were three or four high-powered racing automobiles stationed at different points some distance from the hotel, he at once refused to allow Thaw to be taken out of the hotel.

The proposition was made by one of Thaw's lawyers that he be allowed to take Thaw, accompanied by only two members of his counsel and Sheriff Drew, for an automobile spin about the country, away from the guardianship of Chief of Police Kelly and his twenty armed special officers.

The latest plan of kidnapping is believed to have been formed by the same band of Canadian sympathizers who previously made two attempts to get Thaw away from the authorities, and who still have two automobiles always ready near the hotel. It was their original plan to take Thaw back to Canada, from which he was deported on Wednesday.

One of Thaw's canadian counsel, with a private detective near by, was in frequent communication with the Canadian delegation, one of whom was looking up the question of reaching the seaport of Portsmouth.

If Thaw could be put aboard a yacht there he would soon be beyond the reach of either the Canadian or New York authorities. He might, it is believed, head directly for Philadelphia, in his native state, where, he has frequently stated, he would be given a "square deal," have his sanity established and be at once and for all beyond the reach of New York.

When news was received here that extradition papers for Thaw had been signed by Acting Governor Glenn in New York three of Thaw's attorneys at once hastened to Concord for an interview with Governor Felker, who has agreed to grant them a hearing.

Wednesday morning, according to Thaw's lawyers, they expect to have their hearing before Felker. They estimate that three days will elapse before he can render a decision. If this is adverse they will apply for at once for a writ of habeas corpus. Argument on this would likely be postponed for another week.

In view of the intention of fighting the case out at Concord, Thaw was not brought into court in Colebrook yesterday, and it is probable that his hearing will be postponed again today and that on Monday he will be taken to the capital, preparatory to the arguments for and against surrendering him to New York.

MUST INSIST UPON REFORMS

Necessary For Success of Republicans, Says Cummins

FAVORS SPECIAL CONVENTION

Will Be Called Unofficially If It Cannot Be Done Otherwise—Reforms Advocated by Progressive Republicans Appear Inevitable—Hilles Will Be Urged to Act In the Matter

Washington, Sept. 13.—Unless steps are soon taken by the Republican national committee to call a Republican national convention, a movement for such a convention will be initiated independently of the committee and unofficially.

This is the statement of some of the leading progressive Republicans in congress. They are anxious for some definite steps to be taken toward Republican reorganization and are impatient at the delay of the national committee.

Senators Cummins and Jones were to have a conference with National Chairman Hilles of the committee for the purpose of urging him at once to take steps to call the committee together and consider the calling of a national convention. Owing to the illness of Jones, this conference has been temporarily given up.

Instead, Cummins and Jones will address a letter to Hilles, setting forth the reasons why they and various progressive Republicans are anxious to have the committee and a convention called this fall. Cummins left here by way of White Sulphur Springs for Iowa today. He will return soon after Oct. 1 and then will see Hilles in New York or here. Hilles, however, is expected to visit Washington soon and then will doubtless talk with Republican leaders about the situation.

Cummins expressed the belief that the national convention would meet and a convention call result from it. He said if it did not, so far as he was personally concerned, he would do everything in his power to have a great national meeting of Republicans unofficially brought together in order to force such reforms within the party as the progressive Republicans insist on.

"To me," said Cummins, "it seems inevitable that reforms of the progressive Republicans must be made in order that the party may get in shape for the campaigns of 1914 and 1916. I have no doubt that one way or another they will be made."

The progressive Republicans are insisting that southern representation in national conventions be cut down and based on the vote cast, and that state primary laws as to selection of delegates to presidential conventions be respected.

TWO ISLANDS VANISH

Disappear In South Pacific With Several Hundred People

San Francisco, Sept. 13.—Falcon and Hope islands of the Friendly or Tonga group, in the South Pacific, have disappeared from view. With them several hundred natives and a few white men also have disappeared.

News to this effect was brought to San Francisco by Captain Trask of the steamer Sonoma, which arrived from Sydney, via Pago Pago and Honolulu. Trask said:

"One of the regular trading steamers between Sydney and the Tonga group reported the sinking of the islands. The vessel steamed to where Falcon island should have been, but it was nowhere in sight.

"Just prior to this the instruments at the Sydney naval station showed that several violent earthquake shocks had taken place about 2000 miles northeast of Sydney."

POSTAL MEN ACCUSED

Necklace Valued at $625,000 Probably Stolen In Postoffice

London, Sept. 13.—That postal employes connived at the theft of the pearl necklace valued at $625,000 which mysteriously disappeared after having been mailed in Paris to a London dealer, seems to have been established by the evidence presented at the hearing before a police magistrate at the Bow street court of the five men held on suspicion of being concerned in the crime.

Whether the employes belong to the French or to the British postoffice, however, the authorities decline to divulge at present.

NEWS ITEMS FROM MILTON

The opening of the season at Cunningham Gym on Oct. 15 will take the form of a social, and the committees are preparing to make it the most successful ever held in the gymnasium. The formal opening of the winter season occupies an important place on the Milton social calendar. An effort is being made to increase the membership since the trustees have been guaranteed that a swimming pool will be installed if the roll reaches the half thousand mark. The football candidates will report for practice next week but the schedule has not yet been arranged.

William Leary will leave this week for Syracuse where he will spend his annual vacation.

William Everett and family of Otis street have returned from a summer stay at Pocasset, Mass.

Dr. Rowe of Rowe street is back from a short vacation.

George Bearce has returned from the White Mountains. He is the son of David Bearce of the East Milton station.

The erection of a large billboard on Granite avenue opposite the East Milton station has been the topic of this weeks discussion in East Milton. A well defined opposition has developed and an effort will be made to have it removed. The residents feel that they are face to face with a billboard crisis and hope to prevent the erection of any more.

U. S. Will Get Central America

By VLADIMIR KRYMOFF, Prominent Russian Editor

ALL the countries of Central America and the Caribbean WILL EVENTUALLY BECOME AMERICAN TERRITORY.

I have no doubt that the United States will ultimately build a SECOND CANAL FROM OCEAN TO OCEAN, THIS ONE ACROSS NICARAGUA, and for the United States alone.

It is my opinion that with two canals across the isthmus the United States will have the whole of the American continent in its hands.

For its size I should unhesitatingly pronounce Costa Rica the RICHEST COUNTRY IN THE WORLD. There are no really poverty stricken people there that I could discover.

School Will Raise Physical Standard

By Dr. LOUIS DUFESTEL, Medical Inspector of Paris Schools

IT is my belief that here in the American crucible a startlingly fine metal is in process of formation. Several generations may yet pass before it takes a form which may be considered even likely to be PERMANENT, but enough has already been evidenced to convince thinkers in all countries that ITS WORTH IS SURE.

NOTHING COULD BE MORE IMPORTANT TO RIGHT RACIAL DEVELOPMENT THAN GENERAL ATTENTION TO SCHOOL HYGIENE. ALL SCHOOLS SHOULD DO SOMETHING MORE THAN TRAIN THE MIND.

In these days we all recognize the fact that the superiority of mind over body does not extend far enough to permit a fine mind to achieve its best development in a sickly and imperfect body.

That some of our best intellects have been housed in weak, even in imperfect, bodies DOES NOT PROVE THE CONTRARY. It only indicates that MIND IS MIGHTY AND MAY WIN GREAT VICTORIES and makes us wonder what those supreme intellects might not have accomplished had their vigor and genius been supplemented by bodily strength and vitality.

WILLIAMS WILL CASE

Some of the Provisions of Will a Surprise

Further developments in the tangled financial affairs of the late George E. Williams of Braintree are expected at Dedham Wednesday when the second hearing on the will will be held before Judge Flint. Protest was registered against Atherton Hunt of Braintree being confirmed as sole executor at the probate session in the Quincy court on Wednesday.

Judge Flint is now considering the appointment of two administrators, after which it is expected more claimants will come forward. At the present the claims involve nearly $1,000,000 and the assets are about $100,000.

In his will, which was witnessed by Ella S. Sparrow of West Medway, William W. Fletcher of Melrose and George Cabot of Roxbury, employes of the Devonshire street office and none of whom knew of the contents, Williams left to his wife, Sarah Elizabeth Williams, the homestead at Braintree, and in the case of her death to his daughter, Mrs. Franklin K. Patch of Braintree.

To his nephew, John H. Alger, Williams left an open-face gold watch and pearl and diamond stickpin. In Article 4 he provides for the payment of $25,000 to Emma Rebecca Wellington of Milton, to be paid three months after his decease. All the rest of his real and personal estate is left to his trustees under trust, with full power to invest at their discretion and to pay the income and principal according to the following directions:

To his widow, Sarah Elizabeth Williams, three-fourths of the income of the trust fund, payments to begin three months after his decease, and one-fourth to his daughter, Mrs. Patch during her life, payments to commence three months after his death, and in case of her death the money goes to her issue, and if none then it goes to his widow. In case the widow dies, the daughter will get her three-fourths and the daughter's one fourth will go to his nephew and nieces. Should the daughter's share amount to more than $6,000 a year, all over the amount is added to the trust fund. After the death of the daughter, one-fourth of the income goes to Emma Rebecca Wellington and one-fourth to his niece Gertrude Schuler.

If both his wife and daughter die before he does, then one-half of the trust fund goes to his niece, Gertrude Schuler, or her heirs and the other half to Emma Rebecca Wellington and if she is not living, it is to be paid to his nephews and nieces. The will was drawn May 29, 1913.

IMPROVEMENT AT BETHANY

Services Will be Resumed Sunday in Auditorium

Work renovating the main auditorium of Bethany church which has been in progress for several weeks has been completed, and the church will be occupied at the regular morning service Sunday morning. The parishioners can not fail to be pleased with what has been done, for the improvement is very marked. The most notable change will of course be in the walls and ceiling. These have been entirely done over, the present frescoing being of an olive green tint. This gives a very soft effect and makes the edifice seem considerably larger.

It will be remembered that in the old edifice there was some small panel on the side walls containing passages from the scripture. These have all disappeared as have also the lettering on the panel in the rear of the pulpit.

Another thing that will be noticed will be the absence of the cleating on the side walls, in which the electric wires were formerly concealed. These have also been removed for all of the electric lighting wires have been concealed behind the walls.

The pews have been revarnished and the carpeting in the aisles has been taken up and thoroughly cleaned. The choir loft has been enlarged and a new floor put in. The enlargement has been accomplished by moving the front rail forward. Friday the large organ was retuned and the finishing touches put on the interior of the church so that it will be in readiness for the morning service on Sunday.

PILGRIM UNION.

The regular meeting of the Pilgrim Union was held in the Wollaston Methodist church on Thursday evening. Supper was served at 6.30 by the Epworth League, after which the business meeting was held. NEWSY BRIEFS

Miss Minnie Packard of Hancock street has commenced her duties as teacher of Latin and history in the Lexington High school.

Mrs. Henry J. Bahe and daughter Mildred of Billings street have returned from a six weeks stay in Vermont, during which Mildred was seriously ill with infantile paralysis.

Services will be resumed at the First Parish church Sunday morning at 10:30. Rev. Adelbert Lathrop Hudson will preach on "After Vacation."

Sunday services at the Universalist church will be held at 3 P. M. instead of the usual morning service when Rev. Merrill C. Ward a former pastor will preach.

Rev. B. Frank White of Bellefontaine, Ohio, who preached at the United Presbyterian church Fort square last Sunday will fill the pulpit again tomorrow. Mr. White is an eloquent and forcible speaker and the congregation is to be congratulated on the opportunity of hearing him again.

The Ladies Benevolent Society of Memorial church begin meetings next Wednesday afternoon in the church parlors. Each lady will bring in a dollar which she has earned during the summer, and tell in rhyme how she earned it. The society has large plans for activities this winter, to help socially as well as to reduce the church mortgage.

For the accommodation of those attending the Christian Science services at Alpha hall, a car leaves Sagamore street near Hancock street, Sunday mornings upon the arrival of the ten o'clock car from Squantum, and Wednesday evenings upon the arrival of the seven o'clock car. These cars are run through Quincy square to School street and are open to the patronage of the public.

BANQUET TO THE "METS"

Who Won the Championship of Police League

The Metropolitan police nine which won the championship of the Massachusetts Police baseball league will be banqueted by their rivals on Nov. 20 in Boston. Lowell won second place and Quincy finished third. A pennant, emblematic of the "Worlds Police Baseball Championship," was awarded to the "Mets." Edward J. Connor, manager of Lowell was awarded the second prize; Jeremiah Dinneen, the local manager was given the third prize for his team; Capt. Porter of Chelsea, fourth place man was given a trophy.

The committee on the banquet includes Officer Dinneen, and among those invited will be Mayor Stone, Mayor Fitzgerald, and the chief executives and chiefs of other cities.

Henry T. Parsons of Chelsea, president of the league, was given a vote of thanks for his services which were responsible in many ways for the success of the season.

The second season of the league closed at Ward Three last week by the "Mets" defeating the local team in a loosely played game. It was not the sort of an exhibition that made Quincy look like a season contender for first place, but despite that game the local officers were identified as possible champions all season. A long interval between games and no practice explains how the "Mets" closed the summer with a 16 to 3 victory.

FOOTBALL SCHEDULE

Quincy High Will Go Against Strong Teams

The football squad of the Quincy High school, consisting of 45 candidates are practicing daily. The season opens Sept 30 with Weymouth, although an open date on Sept 26 may be filled before that time.

Five games are now booked for Merrymount park and one is pending with Hingham. In November there are two open home dates which will be filled this week. Clifton Young is captain and Norbert McAnarney, the manager, has after hard work almost completed a snappy schedule.

Messers. Mansur, Fuller and French of the faculty will take care of the coaching. The only apparent weakness is in the back field, but the 10 men out for it are fast and through the development of speed may be able to bring abouot a glorious season for Quincy.

The available men from last years eleven are Paul Larkin and Schenkleberger on ends; White and Hamlin as tackles; Jenkins and Foy as guards at centre, Page at quarter back and Capt. Young, centre. Last season these boys played without a thorough knowledge or experience and this year through hard work, should be able to send Quincy over the line a winner in at least six of the games.

The coaches have never had a college football team experience but all of them have derived inside knowledge from workouts against varsities. Personally, all of the coaches are highly acceptable to the boys who will no doubt practice as often as is necessary to perfect a winning combination. The schedule is as follows:

Sept. 26—Open (at home.)
Sept. 30—Weymouth at Quincy.
Oct. 4—Medford at Medford.
Oct. 7—Arlington at Quincy.
Oct. 10—Cambridge Latin at Cambridge.
Oct. 14—Pending.
Oct. 18—Dedham at Quincy.
Oct. 24—South Boston at Quincy.
Oct. 31—Brockton at Brockton.
Nov. 4.—Melrose at Quincy.
Nov. 11—Open (at home.)
Nov. 18—Open (at home)
Nov. 22—Waltham at Waltham.

TWO MORE CASES.

The infantile paralysis situation in Quincy is becoming acute. This morning it was stated at the office of the Board of Health that two new cases were reported. One is in Atlantic where there are four families at present under quarantine and the other is on Sumner street, Quincy Point. This makes a total of seven cases in Quincy within the past three weeks, one of which resulted in death.

MULHALL CHARGES DENIED BY WATSON

Says He Worked For Tariff Commission For a Time

Washington, Sept. 13.—Vigorous denial of Martin M. Mulhall's charges was made before the house lobby investigating committee by former Representative Watson of Indiana, whose name appears hundreds of times in Mulhall's correspondence.

"At no time while I was in congress," he said, "or after I left congress was I ever in the employ of the National Association of Manufacturers, nor was I the lobbyist or lawyer for it."

Watson says he did work for the National Tariff Commission association, an organization of several hundred associations and many individuals, of which the National Association of Manufacturers was one.

SUES FOR HEART BALM

Woman Says Ferncroft Inn Owner Broke Promise to Wed

Boston, Sept. 13.—Elizabeth M. Ryan of New Haven brought in the superior court a $50,000 suit for alleged breach of promise to marry against Harry Mansfield, owner of the Ferncroft Inn at Middleton.

Her suit is brought in the form of a bill in equity, because she claims the defendant has so disposed of his property it cannot be attached, and by the bill she hopes to reach stocks and securities deposited in a safe deposit box of the Salem Trust company, and also money deposited there and with the Beacon Trust company.

Judge Jenney, in the equity session here, issued an injunction restraining the defendant from withdrawing the funds or the securities, and the banks from permitting him to do so.

MAY CANCEL POLICIES

Insurance Men Think Salisbury Beach Risks Are Hazardous

Salisbury Beach, Mass., Sept. 13.—The cottagers here are much concerned over a report that the insurance companies are considering the wisdom of cancelling all the present policies and discontinuing writing new ones.

Agents of the companies acknowledge they are giving the matter very serious attention. They give as their reasons that there have been three big conflagrations within the past fifteen years; that there is an utter lack of fire protection, and that the flimsy construction of most of the shore houses makes risks hazardous and premiums high. A definite decision will be made in a week.

OFF FOR HUNTING TRIP

Prince Albert Takes Elaborate Camp Equipment to Wyoming

New York, Sept. 13.—Prince Albert of Monaco left New York for a hunting trip in Wyoming. He took with him $1000 worth of camping equipment which he bought on Broadway.

On his return it is understood the prince, whose hobby is oceonography, will meet several American scientists. His palatial steam yacht l'Hirondelle, which brought him here, will return to Europe.

BRAINTREE

Thursday afternoon, little Cora Thayer Connell the six year old daughter of Mr. and Mrs W. Chester Connell of Hancock street observed her birthday by entertaining a number of her little friends at her home from three to five o'clock. Popular children's games were played and dainty refreshments of ice cream, cake and candies were served. The color scheme in the dining room was pink and the attractive arrangement of the table together with the birthday cake and favors gave the little guests much to admire and enjoy. Those present were Gleora Torrey, Eleanor Torrey, Carroll Witherell, Annie Willis, Grace Proctor, Isabelle Holbrooke and Virginia Willis. One fact of interest was the presence of the little hostess' great grandmother, Mrs. Marietta Connell of Pond street who was also observing her birthday being seventy-five years of age. The guests reluctantly departed shortly after five o'clock having had a most joyous afternoon. Miss Cora received many pretty gifts which will help her to remember her sixth birthday.

A complimentary banquet and entertainment will be tendered to the players of the Sunset league by the officials of that organization in G. A. R. hall next Thursday evening. It was the intention of the management to secure T. H. Murnane the veteran baseball writer of the Boston Globe to give a talk on his reminiscences of the national game but Mr. Murnane is ill and has cancelled all social engagements. Among the guests invited to attend are presidents Stackhouse of the B. A. A., Newcomb of the Braintree White Sox, Col. George D. Willis of the Braintree club, members of the press and others.

Edward Carey of Denver, Colorado, is the guest of Moses McGaughey of Washington street.

Mr. and Mrs. Frank MacDonald of Hancock street who have been spending their vacation in Norway, Maine, are expected to return today.

The regular monthly meeting of Div. 13 L. A. A. O. H. will be held in K. of C. hall next Monday evening at eight o'clock.

Mr. and Mrs. George F. Young of Frederick road left Wednesday for Maine where they will visit relatives in Saco and South Paris. They will be away for two weeks.

Friday, Mr. and Mrs. Herbert J. Eno with Mr. and Mrs. A. F. Hollis and family went to Sagamore Hill, Nantasket, for a vacation of two weeks' duration.

The members of the Braintree Woman's Catholic Club held the first meeting of the season at Knights of Columbus hall, Monday evening, with their president, Mrs. W. H. J. Fitzgerald in the chair.

Dr. A. H. Gould and family of Monatiquot avenue have returned from a visit in Cohasset.

Mr. and Mrs. Wilfred White and family of Maple street have returned from their summer vacation.

Mrs. Will W. Mayhew has returned from her cottage at Allerton, to her home on Myrtle street.

Miss Miriam Barnes celebrated her sixth birthday Thursday by entertaining sixteen of her little girl friends. The afternoon was occupied by games of all kinds after which a dainty lunch was served, the march to the table being played by her brother Charles. Miss Miriam was the recipient of many useful and beautiful gifts which will long remind her of the pleasant occasion.

Peter Kearney of Elliott street was badly injured at East Weymouth Wednesday evening when the carriage in which he was riding was run into and tipped over by an automobile.

Miss Mabel A. Johnson, the popular bookkeeper at the Rhines lumber wharf, Weymouth, was presented with a mahogany rocking chair by forty of her friends of M.E. church. Miss Johnson has been organist at the church for 16 years. The gift was a complete surprise to Miss Johnson and she takes this way of thanking all the friends for their thoughtfulness.

The M. E. church has been very fortunate in securing the services of Miss Helen Smith who is the youngest daughter of Mr. and Mrs. H. R. Smith Hayward street. Miss Smith is a graduate of the schools of Braintree and a pupil of Mr. Hayden, Quincy Point. She is now stenographer for the Methodist Ministers Relief and Insurance and Trust Association, Boston.

EX-CHIEF HAYDEN.

The funeral of Joseph Warren Hayden, ex-chief of police will take place today at his home 200 Quincy avenue. Services will be conducted by Rev. Benjamin A. Willmott of the Bethany Congregational church. The body will be escorted to the Mt. Wollaston cemetery by the Odd Fellows, members of police department and the Paul J. Revere Post 88 G. A. R. of which the deceased was a member. Taps will be sounded and a salute fired after interment.

The Fall Trade

It Brought With It Business of Another Kind

By MILLARD MALTBIE

"Ethel," I said to my fiancee, "we must fix our wedding day either before the fall trade begins or after it is over, for I can't get away when it is on. If we fix it before it must be within, say, a month; if after we shall need to put it off for at least three months."

"I am afraid," said Ethel reflectively, "that it must be later rather than before. I've done very little in the way of getting ready and couldn't possibly complete my preparations within a month."

"You mean buy your trousseau?"

"Well, yes. But there are some small matters that need to be cleared up before we're married, and they all require time."

"Such as"—

"Oh, they are of no importance to you, simply affairs between me and acquaintances of mine."

"Obligations you wish to pay off?"

"Oh, no; not that at all. I'm not indebted to any one for favors."

"Old scores then?"

"That's more like it."

"Mention one of them."

"Well, there's Nell Blanchard. Last summer when we were at the Springs together she treated me very badly. Ned Franklin was there and devoted himself to me. Nell prejudiced him against me and got him away."

"What sort of a retaliation do you propose?"

"That's something I wish to speak to you about especially. You may object."

"Well, out with it."

"Why, the only way I can punish her is to show her that I can have him if I want him."

"Phew!"

"I was afraid you'd act mean about it."

"You mean that on the eve of your marriage with me you propose to bring down another man."

"Only to punish Nell Blanchard as she should be punished."

"Do you think that it is treating me right to carry on a flirtation while making your preparations to marry me?"

"But I'm telling you beforehand that it's for a special purpose. Besides, how many cases there are where everybody is surprised when an engagement is announced, persons saying, 'Why, I supposed she was going to marry So-and-so.' Nobody knows yet that we are engaged. How you will laugh in your sleeve when you hear of reports of my engagement to Ned Franklin!"

"It will be just too funny for anything, won't it?"

"And won't Nell be mad!"

"She'll burst for spite."

Being one of those fellows who consider the courting period a season wherein the girls are prizes to be gambled for, I saw no way but to chime in with my fiancee, pretending that I was quite willing she should remain in the ring till the last minute. Some men would have informed the lady that the old scores were ended upon her engagement and if she proposed to still take a hand in paying them off she must take back her freedom. But, for me, I never considered a girl a woman, but, rather, one to be played like a fish. I had supposed that I had landed Ethel, but now I saw that the landing must be deferred. So I told her that we had better put off our wedding till after the fall trade, and by that time I expected she would have paid all her indebtedness in the way of punishments and would have especially caused Nell Blanchard to rue the day that she had stepped in between Ethel and Ned Franklin.

At this she declared I must not imagine she would encourage Franklin.

We had a busy season, but I was not too busy to keep an eye on my fiancee. A lover is a pessimist, and I was by no means easy in my mind upon this vindication Nell was arranging for herself. Franklin I knew had been her favorite before I had appeared on the scene, and prior to our engagement I had suspected that I was serving for a snare by which to trap him. I heard something of his recent attentions to Ethel since she had begun her vindication, and some of my intimate friends, who knew that I was interested in her, began to look upon me with commiseration. Now and again I asked Ethel how she was getting on with her vindication, and she said that Nell was simply green with envy and jealousy.

I have never believed in defensive warfare. It is a military principle that the advantage preponderates to the attacking force. I considered bringing the matter to a focus by telling Ethel that if Nell was green with envy and jealousy nothing more was required and there was no further necessity for her playing Mr. Franklin in the matter; also that she had been reported to be engaged to him and all the surprise she could wish for would occur when her real engagement with me was given out, with the wedding soon to follow. But did not Ethel know all this without my telling her? And if she knew it what was to be gained by telling her?

If Mr. Franklin was destined to win in the game—as I strongly suspected he would—the end would be Ethel's giving me a rigmarole about her having unwittingly, unknowingly and unintentionally got into an unfortunate position and that she was obliged to give pain to me or Mr. Franklin and she was absolutely crushed; also that she had loved him and he had loved her till that horrid Nell Blanchard had come between them and made all the trouble. Then under such distressing circumstances I would be expected to do a magnanimous, noble part by relieving her of her frightful embarrassment by releasing her without blame.

One day I received a note from Ethel chiding me for not having been to see her for a week. She simply called my attention to the fact without comment. I replied that the fall trade was at its height, and I was working nights. I received another note stating that I had not worked every night, for I had been seen at the theater in company with a pretty girl a few evenings before. My reply to this was a confession. The young lady I had taken to the theater had once been a "flame" of mine. She possessed certain letters I had written her when I thought I loved her, which I was desirous to get into my possession before being married. In order to do this I must dissemble. When I had won her confidence I could the better devise a scheme for securing the letters.

I was quite sure this would bring matters to a climax, and it did. Ethel wrote me to come and see her at once. If I delayed she would send back the engagement ring I had given her. I thought over my next move and decided to go to see her. I found her very much troubled, though she endeavored to conceal evidence of the fact. Her face was heated, her eyes were restless and her bosom heaved.

"Why did you not tell me of this former love affair?" she asked in an accusatory tone.

"Because I supposed it was off long ago."

"And now it's on again."

To this I made no reply. I looked at the ceiling.

"Unless you wish to break with me you must drop it at once."

"I have not yet recovered my letters."

"Your letters! Nonsense!"

There was another silence. I took my eyes from the ceiling and directed them out through a window.

"Well, what are you going to do?" Ethel asked.

I responded in a quiet, reflective tone that if she would not object to my letters being used against me after my marriage with her I would let them remain where they were. I would call the next evening upon the lady possessing them and endeavor to persuade her to give up all idea of there ever being anything between us.

"Is it necessary that you should call to do that? Can't you write?"

"I committed myself in these letters I am anxious to secure and I should use diplomacy in the matter, just as you have been diplomatic in setting yourself right between Franklin and Nell Blanchard. By the by, how is that affair progressing?"

I looked at her with a cold stare.

"I have finished it," she replied ruefully.

"Indeed. It's a pity I had not taken up mine earlier; then they would both have been ended together."

"I thought you said you would end the matter at once."

"I said I would endeavor to do so."

She had taken hold of her engagement ring and was toying with it. I knew she was meditating taking it off and handing it to me.

"You would not have me treat a girl who loves me harshly, would you? You know how you have been situated with regard to Franklin."

There was a long silence. I thought it time to bring the matter to a focus.

"I will make you a proposition," I said. "Drop Franklin without a word, written or spoken, and I will do the same in my own case."

Another long silence, at the end of which she put out her hand to me. I clasped it, drew her to me and that was the end of paying off old scores. By this time the rush of the fall trade was over and we were married within a month. We passed over the border dividing the single from the married state, and prenuptial nonsense gave way to antenuptial conditions.

CANDIDATE ON FUSION TICKET

McAneny Declines Nomination For Mayor of New York

KLINE ASSUMES NEW DUTIES

Executive Says He Intends to Follow Gaynor Policies—Gaynor Leaves Fortune of Over a Million—Municipal Buildings Draped In Black In Memory of Dead Mayor

New York, Sept. 13.—George McAneny, president of the borough of Manhattan and fusion candidate for president of the board of aldermen, was designated by the Gaynor campaign managers as their candidate for mayor in the place of the late Mayor Gaynor.

McAneny was quick to decline the designation. "I sincerely appreciate the honor," he said, in a formal statement, "but under no circumstances could I accept a mayoralty nomination in opposition to Mr. Mitchel, the fusion candidate."

The new mayor of New York, a Republican, Ardolph L. Kline, who will serve until a successor, to be chosen at the coming November election, is inaugurated on Jan. 1, intends, he announced, to carry out the policies of the Gaynor administration "in so far as I know them" and to make no changes in appointive officials.

The fortune of Gaynor is estimated at between $1,000,000 and $1,500,000. Friends of the late executive explained that in the early days of Brooklyn's development, before Gaynor went on the bench, he was town counsel for Flatbush, then a sparsely settled section of Brooklyn. Gaynor bought choice locations in this section, and as the district gave promise of greater development invested still more extensively in property there.

Flatbush is now one of the main suburbs of Manhattan, and by his investments there Gaynor's fortune grew to the million mark in the past twenty years.

New York is in mourning for its dead mayor. Flags fly at half-staff and public buildings—the city hall, police headquarters, the municipal buildings—are draped in black. Thousands of messages of condolence have been received by Mrs. Gaynor and by Mayor Kline.

The board of estimate, called together by Kline, planned to arrange for a public funeral, to be held shortly after the arrival here of the mayor's body aboard the steamer Lusitania, which is due here from Liverpool next Friday. Monday, Sept. 22, has been suggested as a tentative date.

Body Reposes In Town Hall

Liverpool, Sept. 13.—When the body of the late Mayor Gaynor of New York arrived here it was accorded signal honor. The lord mayor of Liverpool ordered an escort of mounted police to accompany the casket from the White Star pierhead to the town hall, where it reposed until trans-shipped to the Lusitania today.

The body lay in state in the town hall, surrounded by a guard of honor throughout the night. The guard and the mounted police escorted the body to the Lusitania.

BUMPER CROP IN MAINE

Light Harvest of Potatoes In Massachusetts and Connecticut

Washington, Sept. 13.—While potatoes will not be a drug on the market this year, consumers need not fear that there will not be enough to meet the demands.

In a special report on the potato outlook, L. C. Corbett of the department of agriculture declared that while the total harvest will be less than last year, it will be sufficient to supply normal demands.

Indications are that Maine will produce the largest crop ever recorded, while Michigan, Wisconsin, Minnesota and North Dakota will harvest a normal crop. The yields in Massachusetts, Connecticut, New York and Ohio promise to be light.

COUNTERFEITERS ARE BUSY

Five-Dollar United States Note the Latest to Make Appearance

Washington, Sept. 13.—There seems to be an epidemic of counterfeits and the United States secret service has redoubled its efforts to catch the offenders.

On the heels of an announcement only a few days ago of the discovery of three new counterfeit national bank notes, Acting Chief Moran warned the public of a new counterfeit $5 United States note.

It is a poor photographic reproduction on paper of fair quality. The treasury seal has been lightly touched with pink ink and a slight attempt has been made to apply green coloring matter to the back of the bill.

Held on Murder Charge

Topsham, Me., Sept. 13.—Charged with the murder of Kasem Souleyman, whose mutilated body was found floating in the Androscoggin river last week, Bato Emimi was arrested at Lewiston.

Death Claims Its 325th Aviator

Muenster, Ger., Sept. 13.—Aviator Hans Lorenz was killed here while making a flight. His death is the 325th since heavier than air machines came into use.

ARDOLPH L. KLINE

Gaynor's Successor as Mayor of New York

Courtesy of Co-operative Press.

Ardolph L. Kline, who becomes mayor of New York after the death of William J. Gaynor, is a Republican. He was elected to the board from the Fifty-first Brooklyn aldermanic district. On Jan. 1, 1912, when the fusion majority in the board organized that body, Mr. Kline was elected vice president of the board. Upon the retirement of John Purroy Mitchel as president of the board to accept the office of collector of the port of New York Mr. Kline became president and as such acting mayor in the absence of the executive.

HEADLESS BODY NOT THAT OF MRS. JANIN

Woman and Man Named by Husband Are In Havana

Havana, Sept. 13.—Mrs. Lena Janin, who was supposed to have been murdered in New York, her body cut up and thrown into the Hudson river, and Vincent Planells, whose name has been mentioned in connection with the case, were found living here.

The couple said they had lived together in New York and had sailed for Havana ten days ago, after Planells had had a dispute with Casper Janin, the woman's husband, over the question of the Janins obtaining a divorce.

Mrs. Janin exhibited a scar on her shoulder similar to that by which her husband had identified the headless female torso.

PROBLEM FOR DETROIT

Two Thousand Women Must Get Out of Red Light District

Detroit, Sept. 13.—What to do with nearly 2000 women in Detroit who will be turned into the streets when Police Commission Gillispie's order sweeping out of existence all commercialized vice becomes effective Oct. 15 is a problem upon which civic bodies and churches are working.

The police commissioner announced that his duty ends when the city's resorts are closed and that what becomes of the inmates is not the concern of the police.

The police order for the elimination of Detroit's red light district was issued after Gillispie had made a personal investigation of conditions in Boston and Chicago.

MILITIA MONEY MISSING

Efforts to Get Accounting From Missing Officer Have Failed

Lynn, Mass., Sept. 13.—What promises to be a scandal came to light when it was discovered that $1000 was missing from the treasury of Company E, naval brigade, of this city. Lieutenant Stephen Decatur, Jr., commander of the company, of whom an accounting had been asked, has disappeared.

For some time there has been considerable dissatisfaction among the members of the company, who have not received back pay. Decatur, who has charge of the funds of the company, went on four months' furlough eight months ago and has not since been heard from.

FAR APART IN AGE

Groom of Seventy-Nine Weds Woman Forty Years His Junior

Malden, Mass., Sept. 13.—An unusual romance was brought to light here when the marriage certificate of John W. Ulm of Chicago and Miss Susan A. Johnson of this city was returned to city hall. Ulm is 79 years old and the bride 39.

The wedding took place at the home of the bride, only near relatives and friends being invited. Rev. George G. Hamilton of the Everett Universalist church officiated, and immediately after the ceremony the couple left for the west. The groom is a Chicago real estate broker, and is said to have interests in California orange groves.

QUINCY DAY HISTORICALLY

Seven Societies Will be Guests of Historical Society

The Quincy Historical society is planning for a historical day to be held in Quincy Wednesday Sept. 17. Invitations have been sent to the following historical societies requesting that the president and nine delegates from each attend the exercises: Milton, Canton, Holbrook, Dorchester, Weymouth, Roxbury and Hyde Park.

The delegates will meet at the cottage of John and Abigail Adams which will be open for inspection from 10 until 11 o'clock. At the latter hour Mrs. W. E. Alden will read a paper on "Historic Quincy" and presidents of the societies represented have been requested to give a five minute talk on th work of their society.

The address will be followed by a luncheon, after which automobiles will be taken for a visit to some of the historical spots about Quincy, including a visit to the cairn on Penns hill, which marks the spot where Abigail Adams watched the battle of Bunker Hill, a visit to the site of the first incorporated railroad in America, a section of which still remains; the Dorothy Q house on Hancock street now controlled by the Society of Colonial Dames, and then to First church where the Adams shrine beneath the portals of the church will be visited and close the program for the day.

The primary object of the gathering is to create new interest in the Quincy Historical society and incidentally to increase its membership.

WEYMOUTH

At the annual election of South Shore Commandery Knights Templars of East Weymouth, Monday evening, Gardner R. P. Barker of East Braintree was elected eminent commander and Charles G. Jordan, generalizzamo.

The Bay State Street Railway is laying a new and heavier rail through Washington Square. On the Weymouth side the grade has been raised four inches and the whole square is to be rebuilt with a macadom road Nothing is to be done on the East Braintree side of the line.

Rev. Fr. J. B. Holland. pastor of the church of the Sacred Heart has given up the parochial residence to the Sisters who are to establish a parochial school. For the present there will be but the first four grades and will take in the children of the parish residing in Weymouth and East Braintree.

McGRATH SENTENCED.

In the superior court at Dedham on Friday Patrick McGrath of Quincy was sentenced to a year in the house of correction for attempting to burn a building at Quincy.

The alleged offense took place last August, when McGrath set a fire to a lot of rubbish adjoining a Fore River boarding house in the middle of the night. There were a large number of boarders in the house at the time and but for the timely discovery of the fire a serious conflagration, in which lives would probably have been lost.

After some investigation Inspector Goodhue arrested McGrath who when arraigned in the Quincy court was held for the grand jury.

AT HEAD OF SYNDICATE.

Robert W. Emmons, Jr. Boston is the manager of the New York syndicate that will build the defender of the America cup against Thomas Lipton's new craft. The order for a new sloop has been placed with Nat Heireshoff and strong financial backing is assured. The parents of Mr. Emmons lived on Adams street some years ago and Mr. Emmons is strongly considering Quincy for residential purposes.

MOVE NOT IN FAVOR

tum to try to break away from Quincy. He said:—

"I believe this movement of annexation to Boston will react against this section. I doubt if Houghs Neck will recover from the recent agitation to become separated from Quincy for some years. I think Squantum residents should talk of making Squantum Ward 7 of Quincy. It is true that you are now taxed without representation, and I believe that this is not just. I believe that until such time as Squantum becomes a ward of its own that there should be more equal representation in Ward 6. The representatives from this ward now come from one or two streets in Atlantic. I think that Norfolk Downs and Squantum should have a representative and that the honors should not all go to Atlantic."

Mr. Davison was warmly applauded. Owing to his having to catch a car his talk was cut short.

James H. Loughan said he had looked up the matter of how annexation would have to be brought about, and said that first a petition would have to be published for three weeks in the Boston and Quincy papers, and the petition filed before the first of January with the clerk of the Legislature.

In answer to a question he said he felt certain that both Boston and Quincy would have to vote favorable for annexation before Squantum could be annexed to Boston.

The Quincy Board of Trade will be asked to send speakers to the next meeting to present arguments as to why Squantum should not be separated from Quincy.

FLOWER DAY.

The Quincy Day Nursery will have a "Flower Day" all day Saturday, Sept. 20 to raise money for the support of the Nursery through the coming year. The Flower Day will take the place of the "Tag Day" which has been held annually for several years, and is on the same principle, except the contributors receive a flower instead of a tag.

It is hoped that each and every person will give as generously as possible toward the suppport of this worthy charity. The Nursery is always open for public inspection and a visit there will amply repay one for any generosity as it brings a realizing sense of the good work being carried on.

Do not forget Saturday, September 20, and please give as generously as possible.

BUILDING PERMITS.

Inspector of Buildings Warren S. Parker issued the following building permits this week.

John McDougal, auto house, Calumet street.

John Berman, et al, three dwellings on Brook road.

Emily A. Sargent, alteration, Landers road.

Oscar A. Jacobson, alteration, Linden place.

CARRIER 70 YEARS OLD.

Gersham B. Thomas one of the oldest carriers connected with the Quincy Post office, passed his 70th birthday anniversary Friday, and received the congratulations of his many friends and his fellow employees at the post office. Mr. Thomas was born in Hanson, and during the Civil war he served in the 20th unattached Mass. infantry. At the close of the war he received an honorable discharge and soon after came to Quincy where for many years he was employed as a driver for Hodges bakery. When the postal delivery was established in Quincy he was appointed one of the first carriers. He entered upon his duties January 1, 1890, and he has been connected with the postal department ever since.

MOTHER OF CONGRESSMAN.

Mrs. Ellen Gilmore, mother of Congressman Edward Gilmore died Friday afternoon in her 83rd year. Congressman Gilmore who was summoned from Washington two weeks ago was at her bedside. She was born in Ireland and came to Boston in her 17th year and soon after settled in Brockton where she has since resided. She was the mother of eight children, only two of whom survive her.

The Pneumatic Scale Co., of which W. H. Doble is manager, has leased the power station of the Old Weymouth & Braintree Railway Co. on Allen street East Braintree, and will install machinery and make scales there.

Rev. T. W. Davison conducted a business meeting at the Squantum Vacation house Wednesday evening, and appointed officers to confer with the Congregational Home Missionary Society and Congregational Church Union of Boston in regard to organizing an ecclesiastical society to carry on religious services in Squantum all the year. The interest has been the best this summer of any time in the last four years, and the residents desire to keep up the religious services for the good of the community.

Judging by the appearances of Sagamore street the last two weeks, the Village Improvement Association will have some work before it, when it gets together this fall. Some citizens were heard to express their disgust in emphatic terms, that this main thoroughfare from the Atlantic depot should be so neglected. Ash barrels have been dumped on the sidewalk and allowed to remain there for weeks. Officers of the Improvement association, councilmen, and policemen on the beat, may not feel that it comes within their province to order tenants to keep their ashes on their premises until the time of collecting comes around that it is up to the Board of Health, Street Commissioners or some other official.

CITY HALL OUTING.

The city officials and clerks at City Hall have an exceptionally fine day for their annual outing at Elcock's grove on Braintree pond. The party left City Hall soon after the hall closed this noon, in automobiles as far as possible, the remainder of the party going by electric cars. On their arrival Mike Shea will serve a hot clam chowder which will be followed by a series of field sports on the upper field. An attractive array of prizes has been secured by Overseer Elcock who will be the master of the sports, and the contests for these prizes will be a keen one.

Real Heroism.

To live well in the quiet routine of life; to fill a little space because God wills it; to go on cheerfully with a petty round of of little duties, little avocations; to smile for the joys of others when the heart is aching—who does this, his works will follow him. He may not be a hero to the world, but he is one of God's heroes.—Dean Farrar.

It is believed that as the result of the railroad accidents, the engineers will have to look out for the danger signals for several weeks.

CITY COUNCIL MEETING.

A regular meeting of the City Council will be held Monday evening, but it is problematical as to the length of the meeting. No committees have met since last Monday, but the Finance Committee will meet Monday evening before the Council meeting and act on several matters. As far as new business, there will doubtless be more or less, although under the rules of the council no action can be taken at this time on petitions or orders that call for street construction or rebuilding. Under these rules any petitions or orders for this kind of work will have to be referred to the next City Council.

The Registrars of Voters held a busy session at City Hall Friday evening and added 71 names to the voting lists. Of this number Ward Five contributed 30, which report says were largely Progressives. Ward Six came next with 14 and then Ward Four with 13, the latter number being largely of Finnish nationality. The number by wards was as follows:—Ward One, 9; Ward Three, 5; Ward Four, 13; Ward Five, 30; Ward Six, 14. Ward Two, the Quincy Point ward, was the only ward in which no names were added.

There is more Catarrh in this section of the country than all other diseases put together, and until the last few years was supposed to be incurable. For a great many years doctors pronounced it a local disease and prescribed local remedies, and by constantly failing to cure local treatment, pronounced it incurable. Science has proven catarrh to be a constitutional disease and therefore requires constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, Ohio, is the only constitutional cure on the market. It is taken internally in doses from 10 drops to a teaspoonful. It acts directly on the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. They offer one hundred dollars for any case it fails to cure. Send for circulars and testimonials.

Outing of Officials and Clerks

Scene Laid at Elcock's Grove

The second annual outing of the City officials and clerks employed at City Hall was held Saturday afternoon at Elcock's grove bordering on Braintree pond, and was a most enjoyable afternoon. There was upwards of fifty in the party, which included Mayor Stone, City Treasurer Tilden, City Clerk Crane, City Solicitor McAnarney, City Engineer, Sargent, Assessor Adams, Tax Collector Sandberg Commissioner Tupper, Overseer Elcock, Chairman Teasdale of the Board of Health, Sealer of Weights, Cantfill, Chief Engineer Litchfield, City Auditor Fairbanks, Clerk of Council Magee, Deputy Tax Collector Curtis, Inspector Harry Loud of the Board of Health, Councilman Edward J. Sandberg, ex-Councilman Harry G. Studley and night janitor Fallon.

As for the young lady clerks, a roll call showed all of the regular clerks, and some of the extra clerks. One or two of the officials took their wives along with them, for as some one said, the aforesaid wives wanted to personally see what the great attraction was.

It was but a few minutes past the closing hour of City Hall Saturday when all the automobiles that could be mustered, left the front of the Hall for the grove. The men for whom room could not be found taking the electric cars as far as Braintree, where they were met by the automobiles, who had deposited their freight at the grove and returned.

Although the party were early on the scene, Mike Shea, the well known Superintendent of Streets was there first and had a steaming hot clam chowder all ready to serve. The party was hungry, the chowder good and full justice was done to it.

Then came a series of sports. It was the intention to have a series of events, such as running races for the girls, etc., but as hobble skirts are not the best thing in the world to run races in, this part of the program was called off. Some of the men however held a few races, during which the City Treasurer gave an exhibition of turning a double somersault in the air and landing in a heap on the ground, which will account for the limp with which he walks today.

After this exhibition there was a scrub game of base ball, during which the game was frequently interrupted by the ball being lost in the bushes. Some remarkable catches were missed, and some awful blows aimed at the ball with the bat, which however seldom found its mark.

In the meantime the young ladies were having a series of sports on their own account, but just what they were no man knows, except the man above and he will not tell.

A guard was posted a safe distance from the scene of these sports, and whenever a man got anywhere near he was immediately shooed off, in the same manner as some farmers wives shoo hens into their coops.

Loud laughter could occasionally be heard coming from the direction of where these sports were being held, but that was all. There was a suspicion on the part of some of the wise ones that they must have been trying to emulate the trick pulled off earlier in the day by the City Treasurer.

However the cry, "The bake is ready" was enough to break up the sports and everybody hurried down the hill to the grove where a long table had been set near the pond. Then the bake was served, and such a bake as was never set before a hungry crowd.

There have been bakes and bakes, but that of Saturday was pronounced the best any of the party had ever partaken. It was done to a T and it tasted fine. The good things contained in the bake included steamed clams, green corn, sweet potatoes, chicken, sausages, spare ribs, and chicken lobster with watermelon to top off with.

The bake was prepared by Mike Shea, the aforementioned superintendent of streets, and of it too much can not be said. In fact words are hardly adequate to describe its deliciousness.

After the bake City Clerk Crane said that he had been deputized to present the prizes. The prizes provided, included a necklace of rare pearls, an imported, highly embossed powder puff box, two very rare and valuable "varzes" and several bits of rare china.

They were presented to the tallest, the shortest, the slimest, the stoutest and the most talkative lady present. If you call at City Hall and visit the several offices you may learn who the fortunate winners were, as the prizes will probably be placed on exhibition.

By this time the sun gave evidence of soon retiring for the night and thoughts were turned toward home. The men were taken to South Braintree from where they made the balance of the journey homeward in the electric cars. The automobiles then returned and took the ladies home and thus ended the outing of 1913.

GOLDEN ROD AND ASTERS

Crowell--Josselyn wedding at First Church Saturday

Stately old First church with its high mahogany pulpit simply decorated with golden rod and lavender asters was a fitting background for a wedding Saturday evening. The bride was Miss Helen Barstow Josselyn, younger daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Robert Josselyn. The groom was Samuel Crowell, Jr., of Manchester, New Hampshire, second son of Dr. Samuel Crowell of Dorchester.

While the guests were gathering William Weston at the organ played continuously. Soon after 7.30 o'clock to the strains of Lohengrin's wedding march the wedding party entered the church and were met at the altar by the Rev. Adelbert Lathrop Hudson, pastor of the church, the groom and George William Bailey of Boston who acted as best man.

The bride was preceded by the ushers Ralph Stanwood Foss of Wyoming, New Jersey, David Crowell of Dorchester, Dr. Frank Miller Howes of Fairhaven, Ralph Hazen Hall of Wellesley Hills, F. Morton Smith of Quincy and Paul Bradford Badger of Winchester. Mrs. Ralph Stanwood Foss, a sister of the bride and Mrs. Edwin Phinney Seaver, Jr., of New Bedford as attending matrons were gowned in lavender and white, made in style of Dolly Varden coatee with crepe skirt, en train. The maid of honor Miss Margaret Mills of Winchester was in white chiffon and yellow satin and the two little flower girls, Jean Lithgow Foss and Anne Josselyn Foss nieces of the bride were in white muslin, carrying baskets of flowers. The bride entered with her father, Robert Josselyn, who gave her in marriage. The double ring service was used and was most impressive.

The bride's gown was embroidered Chinese silk crepe trimmed with rose point made with draped skirt and fish tail train. Her tulle veil was made with cap effect edged with rose point and she carried a bouquet of lilies of the valley en cascade.

Instead of leaving the church immediately after the service as is customary Mr. and Mrs. Crowell received their friends informally, a pleasing innovation which gave an opportunity to offer best wishes and congratulations.

Only the immediate families and a few intimate friends attended the reception which followed at the home of the bride 783 Hancock street, Wollaston, where Mr. and Mrs. Crowell were assisted in receiving by Mr. and Mrs. Robert Josselyn and Dr. and Mrs. Samuel Crowell, Sr.

The quantity of beautiful gifts in silver, cut glass, china, etc., attest to the wide circle of friends of the young people. The bride is a graduate of Vassar, '08 and the groom, Mr. Crowell of Harvard, '09 is connected with the McElwain Shoe Co. of Boston with branches at Portland Maine and Manchester, N. H.

The happy couple left mid a shower of confetti to spend a fortnight in camp. They will be at home after October first at Elliot street, Manchester, New Hampshire.

DEAD MAN IDENTIFIED

The body of the man found Friday morning on the railroad tracks near the West street crossing was identified Saturday night as Natoli Angiolini of 7 Old Coach road. The identification was made by Ambrose Battoni, a brother-in-law of 4 Forest street extension. Angiolini was a blacksmith by trade and has not had employment for several weeks. He was 43 years old and had a son in Gloucester. His wife and several children are in Italy.

Two members of Manet Encampment, I. O. O. F., David Conway of John Hancock lodge, Wollaston, and Charles Hayden of Mt. Wollaston lodge, were with the 500 excursionists to Lake Winnipesaukee, N. H. last Saturday.

LETTER FROM JAPAN

Braintree Man Writes of Mountain Climb

Mr. Warren Is a Missionary

Charles M. Warren of Braintree, who is a missionary in Japan, writes to the Braintree Observer the following interesting letter:

Gotemba, Japan, August 20, 1913.

Editor Observer:

I had been expecting to go on a trip with Mr. Wheeler, but he wrote the last minute that he could not go; so I was very glad to have the company of Rev. C. S. Davison, a Methodist missionary who is of my own year at college (Dickinson) but who is years beyond me in the language, for he was born in Japan and lived here till he was 14. We left last Thursday morning by horse car, which took us in about five hours to Yoshida where also one can climb the mountain. Having eaten our lunch in the horse-car we started at once to walk the fifteen miles to Lake Shoji. The way lies over the lower slopes of Fuji and in large part over the lava flows of millennia gone by. It is an exceptionally dry year and the farmers are suffering for lack of water for the rice fields. The dry powder of dust through which we plowed for the first half of our walk was anything but pleasing, the way being entirely waterless; the sun came down pitilessly, and we got a bad case of thirst before we reached the hamlet of Narusawa where we got some hot water and made us a good cup of Lipton's. The last half of the way lies over lava piles, so old that a road has been trodden and a forest sprung up. This was delightful compared with our previous experiences of the day; but even here we were disappointed on making the descent to an ice cave to find that this cave has a house for the storage of silk-worm eggs (natural cold storage of eggs!) and the care-taker being away we could not get our drink of ice-water. It was just about six when we came out of the woods at the side of Lake Shoji; and the water was so inviting that we had a good swim, getting our clothes on just in time to be rowed across the lake by some men and women who came up just then with loads to be ferried across the lake to the village of Shoji which is on the opposite side of the lake; fifty sen saved us a long walk around the lake. This was far too much to pay but there being a foreign hotel on this little lake, the villagers knew that there is no foreigner who has not loads of money. This boatmen hurried away to tell the hotel man that we were easy marks, but a talk with him soon brought him to reasonable terms. It was a pretty good hotel for such a wild and woolly place, 3000 feet above sea-level. And the fleas! My experience seems to show that the farther from civilization I go the more numerous are the fleas likely to be. But we cheated them by getting up for a 5.25 start. We walked up a hill about a thousand feet high and were so close to the lake (so steep is the hill) that we could almost jump into the lake. But we didn't try! We enjoyed the beautiful views of the lake and the Fuji in the newly risen sun light. It seemed to me I had never seen anything so beautiful; but a five minutes' walk brought us to a view of Lake Mottsu and then I knew that there isn't anything in the world more beautiful than these views we had just been getting. Our walk took us along the crest of the ridge (from which one could roll into the lake,) or about one third of its circuit. Then we left the Fuji Lakes Region and dropped down a thousand or two feet to the valley which if followed would have led us to the Fuji River. Now, we wanted to go to the Fuji River, but we preferred the ridge route to the valley one; so after getting some hot water for some more Lipton's best we went up on the ridge which we had to follow for about seven miles more. It was a bright and hot day, but we were some distance above sea-level, and the air was refreshing and there was some breeze, so we did not suffer from the heat at all.

The Fuji River is a stream that flows through the mountains to the west of Fuji; ordinarily it is not more than 40 or 50 feet wide and only pretty swift. But the river bed, to provide against the frequent emergencies of a swollen stream, is a broad stretch of stones and boulders a quarter of a mile wide. When swollen it becomes too swift for safety, and the police watch it; when it reaches the danger point they forbid boats to go. Such are some of the good points of a police ridden system. This being a time of drought, the stream is so small that we went only six or seven miles an hour for the forty-five miles. After the first seven miles I left the boat and Mr. Davison, (the latter much to my regret for he proved very companionable) and walked inland to Minobu; at this little mountain village is the celebrated temple of Kuonji the headquarters of the Nichiren Sect of Buddhists. The man Nichiren, whom his followers and indeed himself claim to have been the incarnation of one of the mythical Bodhisattvas (Jogye Bosatsu,) was born in 122 and resembles Luther in some ways in his reforming character. His sect is the only one of Buddhism that claims to be the only sect; in other words it is the only intolerant sect of Buddhism in Japan. I was very much interested in the temple, but I will not describe it or the sect further for I know it must be very dry for those who have not read up on it. I had a very pleasant "stop" (one night's lodgeing, with supper and breakfast) at the Minobu hotel, and came on by boat as before down the river. The scenery is splendid, as the river winds through the mountains all the way. This combined with the beautiful Fuji Lake Region scenery makes this little trip of only three days the most beautiful one I ever took, I believe I am intending to steer all my friends that way. Please go. I'll personally conduct the party—and I'm an expert now!

Arrived at the railway, as I had two hours to wait, I went to see a temple which is advertized to be the headquarters of the Obaku sub-sect of the Zen; but which was a very ordinary temple and which is said by those who claim to know not to be what it is advertised. There seems to be competition even in religion! However I had a very pleasant conversation with the priest in charge, who invited me in to drink tea with him after he had done the honors of the temple, and we had had some conversation about his sect. Curiously enough, I, while going to this temple, ran across a Nichiren temple in which a service was in progress; it is said that it was in this temple that Nichiren wrote his famous treatise "Risso Amkeku Ron," which, being both a political and a religious tract, caused his condemnation to be beheaded(though the sentence was not carried out,) and which is perhaps worthy of being compared with "Uncle Tom's Cabin" for the effect it produced on the minds of the reading public. It is probably, however, not true that it was written in that temple.

This trip occupied three days; being 20 miles by horse-car, 30 miles by foot, 45 on the swift river boat, and 30 by railway. I might add that the whole trip cost about $5.00.

Very sincerely yours,
Charles M. Warren.

To Be Given To Property Owners Only Upon Application at Office

The much talked of and anxiously waited for Assessors' valuation list for the year 1912 is out today in book form. The book is one of 1189 pages and the issue of 400 volumes cost the city at the rate of about $4 per volume.

There have been many inquiries for copies of the books, but as the issue is limited care will be used in their distribution. Any citizen who desires a copy must apply in person at the office of the Assessors at City Hall, and even then the applicant must be a property owner to be favored. In no event say the Assessors will copies be given to boys or children. A record is also kept of the persons to whom the copies are issued.

The book is in reality a transcript from the Assessors' valuation books of -912. It gives first the name of the party assessed, what the real estate consists of and the valuation and tax on same, the personal estate and what it consist of and the tax on the same and the total tax.

The book is issued in accordance with an order passed by the City Council of 1912, which provides that a similar list shall be published every two years, beginning with the year 1912.

FINED FOR STEALING FRUIT

Leniency will be but a small factor in the punishment of boys convicted of fruit stealing and this morning, Judge Avery fined four South Boston boys $20 each for stealing grapes on the Crabtree estate at Squantum on Sunday. Three others will be held for the juvenile court.

The seven boys were captured by Officer Charles Nelson at the point of the revolver as they were fleeing from the scene of their raid. Thy were charged with trespassing.

The boys fined this morninz gave their names as William J. Schroeder, Charles H. Molloy, Fred Fein and William Chisholm. James F. Poole, Thomas J. Coholan and Dennis Fowler will be arraigned at the juvenile session.

WANT STRICT QUARANTINE.

With two new cases of infantile paralysis in Atlantic the past week many residents believe there should be a more strict quarantine of those afflicted with this terrible disease. This seems especially true for the reason that so little is known about it by the medical profession. The cause of this disease is unknown today. Whether it is contagious or only infectous or how it is transmitted to children all over the neighborhood is not known, but one thing is certain, there is a cause for it all somewhere and until something more definite is known of how to treat it the only safe guard for the public is very strict quarantine.

Miss Corine J. Picard of Irving place is in New York on a business trip. She is making her headquarters with her uncle J. Petelle.

Mrs. Pankhurst is going to be very quiet on her American trip, though of course she ought to burn a few buildings to cheer up her followers.

The government having moved to dissolve the coal trust, there is now a good excuse for another advance in price.

Oysters are a correct order now that September has come, but your best girl won't be satisfied with them while they sell so much cheaper than lobsters.

None of the men on that train would give up their lower berth for Miss Eleanor Wilson, but your stenographer would have found some way to put them out.

MISS WILSON'S UPPER BERTH.

Much newspaper comment has been caused by the incident of Miss Eleanor Wilson and the upper sleeping car berth she had to occupy. It appears that on her recent journey no man occupying a lower berth was willing to give it up to the President's daughter.

Some newspapers comment on this as typical of the lower tone of modern deference to women. Others say that Miss Wilson is young and healthy and could climb aloft as well as any one.

Unfortunately chivalry is disappearing in public places. The man who gives up his seat in a city street car to a woman is looked at curiously, as if he came from the country.

With all the rush and strain of modern life, much of this change is inevitable. If the rule of chivalry is to prevail, the methodical man who has taken pains to write ahead for his berth must give it up to the foolish virgin who trusted to luck and masculine chivalry. This depreciates the virtue of foresight and puts a premium on negligence.

The toiling merchant or mechanic returning home by a city street car, may naturally feel disinclined to abandon his seat for the benefit of fluffy feminity out for exercise and an airing. But this feeling soon encourages a general masculine selfishiness, that drops all sex distinc ns in elbowing and jostling for comfort.

As to Miss Wilson's case, she may have had no opportunity to plan the details of her journey. It does seem as if the daughter of a president were entitled to special courtesies. It detracts from the dignity of the chosen representatives of the people, if they and their families must scramble like the rest of us. Why should not a man be glad to forego the slight extra convenience of the lower berth, to do honor to the presidential office, and those connected with it?

VISITED BY ITS DEPUTY

Pride of Quincy Lodge, I. O. B. A. was visited Sunday by First Deputy Grand Master Joseph L. Simon of Salem, Chairman of Law, Solomon Levy and Second District Deputy Lazarus Davis of Boston. All made addresses on subjects of interest to the order. President Joseph Szathmary, presided.

GAS ILLUMINATION.

The comfort of a well lighted home is being demonstrated at the annual illumination at the office of the Citizen's Gas Light Co. 15 Granite street, and a well arranged stock of fixtures offers many opportunity to brighten the darkness of the fall and winter evenings.

By far, the most attractive yet absolutely practical fixture displayed is the new semi indirect with its inverted shade which is suspended from the ceiling by three bronzed chains. The light burns but one mantle, is a semi indirect supply, and is equipped with a reflector which throws most of the light downward where needed but also diffuses enough above to prevent overhead gloominess.

The new fixture has been but recently perfected and a complete installation has been secured by the company for their own office lighting. They do away with the arc for inside lighting, burns but one mantle and were evolved while trying to dissipate the common to many fixture.

The light is suitable for interior lighting of business houses, public buildings, and other places, and is the last word in attractive and economic house lighting. It is easy to operate easy to maintain and consumes only 8 3-4 feet of gas per hour and above all other things the entire effect is pleasing.

Patrons from all parts of th city are welcomed at the office where the direct benefits of the principles of semi indirect lighting are being explained.

RALLY TONIGHT.

A grand smoker and rally will be held in Hibernian hall this evening under the auspices of the Quincy Hebrew Citizens club. The speakers for the evening are:

Hon. Guy A. Ham. member Governor's Council, Hon. George L. Barnes, of Weymouth, Harry James, City Solicitor of Chelsea, Solomon Lewebery, William R. Thomas, Louis F. R. Langelier, and Charles H. Johnson. The rallies to be held in the interests of the Republican party, and is open to all. The club met Sunday afternoon in the Synagogue hall, on School street. President Joseph Szathmary was in the chair. The club was formed only a few weeks ago to protect the interests of the Jewish voters in Quincy and its membership is already considerably over seventy-five.

MISS WINIFRED CULLEN.

Miss Winifred Cullen, sister of Mrs. James Conrad of 654 Washington street Quincy Point, died Sunday evening at the Beverly hospital, Beverly, after a short illness. Miss Cullen was a children's nurse and well known on the North Shore. The body will be brought to Quincy for buiral.

HABEAS CORPUS WRIT FOR THAW

To Be Used Only If Requisition Is Signed by Governor

JEROME TAKEN BY SURPRISE

Federal Circuit Court Judge Orders Fugitive to Appear Before Him on Ground of His Being Deprived of Liberty Illegally—Open Controversy Between Factions

Colebrook, N. H., Sept. 15.—The fight to save Harry K. Thaw from returning to Matteawan took another unexpected twist when word was received here that a writ of habeas corpus had been granted by Judge Aldrich of the United States circuit court, sitting at Littleton, N. H., on the ground that Thaw was being deprived of his liberty illegally. The writ was made returnable Tuesday next and calls for the production of Thaw in Littleton on that date.

Attorney Grossman, head of the Thaw counsel here, said the writ had been sued out as a precautionary measure to prevent William T. Jerome, New York state's special attorney general, from carrying Thaw off in the event Governor Felker signed the warrant of extradition without giving Thaw a hearing and an opportunity to appeal to the courts.

Jerome was taken absolutely by surprise. He indignantly asserted that an agreement entered into by counsel had been openly violated.

The news that the writ had been granted came at a time when there seemed little chance of any important development before Thaw was taken to Concord for a hearing before Felker on the question of his extradition on the charge of conspiracy.

The legal tangle in which the Thaw case has become involved is left even more complicated. There is doubt in the minds of the attorneys whether the stage will be set next in Littleton or in Concord.

Thaw's hearing before Magistrate Carr, which was scheduled for Saturday, was put over again, and the outlook now is that there will be no hearing before it is removed to Concord or taken to Littleton. The day was spent here by Thaw's counsel in preparing their defense for the extradition hearing and getting up petitions to be placed before Felker asking that he be set free.

Mrs. Mary C. Thaw has written a letter to Felker pleading for an impartial hearing for her son.

Thaw spent a quiet Sunday, his fifth away from Matteawan. He did not even go out for a walk. He expressed a desire to attend the Methodist church, but the sheriff said that he (the sheriff) had not been going to church much of late, and feared if he went it might establish a precedent under which his wife would compel him to attend regularly hereafter.

He made this explanation with a smile, and said later his real reason for not taking Thaw out was that Colebrook has been upset enough over the fugitive, and he thought it best not to parade him on the quiet of the Sabbath.

The corridors of the Menadnock House, where Thaw is held, were crowded with country folk who hoped to get a good look at him. Only those who were willing to pay for a meal and see Thaw at table had their curiosity satisfied.

The statement of Grossman that the federal writ was obtained, not because Thaw's liberty was sought now, but as an emergency measure to checkmate New York should Felker honor the requisition warrant for Thaw without a full hearing, developed into a an open controversy between factions.

Jerome last night characterized the move as a breach of faith and he procured a number of affidavits from newspaper representatives setting forth what Grossman had said. It was understood he obtained these for use in a possible move to sustain his contention that Grossman and his associates had "trifled" with the federal courts and perhaps were liable for contempt.

Aside from members of Paul Revere Post 88, G. A. R., and Mt. Wollaston lodge of Odd Fellows there was a delegation from the Quincy Police department and from Delphi lodge Knights of Pythias of Weymouth.

The services were conducted by Rev. Benjamin A. Willmott of the Bethany church after which the burial service of the Grand Army was held. At the grave the body was consigned to mother earth with three vollies by the color guard of Paul Revere Post.

There was a large number of floral tributes including set pieces from the police department and from the several organizations with which he was affiliated.

NEW DISCOVERY IN SHINGLES.

For several years it has been very difficult to get wooden shingles of best quality owing to the ever-increasing comsumption of wood and decrease of timber suitable for shingles. The result is that many wooden shingles of today are either full of defects or cut from short widths.

As a result of the constant demand of customers of our other Neponset roofings we have produced, after years of experimenting, a shingle which possesses none of the defects of present day wooden shingles and yet embodies all their good points and more too. It is the equal of the best wooden shingle ever made.

Neponset shingles are fire resisting and for this reason they possess a distinct advantage over wooden shingles which catch fire so quickly and easily from sparks and embers.

The Neponset shingle is made by a patented process so that one end is thicker than the other. This causes it to lie like a regular wooden shingle, and prevents curling up, which is so common among wooden shingles and also among other substitutes for wooden shingles which have been put on the market.

Neponset Shingles are made from a material which has been tested on roofs in every part of the world for over fifteen years. In appearance the Neponset Shingle roof is very attractive. These shingles are intended for use on pitched roofs or buildings of all kinds and for any use will give results of the best shingles.

Neponset Shingles are shipped in bundles and are laid like wooden shingles.

COUNTERFEIT COIN.

The United States Secret Service has redoubled its effort in the investigation of making and pasing counterfeit money and it is understood that they are quietly working in the vicinity of Quincy. As far as is known none of the new $5 counterfeits are in circulation here but a large amount of coin has been passed in the city. Most of the counterfeits are ten cent pieces, although a few half dollars have been secured. The dimes are made of a combination of metals and are much lighter than the genuine coin, and are a very poor imitation.

Present Styles a Victory For Satan; Many Drunkards Good Men

By the Rev. Dr. LEN G. BROUGHTON of London

IF I were the devil, certainly I would not enjoy anything so much as a walk up Broadway or Fifth avenue, New York, looking at the slit skirts and other new styles of women's dress.

Until very recently I never knew a woman who was not interested in jewels and clothes. But now they have lost their interest in clothing and are going around the streets with as few clothes as possible and making those few as short and transparent as possible.

THESE THINGS LEAD ONLY TO THE DEVIL. THEY TEMPT MEN, AND NO WOMAN EVER FELL WITHOUT THE AID OF A MAN.

There are a lot of good men, just as good as you can show me, who get drunk. What you Christians ought to do is to go to them and sit up with them and pray with them. Then they would quit drinking.

A Society Needed to War on Flirts And Skirts Split Up the Side

By Miss ANNA MOSCOWITZ, Lawyer, of New York City

THERE SHOULD BE A SOCIETY TO EXTERMINATE MEN FLIRTS and to educate women against the wearing of clothing too attractive.

At the same time a part of the campaign of such a society should be directed AGAINST MY OWN SEX.

IF I SAW A MAN WEARING TROUSERS SPLIT UP THE SIDE I WOULD LOOK AT HIM, SO I DON'T BLAME MEN FOR STARING AT WOMEN DRESSED TO EXTREMES. BEFORE THE MASHER CAN BE EXTERMINATED WOMEN MUST BE EDUCATED.

ENTERS UPON ITS 275th YEAR

Dr. Hudson Preaches on "After Vacation" at First Church

There was a large attendance Sunday morning at First church after the summer vacation. This year the church enters upon its 275th year and Rev. Adelbert Lathrop Hudson prefaced his sermon on "After Vacation," by reading the old covenant of faith, speaking of what the church stood for years ago and what it should stand for today in the community. He believed it should be a power for good and its influence far reaching. He hoped next year the church would observe its 275th anniversary free from debt and with increased power for good influence in the city .

The church quartet and organist gave good musical selections.

The Sunday school reopens Oct. 5.

During September the pastor will preach on Religion and Democracy, and Religion and Science and in October on Religion and Business taking for subjects the lawyer, the public official, the newspaper, etc., and their influence.

WOLLASTON CONGREGATIONAL.

A large audience greeted the pastor Rev. Dr. Sneath, who spoke upon the topic "The Greatest Need." He said: "this age needs more than anything else Jesus Christ. The trend to selfishness must be overcome by the spirit of Christ. He must dominate the commercial, social and spiritual life."

The organist, W. C. Rogers, presided for the last time, as he will leave Quincy to take charge of the music in a State Normal school in Slippery Spring, Penn. Mr. Rogers has given the largest satisfaction and will be missed.

The audience room of the church has been redecorated and otherwise improved, making it more attractive than ever.

The sabbath school and Y. P. S. C. E opened with a large attendance at each. The school has adopted the Pilgrim graded lessons.

Leon Randall leaves this week for Dartmouth, Clifford Backus for the University of Maine and Sewall Sayward for Worcester academy. Miss Gladys Bain rturns to Wellesley, Miss Helen S. Seavey to Mount Holyoke and Miss Mary Broughton will enter Wheaton. Miss Mary C. Murray has accepted a position as instructor in physical culture in the Y. W. C. A. of Bar Harbor, Maine. These young people will be greatly missed in the church life. Norton Nickerson, who is on a three months trip to Calgary, is seriously deliberating the matter of making it his future home.

WOLLASTON UNITARIAN.

Beautiful flowers, a solo by Mrs. Royal L. Turner, a duet by Mrs. Frank A. Page and Mrs. Turner, and an inspiring sermon made the morning service a most helpful hour of worship. Rev. Carl G. Horst read Susan Coolidge's fine poem on "Building" and chose for his text these words from Micah 6, 8—"What doth the Lord require of thee, but to do justly to love mercy and to walk humbly with thy God," the theme being "Morality and Religion."

The preacher said: "There is such a thing as morality and there is such a thing as religion. While there cannot be religion without morality, yet it is possible to have morality without religion. One can be a moral man without being a religious man. Morality calls upon man to do justly and love mercy." Religion calls upon him "to walk humbly with God." Morality recognizes man's relation to man,

The Late Mayor Gaynor

Interesting Career of New York City's Chief Executive. His Attempted Assassination — Planned to Run For Mayor Independent of Tammany—Farmer, Lawyer, Judge and Philosopher.

WILLIAM J. GAYNOR, mayor of New York city, who died on board the steamship Baltic while on his way across the Atlantic on a short vacation, was a man of great force of character, honesty of purpose and fearlessness in the discharge of his duty as he saw it.

Judge Gaynor was born near Oriskany, in Oneida county, N. Y. He was of mixed Irish and English ancestry. One of his ancestors on his mother's side fought under Montgomery in the war of the Revolution and was killed in the attack on Quebec. The neighborhood in which he was reared was called "Skeeterboro." His was the usual life of a boy on a farm in a poor country. He worked in the fields and woods and did the chores. He went to the little district school each winter for a few weeks. He afterward went to the village school and the seminary and afterward taught school and finally achieved a good education.

He settled in Brooklyn, N. Y., in 1875, at the age of about twenty-four. He did newspaper work. Then he practiced law. His rise in his profession was steady. He was a student and was careful in his practice. He settled all the cases he could, but when he had to fight in court he was a formidable antagonist.

He early began to take an interest in public affairs, but not as a partisan. He at first lived in the town of Flatbush, adjoining Brooklyn. Its population was about 10,000. Its government was dependent on two political bosses and was thoroughly bad. There were much waste and peculation. All sorts of favoritism existed. There were forty saloons, only one with a license. There was a colony of roadhouses frequented by drivers to Coney Island and the beaches. Gaynor was then a silent young fellow. But he had tried several law cases at the town hall with great ability. He said one day that the government of the town was a disgrace and the people should not suffer it. People thought of the two opposing bosses and smiled, for whichever was in power the result was the same. And many even said that they had an understanding and worked together. The next thing was that every one received a printed circular from Mr. Gaynor inviting him to a public meeting in the town hall to select candidates for the approaching election. The hall was packed. Both bosses were there. The chairman was a tool of theirs.

His Early Political Creed.

A motion was put naming candidates. Young Gaynor quietly handed up a resolution as a substitute, naming a new set of men from top to bottom. The chairman refused to submit it to a vote. Mr. Gaynor got up on a bench in full view, and the whole town learned that he was not as quiet as he looked. He reviewed the condition of things in the crispest words. He demanded that the chairman put the substitute to a vote and told him that if he did not do so it would not be at all difficult to put him out of the window and put another in his place. The whole meeting broke out in cheers. The chairman lost his nerve and put the substitute. It was overwhelmingly carried. Two days later the two opposing bosses combined on a ticket, but were beaten three to one at the polls. Gaynor had been asked to run for the legislature, but refused. He said he wanted no office. The newspaper accounts of that time show that in his speech he declared, as he often has since, that "ours is a government of laws and not of men." He even read that famous passage to that effect from the Massachusetts bill of rights.

As a Police Officer.

When the government was organized the town board insisted on appointing Mr. Gaynor police commissioner, and he was prevailed on to serve. He went quietly and systematically to work, and everything was done in a strictly lawful manner. No lawless police raids were made, but in a few months the colony of evil places was empty, and every hotel and saloon had a license, and they were made to respect the Sunday law. The town was "cleaned up."

In a year Mr. Gaynor resigned his office. His work was done. He made the police force respect the law and not do as it liked. He tried to teach the same lesson to the 10,000 policemen of the city of New York. They were not permitted to do any unlawful violence. He taught them and the community that "the way to enforce the law is the way prescribed by the law itself," as he had so often declared. When a distinguished citizen once said to him that that way would not detect and punish crime he answered dryly and drolly, "Then don't."

Fights Boss McLaughlin.

Soon afterward Mr. Gaynor moved into Brooklyn, then and for many years under the control of Boss McLaughlin. The politicians distrusted him. He did not court them, but went his way. The ring quietly bought up a private water company which supplied a part of the city. They paid about $200,000 for it. Soon after they made a contract with the mayor and comptroller and auditor, selling it to the city for $1,500,000. By this time Mr. Gaynor had accumulated some money in his profession and could spend some. He brought a taxpayer's suit to prevent the carrying out of the contract. He gave all the facts, showing it to be, as he said, "a spoliation of the funds of the city." The court contest aroused the public to the highest interest. Mr. Gaynor won through all the courts. It was a year of hard work, with every powerful political and financial interest against him.

First they laughed at his suit. But he only grew more silent and grim and worked harder and harder. The fraud was killed, and he paid all the expense, amounting to $14,000. He next took proceedings and compelled the city officials to collect the millions of arrears of taxes from the elevated railroads. The members of the ring had large holdings in them, given for their influence, and protected them. He took similar proceedings to expose the so called Columbian frauds and prevented the fraudulent bills from being paid. He did other similar things. His activity was marvelous. The common saying was that he heard every pin fall in the city and that nothing escaped his attention.

A mayoralty election was now coming on in Brooklyn. Every one turned toward Mr. Gaynor. Honest people wanted him for mayor. The politicians sneered and said: "That is it. That is what he has been after all along. We will see him as a self seeker." A great meeting was held in the Academy of Music, which named him for mayor. But he would not run. He said no one would ever be able to say that the public services he had rendered were with a view to get into office. He was even touchy about it. And that characteristic manifested itself in the many times he had been asked to be a candidate for governor and mayor. Another was nominated instead.

Later he was nominated for justice of the supreme court. He wrote, declining. But leading citizens induced him to run to help the city ticket, the city being part of the ten counties making up the judicial district. There was a majority the other way of about 30,000 in the district, and the ring majority in the city was about 20,000 in past elections. But Mr. Gaynor was elected by a majority of over 30,000, and the ring was as badly beaten in the city. It never again got back into power. It was broken for good, and Brooklyn became a part of New York city a few years later.

Notable Career as Judge.

The career of William J. Gaynor as a judge is well known. He was an immense worker and set a new pace. The number of cases he tried each year was beyond anything theretofore known. The legislative committee on the law's delays reported all this several years ago. His opinions on the rights of the individual, on immunity from unlawful arrests and police interference and on libel and other kindred things became read and known all over this country, and some of them are legal classics. It was not thought he would remain long on the bench, but he refused to resign to run for governor, for mayor of Brooklyn and twice for mayor of Greater New York. At the end of his term he did not seek renomination or say a word on the subject, but all of the parties without an exception renominated him. He served only two years of that term. The last four years as a judge he served as a member of the appellate division of the supreme court of the state.

Only Winner on His Ticket.

But in 1909 he was induced to resign to run for mayor of New York city. Every one on his ticket was beaten except himself. He had a majority of 73,000.

His career as mayor is known to the whole country. He made no promises or alliances to get the office. He selected men to head all the twenty eight departments of the city to suit himself. The knowledge and insight which he manifested in the workings of the city government were an object lesson to every one. Nothing escaped his attention, and he knew the way to do everything. He cut off millions of expenses. He abolished boards and bureaus that every mayor before him had supposed to be legal fixtures. The story has been so often written and told that it need not be repeated. He made the government of the city an object lesson and pattern for the whole country. He drew the eyes of Europe even upon the city.

The departments have been raised to the highest efficiency. The mayor caused all appointments and promotions to be made in numerical order from a competitive list. No money or influence was permitted to interfere with this. No one was able to make any charges of fraud, ring rule or political favoritism in the government of the city. Under this man they simply vanished. Of course a man like this had enemies, who growled and abused him. But the mayor kept right on.

Gaynor as Philosopher.

The philosophical turn of the mayor's mind endeared him to the community. He displayed it throughout his whole career, but it became more apparent in his wider field as mayor. He was called upon to make addresses all the time and had made more than any mayor, if not more than all the mayors, who preceded him. And he always had something thoughtful and often witty to say. The same is true of the many letters he wrote. He seemed to have no desire to conceal his thoughts or opinions, as is the case with many politicians. Soon after he became mayor the public was attracted to one of the long series of his public letters. A young minister of the gospel wrote to him for a license to preach to the Jews in the most congested Jewish quarter in order to convert them. The mayor answered as follows:

"Reverend and Dear Sir—It seems to me that this work of proselyting from other religions and sects is very often carried too far. Do you not think the Jews have a good religion? Have not the Christians appropriated the entire Jewish sacred scriptures? Was not the New Testament also written entirely by Jews? Was not Jesus also born of the Jewish race, if I may speak of it with due reverence? Did not we Christians get much or the most of what we have from the Jews? Why should any one work so hard to proselytize the Jew? His pure belief in the one true living God comes down to us even from the twilight of fable and is the one unbroken lineage and tradition of the world. I do not think I should give you a license to preach for the conversion of the Jews in the streets of the thickly settled Jewish neighborhoods which you designate. Would you not annoy them and do more harm than good? How many Jews have you converted so far? Very truly yours, W. J. GAYNOR, Mayor."

Perhaps this letter also displays the mayor's own profound belief in God, which seems to be his whole creed. His use of pure Anglo-Saxon in his oral and written speech is remarkable.

Attempt to Kill Him.

In August, 1910, a discharged city employee tried to assassinate Mayor Gaynor. He came up behind the mayor on the deck of an ocean steamer, where the mayor stood talking with friends who had come aboard to see him off to Europe, and, placing a pistol close to the back of the mayor's head, fired. The bullet entered back of the right ear and, changing its course two or three times, passed through his throat. It was never extracted. At first it was thought that the mayor's voice was permanently gone. But it came back by degrees, and during the past two years he made many public speeches.

This assault on the mayor revealed a new phase in his character, a most unusual physical as well as mental courage. The concussion rendered him unconscious momentarily, but he struggled to his feet and kept perfectly cool. He did not manifest the slightest fear of death, although he and every one thought he was dying. He never spoke of the matter.

In the fall of 1910 the Democratic party called on Mayor Gaynor to run for governor. He carefully considered everything and then sent a letter to the waiting convention saying that as a matter of duty to the people of New York city he could not resign as mayor to accept another office. He had since often said the office of mayor was larger than that of governor and second only to the presidency. Considering the immense powers vested in the mayor of New York, this is true.

The mayor had all along taken a deep interest in national politics, and nothing in that field escaped him. His speech on the tariff when Cleveland first ran for president was widely circulated. It was one of the best. He was a close student of national questions. For years he spoke of favoritism in freight rates as the grossest wrong of the age.

Fond of the Old Farm.

Every year Judge Gaynor used to visit his sisters, Miss Mary C. Gaynor and Mrs. A. V. Lynch, who live in Utica. From Utica he used to trolley to Oriskany and then walk four miles into the country to Skeeterboro, to visit the old farm on which he and his brothers and sisters spent their childhood.

There were thirteen brothers and sisters raised on this farm and "schooled" at a quaint little one story schoolhouse a long mile from the farm.

This little schoolhouse remains just as it was forty years ago, except that it is now annually painted and kept in repair, whereas in former days it was innocent of paint, and not infrequently the snow and rain fell upon the heads of the pupils or upon their old fashioned desks because of a broken pane or leaky roof. There is only one room in the schoolhouse. Today the children of Ed Herthum, present owner of the old Gaynor homestead, are pupils of the old schoolhouse. Ed Herthum's father bought the farm buildings, stock and 100 acres of land of Mayor Gaynor's father forty odd years ago.

To the old place Judge Gaynor paid a visit every summer, spending three or four hours talking over his boyhood days and invariably doing a certain little stunt as gleefully as a child. There stands in the farmyard a huge bowlder upon which the Gaynor children used to crack nuts and play "Indian scout," hands shading eyes which peered into the far distant Mohawk valley, or doing a "circus act" on one leg and with outstretched arms.

"The judge never came here but what he climbed on that bowlder and did some of the old stunts for the amusement of my kids," said Mr. Herthum. "He never came to the old place without something in his pockets for the kids, and he roamed over the farm where he declared the happiest of his days were spent.

"None of my present neighbors remembers the time when the Gaynors lived here, but one of the judge's old schoolmates, James Mahar, moved to Whitesboro some time ago, so that it is the farm and not the neighbors the judge came to see.

"I never saw a man so stuck on his old home as Judge Gaynor was, and to see him cracking nuts and pirouetting on that old bowlder was as good as a circus. There is no church within miles of here even now, and there wasn't in the Gaynor days, so, although the Gaynor children got their schooling near here, they had not the advantage of church or clergy unless they drove to Oriskany."

Made His Debut in Boston.

Mr. Gaynor made his debut as a lawyer in Boston. At that time he was just twenty-one years of age and had gone to Boston from his father's farm in New York. There he had educated himself and had started teaching school when he was only nineteen years old.

Meanwhile he was studying law, and the latter part of 1873 that he called me into his room one night and pointed to his trunk that was already half packed. 'Well, Ed,' he remarked, with a smile, 'I'm getting ready to leave Boston. I'm going to try my luck in New York or Brooklyn.' At first I could hardly believe it. I wanted to know why he was going away when his affairs were beginning to prosper. He waved it all aside airily and said, with a certain tone of resolution, that he felt sure he could make a greater success in New York and that it was high time he should be going. Every year was precious at his time of life, he told me, and he felt that it was then or never for him to make the change.

"Well, we gave him a sendoff at the old boarding house on Waltham street, and we wished him all the luck in the world. None of us guessed what he was going to accomplish, but I know that for my part I felt he was destined for big things—how big I had no conception. As the years have passed by I have followed his career with a strong personal interest."

Turned Down by Tammany.

Up to as late as last August it was thought that Tammany would renominate Mayor Gaynor, not because the organization liked him, but because of expediency. Then came the announcement that Edward E. McCall, former supreme court justice, was Tammany's choice.

Then friends of Mayor Gaynor, including Jacob H. Schiff, Herman Ridder, editor of the New York Staats Zeitung, and more than 100 other men prominent in the business life of the city, formed the Gaynor Fusion and Nominating league and at a mass meeting held in City Hall park named him as an independent candidate for mayor of New York city. Mayor Gaynor accepted the nomination in a characteristic speech and shortly after took passage for Europe on the steamship Baltic, a voyage from which he was destined never to return alive.

BANG-AND-GO-BACK RACES

Quincy Yacht Club Coming to Front in Power Boat Races

A hotly contested race for two classes of power boats was held Saturday afternoon under the auspices of the Quincy yacht club off the clubhouse. In class C the speedy boat of E. T. Folsom, the Marcel Wave, was the only starter and she covered the course of 4 1-2 miles in 23 minutes. The race in the bang-and-go-back class was won by Little Iris of Commodore Harry S. Crane. The judges were John O. Hall, George S. Morse and W. H. Huy. The summary:

According to the yachting editor of the Globe the Quincy yacht club is coming to the front in power boating. The most successful races are held under what is known as the bang-go-back class. Instead of having the course straight out, the boats are called back by the bang of a gun. When the boats which start from the red star buoy some two miles out are near the home mark the gun fires at which all turn and retrace their steps The scheme is a sort of handicap for the gun is usually fired as the leading boat turns the mark. By this method a slower boat stands some chance of competing with the more faster boats.

BLIND GIRLS WORK AT SWITCHBOARD

Are Well Trained and Perform Duties Successfully

Baltimore, Sept. 15.—The blind telephone girl has come to stay. An exceptional girl two years ago passed the severe tests of the work and has since then been a conspicuous example of what the blind, when gifted in other ways, may do.

Now the Maryland school for the blind has turned out five other well-trained girls, and the managers believe they will be able to open this field of work to many other girls.

These six pioneers, who are leading the way for other blind girls of the future, are working with the regulation switchboards, but efforts are being made to evolve a new kind of board which will greatly simplify the training of the girls and increase their efficiency.

CHILD WITHOUT A BRAIN

Lived Nearly Four Years, to Great Surprise of Medical Men

Berlin, Sept. 15.—The German medical press records the remarkable case of a child which lived for nearly four years without any trace of a forebrain.

Neurologists explain that the case demonstrates the absolute dependence of human beings on the fore or sentient brain, and shows that a human cannot carry on the ordinary processes necessary for his preservation without it.

The fish or dog without the forebrain has greater capability than had the child in question.

BOWERY TURNS OUT IN FORCE

Eager to Pay Last Tribute to Memory of Sullivan

GREAT FUNERAL OF "BIG TIM"

Body of Congressman Had Lain Unrecognized In Morgue For Several Days After He Had Been Killed by Train—Four Relatives Will Get His $3,000,000 Estate

New York, Sept. 15.—The bread line that forms nightly in front of the Bowery mission was broken and many derelicts gave up their chance of getting coffee and rolls to visit the rooms of the Timothy D. Sullivan association and look upon the dead face of Congressman Timothy D. Sullivan, who had befriended thousands in a thousand different ways.

In the crowd were the "down and outs" who for years had come to the rooms on Christmas day for a dinner and every Feb. 6—the "Big Fellow's" birthday—for a pair of shoes, rubbing shoulders with prosperous-looking men, young and old, whom Tim Sullivan placed "on their feet."

There were aldermen, assemblymen and former and present office holders, who owed their positions to "Big Tim." Tears in the eyes of almost every man—the prosperous and the poverty-stricken—denoted the extent of the feeling they could not help but show for their dead friend.

"He was a square guy," was the expression most often heard—the expression that means the most on the Bowery.

The line that passed the coffin of the dead idol of the East Side continuel all night.

The Timothy D. Sullivan association attended the funeral this morning in a body as did other political organizations of which he was a member. Practically the whole Bowery also attended and, as it was expressed, "such a funeral as 'Big Tim' had probably will never be seen on the East Side again."

Although noted for his many charities in life Sullivan made no provision in his will to perpetuate them after his death. Of his estate, estimated at about $3,000,000, a fourth is left to Patrick H. Sullivan, a brother; a fourth to Lawrence Mulligan, a half-brother; a fourth to Mrs. Margaret Hickey, a half-sister, and a fourth to the four children, two boys and two girls, of his dead sister, Mrs. Michael Summers.

The will was drawn five years ago. There are no codicils. The claims against the estate, it is said, will amount to about $100,000.

The will is now in the custody of William B. Ellison, one of the committe of three appointed by the court to look after the property and person of the congressman when his mind became clouded several months ago.

So many friends and relatives of "Big Tim" identified the body at the morgue as that of the beloved Bowery politician, following his death beneath a train, that wonder is expressed that it was permitted to lie in the Fordham morgue thirteen days without efforts being made to run down the clues—that of a tailor's label in the coat, and the name of one of his nurses in the band of the hat he wore when he was killed. In addition, the shirt worn by the congressman bore his laundry mark.

Had not the keeper of the central morgue been diligent and listed the marks he found, and had not a patrolman friend of "Big Tim" recognized the face, which was not marred, the body might have passed to an unmarked grave in potter's field, buried at public expense and unmourned.

Sullivan disappeared from the home of his brother in Westchester county while suffering from suicidal mania, but it could not be determined whether he had cast himself beneath the wheels of the train or had been run down accidentally.

THREE YACHTS UPSET

Fifteen Men and a Woman Rescued by Boston Police Boat

Boston, Sept. 15.—Sixteen people, including one woman, were thrown into the water, and narrowly escaped drowning when three of five yachts racing between Winthrop and Deer island were capsized by a sudden gust of wind as they rounded the turn at the island.

The crews of the Possum, the Vixen and the Dancer were tossed into the water, and clung to the sides of their boats until the police boat Palm reached them and took them back to land. All were conscious when rescued, but for a time the life of Mrs. Frank Hickok, on board the Dancer, was despaired of.

PRESENTED LOVING CUP

Joseph Fay Phelan who won the 440 yard championship by defeating Fred Kingsbury on Labor Day was formally presented with a loving cup at the meetingf of the Young Men's Hebrew Association on Sunday evening under whose auspices the race was held.

The event took place at their picnic at North Weymouth and about 3500 people saw the championship settled at least for the time being. Both claimed it when their race in the Fourth of July was declared a dead heat after a disagreement of judges.

The cup stands 16 inches in height, is set on an ebony base and is suitably inscribed. It makes a valuable addition to the ever growing collection of cups in Fay Phelan's home.

RED MEN 8—COLONIALS 1.

The Red Men beat the Colonials in the rubber game on the Ward Three playground Saturday afternoon, 8 to 1. Loose playing by the Colonials cost them the victory.

Following the well established custom in vogue when C. Carlson pitches, the game was unnecessarily delayed, although his pitching was mysterious to the losers. His showing, admitting the delay in delivery was much better than A. Hayden's who specialized in pretty poses while his brother, who was catching urged him to assume fancier positions. At that he got nine strikeouts against five for Carlson, but was touched up for seven hits while Carlson allowed but three.

As usual it took about six balls to play the game, four of them being collared by the owner of a piece of cultivated land behind the backstop.

The game did not reach the standard established by the Colonials this season, while the playing of the Red Men was of good calibre at all stages. Carlson had the game in hand throughout and possessed his usual control. The score by innings:

Red Men	1 0 1 2 1 1 2 0 X—8

His Start

He Got It by Luck and Assurance

By F. A. MITCHEL

At a meeting of the Booneton Medical society, there not being a quorum, half a dozen doctors sat around chatting. The conversation fell upon the new science of medicine, which practically had its beginning in the investigations of M. Pasteur, and is making great headway in those experiments carried on by scientists who devote themselves to original research. Commenting on the great change scientific research has wrought in the medical profession, Dr. Elderkin, a retired physician, told the following story:

When I started to practice, though it was in the latter half of the nineteenth century, our profession had lagged far behind the progressive spirit of the times. Though we are still woefully ignorant, we know far more than we did then, and when we remember that we had at that time but recently advanced beyond the universal remedy of bloodletting, originally practiced by the barber who shaved our ancestors, we get some idea of the low condition of the science of medicine half a century ago.

Being naturally of a scientific mind, I realized this. Upon finishing my course at the medical college I was surprised that there was so little really known. Indeed, beyond the fact that vaccination will prevent smallpox, I don't remember a single certainty in medicine that I had learned in my college course. What a difference from the present, when we have antitoxins that work with absolute certainty; the X ray, by which to look into the human body, and have proved that diseases are transmitted by the fly and the mosquito!

I settled in this very town and hung out my shingle. Experience was then the doctor's best card. A bald head, a pair of mutton chop gray whiskers, a presence that bespoke wisdom—these were sure to bring success to any practitioner. This impressive person of half a century ago did not know one-tenth as much as the poorest student in a class graduating in a medical school today. But since there was nothing but experience on which to base confidence, the old practitioner had it all his own way, and the young man had no show at all.

I looked like a boy and was treated as a boy, for never did a patient darken my doors. I was socially well received by the young people of town and formed the acquaintance of a number of young girls, who thought me "a nice little fellow" and snickered when they called me doctor, their idea of a physician being the elderly party I have mentioned. One of these young ladies I admired very much and thought that if I could marry her possibly I might inspire some confidence and make a beginning. But she was the daughter of the principal man in the place, John Parkinson, and there was an awful gap between her and a towheaded, blue eyed doctor who didn't look old enough to treat a cat. As to being called in to treat Mr Parkinson or any member of her family, there was no more chance of that than being struck by lightning.

His family physician, Dr. Swinbourne, in his younger days had bled his patients for every disease, and so wedded was he to the treatment that he still carried a lancet in his medical case. The Parkinsons revered him as a man of great experience and he was supposed to have a wonderful advantage in knowing the constitution of every member of the family, including the last child born, who was but eight months old and sound as a nut. The chance of my supplanting this august person as physician in the household was as remote as being called upon to treat the president of the United States.

But no matter how firm one is settled on any soft spot let him beware of being undermined. His very greatness is liable to give his competitor a chance. Mr. Parkinson was fond of horses and owned some valuable stock. One of his animals was sired by a racer and had cost $3,000. One day this horse was taken sick. Would his owner insult the great Swinbourne by asking him to treat a horse? Never! A veterinary surgeon was called in. It is quite likely that he knew as much about what ailed the horse and how to cure him as the M. D.—he certainly knew as much as I did—but, despite his valuable efforts, the animal grew worse and the veterinary finally gave him up as a candidate for button and glue material.

Mr. Parkinson was one of those persistent men who never say die, and it occurred to him that I might not feel very much insulted at being called in to treat a horse. But he could afford to insult me, though he could not afford to insult his physician. For if any of the family were taken ill and the doctor refused to treat the patient there was likely to be crape on the door. At any rate, I was called in to have a look at the horse.

Mr. Parkinson had sent the veterinary away and there was no one present at my visit to the patient but myself and his owner. The horse was lying on the stable floor to all appearances dead. My first impulse was—from force of habit—to feel his pulse, but I remembered that I might get nearer his heart than his fetlock, so I put my hand behind his fore leg. There was still a faint beat and I knew he was not yet quite dead.

My ignorance of what was the matter with him and what to do for him was such that I stood doubtless looking as ignorant as I felt. Mr. Parkinson had his eyes on me and turned away with a look of disgust. It was this that nerved me at the turning point of my life.

"Mr. Parkinson," I said, "your horse is dying of digitalis."

I was obliged to choose a word so suddenly that I hit upon the name of a drug and feared my man would know that it was a drug and not a disease.

"Well?" he said somewhat more confidentially.

I was tempted to make an excuse to go to the druggist, to get a dose for the brute, but seeing the effect of my first bluff I resolved on another.

"I don't like to leave him," I said. "Would you mind getting me a messenger? I wish to send for a remedy."

"Not a bit. I'll call Tom. I don't know why he is not here. This is his place, especially at such a time."

He went to the house, a few hundred yards distant. He was absent some time. Not being able to find his man and while he was gone I upset a peck measure used for carrying oats, but now filled with salt. Some of the contents fell on the horse's tongue, which was protruding from his mouth. I noticed that the member quivered. I picked up a little more salt from the floor and dropped it on the tongue. Slowly it was withdrawn into the horse's mouth. Taking up a handful I opened the jaws and thrust it in.

I stood there, or rather knelt, feeding the horse salt till Mr. Parkinson returned. The other had disappeared, doubtless thinking he would be blamed in the matter of the loss of the horse and the master was abusing him to me when he caught sight of the patient licking his chops with his eyes open.

"Why, he seems to be better."

"Certainly."

"Do you think you can pull him through?"

"I think I can."

"What's that you're giving him?"

"A saline remedy I've found beneficial in such cases."

He didn't ask where I got it, or I would have told him I had it in my medicine case.

Well, it happened that my knocking over the salt had given my patient just what he needed. I don't know even now what his trouble was, but I do know that animals must have salt. At any rate a few handfuls of it effected a change in his condition, and he improved rapidly. I followed up the treatment by giving him water to drink, and it was not long before he stood up on his feet.

"By Jove!" exclaimed Mr. Parkinson. "That was the most marvelous cure I ever met with. I must tell Swinbourne about that. What did you call the disease?"

"Mr. Parkinson," I said, assuming an injured tone, "I have cured your horse, but I object to furnishing medical information to one of these old school doctors. I beg you not to mention the matter to Dr. Swinbourne."

"Why, it might lead him to take an interest in you."

"Not at all. You, as a layman, are not aware of the jealousies existing in our profession. Should you tell Dr. Swinbourne of this cure he would doubtless assert that your horse would have recovered just as well without my treatment as with it."

I shot a glance at him to see how the thrust struck him, expecting that he would deny that Swinbourne was any such man. I was agreeably disappointed.

"You're right, my boy," he said. "Never give away anything you've got unless you've something to gain by it."

Gentlemen, if you ask me what gave me a start in a practice which became for half a century all I could have desired I reply blind luck, followed up with a dose of concentrated gall. Besides, the lesson I learned was of great benefit. I made it a rule the less I knew about a case the more to pretend. And why not? Does a doctor gain anything by losing the confidence of a patient? By no means. On the contrary, the patient loses heart, and that is the worst thing that can happen.

But to finish my story. Mr. Parkinson let it be known that he would have lost his valuable horse had it not been for my skill, and I was installed as physician to the family, to be called upon for slight indispositions. Dr. Swinbourne being summoned to treat troubles of importance. This led to some outside practice, and in time I assumed sufficient boldness to pay attention to Miss Parkinson. By this time I had become known not as the man who had cured a horse, but one who had cured human beings. I finally married Miss Parkinson, but this was not till Swinbourne had retired and I was installed not only in his place, but succeeded to the bulk of his practice. In fact he retired because he found that I was forging ahead of him.

In claiming precedence in what we know now to what we knew then I am sorry to say that in the majority of cases it is still guesswork with us. We try a remedy and if the patient does not respond we try another and another, till either we have tried them all or the patient succumbs or recovers. But we have the satisfaction of knowing that both in America and Europe men are engaged in devoting their entire time to investigation, and every year we know more than we knew the year before.

My wife never knew how accidental was the success that gave me my start till we had been married many years.

PRIEST SLEW GIRL HE LOVED

Hudson River Mystery Is Uncovered by Sleuths

CONFESSION BY ACCUSED MAN

Cut Throat of Victim to Whom He Had "Married" Himself and Cut Up Body With Carpenter's Saw—Fear of Discovery of Double Life Probably Led to Crime

New York, Sept. 15.—Rev. Fr. Hans Schmidt, alias "A. Van Dyke," a curate of St. Joseph's Catholic church at 405 West One Hundred and Twenty-fifth street, was arrested charged with the murder of the woman whose dismembered body was found in the Hudson river last week.

The victim was identified as Miss Anna Aumuller, a young woman who had been employed as a servant in the parish house of St. Boniface church at forty-seventh street and Second avenue, where Fr. Schmidt had formerly been a curate.

Schmidt was arrested in the parlor of the parish house of St. Joseph's church, where, after a half-hour grilling by Inspector Faurot and Detectives Cassassa and O'Neill, he broke down and admitted the crime to them, the police officers say.

He requested permission to change his clothes, and when he left the room Inspector Faurot declares he attempted to cut his throat with a small safety razor blade. He was given a formal hearing before Coroner Fernberg, who remanded him to the Tombs, without bail, under the charge of homicide.

The detective work by which the murder was traced down to the point where the police felt justified in confronting Schmidt with the crime goes to make up one of the most careful pieces of such work that the department had ever been credited with.

A gayly colored pillow slip of unusual pattern led to Schmidt's apprehension. This pillow slip, stained with blood and soiled with the filth of the river, was wrapped around a portion of the torso. The detectives traced the slip to its manufacturer; the manufacturer traced it to the dealAnd the police, tracing Schmidt and the girl, knew all about both of them hours before they arrested him.

The scene of the murder, which, as the detectives told of it, was a butchery of the most revolting nature, was a third floor rear apartment in the house at 68 Broadhurst avenue. It was committed shortly before midnight of Sept. 2, and the dismembered body, portions of which were later found at different places along the shore of the Hudson river and bay, were carried, one at a time, by the murderer, from the Harlem flat to the Fort Lee ferry, from which they were dropped into the river, weighted with stones.

So far as the motive is concerned, the police admit that their talks with Schmidt produced nothing more definite than his oft-repeated assertion, when questioned as to his motive:

"I killed her because I loved her so much."

Inspector Faurot is convinced, however, that fear of discovery and exposure was the ruling motive, and that Schmidt thought to end his liason and his fear of the exposure of it which would stop his career as a priest at one swoop.

As the story of his confession was given out by the police, the priest's intrigue had progressed so far that no ordinary means would suffice to end it. He had known the girl while she was a servant in the parish house of St. Boniface's, where he was a curate. He had continued their relations when he went to St. Joseph's, and she remained at the rectory of the first-named church, and he finally placed her in an apartment, where for a short time he had continued the relations.

Meantime, they had obtained a marriage license at the city hall—this was dated Feb. 26, 1913—and, according to the police version of the confession, Schmidt said that he had performed the marriage ceremony himself.

Whether the priest misled the young woman into the belief that she was legally married to him or not, the police have not yet ascertained.

Partly on account of the very brief period of time which elapsed between the time when Schmidt rented the Bradhurst avenue flat for her and the time of the murder, and partly because of the scantily furnished condition of the rooms, the police are convinced that the priest did not purpose to live with her there, but established her there solely for the purpose of providing a place for the murder.

The murder itself, according to the police story of Schmidt's confession, was abnormal in its brutality. According to this story he bought a long-bladed butcher's knife and an ordinary carpenter's saw, kept them in his room at the rectory for several days, and then, on the night of Sept. 2, went to the flat. He found her asleep, smothered her and cut her throat so viciously that he almost severed her head from her body, and, while her body was still warm, dragged it to the bathroom, where he proceeded immediately with the butchering work of dismemberment.

TRAIN KILLS TWO BOYS

Instant Death For Little Fellows Cracking Nuts on Tracks

Worcester, Mass., Sept. 15.—Two children were killed and two more narrowly escaped with their lives when two trains coming from opposite directions bore down on them while they were cracking nuts on the tracks of the Boston and Albany railroad at Deep Cut.

The dead are Francis Penny, 12 years old, and Frank Senna, 11 years old.

These two, together with Tony Penny and Arthur Comiea, went nutting in the woods just outside the city. They had good luck and started to return along the railroad tracks to their homes. The quartet stopped to crack a few nuts on the iron rails.

While busily engaged, train No. 96 suddenly swept down on them unnoticed, and, striking Francis Penny and the Senna boy, hurled them high in the air, just as train No. 31 came along. The two boys were thrown right onto the front of the engine of No. 31, and from thence they were hurled into the ditch.

The other two boys jumped to one side and escaped serious injury.

ROMANCE IS SHATTERED

Rich Wife of Judge Lee of Providence Sues For Divorce

Providence, Sept. 15.—Mrs. Mary A. N. Lee, worth over $500,000 in her own name, has filed a suit for divorce from Judge Thomas Z. Lee, whose marriage Jan. 10 of this year, followed by a five months' tour round the world, was supposed to crown one of the most ideal society romances here.

Mrs. Lee's first husband was Fred A. Newell, a jewelry manufacturer. He left her nearly $1,000,000 when he died several years ago. The husband's cousins brought suit and succeeded in breaking the will and getting about $200,000 of the property. However, over $500,00 was left to the widow.

Lee was one of the lawyers who contested the suit for Mrs. Newell. Mrs. Lee is 52 and her husband is 45.

RICHARDS SMASHES HOOK SWIM RECORD

Clips Over Five Hours Off Time From the Battery

New York, Sept. 15.—Samuel Richards, Jr., of Boston accomplished a record-breaking feat in swimming from the Battery to Sandy Hook, N. J., in eight hours and twelve minutes, thereby cutting five hours and thirty-six minutes off the previous record, held by Captain Alfred Brown, a life saver.

Richards did his work in a single tide, whereas Brown required three tides in his time of thirteen hours, thirty-eight minutes.

He did not content himself merely with the swim to Sandy Hook and with cutting a great deal of time off the record. After a rest of five minutes, in which he treaded water, he turned and swam back for nearly a mile, finishing with a remarkable spurt. During the whole time he was in the water he had no aid whatsoever, except for occasional refreshments.

"WILD MAN" CAPTURED

California Sheriff Cannot Induce "Ani Bey" to Do Any Talking

San Rafael, Cal., Sept. 15.—Deputy Sheriff Jack Donahue has a "wild man" in custody. He was captured near Camp Taylor.

Not a word has the prisoner spoken; not a question has he answered with the exception of one, and that was when asked to write his name he scribbled the words "Ani Bey" on a bit of paper.

It is thought that these words may be a corruption of the name "Anthony Benko," found on a card when the man's cabin was searched.

PARISIAN'S QUEER HOBBY

Made Practice of Hypnotizing Girls and Stealing Their Hair

Paris, Sept. 15.—In the apartments of a young engineer named Erembourne the police found a sack containing seventy plaits of women's hair of various colors and a shaving brush made from some of the hair, after two girls, whom he had accused of theft, in turn accused him of having first hypnotized them and then cut off their hair.

Erembourne finally admitted studying hypnotism with a view of employing it as an aid to his hobby of hair collecting.

MAKES NEW MILK RECORD

Jersey Cow In Michigan Puts That of Guernsey Breed Far In the Rear

Houghton, Mich., Sept. 15.—A new world's milk record for Jersey cows is recorded by Eminent's Bess. Her yearly record shows a production of 18,783 pounds of milk, testing 1132 pounds, nine ounces of butter.

The new record exceeds the Guernsey breed record, held by Spotswood Daisy Pearl, by 179 pounds.

BIGGEST OF CAR FLOATS

New Haven's New Ones Are 343 Feet Long

There have recently been added to the floating equipment of the New York, New Haven and Hartford Railroad for use in New York harbor four steel car floats which are believed to be the largest now in use by any railroad. These floats were built at Quincy, and are big enough to hold twenty-two long freight cars.

Each of the new floats has seventeen water tight compartments making them practically non-sinkable. They are 343 feet 6 inches long, 40 feet 1 inch wide, and draw five feet when loaded. The new floats are for use on the car ferry between the New Haven's freight terminal at Oak Point in the borough of The Bronx, New York City, and the Pennsylvania, Jersey Central and Leheigh Valley terminals in New Jersey. On the average 2,100 cars a day are floated between these points.

The record for a single trip was made by two of the new floats on August 11 last. On these two floats, lashed to one of the New Haven's tugs, there were transported on this trip 50 loaded freight cars. The cars themselves weighed 780 tons and their contents 2,561 tons, or a combined weight for cars and contents of 3,341 tons. To pull the cars floated on this one trip of these floats required two heavy locomotives.

With the addition of the new floats the New Haven's floating equipment in New York harbor now comprises fifty car floats and eighteen tugs. Some of the latter are the most powerful tugs in harbor work, nine of them being of 1,000 horsepower and two of 1,200 horsepower.

LONG AUTO TRIP.

William Shirley of Quincy Point and Lester I. Paine of North street, Randolph, returned Saturday night from an interesting automobile trip, having travelled 1277 miles in two weeks. They left Randolph some two weeks ago for Bridgeport, Conn., covering 197 miles the first day. From Bridgeport they went to Brooklyn, N. Y., where they stopped three nights. Then to South Bethlehem, Pa., Catasqua, Philadelphia, Media, Atlantic City, New York City, Staten Island, making the return trip through Hartford, Springfield, Worcester and Quincy. Someone recommended Doan's Kidney Pills, and after I used four boxes I was relieved so much that I had no further need of them. 15 HUNDRED PRESENT

Country Fair Closes at Wollaston

With the gate recording the entrance of over 1500 spectators the Wollaston Country Fair closed Saturday night, a huge success in the annals of Wolaston enterprise.

All through Saturday afternoon and evening large crowds were present on the grounds attracted by the additional live stock exhibits.

With such unqualified success shaking hands with them and so great interest manifested by Wollaston farmers the originators of the undertaking feel compelled to make this an annual event.

This is but the entering wedge of a series of country fairs whose growth will finally make those at Brockton seem like minor attractions" said Frederick H. Bishop, chairman of exhibits, in presenting the exhibitors cup.

"The people of Wollaston were caught unawares this year" he continued, "but nevertheless they responded nobly with a splendid display. The great success was due to the energy and knowledge of gardening displayed.

"Wollastonians are expected to plant seed next spring with the idea of winning blue ribbons at the next fair. I look forward to the time when we shall have to build a large auditorium and occupy a large space of land in connection with the fair."

Joseph K. Barber, to whom the exhibitors cup was presented for having the largest display and winning exhibits, replied gracefully to the chairman and urged all to co-operate next year. He offered the cup to be presented at next years fair.

The final event of the evening was the auctioning of the exhibits by Arthur W. Rohn. Many prize winners were secured at phenomenally low prices and graced the tables of Wollaston families at the Sunday repast.

The midway annex, known as Joyland Park which was going full blast all Saturday afternoon reached its climax in the evening when the electrical illumination brought many hundreds to the scene.

An addition here was the booth of lightening sketch artists who drew striking likenesses of the investor in crayon or color in a remarkably short space for the small sum of a quarter.

The artists were Mrs. Robert E. Park, a well known Wollaston woman and George Patterson Love of Boston a collaborator of E. B. Bird of Wollaston. The booth was in charge of Mrs. William E. Rowe.

One of the added attractions was the Quincy National Band who rendered instrumental music during the entire evening.

One article of interest on exhibition was a large quilt embroidered with the signatures of nearly all the parishioners of the Wollaston Unitarian church.

This was gotten together by the younger matrons of the parish and presented to Mrs. Carl G. Horst, the pastor's wife.

The livestock exhibit attracted great interest and the following prizes were awarded by the judge, Dr. Francis Abele, Jr.

Cats—First prize to Mrs. H. H. Kitson's "Paymaster Ring."

Poultry Exhibits—first Vinal Poultry Farm; second, Mrs. Herbert Barker; third, Willard E. Keyes.

WEYMOUTH FAIR.

The Weymouth Fair closed Saturday with a record breaking crowd that found amusement in an interesting program of sports. The winning horses were Henry Titter's, Col. Patch and Fred Fay's, Hallie Ross. The Stetson Shoe beat Braintree, 1 to 0 in a fast ball game. Earl Gove won the 10 mile pursuit motorcycle race and 15 mile handicap. Archie Jennette won his wrestling bout from John Bess. Ruth Low made no aeroplane flight because of the heavy wind.

SUNDAY IN THE CHURCHES

but religion recognizes man's relation to God. While a moral man may or may not be a religious man, a religious man must be a moral man. All true religion must rest on the foundation of a moral life. But no moral life is ever complete without religion. Morality alone cannot fill our life nor cannot ever fully round our character. Religion alone can do that. We need to add to morality faith in God, Prayer, the Immortal Hope, Aspiration. These religious ideas are the soul's dearest treasures. Fifteen hundred years ago St. Augustine began his Confessions with these words, "Thou hast made us for Thyself and our hearts are restless till they rest in Thee." These words are as true today as when they were written. Our hearts forever will be restless till they come to rest in God. We must live the good life and crown it with the light, the joy, the peace, the hope, the inspiration of religion. One of the most important means to this end is the meeting together for worship, breathing together the atmosphere of reverence, meditating together on the great thoughts that nourish in us the spirit of faith and immortality.

The Wollaston Country Fair was of great educational value. It seems as if nearly every one of the hundreds that visited the fine exhibit of flowers, fruit, vegetables, and grain, remarked "I did not know that the back yards of Wollaston could grow such fine produce. The live stock which naturally attracted a great deal of attention consisted of calves, pigs, poultry, pigeons, rabbits, dogs, guinea pigs, parrots and cats. This exhibit was the first of the kind in the annals of Wollaston and young men of Wollaston Unitarian church deserve much credit for establishing the Wollaston Country Fair to be held in September annually.

The first meeting of the Wollaston Unitarian club will be held Tuesday evening, Oct. 14, at 6.03 o'clock. This is the oldest church club in town, having been organized Oct. 23, 1900, and has had always a full membership and a waiting list.

WOLLASTON BAPTIST.

The first service of the fall was encouragingly large at the Wollaston Baptist church. The pastor chose for his subject "Scripture Teaching Concerning Example." The theme was devoloped along three lines: (1) Christ is the only perfect example, 1 Pet: 2: 21; (2) Other people are examples to teach us. James 5: 10; (3) We, whether or not so desire, are ourselves examples, 1 Tim. 4:12, 1 Cor. 11: 1; It was sermon that could not fail to cause earnest heart searching.

Sunday school was held at 12.15 in the chapel with 256 present. The Junior Endeavor meeting at 3.30 in the chapel was in charge of Mrs. Joseph Walther. The Y. P. S. C. E. preparatory prayer service was held at 5.45 and the regular meeting at 6.00. Subject, "Favorite verses in the Gospels" Leader, Ernest Roberts. At the popular praise service at 7.00, in the auditorium there was a short sermon by the pastor. Subject: "A Six Fold Task for Every Christian."

Tuesday afternoon at 3.00, the Woman's Christian Temperance Union will meet with Mrs. S. C. Dunne, 162 Arlington street, subject: "Evangelistic Work," leader, Miss A. N. Merrill. Wednesday afternoon at 3.00, the Woman's Foreign Mission Society will meet with Mrs. George B. Huntington, 394 Highland avenue, subject: "Africa." leader, Mrs. Thomas Armstrong and in the evening will be held at 7.45 in chapel the annual meeting of the Rand class.

Thursday evening at 7.45 the regular meeting for praise, prayer and testimony will be held in the chapel, subject: "How Can We make the Coming Fall and Winter the Very Best in Our Experience as Individuals and as a Church" also at 7.45, public services in connection with the sailing of the new and returning missionaries of the American Baptist Foreign Mission Society will be held in the First Baptist church, Malden. A large representation from the churches of greater Boston is greatly desired.

HALL PLACE M. E.

The first service of the Fall was held at the Hall Place M. E. church Sunday morning at 10.30. The choir sang "He shall feed his flock," Miss Helen Martin, soloist. The sacrament of the Lord's supper was observed. Three persons were received by letters. The pastor, Rev. T. C. Martin, did not preach a sermon, but in accordance with the church discipline read a part of the church rules and commented on the same.

Sunday school met at the close of the morning service, with an increase in the attendance.

The Epworth League observed Rally Day at their 6.15 service

The president J. M. Francis lead the service on subject, "Be swfit, my soul to answer Him; be jubliant, my feet." A large number were present, the service being helpful and interesting.

At the evening service the postor took for his text Ex. 14—15 "Speak unto the children of Israel, that they go forward."

Prayer meeting will be held Friday evening at 7.30.

N. ESTHER HOBBS.

The funeral of N. Esther Hobbs who died at the Quincy City Hospital on Wednesday was held this morning from the home of her mother Mrs. Maria Feeley of Main street and was largely attended. She was the wife of Harry Hobbs of the Metropolitan Police force at Nantasket.

A high mass of requiem was celebrated at St. John's church by Rev. Fr. John J. Coan. The Gregorian chant was rendered by the regular choir under the director of John Mahon, organist.

Among those present were Sergt. Frank Breivogel of the Charles River basin division of the Metropolitan police, members of the force and of the John Adams Aerie of Eagles.

The floral tribues were numerous and were given by the many friends of the deceased. The bearers were Charles Mullane, William Donovan, Joseph Ryan, William A. Carey, Joseph Ford and Timothy Moriarty. Burial was in St. Mary's cemetery.

SATURDAY NIGHT FIRE.

The alarm from Box 17 at 10.40 Saturday night was a false alarm, yet it gave the central station and other apparatus a long run. The box is located directly in front of a dance hall at Houghs Neck, where the usual Saturday night dance was in progress No one in the dance knew anything about the alarm until the fire department dashed up. Many thought there was a fire in the dance hall and there was a rush to get out many not even stopping for their wraps. A week ago the box was struck by an automobile and the door smashed, since which time a temporary door has been in use.

DISTRICT COURT.

William J. Schroeder, Charles H. Molloy, Fred Fein and William Chisholm were fined $20 for trespass at Squantum.

Edward Sullivan of Braintree charged with drunkenness was placed on probation until December 19.

Joseph Fish of Braintree was fined $25 for disturbing the peace at Braintree.

Chester J. Sellers and Carrie F. Burgess sentenced to six months in the House of Correction on a serious charge. Sentenced suspended until March 25, 1914 upon payment of $25 costs.

Nellie G. Maloof found not guilty on a serious charge and Simon J. Lias dismissed for a similar charge.

WHAT IS BRANDY?

Government Experts Declare Fruit Juice Is the Only Real Thing

Washington, Sept. 13.—Although the question "What is whiskey?" worried the experts through three administrations, the definition of "What is brandy?" was mere play for the federal pure food board.

The board declares brandy to be "the alcoholic distillate solely from the fermented juice of fruit, distilled under such conditions that the characteristic bouquet, or volatile flavoring and aromatic principles, be retained in the distillate.

"So-called brandy prepared from grain, potato or other form of industrial alcohol, or from alcohol obtained from the by-products of wine manufacture, mixed with more or less true brandy or other flavoring material, is adulterated and misbranded unless labelled to indicate its true composition."

PAID HIM $16,000 AFTER ELECTION

Sulzer Personally Turned Over Money to His Broker

New York, Sept. 13.—Governor Sulzer's transactions in Wall street from June 27, 1910, till they ceased—as least so far as one firm of brokers was concerned—on July 14 last, were described under oath by Melville D. Fuller, who said he was Sulzer's broker, in a hearing held by the nine impeachment managers appointed by the assembly.

Fuller was an unwilling witness before the Frawley investigation committee recently and refused to testify concerning certain matters, but he answered all questions put to him by the impeachment managers. He testified that Sulzer had paid him $16,000 in person within a month and a day after the election last fall, and that he (Fuller) had had no dealings with Mrs. Sulzer.

PLAYERS NAMES TAKEN

Police Pay Visit to Tennis Courts

Result on Several Complaints

As a result of a statement made by a local pastor at a Sunday evening service recently it is probable that the police will take steps to stop Sunday tennis playing at the courts of the Quincy Tennis club. Some days ago it is said that complaints were made about Sunday tennis playing by people who visited the courthouse building and wanted to know why it was that Italians should be arrested and fined for playing dominoes on Sunday and others were allowed to play tennis. They could see no difference and if it was against the law to play dominoes it must be against the law to play tennis. A local pastor picked up the matter and stated from the pulpit that if it was a crime to play dominoes it was a crime to play tennis.

Chief Burrell and Inspector Goodhue visited the courts of the tennis club Sunday and it is reported they found a number of young men playing No arrests were made although the names of the players were taken by the police. Whether summons will be issued against the parties or not the police decline to say, but it is probable that there will be no more tennis games on Sunday's.

This movement may also lead to the police stopping playing on the Wollaston golf links on the Lord's day. There are eighteen holes on the Wollaston club links half of which are on the Milton side. The golf players however have never been allowed to play on the Milton side but have always played as much as they liked on the Quincy side. Chief Pierce of Milton has officers stationed near the links every Sunday and he has notified the club that any players who cross the line into Milton will be promptly summoned into court.

Many have wondered why it was that golf playing was allowed Sunday when the police have been very active in preventing games of a similar nature in other parts of the city. If it is wrong and against the law to play base ball, dominoes or cards on the Lord's Day it is certainly wrong and illegal to play tennis and golf and if players of one game are summoned into court and fined players of other kinds of games should receive the same treatment. This is the argument put up to the court officials.

There is more Catarrh in this section of the country than all other diseases put together, and until the last few years was supposed to be incurable. For a great many years doctors pronounced it a local disease and prescribed local remedies, and by constantly failing to cure local treatment, pronounced it incurable. Science has proven catarrh to be a constitutional disease and therefore requires constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, Ohio, is the only constitutional cure on the market. It is taken internally in doses from 10 drops to a teaspoonful. It acts directly on the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. They offer one hundred dollars for any case it fails to cure. Send for circulars and testimonials.

City Council Asked For Additional Appropriation to Meet Cost of Same

Little Business Transacted at Monday Night's Meeting

A regular meeting of the City Council was held Monday evening. It was a short meeting however and but for a recess to await the hour of a public hearing an adjournment would have been reached at 8.15. As it was the meeting adjourned at 8.22.

The only excitement during the evening was made by Timothy Moriarty who had evidently been looking on something stronger than water. He frequently interrupted the meeting by calling upon the councilmen to speak louder. President Whiton brought his gavel down hard and told Tim that he must keep quiet or leave the hall.

This did not quiet his however for he kept on. City Messenger Tirrell was then ordered to put him out of the hall. The City Messenger began to talk to Moriarty but it did no good. Chief of Police Burrell then came in and Moriarty was taken out and sent to the police station where he was locked up for drunkenness.

The absent members were Councilmen, Ericson, Bryant, Johnson, Richards and Farquharson.

The Finance Committee was in session when the meeting was called to order and a recess was taken until the call of the President for lack of quorum.

The meeting was called to order again at 7.55.

A communication was received from the Mayor stating that the bill for printing the Assessors valuation lists had been received. The amount of the bill was $2,088 or $588 in excess of the amount appropriated for the printing of the book. He asked that the Council make an additional appropriation to meet the bill. Referred to Finance Committee.

A petition was received from the Electric Light Co. for a location for poles on Abagail avenue. Laid on the table until later when Councilman Beeman offered an order for a public hearing Oct. 6 which was adopted.

Petitions were received from the Telephone Co. for a attachments on several streets. Granted.

The Street Railway Co. petitioned for a relocation of its pole at the junction of Washington and Coddington streets. Granted.

Several petitions for minor licenses were received and referred to the License Committee.

A public hearing was held at 8 o'clock on petition of the Fore River Shipbuilding Corporation for permission to store gasoline. No one appeared for or against. The hearing closed and the order was laid on the table until later when Councilman Gilliatt offered an orded granting the license which was adopted.

Councilman Devaney made some objection as no one had appeared for the company. Several however spoke in favor, and on the question of adoption Councilman Devaney voted no.

A public hearing was held at 8.10 on petition of Louis K. Badger for a license to keep gasoline. A letter was received from the petitioner asking to withdraw the petition as he desired to secure a new location.

The petitioner was then given leave to withdraw.

SUMMER GARDEN PRIZE WINNERS

Splendid Showing Made by the Quincy Children

Below is a list of the children who have been awarded prizes for the care of their gardens during the summer, by the Civic Committee of the Quincy Women's Club. The amounts awarded indicate the grades of gardening. These prizes were given in the hope of stimulating an interest in home garden work. This committee believes that there is a great opportunity to teach industry and thrift to children by showing them how to make the soil about their homes yield vegetables for the family table and also to cutivate a love for the beautiful in raising flowers. This work keeps the children happily and healthily employed; it benefits them, their families and the city.

This year 900 children in this city started gardens. They brought their produce to the Women's clubhouse the first of September and there were awarded ribbon prizes for excellence in quantity and quality of their vegetables and flowers. The exhibit was then taken into Boston and entered in the exhibit of vegetables and flowers from all over the state. The Quincy gardens made a splendid showing; they were awarded twenty prizes. These prizes will be distributed through the Horticultural society.

The money prizes are simply for garden work in each district. Besides the district prize there is a prize for best gardens in the city with each district in competition. The final prizes were awarded by three women on the committee, Mrs. H. H. Kitson, Mrs. John D. Mackay, and Mrs. C. R. Safford after careful inspection of the best gardens in the city.

TEST RESULTS KEPT SECRET

Delay in Speed Tests of Dreadnaught Rivadavia

A dispatch in the morning papers from Rockland, Maine, says that the speed trials of the Rivadavia were uncompleted Monday night. These tests, says the dispatch, were unexpectedly stopped, on account of darkness, said President Bowles, who is representing the Fore River Corporation during the trials.

The war craft went out on the Government's measured mile course late Monday forenoon to complete her trials at high speed, according to an announcement. But she went on the course slowly, and still moving slowly, was piloted over it a few times without any attempt to put her through her best paces. Then she was brought back to the outer harbor, given a few anchor tests and moored.

There was no explanation of the failure of the dreadnaught of resume her tests Monday, but it was stated that the tests unfinished would be completed today, Tuesday. If these extra runs are successful, it was announced that the supedreadnaught will be taken out to sea late Tuesday for her endurance runs.

The Rivadavia has not yet attained her contract speed, it is understood. Her best performance Monday, it was unofficially learned today, was 22.48. knots, reached on one run over the mile course. The Rivadavia must maintain an average of 22.50 knots for eight hours.

BENTON RALLY AT SO. QUINCY

Under Auspices of Young Men's Hebrew Association

An interested party of voters attended the Col. Benton rally in Hibernian hall, Monday evening under the auspices of the Young Men's Hebrew Club. The speakers attacked the Gardner forces and frequently referred to the silk stocking aristocracy and the legislative influence being exerted in his direction.

Solomon Lewenberg of Boston presided and neglected to introduce Charles H. Johnson who sat on the platform throughout the rally. After the meeting Mr. Johnson objected to the treatment received and strongly stated his views of the affront given him. Mr. Lewenberg said that it was negligence on his part, but his explanation did not appease many voters who attended to hear Mr. Johnson talk on the local side of the governor's fight.

The other speakers were Henry James, city solicitor of Chelsea, J. William DeCumbe, secretary to Col. Benton, Henry G. Eisenstadt, a member of the ward 17 committee, Ex-Senator George L. Barnes, Walter E. Piper, William R. Thomas and Louis F. R. Langelier.

Mr. Lewenberg managed to deliver a speech as chairman in which he flayed James M. Curley and others, saying that all a man needed in some places was a jail sentence and he could be elected while confined. He did not mention Mr. Curley's record on the immigration bill in which he was interested.

Henry James said that one of the elements of the high cost of living is taxation and that the limitation for municipal expenses was introduced after the extravagances of Boston. The state tax today is nearly one half of the tax rate. Gardner, a minority congressman, should not desert his post in Washington. The solution of the reduction of the state tax, the management of departments, the getting the various institutions in right relation to each other, these can be accomplished by a man not of legislative experience but by the business man.

Benton has had the necessary experience in business lines and as a member of the Metropolitan Park Commission has had a state experience. There is a contest in the Republican party. Under the direct primary law a voter should be able to choose the nominees. Benton came into the fight early and Gardner came in at the 11th hour, backed by Cushing and Greenwood, the legislative portion of the government. They are not content with holding a primary free from influence of strong men at the State House. We ask you to vote without dictation or influence from official sources and there will be no question that Col. Benton will be nominated and elected.

Mr. DeCumbe said Col. Benton has always been a Republican. After reviewing his life's accomplishments he said Gardner was introduced as a great fighter. For the past 15 years a small coterie of men ran things in this state. Last year at the request of friends, in order to bring the party back and in the face of defeat, Benton went into the fight and did not lay down after the primaries but to advance Republicanism supported Walker. When things looked blackest Col. Benton came forward. He had the courage of a good fighter and it depicts the true man as I know him. Will we accept the dictates of the legislative forces that meet in Ward 11? He had to earn his way and hisposition is due to his energy and ambition. He is different from the son-in-law of Henry Cabot Lodge. His system of trolley management alone whereby all farmers can get their produce to market is one of his solution of the state's troubles. His opponent is being coached by the legislative machine of the commonwealth and I ask you to vote for the man that will make one of the best executives the state ever had, Col. Benton.

Henry G. Eisenstadt said that if Gardner was nominated he would not be elected. His immigration record will defeat him. There are 75,000 Republicans who are immigrants or their sons 60,000 will vote either the Democratic or Progressive ticket of if Gardner is the candidate. He fought for restricted immigration. I believe in some restrictions but not in his literacy test. It has its short comings. To illustrate, Giovannitti and Ettor, the trouble makers in the Lawrence strike or any anarchist could easily pass that test. I am with any one who can devise the proper restriction but a literacy test is not a certificate of moral character. How can a Russian resident enter this country by a certificate? We have had three lean years at the State House and now we want three fat ones, and if Gardner is nominated, I will immediately become inactive because I cannot forego his prejudices.

George L. Barnes said that there was no place in the Senatorial district that he received more courteous treatment during his campaign than in Quincy. He said he hoped to see a Republican Senator and Representative elected. The candidates are well qualified and they will serve you with respect. I will say nothing regarding the unfortunate experience of last year.

When Col. Benton entered the fight it was dark and gloomy. Most Republicans thought of retreating but he was not that stamp of a man. While some good friends were praying for guidance it was Col. Benton that prepared for the fight with our common enemy, the Democrats.

The candidates are good friends of mine but the plain ordinary commonsense view is that Gardner is in congress and he had a hard time getting there. He is familiar with national issues and is doing well. On the other side Col. Benton is remarkable in business successes. It is not national issues that confront the voters as claimed by Gardner but the business management of the state finances Douglas and Foss were elected and Bird received a large vote because the voters were attracted to them through their business successes. With Col. Benton as their candidate the Republicans cannot fail to win.

Messrs. Piper, Thomas and Langelier closed the speaking by touching in a general way upon the Republican party of today.

As potatoes are to be very high this winter, it is probable that boarding house hash will contain traces of meat.

Apparently the only way to prevent these rear-end collision fatalities is for the passengers to get out and sit on the fence when the train stops.

New York City never considers it necessary to provide enough school room for its children. It is believed the kidlets will learn a lot from walking on Broadway.

This being a free country, any citizen who cares to do so may walk across the continent, ride a motorcycle or travel around the world in thirty-six days. But he must not expect busy citizens to stop and applaud.

EFFICIENT FIRE FIGHTING.

To the average man living in town where there is a moderately good fire department, the fire peril is the least of his troubles. Why should he bother if the servant puts live coals into a wooden barrel? The firemen can get there before the blaze has ascended from the basement, and at the last resort there is the insurance company. At least so he feels.

A notable feature of the international gathering of fire fighters just held in New York has been the enthusiastic testimony rendered by foreign firemen, to the excellence of American fire departments.

Over in some places in Germany, they say, after the firemen get to a blaze they stop and call the roll, before they are allowed to turn a hose on the burning building.

The American fire department simply has had to cut out all useless motions, because Americans are so careless, and because most towns are built of flimsy materials. The American fills up his rooms with flimsy furniture, perfectly designed to serve as kindling wood. He lights his fire with kerosene, and matches are littered about the house as if they were toothpicks.

In Europe firepots are microscopic the furniture is the most solid kind of slow burning hard wood, and the shell of most buildings is stone or brick.

The professional fireman pays dear for the light way in which his fellow citizens take fire. His very efficiency leads others to take foolish and costly risks. He follows a trade that is more perilous than the soldier's.

The universality of insurance spreads abroad the notion that fire does not cost the community much of anything. But the tribute paid in insurance, and in taxes for the latest fire fighting tools, is a big item in the cost of living.

GOOD ENDORSEMENT.

Quincy, Sept. 15, 1913.

Editor Ledger:

Having noticed in a recent edition of the Ledger an article relating to the candidacy of J. Raphael McCoole of Dedham for the position of Register of Probate for Norfolk County, I beg the privilege of your valuable space for just a word of comment.

First, let me say that I was very sorry to learn of the retirement of the present Register, John D. Cobb, whose many years of most valuable and efficient service have made the Norfolk Registry of Probate one of the best conducted in the State.

After having had more than ten years of continuous and intimate official relationship both with Mr. Cobb and with Mr. McCoole, who is the present Assistant Register; the last five years of which have included dealings with every other probate court in the Commonwealth, I have no hesitation in saying that in my opinion no more worthy successor to the present Register could possibly be found.

Uniformly courteous and accommodating, his long term of service in preparation give Mr. McCoole an advantage seldom equaled by the record of any aspirant to public office; and if ever there was a case of well-deserved advancement, this is one.

I take pleasure in recommending J. Raphael McCoole to the favorable consideration of the voters of Quincy, sincerely hoping that the County of Norfolk will not make the lamentable error of upsetting the established policy of so important an office by the election of anyone unfamiliar with the present efficient system of conducting the business.

I have always felt that the tenure of office of the Register of Probate is quite as important as that of the Judge; and one of the chief reasons why the Norfolk Registry has been so ably and well conducted in the past is that the voters have evidently recognized this fact and have given Mr. Cobb so long and honorable a term of office.

Having solely in mind the welfare of the service, I sincerely hope that Mr. McCoole may be given as long and honorable a term as Mr. Cobb has served.

Irving L. Shaw,
101 North Central avenue,
Wollaston.

Editor Quincy Ledger:

May I express through your columns my hearty approval of the endorsement of Mr. McCoole, of Dedham, who is candidate for the office of Register of Probate. It has fallen to my lot to transact much probate business, especially in Norfolk County. My experience with Mr. McCoole compels me to add my endorsement to what has already been said in the Ledger, without a suggestion from anyone. We shall miss the present genial Register, who retires voluntarily this year, but can anticipate with pleasure that Mr. McCoole will succeed to the office. His election will be a meritorious promotion, and for one I trust that both in the primary and the poles he will receive such an overwhelming vote as will assure him that his unfailing courtesy is appreciated.

Our Police System Is Inferior to That of Foreign Cities; Retribution Slower Here

By RAYMOND B. FOSDICK, Former Commissioner of Accounts of New York City

© by American Press Association.

AS the result of my trip abroad for the bureau of social hygiene I believe I have obtained the solution of the police problem.

From what I have observed in London, Paris, Vienna, Berlin and elsewhere I can safely say there is much of value for our police to learn.

In continental cities a more military police is the order, while in London the police is less of a military organization than the force in New York.

That there is SOMETHING VITALLY THE MATTER WITH OUR SYSTEM is a certainty, held so both here and by the police abroad.

THE PRESTIGE OF THE POLICE IS GREATER THERE. CRIMINALS FEAR THE POLICE MORE, PROBABLY BECAUSE RETRIBUTION IS SWIFTER.

The courts and the law's delays enter into this problem of rendering our police less swift. OFFHAND, ONE MIGHT SAY THERE WAS LESS GRAFT ABROAD, but the exact amount in each city would be impossible to locate. It was not understood here until great investigations began.

But do not suppose the police in Europe are perfect. There are evils there mixed with the good.

NO IMMEDIATE CLASH COMING

New Haven's Rules Not In Direction of "Open Shop"

NEW CONFERENCE ASKED FOR

Engineers and Firemen Surprised at Sudden Action of Road—New Management Changes Operating Department Into Eastern and Western "Grand Divisions"

New Haven, Sept. 16.—It is generally conceded here that the New Haven railroad officials have precipitated no immediate crisis by promulgating a new set of rules for the selection and governing of engineers and firemen.

The new rules bear upon promotion of firemen to be engineers and of engineers to selected runs and alter the test and disciplinary codes. Efficiency precedes seniority but, other conditions being equal, seniority still prevails in promotions.

No set of rules has been before announced, since the formation of unions by the employes of the railroad, without their approval. The engineers will ask the railroad to modify the rules, but there will be no immediate break between the railroad and the employes affected. Railroad officials deny that the new action is in the direction of the "open shop," asserting it is simply in the interests of the safety of the public.

When shown the rules made by the road and asked if they would mean any reduction of pay to the men, Assistant Grand Chief Griffing of the National Brotherhood answered in the negative. "There is nothing in these rules that would reduce the pay of the men except in individual cases where men were not advanced," he said.

The engineers' adjustment committee of about twenty-five members from all parts of the system were in the city and took immediate steps to secure another conference with General Manager Bardo. Griffing said there would certainly be no immediate break between the men and the company and expected Bardo to grant a conference.

In the meantime the men will work as usual, while their committee seeks to have the rules revoked. The men were evidently surprised by the sudden action of the road in ordering the new rules into effect.

For operating purposes the New York, New Haven and Hartford railroad has been divided into grand divisions, with New London, Conn., as the dividing line. This is the first big change under the new management.

All of the lines west of New London and Willimantic will be known as the "western grand division." All the lines east of New London and Willimantic will be known as the "eastern grand division."

John A. Droege is appointed general superintendent in charge of operation of the western grand division, with office at New Haven. Clayton N. Woodward is appointed general superintendent in charge of operation of the eastern grand division, with office at Boston.

The office of master of transportation is abolished, and James O. Halliday, who h... that office, is appointed assistant to the general manager, with office at New Haven. His duties have not been asigned.

That portion of the Shore Line division main line, between New Haven, Harlem river and Woodlawn, including the Danbury and New Canaan branches, wil be known as the New York division. Charles H. Motsett is branches, will be known as the New York division, with office at Harlem River, N. Y. William H. Foster is appointed superintendent of the Shore Line division, with Office at New Haven. Harry C. Oviatt is appointed superintendent of the Old Colony division, with office at Taunton.

Widow of Insurance Man Says She Suspected No Wrongdoing

Boston, Sept. 16.—Mrs. Sarah E. Williams, the grief stricken and penniless wife of George E. Williams, whose sensational crooked business career and dual life with other women has amazed New England, declared that the revelations concerning her husband which have come to light came like an awful explosion into her life, leaving her half crazed, helpless and blind as to which way to turn.

Rather than growing less, developments in the case seemed to increase yesterday and startling revelations added several more sensational chapters to the ever-growing story of crooked manipulation which has meant ruin to scores of men and women.

Heart-rending losses in homes that can ill afford them are daily coming to light and in many instances supposed policyholders are frantically striving to find records of their insurance investments which do not exist.

Ohio Gardener Said to Have Produced a Crampless Cucumber

St. Clairsville, O., Sept. 16.—W. N. Miller, a gardener, who made Mr. Burbank look to his laurels by originating an odorless onion, is about to offer a crampless cucumber, his friends say.

It is understood Miller has tamed the great producer of interior distress by injecting for several successive years a secret chemical substance into growing cucumber plants selected for seed.

Persons from whose diet the ordinary cucumber is barred are said to devour the Miller variety with impuny.

PROPHECY OF DEATH IS SOON FULFILLED

Woman Fails to Return Alive From Motorcycle Trip

Pottsville, Pa., Sept. 16.—An hour after Miss Bessie Schriner jokingly predicted she would not come back alive from a trip on a motorcycle she had received injuries at Mt. Carbon that caused her death three hours after admission to the Pottsville hospital. She was 23 years of age.

Miss Schriner took her seat on the motorcycle with Frank Greenawait, about the same age. She was thrown off in a collision with a bicycle and her skull fractured.

"Is your life insured, Bessie?" asked a neighbor as the girl took her seat on the front of the machine.

"Oh, yes; I don't expect to come back alive," was the reply.

of the anniversary of Mexican inde- With Burning Factory

Danvers, Mass., Sept. 16.—Fred J. Derry, a box manufacturer and a prominent citizen of Danvers, was arrested on a secret indictment charging him with setting fire to his box factory on Hobart street on Nov. 23, 1911.

The indictment of Derry followed an investigation by the Massachusetts district police lasting nearly two years, and which, according to the authorities, showed that kerosene had been splashed about the plant and the sprinkler system had been tampered with and rendered useless. The insurance companies refused to adjust the loss, and suits entered by Derry against the companies are now pending.

Derry is 52 years old, and lives with his wife and children in a fine mansion on Pine street.

HAD BETTER ASK HIM.

Gresham P. Lyons of San Francisco discussed in New York the other day, says the New York Sun, the movement for the protection of witnesses in law courts that he has recently inaugurated.

"We know," said Mr. Lyons, "how witnesses are browbeaten and insulted by lawyers the country over. Well, I want to see them protected from such damnable treatment. If my movement succeeds a cross-examining lawyer will no more think of insulting a respectable witness than of insulting the judge."

Mr. Lyons smiled.

"But I saw one of this contemptible and insolent lawyers worsted the other day—and by a boy, too.

"The lawyer, after trying in vain to shake the boy's evidence by fair means, resorted to foul ones—proceeded to enrage and shame the lad, hoping to confuse him into contradictory statements.

" 'Now, son,' he said, 'I want to ask you about your father.'

" 'Yes sir,' said the boy.

" 'Haven't certain damaging reports been circulated about your father lately?'

" 'I dunno what reports you mean.'

" 'Isn't there a report current to the effect that your father beats his wife and robs hen roosts?'

" 'So you say' the boy muttered, sullenly.

" 'So I say,' shouted the lawyer, 'and now I ask you if that report isn't true? Come speak up? Don't stand there like a ninny! Is it not true that your father beats his wife and steals chickens?'

" 'I dunno" said the boy. 'You'd better ask him. He's settin' over there on the jury.' "

THE WOMAN'S HOME COMPANION.

One of the most valuable contributions to the October Woman's Home Companion is an article by Mary Heaton Vorse entiled "The New Freedom For Little Children." It is the first of a series reporting the Montessori principle of education as it may be used by the American mother at home.

Other unusual contributions to the October Companion are: "What A Little Knowledge of Music Means," by Ignace Jan Paderewski, the celebrted pianist; "The Confession of a 'Heart-Throb Specialist,' " by Anna Steese Richardson; "A Good Time" os dedicated by Charles E. Jefferson, pastor of the Broadway Tabernacle in New York City; "Housekeeging With Plants" in which a famous horticulturist tells what plants may be grown indoors and how to take care of them; and "What My Children Have Done For Me" by a successful business woman.

The campaign for "Better Babies" is carried on by a report of "Better Babies" contests of the new sort held in five states, at which children were judged not for their beauty, but for their health and physical condition. Grace Margaret Gould, the fashion editor, has filled her department, which covers nearly twenty pages, with the latest information, beautifully illustrated, and with practical suggestions which women can use in the business of making their clothes economically and yet fashionably.

LANDMARK DEMOLISHED

Workmen commenced this morning demolishing the old barn on the William H. Doble estate on South street which was for years one of the best known landmarks in the Bigelow Park district. The barn was built for the late George Tyler Bigelow, formerly Chief Justice of the Massachusetts Supreme Court who owned the surrounding property and lived in the home now occupied by Mr. Doble.

It was built as a cow barn about 66 years ago and at that time was the largest in the city and was considered a centre by many.

Of special interest to the people of Quincy Point is the large weather vane, capped with the monster figure of a cow, which set on the peak. For many years its gilded hide was the target for revolvers and rifles and today it is punctured with bullet holes. The barn sets on the crest of the hill and close by the sidewalk. Of late years Mr. Doble has used it as a hennery.

CORN IN NEW ENGLAND.

About the hardest thing for a bred New Englander is to bring himself to a realizing sense that he can possibly compete with the gigantic west in anything whatever. He looks upon the west through the very same eyes the Irish immigrants were said to look, in the old days, upon America. He thinks it a region of agricultural prodigies. When he is told that a watermelon broke from its vine on a western hillside, rolled down and hit the house, burst and drowned the whole family in the house, he is half inclined to believe it. He thinks that everything that springs from seeds will grow out there if the seed is dragged over the fields. He seems to believe that when the farmers want some corn all they have to do is to drive out on the prairie and load up the carts. And, on the other side, he is skeptical of all claims for New England. Try it on any gathering of New England rural people. Tell them perfectly truthful accounts of what some of the enterprising ones have done and look for the sarcastic grins and the disgusted scowls.

The run of real New England farmers have not yet become reconciled to the fact that they can raise more corn to the acre than they do in any of the star corn states of the west, and better corn at that. But in ten years there was but one western state (Ohio) that exceeded New England in corn yield, and that by only .3 of a bushel per acre. Of six "corn states," so called, New England exceeded their ten-year average by 3.4 bushels to the acre, and it exceeded the average of the United States by 9.3 bushels per acre.

New England is some on corn, as we note by the record of a youth of Massachusetts, who raised 127 bushels to the acre, or the New Hampshire man who got 133 1-3 bushels to the acre or other New Hampshire man who harvested over 100 bushels to the acre from a 40-acre lot. One hundred bushels of corn, with the folder ,is worth in New England in the neighborhood of $125—sometimes more, and sometimes a bit less. Where is the western corn farm that will produce $125 per acre, right in the midst of a market that is always eager for more? A Connecticut man raised 112 bushels of shelled corn on an acre, and his boy beat him with 121 bushels. A scientific test of one man's crop showed that it yielded $65.76 per acre actual net profit, with every possible expense charged up to it. This is a rate that would make a man with a hundred-acre corn patch rich in a few years, or even half of it. Sixty-five hundollars a pear from 160 acres is pretty good for the New England farmer. And the best thing about it is that he can do it, if he will, and if he has the corn land. If he has not the corn land, and has any other one of the more than 67 varities of New England land, he can still get rich, if he will to what others have done.

It need not be assumed that every man who plants corn is to get $65 per acre profit. They won't. They don't. They can, if the conditions are right, and if they work. It is up to the man to see that the conditions are right, and to work.

It may be thought that I have been selecting prize corn fields to mention, and I have. There is no reason why all corn should not be as good as the prize fields, allowing for different land. The prize fields were the ones that gave the big profits. But let us take an example that was not a prize field; at least was not planted or raised with any idea of making of it a prize field. A man in western Massachusetts concluded to plow up a meadow that had not been doing as well in grass as he thought it should. He plowed it and planted it to corn, giving it only ordinary care. Nature was on his side and in the fall he found that he actualy had a champion field of corn—123 bushels of shelled dry corn to the acre.

There is a large amount of very good corn land in New England that is not now utilized for that crop. There is money in it, from around $20 acre up to $65, as we have seen. It is good business at $20, as at that a man with 100 acres of medium corn land can lay aside $2,000 a year. That is certainly better than getting a bare living and drawing upon the capital of the farm every year to pay the taxes, or the doctor's bills. But to make money raising corn the farmer has got to be something of a business man and go about the work as the man does who makes cloth, or shoes, or newspaper. —George French.

Huerta Man of the Hour In Mexico, the Revolt Ridden Nation

WHO is this Huerta? What sort of man can this be to pause amid the distractions of his own country and send a defiance to the expressed good wishes and intent of the United States?

This is the question that has been asked throughout the country ever since news came that Huerta had issued an ultimatum demanding recognition of his administration.

Victoriano Huerta is a man of parts, of education, of high military training and achievements, and this but adds interest to his position in relation to the United States.

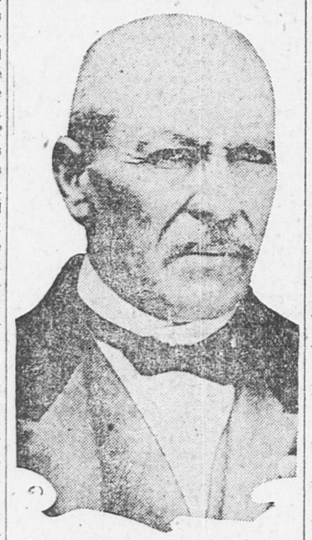

Born in 1857, he is now, at the age of fifty-six, in the full zenith of his career, with natural ability strengthened by experience of men and affairs, able as at no previous time to cope with delicate and dangerous crises.

Huerta inherited not only a strong, supple body, but intellectual capacity expressed by an active brain, quick in perception, decisive in action.

He spent four years at the military school in Chapultepec. After being graduated he at once joined the regiment to which he was assigned—a coast regiment. Huerta left Chapultepec and joined his regiment in 1879. Little is known of his doings for the next decade.

But in 1892, at the age of thirty-five, he emerges once more, this time into the full light of day, a man who had served twelve long years of active routine army life, and now, with the rank of lieutenant colonel, in command of a military station.

He had many adventures with brigands, it is said, and one of them happened to be a turning point in his career. He was riding through a mountain pass, accompanied by two or three of his military family, when a group of men sprang out of the underbrush, covered them with rifles and called on them to surrender.

A man less able than Huerta might have made resistance. He did not. He took in the situation at a glance—his mind leaped far ahead to a possible denouement worth while—and surrendered at once.

The highwaymen admitted that they were part of Zegaza's bandits and conducted the distinguished prisoners to the leader's hut, and there after a brief parley Zegaza made a proposition whereby Huerta would receive material benefits if he would keep Zegaza informed of the days when Huerta's soldiers would be absent from a neighboring village. Within two weeks Huerta sent a message to Zegaza:

"Next Thursday."

Thursday came, and with it came to the village Zegaza and his band of outlaws. As soon as they were safely in the main street a detachment of Huerta's troops suddenly appeared in front of them and opened fire. The highwaymen wheeled to race back out of the village and found their way blocked by another detachment.

All were at once surrounded and placed under arrest. Zegaza himself, described as a fearless, desperate man, was shot one week later "in attempt to escape from prison."

Official news of this sharp, strategic action reached President Diaz, who had kept his eye on Huerta ever since as a lad he entered the military school at Chapultepec. Soon Lieutenant Colonel Huerta was ordered to report at the palace in Mexico City. Thither he went and was told to choose what post he liked best.

He chose to be appointed chief of the geographical department—to the surprise of all who did not know him well. And as soon as possible he again departed from Mexico City, and for another period of ten long years he was engaged in going from one end of Mexico to another, studying the location of rivers, plateaus, mountain ranges, surveying hundreds and thousands of square miles and becoming intimately acquainted with every nook and cranny and watercourse of his difficult country until, when he once more emerged in 1902, he probably possessed more intimate personal knowledge of Mexico than any other living man.

FIND NEW WAY TO KEEP EGGS FOR LONG PERIOD.

Better Than Refrigerating and Pickling Is Novel Swiss Method.

A new agent for the preservation of eggs has been found in Switzerland, which has many advantages over refrigeration and pickling, according to United States Consul General R. E. Mansfield, stationed at Zurich, Switzerland.

"The preservation," Mr. Mansfield explains, "consists of a prepared substance of adhesive character, the ingredients of which may be easily and cheaply obtained in any country. The process of preservation is very simple. A flat vessel of about 100 quarts is filled to half its capacity with the preserving agent, into which the eggs are dipped for two minutes and then allowed to dry. For the dipping process the eggs are placed in flat wire baskets, each with a capacity of 300 to 500 eggs. One basket is dipped after the other, and by employing a larger vessel several baskets may be dipped simultaneously. In this manner two or three persons can dip 200,000 eggs per day.

"The inventors assert that the treatment is superior to the cold storage and pickling methods of preservation. Cold storage eggs become decomposed a few days after being removed from the refrigerating rooms, and the pickling method seriously affects the taste of the egg, while considerable expense is involved in the application of both of these methods, whereas economy is one of the chief advantages possessed by the new treatment. They state that eggs are always overhauled before shipment and that very little time is lost in dipping them in the solution during this operation, as they dry very quickly and are almost immediately ready for repacking. No special machinery is required, and the new agent is guaranteed to preserve the eggs for nine months, causing them to retain their freshness, weight, transparency, appearance, smell and taste."

ANOTHER HAWTHORNE POEM.

He Sends One Called "Punishment" to Atlanta Prison Paper.

Julian Hawthorne, who is confined in the federal penitentiary in Atlanta, Ga., has contributed another poem to the current issue of Kind Words, the prison paper.

The poem, which is entitled "Punishment," is in part as follows:

Filing along, filing along.
See where they come,
Eight hundred strong.
Shuffling feet and jaded faces
Down the aisles, dropping into their places,
Some upstanding, some bowed down.
With grin or snarl or sneer or frown
Here come the eight hundred of Deadmen's Town.
Filing past, filing past,
Nose to the front and eyes downcast,
Each in his jumper of shabby blue
With the U. S. P. and number too,
Twice four hundred clad as one.

Filing along, filing along,
Ages of folly, hate and wrong,
Each with its tale of might is right,
With its secret dark, with its flickering light,
And our Christ on his cross amidst them here!
Is he dead? Will he rise? Does he hear our prayer?
Will he leave us to perish in our despair?

HEART OF VESUVIUS OVER 626 DEGREES

Tremendous Heat Destroys Scientists' Thermometer

Naples, Sept. 16.—In their recent descent of the crater of Vesuvius Professor Malladra and his two companions reached a depth of 1200 feet, constituting a record for such an enterprise. They spent an hour making scientific experiments on the brink of the great funnel at the bottom of the crater, which they were able to sound to a depth of 200 feet.

The explorers found the inside of the funnel to be an enormous fiery cavern. They lost their thermometers, the steel rope on which they were suspended becoming fused by the acids and the terrific heat. However, they had obtained a registered temperature of 626 deg. F. before the mishap occurred.

THAW GOES TO LITTLETON

Fugitive's Habeas Corpus Writ to Be Argued Before Judge Aldrich

Colebrook, N. H., Sept. 16.—Harry K. Thaw left Colebrook this morning for Littleton to appear before Judge Aldrich of the United States district court on habeas corpus proceedings. The writ, sued out Saturday by the Thaw attorneys, was served last night by United States Marshal Nute of Farmington.

A coincidence in the form of an arrest was a feature of Monday, when Constable Andrews of Coaticook, Que., the man who arrested Jerome, was himself arrested here by a United States immigration official on an old charge of bringing a pauper into the United States.

The woman Andrews is accused of bringing over the border was found in the North station, Boston, without funds and with no place to go.

TENEMENT COLLAPSES

Six Families Buried In Ruins After Explosion of Gas

Coburg, Ger., Sept. 16.—Eight persons were killed, the bodies of seven other were believed to be buried in the ruins, and six more were injured by the collapse of a tenement house caused by a gas explosion here. Six families were buried in the ruins.

The explosion, which occurred in the gas main in the centre of the street, was so violent that it lifted the house bodily several feet. Fire broke out and several persons were badly burned.

Woman Gives Poison to Her Brother and Takes Dose Herself

Wilmington, Del., Sept. 16.—Claiming that no one loved her and that her mother was alone in the graveyard, Mrs. Addie Quimby, 25, in some manner gave her brother, Arthur Murray, 19, who had just left the hospital after recovering from an attack of typhoid fever, a dose of bichloride of mercury and then swallowed some of the poison herself.

They both are in the Delaware hospital in a critical condition. The woman left a rambling letter, and it is supposed she was deranged mentally.

CORONER EASY ON NEW HAVEN

Holds Three Trainmen Responsible For Disastrous Wreck

SAYS THEY VIOLATED RULES

Signals In Perfect Working Order, Whether "Banjo" Type Are Obsolete or Not—Engineer, Flagman and Conductor Blamed For Loss of Twenty-One Lives

New Haven, Sept. 16.—Three employes of the New Haven road are held by Coroner Mix to be criminally responsible for the disastrous wreck at North Haven Sept. 2, when the White Mountain express plunged through the second section of the standing Bar Harbor express, exacting a toll of twenty-one lives.

The coroner's finding was filed with the clerk of the superior court, after he had conducted a "private" inquest for a number of days.

Those said to be responsible are: Augustus B. Miller, engineer of the White Mountain express, and Bruce C. Adams and Charles H. Murray, conductor and flagman respectively of the Bar Harbor train.

The coroner neither blames nor absolves the New Haven road for the wreck. He finds the signals were in perfect working order, "and whether the banjo signals are obsolete or not" the accident would have been prevented if the company's rules had not been violated.

He touches upon the question of steel coaches and an improved signal system only incidentally, saying these matters are not within his jurisdiction but within the scope of the state public utilities commission. He directs the commission to investigate at once the "system of discipline" on the road and declares the number of violations of rules by employes "makes a sorry record."

The coroner finds that neither of the three men held responsible were incapicated, physically or mentally, from the performance of duty.

He devotes considerable attention to violations of the company's rules. He says: "From Jan. 1, 1911, to Sept. 1, 1913, 101 cases were reported to the management of the road of improper flagging, 158 cases of engineers running by signals."

Engineer Miller was arrested on a bench warrant yesterday afternoon and brought to plea before the superior court, now in session here. He pleaded "not guilty" and was released in $5000 bonds, furnished by the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers.

Bench warrants have also been issued for the arrests of Adams and Murray. It is expected they will be brought into court here today.

WIDOWS ALONE BENEFIT

Children Do Not Receive Money Under Compensation Act

Boston, Sept. 16.—The supreme judicial court sent down an opinion interpreting a paragraph of the new workmen's compensation act. By the decision a widow is entitled to receive the benefits of the insurance to the total exclusion of whatever children there may be.

The decision reverses the finding of the industrial board, which named a daughter as one of the beneficiaries with her mother.

The case was that of the widow of Stuart McNicol, who was killed by a fellow workman addicted to drunkenness while in the employ of a firm of importers.

McNicol was paid $15 a week, so the superior court, on the report of the industrial board, entered a decree of $7.50 a week to be paid for 300 weeks to the widow, Annie McNicol.

CONFESS TO ROBBERIES

Two Gloucester Boys Admit Breaking Into Several Stores

Gloucester, Mass., Sept. 16.—The police were amazed at the magnitude of breaks confessed to by two boys, William Silva, 15 years old, and Seraphine Viator, 14 years old, who were charged with breaking and entering several local stores. With seeming indifference the boys confessed to having made four breaks.

Through the arrest of the two the police believe they will clear up a number of breaks that have been conducted almost nightly during the past month.

Many other breaks will be confessed by the boys when they are arraigned in court, the police believe.

"CAUSES IMMORALITY"

North Carolina Judge Has Rather Bad Opinion of the Telephone

Asheville, N. C., Sept. 16.—During his charge to the grand jury here, Judge Carter declared that modern conditions are tending toward the downfall of the government, and that the telephone is one of the most provocative causes of immorality and the advanced cost of living.

He said the telephone is helping to break down the moral standard of womanhood and of young girls in particular, as boys and girls will say things to each other over it that they would not say face to face. It also allows undesirable parties to talk to girls.

MRS. THOMAS WELLS.

The funeral of Mrs. Annie Wells, was held from her date residence 47 Winter street, Monday afternoon. The services were simple but impressive, conducted by the Rev. Richard Armstrong of Christ church. Friensd gathered at the grave where prayers were read. The beautiful floral tributes showed the esteem Mrs. Wells was held for she was beloved by all, always cheerful and smiling through her eight long years of suffering. She was a tsanch friend to many and will be missed by all who knew her. She leaves two sons George Spencer of England Fred Spencer of Quincy and several grand children to mourn her loss. Mrs. Wells came to Quincy 35 years ago and has always made her home here, being interested in all church and social affairs of the Point district and in her younger years taking active part in all that was essential to the happiness of others.

A Futile Attempt

To Keep a Boy and a Girl From Wedlock

By PETER SCHONSKY

Count Ivan Ivanovich, a Russian nobleman, had the misfortune to marry a wife who for years led him a dance, then ran away with an officer in the army, leaving him alone with a son, Boris, a year old.

Naturally the count was imbittered against women. The very sight of one of the opposite sex threw him into a state bordering on insanity. He at last became so affected on encountering a woman that his physician recommended that he go where he would not meet them.

So Count Ivan sold out his estate near St. Petersburg and went into Siberia, where he bought a large tract of land, in the center of which he built himself a house. He encircled his land with a high wall, in which there was but one opening, at which he stationed a guard with instructions not to permit any woman or female child to enter the inclosure. His servants were all men, and if any article was needed that a man could not make it was obtained from without.

Besides keeping away from women himself, the count decided to keep his son away from them. When Boris began to talk his father gave orders that he should not be told that there were such persons as women in the world. The boy was to grow up thinking that the only human beings were men. Perhaps there was a trace of insanity in this, but be that as it may, so great was the care taken to keep all sexual knowledge away from Boris that he was fifteen years old before such knowledge came to him.

The revelation reached him in this way: A lady of Moscow, Catherine Barchikoff, had the same experience with her husband that Count Ivanovich had with his wife, Barchikoff having deserted her for her maid. The sight of a man did not have the same effect upon her that the sight of a woman invariably had on Count Ivanovich, but she determined to bring up her baby daughter, Nathalie, in ignorance of the male sex, keeping her so if possible till she should have passed the age at which young girls usually marry.

Now, Mme. Barchikoff knew as well as did Count Ivanovich that it would be impossible to bring up a girl never to see a man unless in a wilderness. So she began to make inquiries as to where she should find an uninhabited region in which to live. Very naturally, she arrived at the same conclusions as Count Ivanovich. Siberia was but thinly settled, and it was the nearest region to St. Petersburg fitted for the purpose, was not far from a railroad terminal and therefore available for receiving supplies. Thus it happened that Count Ivanovich took a son and Mme. Barchikoff a daughter to the same neighborhood in Siberia, the one to keep his boy away from women, the other to keep her girl away from men.

Siberia is a very large country, but not large enough to keep apart a man and a woman, provided there be but one man and one woman within its limits, even though they be at points farthest apart. Boris Ivanovich and Nathalie Barchikoff were the only youth and maiden in the region in which they dwelt, and they were not very far apart. Ergo, if the above reasoning is correct it follows that despite the watchfulness of their respective parents they would sooner or later form a union.

Boris grew up a manly young fellow and before he was thirteen years old began to chafe at being confined within an inclosure. When he asked permission to go outside the walls his father said to him:

"Are you not permitted to roam over a vast territory? Have you not rivers in which to fish? Have you not forests in which to hunt? Be content, my boy. Within our domain you are safe; without it you will be subject to a great danger."

"What danger?"

"Without our walls is an animal something like a man. It is made in the image of a man, but has the eye of a serpent. It charms men as the snake charms birds. If you once meet one of these creatures you are liable to be devoured."

Far from being impressed with such a warning, Boris, who was fond of hunting, thought continuously about this creature fashioned something like a man, yet able to charm men to destroy them. Gradually a desire grew upon him to see one of these creatures. If he felt a spell coming over him he would shoot the vampire. It was not long before he was trying to bribe the guard at the gate to let him out. But the guard was incorruptible. So when Boris was in his sixteenth year he rode away one morning with an ax and his gun and, reaching the wall, cut down a tree that leaned toward it and, when the tree fell against the top of the wall, climbed up and dropped down on the ground outside the inclosure.

The boy, keeping his gun ready to protect him in case of need, hunted for hours for the manlike creature his father had told him about, but found only wild animals. He returned by felling a tree on the outside against the wall and went home, no one having discovered his absence beyond the inclosure.

Boris made many such trips before he found the manlike creature. Coming one day to a high fence, he climbed it and pursued his way through a forest. Presently, coming to a lake whose surface was frozen, he saw what he was convinced was the creature he was desirous to meet skating on the ice.

From what his father had told him he had got an idea that there was something hideous about the animal and that it influenced men not by its beauty, but by magic. What he saw was so beautiful that instead of bringing his gun into position to protect himself it dropped out of his hands forgotten. The creature wore a gown trimmed with fur, the garment fluttering in the wind as she skimmed gracefully hither and thither. A dainty cap, made chiefly of fur, was on her head, and her hands were incased in fur.

Boris forgot entirely his father's caution. His chief desire was to go and see if he could catch the thing. Unfortunately he had no skates with him. He ran to the margin of the lake and called. The vampire turned, stopped and stood gazing at him with eyes as full of wonder as his own.

"Can you talk?" he called to her.

"Yes. Can you?"

"Of course I can, or I couldn't have asked you the question."

"I wonder if you're not a man?"

"Of course I am. Why do you wonder if I am?"

"Because I've heard our servants talk about what they call men, but I've never seen one before."

"And I've never seen anything like you before. What are you?"

"Why, I'm a girl."

"Are you the creature that charms men as snakes charm birds and then eats them?"

"I don't eat men. I never saw one before."

Each had by this time approached the other. The girl put her hand on Boris' sleeve and touched his cheek with her finger.

"Have you got a name?" she asked.

"Yes; Boris."

"My name is Nathalie."

Boris took the cap off her head and saw the coils of hair. He ran his hand over them.

"How smooth and soft," he said.

Suddenly her skates slipped from under her, and she fell into his arms. She smiled at him, showing white teeth between her lips. No one ever told him about a kiss. He had never heard of such a thing. No one ever told a newborn babe that, feeling hungry, it would find sustenance at its mother's breast. Boris kissed the lips before him from the same cause—instinct. He started.

"What is it?" she asked.

"The spell."

"What spell? Isn't it nice?"

"Nice! Too nice. Are you going to charm and eat me?"

The girl laughed and showed the same white teeth between the red lips and a couple of dimples besides. He kissed her again. Then he began to think very hard.

"What are you thinking about?" asked Nathalie.

"Well, I was thinking that if what my father said is true, that you are charming me to destroy me, you can go right on doing it, and I'm going right on doing it, too, till I'm lost."

And he kissed her again.

Mme. Barchikoff, having a mind to join her daughter, who, she was aware, had gone to the lake to skate, at this moment stepped from the edge of a road and stood transfixed at seeing her daughter held in the arms of a youth, whose lips were pressed upon the girl's. The good woman caught at a tree to prevent her falling in a swoon, and as soon as she could gather her faculties she hurried down on to the ice.

"What are you doing here?" she demanded of Boris.

"Going to the devil as fast as possible. But I can't be ruined by you. You may be one of the same kind, but I can resist you without trouble."

"Go away from here."

"I won't."

"Nathalie, come to the house immediately."

"I won't. If this is the awful man I've heard about I don't think he's so awful at all." And she clung to Boris.

"Come to the house, both of you," said the mother, more persuasively, and they obeyed.

An hour later Mme. Barchikoff was driven in a sleigh to the gate of Count Ivanovich and demanded admittance. Being refused, she sent in word to the count that her son was at her house making love to her daughter. The count, having steadied himself with a goblet of vodka, went out to see his visitor and, after a brief conversation between the two, rode back with her to her home. There they found the young couple sitting before an open fire locked in each other's arms.

"You are ruined!" cried the count to his son.

"I love to be ruined," was the reply.

"You have brought down upon yourself," said Mme. Barchikoff to her daughter, "a terrible trouble."

"I'm ready to endure it," replied the girl, "for another of those what-you-may-call-'ems" (referring to the kisses).

"Send for the priest!" cried the lady.

"The priest! Great heavens! Is my son to be manacled?"

"Yes, and I presume he will leave his wife for a menial."

"Well," moaned the father, "I suppose I must yield. Oh, my son, you have brought great misery on yourself. You will regret this all your life."

The priest came and went through a ceremony the young people did not understand, and that was the end of the endeavor of Count Ivanovich and Mme. Barchikoff trying to keep a boy and a girl apart.

AMERICANS ARE SAFE

Not Likely to Be Disturbed In Today's Celebration In Mexico

Washington, Sept. 16.—State department officials are resting secure in the belief that today's celebration of the anniversary of Mexican indipendence, though it may be marked by interesting developments, will not jeopardize the safety of Americans in Mexico.

They are confident that in the capital, where the federal authorities are in control, there is no possibility of an anti-American demonstration that will involve risk of personal injury, while in the outlying states the officials are under the strictest injunction from General Huerta to extend full protection to Americans.

In the country dominated by the constitutionalists, the various local leaders are treating Americans courteously, and, on the whole, the only element of danger is believed to lie with the irresponsible brigand bands that are particularly active in the southern section.

Body of Woman of Refined Appearance Found In Reservoir

Medford, Mass., Sept. 16.—Discolorations upon the face and traces of blood upon the lips of an unidentified woman of refined appearance, whose body, tastefully clothed, was found floating in the reservoir near Tufts college, led Medical Examiner Durrell to announce that he will perform an autopsy on the body.

P. C. Chandler says he was in a drugstore near the reservoir when a man about 20 years of age entered and told that he had found a woman's body floating on the water. Since then the young man has not been found.

DRANK BLOOD OF HIS VICTIM

Schmidt Killed Secret Bride as "Sacrifice" to Patron Saint

DOUBLE PERSONALITY MARKED

Coroner Says One Side of Slayer's Face Appears Sanctified, While the Other Shows Brutal Instinct—Suspected of Other Crimes, but Declines to Accept Legal Advice

New York, Sept. 16.—"I was commanded by my patron saint, St. Elizabeth of Hungary, to offer a sacrifice. Like the sacrifice of Abraham, it must be one of blood. So I killed Anna Aumuller and drank some of the blood to consummate the sacrifice."

With this remarkable statement from the lips of Hans Schmidt, a Roman Catholic priest, whose confession has cleared up one of the most baffling murder mysteries in the history of the city, police and alienists alike who have followed criminal history are puzzled over the mental makeup of the man who committed this fiendish crime.

Coroner Feinberg called attention to the asymetrical face of Schmidt. The coroner observed when talking to the slayer of Anna Aumuller that one side of the priest's face presented a sanctified appearance, a look such as a priest might have.

"But the left side of his countenance is totally different," said the coroner. "There are the marks of a devil on that side of his face. I noticed that about the mouth on one side brutal instinct seems to be marked. Looking at his left eye and cheek, he has the cunning look of a fox. I turned suddenly so that I could see the better side of his countenance and the difference was remarkable. Even about the eyes one could see it. One had a diabolical leer while the other had a beatific expression."

One of the detectives declares that he also observed the great difference in the two sides of the man's countenance, and he said that at times the good side seemed to have some influence over the other. This change was marked when the prisoner said to Inspector Faurot: "I'll soon be with her."

Schmidt declined the offer of an attorney for his services. "You and I do not understand this thing. God and Abraham only will be able to clear the matter up," he said.

When Alphonse J. Koeble, the attorney who has long known Schmidt, left the confessed murderer's cell he said Schmidt would receive with contentment any punishment that should be inflicted upon him.

Koeble told Schmidt that doubt was expressed in some circles as to whether he was an ordained priest, and also mentioned the fact that hints that he might be insane were being made.

"Of course I am a priest. I was properly ordained," said Schmidt. "As to my sanity, all great men who do things out of the ordinary are considered insane nowadays. There is no suggestion of insanity in my family."

Coroner Feinberg learned Anna Aumuller had given birth to a child before she was murdered and her body dismembered by Schmidt.

The authorities believe that Schmidt buried the baby alive and began digging in the neighborhood of the flat where the girl was murdered in the hope of finding the baby's body.

With a view to clearing the mystery surrounding the murder of 8-year-old Alma Kellner, whose mutilated body was found in quicklime in the basement of St. John's Catholic church in Louisville 2½ years ago, the police sought to obtain from Schmidt some statement of what he might know of this crime.

From August, 1909, till March, 1910, Schmidt was a visitor in Louisville, not officially connected with any church there, but a guest of Rev. Henry B. Westermann, rector of the Church of the Immaculate Conception. Alma Kellner disappeared on Dec. 3, 1909. Her body was found nine months after. Joseph Wendling, janitor at St. John's church, is now serving a life term in prison for the crime. Wendling stoutly denied his guilt.

Announcement was made by Police Inspector Faurot that another man was under arrest here in connection with the murder of Anna Aumuller.

Faurot left police headquarters for a sub-station where, he said, the man was held. He said they were going to upper Manhattan, where they had under arrest in his own home a prominent physician.

DIVIDED INTO TWO DIVISIONS

Many Important Changes--New Haven System

As foreshadowed in a recent statement made by President Howard Elliott important changes in the operating management of the New York, New Haven and Hartford Railroad are announced today. These changes, effective at once, have for their object an increase of supervision and strengthening of the entire organization, all contributing to greater safety and efficiency in operation. Incident to such changes are a number of new appointments. An important feature of the policy of the new management is to confine appointments wherever possible to the New Haven service and in the present instance every man appointed is a New Haven man. To reduce the territory covered by the General Superintendent the New York, New Haven and Hartford Railroad will hereafter be operated in two grand divisions. All the lines east of Willimantic and New London and comprising the Boston, Providence and Old Colony divisions will be known as the Eastern Grand Division. All the lines West of those points, comprising the Midland, Western and the present Shore Line divisions, will hereafter be known as the Western Grand Division. The present Shore Line division is divided and a new division covering the main line west of New Haven and the Danbury and New Canaan branches is created to be known henceforth as the New York Division, with headquarters at Harlem River. The Shore Line division will cover the lines between New Haven and Springfield and New Haven and New London, including the Northampton branch.

Mr. Clayton N. Woodward is appointed General Superintendent in charge of the operating of the Eastern Grand Division, with offices at the South Station, Boston. Mr. Woodward began railroad work in 1882 as an operator on the New York and New England road, of which he later became Assistant Superintendent. In 1899 he became connected with the New York, New Haven and Hartford as Superintendent of the Midland Division, subsequently was in charge of the Providence Division and then of the Shore Line Division, and since 1912 has been General Superintendent of the company. He has been connected with the New Haven or its absorbed lines since entering railroad work.

The management of the New York, New Haven and Hartford Railroad believes that the above changes with others to follow will strengthen and improve its service, and that by reason of the increased supervision to be exercised by superintendent as a result of these changes safety and efficiency in operation will be greatly promoted.

Quietly they worked together and when they arrived at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Breslyn, they came loaded with quantities of tin ware which was presented to the hosts.

BARN WARMING.

Mr. J. H. Stedman of the J. H. Stedman Co. and the Monatiquot Rubber Works Co., South Braintree, has recently built a bungalow at New Sharon, Maine, and with Mrs. Stedman has entertained there two or three summers. Now a new barn has been built there 46 by 104 feet at a cost of about $10,000. There were about 500 people at the barn warming last week and a part of the report in the Franklin Journal, a local paper is as follows:

"Among the guests present were Rev. and Mrs. Frank Stedman of Cincinnati, Miss Edith Stedman of Framingham, Mass., and Miss Genevieve Wellborn of Washington, D. C., Mrs. Charles Elliott, nee Lizzie Holt, an aunt of Mr. Stedman who lives on an adjoining farm, Mr. and Mrs. Fred P. Adams, Mrs. C. E. Junkins of Rochester, N. H., relatives of the host. Former residents of New Sharon present were Mr. and Mrs. O. P. Whittier, Mr. and Mrs. D. J. Jordan, Mr. and Mrs. B. F. Makepeace and Mr. and Mrs. M. H. Blaisdell, all now residents of Farmington.

At this time it may be interesting to know why Mr. Stedman has built his beautiful bungalow and barn. It is not only because the spot is picturesque and attractive, but because Mr. Stedman has come into the property by right of descent as well as of purchase. In the year 1788 James Howes of Cape Cod came by blazed trail to what is now known as New Sharon and settled on a hill south of the Sandy River, which he named Cape Cod in memory of his former home. Here in 1799 he built a farmhouse which is at present in fine condition and has been occupied by the direct male descendants as follows: 1st, James, the builder; 2nd, Stephen; 3rd, Francis, and 4th, James H. Howes. James H. Howes having died without issue, in 1910 James H. Stedman, a wealthy manufacturer of South Braintree, Mass., bought the 150-acre farm settled by his great-great-grandfather in 1788, Mr. Stedman's maternal grandmother having been a daughter of Stephen Howes and the wife of the late Augustus Holt, whose daughter Kittie was Mr. Stedman's mother. In 1910 Mr. Stedman built an elaborate stone and cement bungalow on the place, which he and his estimable wife occupy during the summer months and have correctly named "Highland Light."

Workmen will begin at once upon the interior completion of the barn and Mr. Stedman proposes to stock it with the very best. He also has plans of increasing the amount of land under cultivation—already about 75 acres—and will use all modern devices and machinery for the successful manipulation of crops. The view from house and grounds is grand Looking away to the west one can see the White Mountains, as well as our own Blue hills and the fertile valleys of the Sandy. Surely it is an ideal spot and the owner and the people of New Sharon are to be congratulated both for possessing such a farm, and the latter for having a man so full of public spirit, enterprise and push as is Mr. Stedman."

LEPROSY CURED BY U. S. SURGEONS

Two Patients In Philippines Recover From Disease.

RELEASED ON PROBATION.

Surgeon Victor G. Heiser, Director of Health In the Islands, Makes Official Report of Cases—Other Patients Responding to Treatment—Chaulmugra Oil and Vaccine Used.

An apparent cure for leprosy has been found by surgeons of the public health service at the leper colony in the Philippines—in fact, so much of a cure that two patients who showed distinct signs of leprosy when they were admitted to the institution have been discharged as cured. However, there seems to be uncertainty as to just which of two treatments effected the cure—a vaccine treatment or chaulmugra oil taken by mouth and hypodermically. The patients who were discharged were given both treatments, but there are said now to be in the hospital a number of other cases which have shown "negative" for the past twenty-two months, and these received only the chaulmugra oil treatment.

Surgeon Heiser's Report.

Surgeon Victor G. Heiser of the public health service, chief quarantine officer and director of health of the Philippine Islands, in reporting on the two cases discharged, says:

"Two patients who had been confined to the San Lazaro Leper hospital on account of leprosy have been pronounced apparently cured and discharged from that institution on probation.

"The first case was that of a male Filipino aged twenty-seven, who was admitted to the San Lazaro Leper hospital, Manila, May 29, 1909. On admission the case clinically showed thickened reddish spots on the nose and thickening and discoloration of the lobe of the right ear. Scrapings made from the lesions showed lepra bacilli. He received vaccine treatment at intervals, beginning in August, 1909, but at the expiration of one year no change was noted in his condition. From September, 1910, to November, 1910, crude chaulmugra oil was given by mouth in increasing doses. On account of nausea the administration of the oil by mouth had to be discontinued.

Improvement Shown.

"The case showed evidences of improvement. Nov. 10, 1910, chaulmugra oil, combined with oil of camphor and resorcin, was given hypodermically. By May 6, 1911, the lesions above described had disappeared, and leprosy bacilli were not found in repeated microscopical examinations. The hypodermic treatment was continued and microscopical examinations were made at frequent intervals, but these were always negative. June 11, 1913, a most careful clinical and microscopical examination was made of the patient, which resulted negatively for leprosy, and as the patient had now been apparently cured for a period of over two years he was discharged on probation.

"The other case was that of a Filipino woman, aged twenty-two, who was admitted to San Lazaro Leper hospital, Jan. 7, 1910. Clinically this patient presented a suffused countenance, due to generalized infiltration. There were red macules over the cheeks, forehead and chin. Scrapings made from the lesions and examined microscopically were positive for leprosy bacilli.

"Upon admision this patient was placed upon a vaccine treatment for a period of five months, but at the end of the first month after her admission crude chaulmugra oil by mouth was given in addition to the vaccine.

Patient Discharged.

"After the second month the patient began to improve rapidly, and on May 6, 1911, leprosy bacilli could not be found on microscopical examination. During May, 1911, on account of the nausea caused by the oil its use by mouth had to be discontinued. Hypodermic injections of chaulmugra oil combined with camphor and resorcin were then begun. This treatment was continued, and frequent microscopical examinations were made from time to time, all of which resulted negatively. The last examination, both clinical and microscopical, was made on June 11, 1913, when no further evidences of leprosy could be found. The patient was therefore discharged from the hospital on probation.

"It is not known whether the vaccine treatment had any influence in the cures. There are at the present time a number of other cases at the San Lazaro Leper hospital that have been negative for a period of twenty-two months which upon admission presented more marked evidences of leprosy than the cases mentioned above, yet they received only chaulmugra oil either by mouth or hypodermically or in both ways."

Girl Given Solid Silver Jaw.

Miss Elizabeth Nemanich of Joliet, Ill., now has a solid silver lower jaw as a result of a third operation for "phossy" jaw, a disease contracted in match factories. Numerous photographs of the operation were taken for medical record. Physicians say the girl will retain her beauty.

BOOKS ARE IN GREAT DEMAND

Assessors Valuation Lists Going Like Hot Cakes

The Assessors valuation lists are in great demand and there are constant calls at the office of the Assessors for copies. As the edition was but 500 it will soon be exhausted.

Many will be surprised to learn that the cost for the printing of the lists was $2,088. This does not include the cost of preparing the copy for the printers. If this were added the total cost would not be far from $3,000.

It was originally intended that the lists should be printed in tabulated form and had this idea been carried out the bill for printing would have been nearly double what it was.

To many, who consider the financial condition of the city, it seems like a useless expense when all the information contained in the volume could be obtained by any citizen by calling at the office of the Assessors and looking over the books. The volumes however will come in very handy by real estate men as well as by newspaper men who desire to look up the value of buildings in cases of fire.

As stated before the book contains 1189 pages of estates, to which must be added the title page and the announcement page of the Assessors and the printing of copy of the order so that in reality the book is one of 1,200 pages which brings the cost of each volume at a little over $4 each. Taking all in all it is an expensive job and the benefit derived from it hardly warrants the expenditure. It is possible that the City Council may revoke the ordinance before it is time to publish another issue.

ENFORCING QUARANTINE

Infantile Paralysis Cases Being Investigated

Dr. Fred E. Jones and Dr. Hay of the State Board of Health investigated the new cases of infantile paralysis Monday but were unable to determine the carrier of the disease. One case is on Botolph street, Atlantic and the other on Sumner street, Quincy Point.

The authorities are apprehensive of the latter case inasmuch as a large foreign population in this section allows the disease a large area in which to spread. A rigid enforcement of the quarantine regulations will continue throughout the city.

Quincy's cases of infantile paralysis within a short time has totaled seven one of which has resulted fatally. The quarantine has been released on one family in Atlantic, leaving five cases on the records.

Science has proven catarrh to be a constitutional disease and therefore requires constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. DEMOCRACY EXPOUNDED

State Candidates at Meeting of City Committee

Democracy and a low tariff as it is understood by the real Democrats, was discussed at the open meeting of the city committee in Electa hall Tuesday evening by many candidates. The meeting did not adjourn until 11 o'clock and the interium enthusiasm was keyed to unusual heights by the fine list of speakers.

The speakers were Richard H. Long candidate for Lieutenant Governor, Frederick W. Mansfield, candidate for state threasurer, James H. Shea, David W. Murray and John J. McDevitt, senatorial candidates, William L. V. Newton of South Boston and Germantown personal representative of Lt. Gov. Walsh, Eugene F. O'Neil of Brockton, William J. Good of Randolph, Thomas H. Buttimer of Hingham and John P. Vahey of Hyde Park, candidates for district attorney; Representative Michael T. Sullivan, candidate for reelection in the Fifth district and Cornelius M. Duggan of Atlantic, unopposed candidate for representative in the Sixth Norfolk district.

Richard H. Long, the only independant shoe manufacturer in the state, and the most active opponent of the United Shoe Machinery Trust in the country made his first appearance here. He delivered a scathing arraignment of monopoly, touched on currency and credit, transportation and came out for a low tariff. His views, he said were practical because he had made a personal investigation in foreign countries and found that the Wilson administration and the Underwood tariff will directly benefit the wage earner no matter what arguments are porduced by the republicans.

He asked the people to endorse the Wilson administration by choosing Lt. Gov. Walsh as governor and advocated the "New Freedom" of President Wilson.

He said we would compete in this country with the world in all manufacturing and furthermore he had the statistics to prove it.

He said that the control of money and the limiting of credit is not the worst the Republicans have done. Through it they have prevented the right of free speech because a man seeking credit is oftentimes obliged to guard his public utterances or keep them in line with the opinions of the bank officials.

He accused the Republicans of preventing the enactment of the Parcels Post which not only showed up his enormous profits of transportation but simply precedes a great saving to all. The Republicans tolerated this and allowed the interference to go as far as legislative matters. President Wilson drove the lobby out of Washington and Democrats can drive it out of Beacon Hill. If elected I will do what I can to see that some laws are enacted and later enforced which will mean something for the people at large.

Mr. Long left the hall in an outburst of applause and cheers.

"Bill" Newton of South Boston and Germantown received great applause and for 45 minutes gave a most instructive talks dealing with many subjects in his versatile fashion. He said it would not take a great deal to induce him to become a resident of Quincy and he liked the city council's privilege of questioning officials, and said Bill, if we had such an opportunity in Ward 13 we would accomplish the oiling of Palmer street at least once a year and if it is not done soon I will be tempted to do it myself.

As a member of the committee in charge of Port development he said he saw wonderful opportunities for Quincy. With its 40 foot channel to the sea, he said it had the most natural water outlet of any sea coast city or town. Being expended is $9,000,000 and Quincy will get her share. When I wanted the draw widened so that the Rividavia could go through the Fore River bridge I could see still larger ones going through it. I believe the people of Quincy should go to the State House and demand their share of public moneys and Sea street should be a state highway.

Loyalty to the Jeffersonian Democracy and care in the estimation of formidable opponents should be exercised and in "Dave" Walsh you have a man who has never betrayed a trust. Foss, Gardner, Benton and Bird, the four millionaires, are pitted against the honest character and solidity of Walsh and it will be only through the loyal devotion and sacrifices you are willing to make, that Massachusetts can say and your sons will say in years to come that the opportunity of being governor was open to all without being a millionaire.

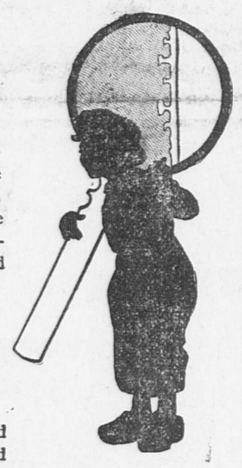

There are other reasons why we should vote the Democratic Tickets. The Republican congress decreased the duty in the Payne Aldrich bill on wood, barbed wire, heavy pick axes, gun powder and ether and they increased the duty on butter and eggs, corned beef, potatoes and smoked shoulders and as a substitute for a boiled dinner we can have heavy pick axes with gun powder and a little ether for sauce.

Frederick W. Mansfield arrived as the voters were leaving but they returned and listened to an eloquent speech from the man who has been for years the attorney for the American Federation of Labor and who in that capacity drafted the 54 hour bill, the eight hour law and most of the labor legislation on the statute books. Under the conditions, he said he pretended to know something about the necessities of the wage earner.

He cared nothing about the man with the concealed check book. Mr. St. Couer, his opponent was thoroughly qualified for the position, would make a good man, that he had no criticisms to offer but that he would like the position himself.

"Clincher" Paint

We know a paint which holds to the wood like a driven nail. Seasoned lumber is porous. The pores are the empty sap-cells. White lead paint, which dries on the wood in the form of a solid, elastic film, fastens into these pores, and the whole coat of paint is actually riveted like armor-plate to the surface it decorates and protects.

Peymer-Bauman White Lead
(Dutch Boy Painter Trade Mark)
and Pure Linseed Oil

make the paint that spreads into a solid body. It becomes a part of the wood itself—an outer layer that preserves the life of the lumber.

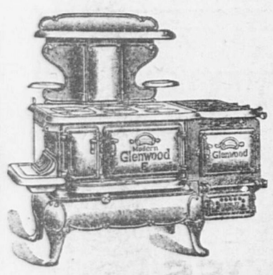

We sell it as well as other painting requisites. Come in and have a talk with us about painting.

EPIDEMIC IS INCREASING

Two New Cases of Infantile Paralysis Reported

The epidemic of infantile paralysis continues to increase in Quincy and two new cases reported bring the total number developed within a short period up to nine. One has resulted fatally, four are well on the road to recovery and four others are in the first stages of the disease.

Atlantic, where the disease made its first appearance has another case on Prospect street and a child at Houghs Neck is seriously ill at its home.

Despite the efforts of the Board of Health and the State Board of Health the cases increase. Rigid quarantines have been established and letters commending the proper care of the patient has been addressed to the families affected.

Quincy Point has one case and wide possibilities for a spread of the disease. The Board of Health is exerting all its efforts but to date have been unable to determine the mode of transmission.

Bride Arrived Tuesday on Parisian from Scotland

Among those to arrive on the steamship Parisian Tuesday was Miss Alexandrina Ellerington Ross Dempster of Scotland, who was met on her arrival by Ernest Leonard Wooley one of the draughtsmen employed at the Fore River Shipbuilding Corporation whose bride, she crossed the water to become. Mr. Wooley had already secured the necessary credentials to enable the ceremony to be performed, and the couple immediately repaired to the residence of Rev. Benjamin A. Willmott where they were united in marriage. The ceremony took place at 7 o'clock the bridal couple being unattended. Immediately after the ceremony they left for their home at 86 Edison Park, where they were given an informal reception by their friends.

CONTRACT FOR FORE RIVER CO.

To Build One of Six New Torpedo Boat Destroyers

A dispatch from Washington announces that Secretary Daniels has awarded the Fore River Shipbuilding Corporation the contract for one of the six torpedo boat destroyers, bids for which were opened some weeks ago. The bid of the Fore River corporation for one vessel was $861,000.

These vessels are to be the largest of their class yet designed. They will have the same high sustained sea speed that has proved so successful in previous boats of the same type, but they mark a decided advance in radius of action at a high speed. Increased space and weight has been assigned for the living accommodations of both crew and officers.

The destroyers will be 310 feet long, 29 feet 10 inches beam, 9 feet 3 inches draft and 1090 tons displacement. They will be oil burners exclusively and will be propelled by steam turbines.

The contracts for the other vessels of the same type were awarded as follows; the New York Shipbuilding Corporation gets two at $825,000 each, the William Cramp & Sons Shipbuilding Co. of Philadelphia, two at $881,000 each and the Bath, Me., Iron Works one at $884,000.

STUBBORN FIRE AT WOLLASTON

House of Charles A. Gridley Damaged $500

The fire department had a hard time this morning in extinguishing a fire in the house of Charles A. Gridley at 50 Beach street, and it was not until after an hour and a half hard work that the fire was out and the recall sounded.

The fire started on the floor beneath a hot water heater, that had been encased in the wall. In this small closet were a lot of old stove rags and it is supposed that spontaneous combustion started the fire. It must have been smouldering a long time for the family detected the odor of smake early this morning but were unable to discover any fire until shortly before 10 o'clock when it made its appearanco.

An alarm was sounded from Box 57 at 9.59 bringing the apparatus from the Atlantic and Wollaston stations and the central station combination. The firemen found that the fire had crept along beneath the floors and up between the walls until it reached the roof where it broke out into flames.

This made it a most difficult fire to fight for the firemen were obliged to do considerable cutting and tearing away of the walls and flooring to get at the fire, and in this way followed it from floor to floor until the last spark had been extinguished. The only time the fire broke out however was when it reached the roof and this was quickly extinguished.

The damage therefore is largely due to the cutting that was necessary and the loss is estimated at $500.

—There has never been a better summing up of what high speed really means than the following statement by George Westinghouse: "When emergency brakes are set upon a train running at the rate of 80 miles an hour that train is still running 60 miles an hour. 1100 feet from the point of application, whereas if the train had been running 60 miles an hour it would have stopped in 1100 feet." Here is the whole problem of high speeds. For most travelers 60 miles an hour is sufficient, and the railroads are making their schedules and concentrating their attention on safety first.—Philadelphia Public Ledger.

—That the Democrats have presented a currency bill which reminds one of the green back division of some years ago. Mr. Glass is mistaken if he believes that the country stands for redemption "in lawful money," instead of in gold. The gold standard is irrevocable, we hope.—Lynn Item.

Delegates Present From Several Neighboring Historical Societies

Interesting Paper on Historic Quincy by Mrs. William E. Alden

The Quincy Historical Society are entertaining today members of historic societies from all parts of Massachusetts in the cottage of John Adams, second president of the United States in observance of Quincy Day. Many distinguished guests attended and several read papers of historic interest. The attendance was large and the affair was one of the most successful ever held by the local society.

Luncheon was served at noon after which those present were transported in automobiles to the historic points in different parts of the city. In many instances it was their first visit and all evinced a patriotic interest. The weather was ideal and the reception committee personally conducted and explained the purpose in the preservation of the homes in Quincy.

Brooks Adams, Ex-President of the Quincy Historical Society presided. After extending the welcome he presented Mrs. W. E. Alden of Chestnut street who read a paper on "Historic Quincy." At its completion Mrs. Alden was the recipient of many congratulations for the intensely interesting way in which the complex historic interest of Quincy was given.

Papers were also read by Nathaniel T. Kidder, president of the Milton Historical Society; Mrs. George B. French president of the Holbrook Historic Society; Mrs. Edward Horne, vice president of the Dorchester Historical Society; Mrs. Charles G. Chick, wife of Charles G. Chick, president of the Hyde Park Historical Society; Dependance S. Waterman of the Roxbury Historical Society.

Mrs. Lillian V. Titus of the Daughters of the American Revolution gave a short address in which she spoke of the restoration of the old Howland House at Plymouth, built by the passengers of the Mayflower, and afterward conducted the guests through the birthplace of President John Adams Mrs. Dwight Prouty of Dorchester, of the Colonial Dames Society in a few words told of the work of restoration of the Shirley house in Roxbury.

Among those present were Grenville H. Norcross and Charles F. Reed, pres-

BUYING THROUGH NEWSPAPERS.

One of the difficulties in making household purchases is that the majority of people hate to disappoint salespeople. After the clerks have done their best to make explanations, most people dislike to leave without making a purchase.

The store may advertise that it is always a pleasure to show goods. But after a stock is disarranged, the majority of people dislike to put salespeople out. Sometimes clerks get tired and cross, and say unpleasant things when customers are critical.

At the same time, judging by the analogy of business, a good deal of study of conflicting offerings is needed for judicious buying. The purchasing agent for a manufacturing concern would never dare to buy until he had seen the leading offerings.

A great many people, for the reasons set forth above, are always consciously taking articles that do not appeal to them. The things don't look like good value. But either they are too tired to hunt for something better, or they dislike not to buy after having given the trouble to show goods.

When you buy after studying the newspaper advertising, you save a lot of needless friction, and you get the benefit of competition. After comparing the offerings of different merchants, you can satisfy yourself pretty thoroughly as to which is giving the best bargain in a given line. You can make a shrewd guess as to who will make the best cuts to clear stock, who has had the most enterprise to secure good styles and the most substantial values.

All that remains then, is to go direct to the spot, and get the goods. As it is fatal to misrepresent in the white light of public print, the result usually proves satisfactory. Five minutes in the newspaper saved you money, and enabled you to avoid friction.

PERSISTANCE UNREWARDED

Boy Fishes 12 Hours Without Food, But Gets No Fish

While an organized posse, which had been organized by the sounding of the lost child call on the fire alarm bells at 2.40 Tuesday afternoon, where searching the highways and byways for four-year old George Chisholm, George sat contentedly on the Neponset bridge fishing. He had been there since 7 o'clock in the morning without food or drink, yet he said when found that he was not tired or hungry although he had not tasted a morsel for 12 hours. George could show no fish as a result of his long virgil, although he had tried hard both at high at well as low tide, and this was his only regret. It seems too bad that such persistance should not have been rewarded with at least one fish.

George is the son of Moses Chisholm of 22 Hunt street and left home in the early morning. When he did not return to dinner his parents became alarmed and began a search. It proved unavailing and almost frantic his mother called upon the fire department to sound the lost child call.

This was done at 2.04 the five blows being followed by one round from Box 61. A crowd of willing workers soon arrived and it was not until 7 o'clock in the evening that George was found on Neponset bridge dangling a fish line over the side and wondering why the fish did not bite.

THE AGREEABLE WOMAN.

Whatever else you are in life, be agreeable.

There is so little sense in being anything else.

It doesn't pay in any kind of coin to be snappy or sarcastic or backbiting. Whether you are in business, pleasure or wisdom bent you will find the woman who goes out of her way to be nice to others carrying off the prizes of social, literary or financial life.

It's really no more trouble to be agreeable once you get into the way of it than to be disagreeable . If it does not come natural to you to say or do the pleasant thing (unfortunately there are some of us who are downright "ugly" by nature,) then practice it.

Don't put off that practicing either till another time when you are feeling more in love with your fellows.

Begin at once.

Any one can be pleasant when life is as merry as the fellow who has just been paid a bad debt, but remember:

"The man worth while is the one who can smile when everything goes dead wrong."

So begin trying to be agreeable the next time existence seems to have just about as much humor as some comic operas. You will be surprised how much better you will feel, not to speak of those who must put up with you.

It isn't really hard to be agreeable, especially if your digestion has not been trifled with . All that is necessary is to think pleasant thoughts and then put them into working order.

If you can't be agreeable, be as agreeable as you can.

You will be surprised to find how soon it will become easy to be pleasant all the time instead of snarly and generally hateful.

It will be an equal surprise when you find you are liked instead of detested and that the popularity you once professed to despise makes this world a much more agreeable place to worry along in.

New Features In Schools Are Not Frills, but Essentials

By Dr. A. E. WINSHIP of Boston, Addressing Cook County (Ill.) Teachers' Institute

SUCCESS in INDUSTRIAL, COMMERCIAL and PROFESSIONAL life depends upon doing NEW THINGS or upon DOING OLD THINGS IN NEW WAYS. Teachers are handicapped because so many vociferous parents and some members of boards of education insist that their children and grandchildren shall be taught as they were. There is a premium, in public opinion, upon being a third of a century behind the times.

There are as NEW AND VITAL PHASES IN EDUCATION as of transportation or illumination, and, while the city fights for the latest and best of these latter, it fights with equal intensity against the latest and best in the schools.

THE NEW FEATURES ARE NOT FADS, BUT FUNDAMENTALS, NOT FRILLS BUT ESSENTIALS.

THE MAN WHO SITS ON THE TAIL OF EDUCATIONAL PROGRESS and shouts "Whoa!" and through a megaphone cries of the "three R's" is absurd.

It would be more sensible to try to handle all the traffic of Chicago with horses and oxen than to try to fit children for the intensive, extensive and complex life they must lead with the "three R's."

You might as well hurl a blunderbuss against a Dreadnought as to try to prepare children for the life they must lead by the use of CHEAP, CRUDE SCHOOLBOOKS, and yet that is all the educational vision some people have.

Girl In Teens Sues Aged Man For Alleged Breach of Promise

Boston, Sept. 17.—Following the announcement that Miss Maude A. Taylor, 18 years old, had defied the opposition of her relatives by making application for a marriage license to wed George H. Caldwell, a 75-year-old retired jeweler living in the Back Bay, another young woman, Miss Helen M. Mason, has brought suit for $75,000 for alleged breach of promise against Caldwell, claiming he promised in June, 1912, to wed her, and has since married another woman.

The suit in Miss Mason's behalf is brought by Grace L. Mason as her next friend, for the young woman is a minor.

Caldwell has already been three times widowed. Yesterday a special precept for attachment for the amount named by Miss Mason in her suit was issued by Judge Jenney.

$650,000 NECKLACE FOUND

Picked Up on Sidewalk In London by Man on Way to Work

London, Sept. 17.—A workman found on a sidewalk practically the entire pearl necklace, valued at $650,000, which was stolen on July 16 while in transit by mail from Paris to London.

The man, going to work in Highbury, a northern district of London, noticed the pearls lying in a heap. On picking them up he found there were fifty-eight. He took them to the nearest police station, where they were at once recognized as part of the famous necklace, from which only one pearl is now missing.

On Sept. 2 three Englishmen and two Austrians were arrested when trying to dispose of some of the pearls in London. They were believed by the police to belong to a notorious international gang of thieves.

LONG CHASE AFTER ABANDONED SHIP

Found Thousand Miles From Where She Was Given Up

Washington, Sept. 17.—A bottom-up derelict which the revenue cutter Seneca found 150 miles east of Halifax and towed into that port, proved to be the American schooner Lottie R. Russell, abandoned seventy miles east of Cape Henry on April 15.

In five months the wreck had drifted 1000 miles and her final capture in the path of commerce by Captain Johnson of the Seneca was regarded as one of the most unusual incidents in the history of the revenue cutter service.

The schooner's crew was saved by the British steamer Georgian Prince. Early in September a derelict was reported in the path of commerce off Halifax. The Seneca, on Sept. 5 started on the 700-mile chase, which finally solved the mystery.

Aged Man Dies Three Minutes After Wife Answers Summons

South Brewster, Mass., Sept. 17.—Mr. and Mrs. Alvin S. Crowell, aged residents of this village, died within three minutes of each other. Both were walking around in the early morning, and before night both had passed away.

Mrs. Crowell complained that she felt ill, and thought she had eaten too hearty a breakfast. She grew worse steadily, within five hours developed an attack of acute indigestion and died in great pain with her husband at her bedside.

Immediately afterward Crowell was seized with an attack of paralysis, and died within three minutes. He never spoke a word after his wife passed away.

Crowell was 72 years of age and his wife was 65.

FIND SKELETON OF A MASTODON

Said to Be Only One Ever Dug Up In New England.

WORKMEN DISCOVERED IT.

Remains of Prehistoric Animal Twice as Large as Elephant Unearthed on Connecticut Farm — Examined by Professor Schubert of Yale University and Other Experts.

What is believed to be the only skeleton of a mastodon ever unearthed in the New England or the eastern states, according to Professor Schubert of Yale university, who is in charge of the Peabody institute in New Haven, has been found in Farmington, Conn., on the farm of the late Alfred A. Pope. It is also thought the skeleton will prove to be one of the finest specimens yet discovered anywhere in the country.

Workmen digging a trench on the Pope farm a fortnight ago struck a hard substance, which they believed to be the root of a tree, about four feet below the surface of the ground. They dug it up, and when it had been completely cleared a son of Mr. Brooks, superintendent of the farm and nephew of the late Mr. Pope, declared it to be a bone of some prehistoric animal. He promptly notified his father, and the latter viewed the supposed root.

Yale Authorities Notified.

Convinced that a bone of a prehistoric animal had been unearthed, Mr. Brooks communicated with the authorities of Yale, and Professor Schubert hurried to the place to view the find. He declared at once that the bone was that of a mastodon and summoned expert workmen from Peabody institute. The latter carefully scooped away the ground around where the first bone had been found and soon unearthed what proved to be a shoulder blade of the ancient animal.

After working several days the men succeeded in uncovering the skull and pelvis, a femur and a tibia and part of the tail as well as the fore feet of the animal, in addition to several ribs and the vertebrae. Search was then made for the tusks of the animal when residents of Farmington noting the unusual activity of the persons on the Pope farm, made public the news that the mastodon had been found.

The pelvis of the animal measured six feet ten inches across from the right to the left side, and it is figured by the experts who are now in charge of the work that the complete skeleton will be at least twice as big as the skeleton of a full sized elephant. It will take, it is estimated, at least two weeks more of digging before the complete skeleton is uncovered. The bones unearthed are in an excellent state of preservation despite the fact that it is believed by the scientists that the animal has been buried many thousands of years.

Bones Oddly Mixed.

The bones found were peculiarly mixed, and that fact is accounted for by the scientists, who say that the animal probably died on a small hill, near where the bones have been found, the carcass later sliding down into the present swamp, which it is thought was at one time a lake. It is believed the tusks will be found much further underground, as they, being heavier than the other bones, probably sank much deeper.

Mrs. Pope and her daughter, who are the occupants of the farm, have not as yet decided what disposition they will make of the skeleton. The workmen who discovered the historic relic were engaged in making a trench by which it was hoped to bring more water from a nearby supply to the barn.

INCREASE IN PRODUCTION.

Natural Gas From Texas Wells In 1912 Valued at $1,405,077.

The quantity of natural gas produced from wells in Texas in 1912 was 7,470,373,000 cubic feet, valued at $1,405,077, according to B. Hill of the United States geological survey. This is an increase over the production of 1911 of 1,966,980,000 cubic feet in volume and of $390,132 in value. The greater portion of this gas was supplied for domestic purposes, the value of which aggregated $906,412, or nearly double the value of the gas consumed in manufacturing and in generating power, which was $498,665 in 1912. Some gas is used in Texas for brick manufacture. For the generation of power it is utilized in operating gas engines and boilers at waterworks, ice plants, cotton gins and largely in field work.

The total number of gas wells in Texas at the close of 1912 was eighty-seven, of which twenty-four were drilled in 1912. The number of dry holes drilled was twenty-three and the number of gas wells abandoned six.

Destroyer Makes Thirty-seven Knots.

The Russian torpedo boat destroyer Novik established a record when she attained a maximum speed of 37.3 knots on her trials at Swinemuende, Germany, recently. Her average speed over the measured mile was thirty-seven knots. The Novik, which was built in Germany, burns oil and is not fitted with smokestacks.

PALPITATION OF THE HEART.

It Is Usually Caused by Nervous or Digestive Troubles.

Palpitation is rarely if ever due to any disease or weakness of the heart. It is almost invariably the result of nervous or digestive trouble. The beat of the heart arises within itself. There are nerves in the muscles of the heart, and they regulate its beating, although the speed or rate of the beating is not of their choosing. If they were not held in check they would set a rate about double that which is actually maintained.

The heart is supplied from the brain with two pairs of regulating nerves. One pair, the cardio motor nerves, act only to spur up the heart to quicker action. They are usually inactive, waiting the occasion for applying the spur. The other pair, the cardio inhibitory nerves, are always in action. It has been said that the heart runs in a pair of tightly held reins, and the simile is true, for these nerves check the speed.

Fear, worry, disorder of the stomach or nervous system causes these cardio inhibitory nerves to relax; then the heart begins to race. There is nothing the matter with the heart itself, and no one need be alarmed about that organ just because it beats too rapidly. Its palpitation is due to a psychological or a physical cause, something that has caused the relaxation of the reins and allowed the cardio motor nerves to apply the spur.—New York World.

CHATTY WELSHMEN.

Most Talkative, It Is Said, of All the British Islanders.

Is the Welshman the most garrulous man in the British isles? The result of an impartial test by a London newspaper has shown that for actual talkativeness the typical Welshman heads the list; next in order come Irishmen, then Scots, and last of all the Englishman.

Unobtrusively made in a number of well known London restaurants, clubs and public places, the tests invariably gave the same results. By means of a test watch the following table was compiled:

Welshmen—Very talkative, animated in manner and speaking at an average rate of 200 words a minute.

Irishmen—Also very talkative, but less animated in manner; average rate of speech, 160 words.

Scotchmen—Far less talkative and deliberate in manner; spoke at an average rate of 120 words.

Englishmen—Almost silent, rarely the first to speak; dogmatic and deliberate in manner, speaking 100 to 120 words a minute.

The comparative silence of the men, in striking contrast to the vivacious chatter of the women folk, was as usual noticeable. A curious detail was that dark men were always the bigger talkers.

Labadists of Holland.

There is a sect in Holland known as the Labadists, among whose members the use of mirrors is strictly prohibited. Their founder, Jean de Labadie, a seventeenth century Calvinist minister, attracted many followers, but after his death they dwindled down, and now they are found only in a few remote villages of Friesland. Traveling in Holland in 1893, Lecky lit upon a colony of Labadists. "Intermarrying mainly among themselves," he writes, "they have quite a distinct type—a singularly beautiful one, with their delicate lips and a curious air of refinement. They are fishermen—very prosperous—and their houses, with their china and silver ornaments and prints of the house of Orange and great Bibles with silver clasps and perfectly preternatural neatness, are very interesting to see." — London Chronicle.

Tale of a Lost Will.

A lost will found in a ceiling at Chatsworth reminds us of the curious case of Lord Hailes' will. He was a Scotch judge, and when he died in 1792, as no testamentary paper could be discovered, the heir-at-law was about to take possession of the estates to the exclusion of his daughter and only child. She sent some of her servants to lock up the family mansion, which she had to give up, and from some window shutters there dropped out upon the floor from behind a panel the missing will, which secured her all the family estates and property. Why do people take the trouble to make, sign wills properly attested and then conceal them? Can they enjoy a posthumous joke?—London Spectator.

Tidy to the Last.

In "Glimpses of the Past" Miss Elizabeth Wordsworth tells this story:

One stormy day a fishing smack was wrecked and fast sinking. When the skipper came on deck he found the mate busy swabbing.

"What's the use of that, Jack? Don't you see she's sinking?"

"Yes, master, I know it; but, for all that, I'd like the old gal to go down clean and tidy."

The Manifestation.

"Papa," said the young girl sweetly, "I feel it in my bones that you are going to buy me a new hat."

"Ah, do you?" chuckled papa. "In which bone do you feel it?"

"Well, I'm not sure, but I think it's in my wishbone."

In a Way.

"Are you acquainted with Mrs. Hifly, your fashionable neighbor?"

"Only in a roundabout way. Her cat boards at my house."—Kansas City Journal.

HISTORIC QUINCY--BIRTHPLACE OF TWO PRESIDENTS

John Adams.

Second President of the United States and his Signature

On the east end of the First Church, at the right of the pulpit, a mural monument is erected, surmounted by a bust of John Adams from the chisel of Greenpugh. On the tablets beneath the bust are the following inscriptions:

Libertatem, Amicitiam, Fidem, Retinebis.

D. O. M.

Beneath these walls
Are deposited the mortal remains of

JOHN ADAMS,

Son of John and Susanna [Boylston] Adams,
Second President of the United States;
Born 19-30 October, 1735.
On the Fourth of July, 1776,
He pledged his Life, Fortune, and Sacred Honour
To the Independence of his Country.
On the third of September, 1783,
He affixed his seal to the definitive Treaty with Great Britain,
Which acknowledged that Independence,
And consummated the redemption of his pledge.
On the Fourth of July, 1826,
He was summoned
To the Independence of Immortality,
And to the Judgment of his God.
This House will bear witness to his Piety;
This Town, his birth-place, to his munificence;
History to his Patriotism;
Posterity to the depth and compass of his mind.
At his side
Sleeps, till the Trump shall sound,

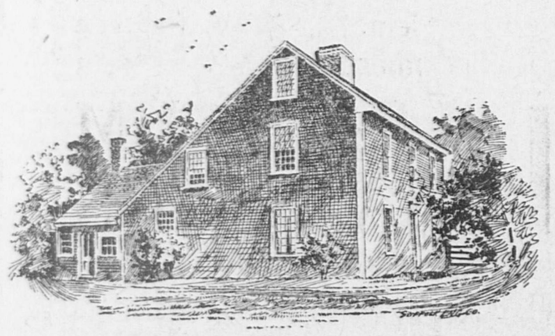

ABIGAIL,

His beloved and only wife,
Daughter of William and Elizabeth [Quincy] Smith.
In every relation of life a pattern,
Of Filial, Conjugal, Maternal and Social Virtue.
Born Nov. 11-22, 1744,
Deceased 28 October, 1818,
Aged 74.

Married 25 October, 1764.
During an union of more than half a century
They survived, in harmony of sentiment, principle, and affection,
The tempest of civil commotion,
Meeting undaunted and surmounting
The terrors and trials of that Revolution,
Which secured the Freedom of their Country;
Improved the Condition of their times;
And brightened the prospects of Futurity
To the race of man upon Earth.

PILGRIM.

From lives thus spent, thy earthly duties learn;
From Fancy's dreams to active virtues turn;
Let Freedom, Friendship, Faith, thy soul engage,
And serve like them thy country and thy age.

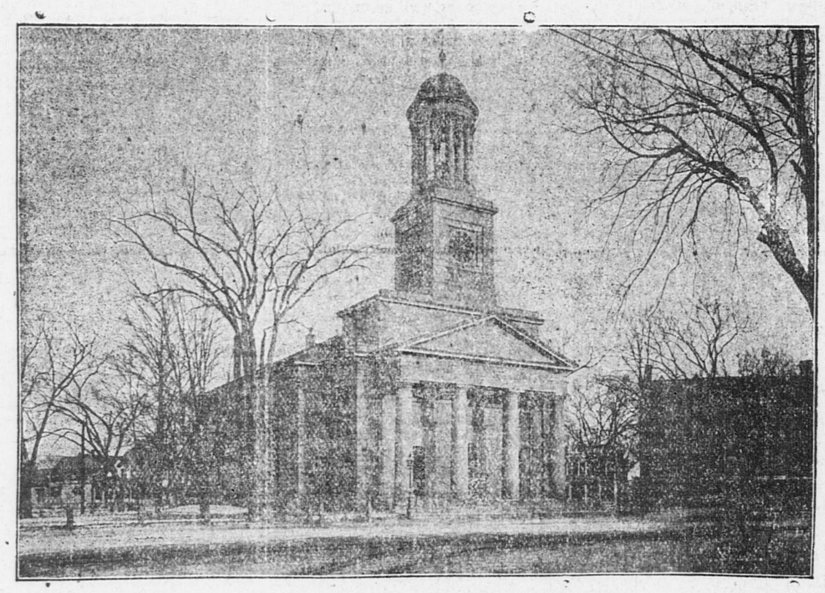

BIRTHPLACE OF PRESIDENT JOHN ADAMS

Situated on Franklin street. This house was restored and is now occupied by Adams Chapter Daughters of the Revolution.

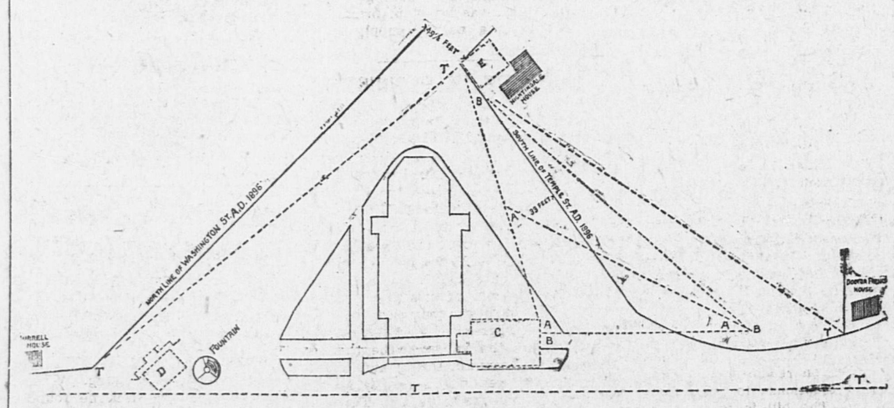

ABIGAIL ADAMS

Wife of President John Adams, who from the top of Penn's Hill watched the smoke from the battle of Bunker Hill. The site is now marked by a stone cairn.

HISTORIC FIRST CHURCH

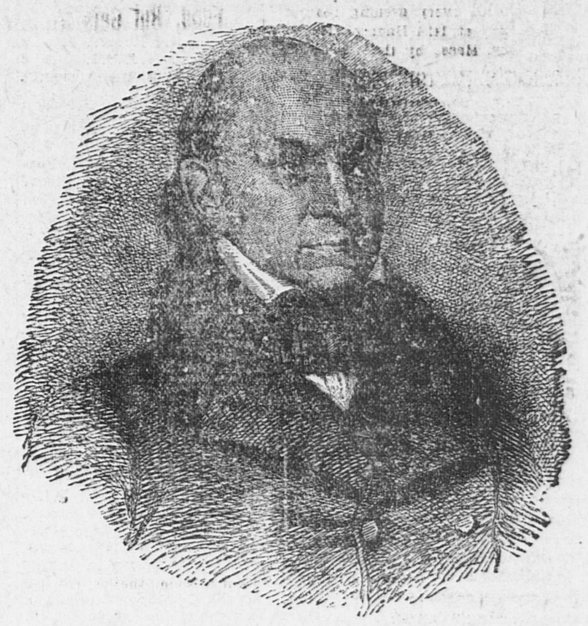

Situated in City Square opposite City Hall. Beneath its portals rest the remains of Presidents John Adams and John Quincy Adams and their wives.

FAMOUS TRAINING FIELD

This field formerly embraced all of the land where the First church now stands, a part of Washington street and a large share of Temple street. Here was originally located a schoolhouse which the town on April 11, 1793, voted to build. The upper story was used as a Town hall, and in the winter months a "ciphering school" was kept in the same room. On the lower floor the grammar school was taught. This building was burned Dec. 29, 1815.

The first church erected on the site was built in 1732 and was taken down in 1827. The present edifice was completed in 1828 and was dedicated Nov. 12, 1828.

J. Q. Adams

Sixth President of the United States and his signature.

On the left of the pulpit a mural monument is erected to the memory of John Quincy Adams, by his son, Hon. Chas. F. Adams. It is surmounted by a bust of John Quincy Adams, from the chisel of Powers. Under the bust is the following sentence, separated by an oak branch with two leaves and an acorn:—"Alteri—Seculo;" then follow the inscriptions:

A. O.

Near this place
Reposes all that could die of

JOHN QUINCY ADAMS,

Son of John and Abigail [Smith] Adams.
Sixth President of the United States.
Born 11 of July, 1767.
Amidst the storms of Civil Commotion
He nursed the vigor
Which nerves a Statesman and a Patriot,
And the Faith
Which inspires a Christian.
For more than half a century,
Whenever his Country called for his labors,
In either Hemisphere or in any Capacity,
He never spared them in her cause.
On the twenty-fourth of December, 1814,
He signed the Second Treaty with Great Britain,
Which restored Peace within her Borders.
On the twenty-third of February, 1848,
He closed Sixteen Years of Eloquent Defence
Of the Lessons of his Youth,
By Dying at his Post
In her great National Council.
A Son, worthy of his Father;
A Citizen, shedding Glory on his Country;
A Scholar, Ambitious to advance Mankind;
This Christian sought to walk humbly
In the sight of his God.
Beside him lies
His Partner for Fifty Years,

LOUISA CATHERINE,

Daughter of Joshua and Catherine [Nuth] Johnson.
Born 12 February, 1775;
Married 26 July, 1797;
Deceased 15 May, 1852,
Aged 77.
Living through many Vicissitudes, and
Under high Responsibilities,
As a Daughter, Wife and Mother
She proved Equal to all.
Dying, She left to her Family and her Sex
The blessed Remembrance
Of a "Woman that feareth the Lord."

"Herein is that saying true, one soweth and another reapeth. I sent you to reap that whereon ye bestowed no labor. Other men labored, and ye are entered into their labors."

SALLY'S IRON.

In describing some of her associates of the stage, Ellen Terry, in McClure's Magazine, tells of her dresser, Sarah Holland. She had an extraordinarily open mind. writes Miss Terry, and was ready to grasp each new play as is came along as a separate and entirely different field of operations.

She was extremely methodical and only got flurried once in a blue moon. When we went to America and made the acquaintance of that dreadful thing, a "one night stand," she was as precise and particular about having everything nice and in order for me as if we were going to stay in the town a month. Down went my neat square of white drugget. All the lights in my dressing room were arranged as I wished. Everything was unpacked and ironed.

One day when I came into some American theater to dress I found Sally nearly in tears.

"What's the matter with you, Sally?" I asked.

"I 'aven't 'ad a morsel to heat all day, dear, and I can't 'eat my iron."

"Eat your iron, Sally! What do you mean?"

"'Ow am I to iron all this dear?" wailed my faithful Sally, picking up my Nance Oldfield apron and a few other trifles. "It won't get 'ot!"

Until then I really thought that Sally was being sardonic about an iron as a substitute for vituals.

FALLS FIVE HUNDRED FEET

Nearly Every Bone In Boy's Body Broken In Drop From Balloon

Woodstock, Conn., Sept. 17.—Thirteen-year-old George Bernier, who was holding a guy rope to a balloon while it was being inflated preparatory to an ascension at a local fair, was suddenly carried 500 feet in the air and then dropped to instant death in front of the grand stand, where 5000 people were assembled.

In order to secure a better hold on the guy rope during the inflation of the balloon, the boy wound the rope about his wrist several times.

When the ballonist, Harold Gates, started his ascension, the boy did not have time to unwind the rope, and he was carried swiftly upward, dangling by one hand.

Gates was not aware of the boy's predicament until the rope had unwound itself and the boy was dashed to death. Nearly every bone in his body was broken.

$2,000,000 TRUST SUIT IS DISMISSED

United Shoe Benefits by Statute of Limitation

Boston, Sept. 17.—The $2,000,000 suit against the United Shoe Machinery company, brought by Charles A. Strout, trustee for the Goddu Sons Metal Fastening company of Boston, was dismissed by Judge Dodge in the United States district court. The court decided that the suit was barred by the statute of limitations.

The cause was based on the Sherman anti-trust law and alleged the United company, on securing control of the Goddu company, restrained the trade and business of the latter company.

The court based its decision on the fact that all control by the United Shoe company ceased when the Goddu company was placed in the hands of a trustee in February, 1905, and that the suit was not brought until September, 1911, which is seven months after the six years within which it was possible to bring it.

FREIGHT TIE-UP EXPECTED

England Is Threatened With Another Great Railway Strike

London, Sept. 17.—The country is again threatened with a railway strike, and Liverpool, as before, will be the storm centre.

The trouble began with the refusal of the Liverpool dockers to handle freight from Dublin, where the transport workers are on strike. Men to the number of 3500, employed in the frieght yards of the various railways, went out yesterday afternoon and were joined later by 4000 at Birmingham.

That a complete freight tie-up is expected on the northwestern line is shown by a warning issued by the Cunard officials to homeward-bound Americans to carry all their baggage with them on the boat trains.

Bangor, Me., Sept. 17.—According to a statement given out from the general offices of the Bangor and Aroostook railroad the postoffice department at Washington has conceded all points concerning the carrying of mails on some of the branches of the road over which the railroad company made an issue, agreeing that the demands were fair and would be granted at once.

This will lead to immediate restoration of the mail service.

HUERTA FAVORS FREE BALLOT

Message Declares Election Will Be Unrestricted

PEACE HIS GREATEST TRIUMPH

Hopes to Have Country Pacified When He Turns Office Over to His Successor—Recent Diplomatic Exchanges With United States Passed Over With Bare Mention

Mexico City, Sept. 17.—Provisional President Huerta delivered his semi-annual message last night at the opening of the second session of the Twenty-seventh Mexican congress. In it he promised to spare no efforts to bring about the unrestricted election of president and vice president of the Mexican republic next month, declaring that it would constitute the greatest triumph of his career to turn over the office to his successor with the country at peace, as he hoped to do.

Huerta said the strained diplomatic relations between Mexico and the United States had caused the Mexican nation to suffer unmerited affliction and had retarded the pacification of the country. Nevertheless, he asserted he had good grounds to hope for an early solution of the differences between the two nations and to see Mexico and the United States once more united in bonds of friendship.

The provisional president drew a distinction between the attitude of the government of the United States and that of the people of that nation, saying "the tenseness of our diplomatic relations with the government of the United States of America, although luckily not with that people," had put Mexico into a state of apprehension.

The message was disappointing to many, who had expected Huerta would deal at some length with recent diplomatic exchanges. This subject, however, he said, "being so delicate and the permanent commission of congress being already informed," and the fact that negotiations were still pending, he would pass over with a bare mention.

The silence which prevailed during the reading of the presidential document by the reading clerk was broken at its conclusion by prolonged cheering, in which the congressmen were joined by the crowds in the galleries.

SULZER OWES HIM $26,500

Contractor Reilly Says He Loaned $10,000 After Nomination

New York, Sept. 17.—Hugh J. Reilly, a contractor and railroad builder for the Cuban government, one of the witnesses before the Sulzer board of impeachment managers, said he loaned Governor Sulzer $10,000 in cash shortly after his nomination. Sulzer, he said, still owed him this money in addition to other loans which brought his total indebtedness to Reilly up to $26,500.

"I didn't want to lend him the $10,000 and told him not to get a swelled head just because he'd been nominated," said Reilly, "but he promised to pay me back the next February and so I gave it to him. He never paid it and he still owes me $26,500."

FEW FAVOR NEW LAW

New Bedford People Want Child Labor Statute Changed

New Bedford, Mass., Sept. 17.—Pathetic stories of hardship caused by the new child labor law were told by mill workers last night at a hearing before the special legislative committee.

The law provides that children between 14 and 16 shall work not more than eight hours a day. The schedule of the mills calls for a working day of nine and three-quarters hours. Witnesses said the result is many families are unable to get along because they have been deprived of the aid of their young children.

A vote taken among the 250 present showed only six in favor of the law as it stands.

EXCITING NIGHT CHASE

Alleged Negro Assailant of Woman Captured In a Cornfield

New Britain, Conn., Sept. 17.—A body of armed neighbors pursued and captured without resistance Charles Adams, a negro hostler, who had been accused by Mrs. W. C. Vogt, living in the outskirts of the city, of assault upon her.

Over hills and through dales Adams was chased through the night until an automobile party finally drove him into a cornfield. Then men with rifles and shotguns closed in. In court Adams was held in $10,000 for trial.

SCHMIDT AND VICTIM

Priest and the Aumuller Girl Whom He Confessed Murdering

Hans Schmidt, an assistant priest at St. Joseph's Catholic church at 406 West One Hundred and Twenty-fifth street, New York, has confessed murdering and dismembering the body of Anna Annuller and depositing the parts of the torso in the Hudson river. The girl was a servant in the house of another priest. Mystery surrounding the finding of parts of the body baffled the police departments of two cities, but New York officers were successful in finally running down one clew and after locating Schmidt obtained a complete confession from him.

INFERNAL MACHINE IS SENT TO OTIS

Owner of Los Angeles Times Is Saved by His Servant

Los Angeles, Cal., Sept. 17.—General Harrison G. Otis, owner of the Los Angeles Times, received an infernal machine by mail. It was the second time within three years that Otis' life had been attempted by a bomb.

Any chance of his being killed or injured by the bomb was foiled by the watchfulness of Otis' Japanese servant, who became suspicious of the package and called his employer's attention to it.

The first infernal machine sent to Otis was found at his residence a few hours after The Times building had been destroyed by explosions through the efforts of the McNamara conspirators.

The latest attempt on his life was attributed by Otis to agencies friendly to those in The Times conspiracy.

PROBE BY STATE POLICE

Relatives of Girl Found In Reservoir Think She Was Murdered

Medford, Mass., Sept. 17.—State police officers have been called into the investigation of the death of Miss Margaret Fallon, aged 25, of this city, whose body was found floating in the reservoir near Tufts college. Her father and sister are emphatic in their declarations that they believe she was murdered.

Robbery was the motive for the murder, Miss May Fallon, the 22-year-old sister of the dead girl, believes. She declared that $17 her sister had when she left home was missing when her body was found.

LOUIS MOULANEM DEAD

Hancock, Mich., Sept. 17.—Louis Moulanem, 30 years old, believed to be the largest man in the world, died in a hospital here after an illness of a few days.

He was seven feet eight inches tall, and at one time traveled with a circus. He became tired of that life and engaged in farming.

Explosion Kills Scientist's Wife

Woodbridge, N. J., Sept. 17.—The insatiable interest shown by the wife of Dr. Louis Gottschalk in his experiments caused her death by an explosion in the laboratory when she was alone there.

Deception of Truth.

HOW SHE PICKED OUT THE TWINS

The benevolent old gentleman stopped at the sight of the two simliar-looking infants in the baby carriage and said, in a pleasant voice, to the girl in attendance: "Ah! Twins?"

"Yes, sir," replied the girl: "both boys."

"So?" said the old gentleman. "How do you tell them apart?"

"This one," said the nurse, pointing, "is this, and that one is that."

"Dear me!" said the old gentleman, "how very interesting. "But," he added, indicating the second one, "might not this one be this also?

"It might," said the girl, after a short pause. "Then, of course, that one would be that."

"Well, then," said the old gentleman, "how do you manage to separate them?"

"We seldom do; but when we want to put one in one room and the other in another."

"How do you know which one you're putting in which room?"

"We look and see which one is in the other room, and then we know the other is in the which room."

"Very good," said the old gentleman, warming up to the problem, "but if one of them was in the house and the other was away somewhere, would you be able to tell which was in the house?"

"Oh, yes, sir," said the girl, earnestly; "all we would have to do would be to look at him and then we would know that the one we saw was the one in the house, and then, of course, the one away some-where would be the other. There are only two of them, you see, which makes it very easy!"

The benevolent old gentleman then passed on.

LAIS

A Story Showing the Power of Beauty Without Conscience For Evil

By F. A. MITCHEL

Alexis Alexandrovich, a tall, slender youth of fifteen, while hunting rode up to a peasant's cottage on his father's estate in Russia to ask for a drink of water. A little girl, not more than seven years of age, stood in the door looking up at him with the mild blue eye indigenous to northern climates. Her hair, too, was of a light hue, but her cheeks were a pair of roses. As she looked at the young man her face broke into a smile, revealing white teeth, while a dimple appeared in each cheek. Alexis forgot about the drink of water, so enraptured was he in the beauty of the child.

"Lais!" he exclaimed.

The girl continued to look at him and, notwithstanding her few years, perceived that she was admired.

"Do you know," he asked, "why I call you Lais?"

"No."

"I will tell you. More than 400 years before our Saviour came upon earth an Athenian general captured a picturesque village on the island of Sicily. Among his prisoners was a little girl about your age, so bewitchingly beautiful that he carried her back with him to Athens, where a great artist painted her as a nymph at a fountain, and all the great men of the time were enraptured with her."

"Did they give her pretty presents?" asked the child.

Alas! Underneath all this beauty lurks the viper—the desire to use the charms to obtain "pretty presents." One day the child might not only secure the presents, but ruin those who gave them to her.

This was the first meeting between Alexis Alexandrovich, the son of Count Alexandrovich, a Russian nobleman, who dwelt, as his ancestors had dwelt before him, on his estate, a kind master to his serfs and a humble subject of the czar. The boy received a cup of water from the child, and as she handed it up to him he noticed the beautiful shape of the arm and hand that extended it. And as tender as were her years out of her eyes came a look to charm him. He laughed that one so young should show such a disposition and rode away, leaving the child gazing after him.

Alexis, who was studying at the time to enter the university, found when he returned to his books that the face and figure of the child kept thrusting themselves between his eyes and the page before him. As soon as his school hours were ended he went again to the peasant's cottage, making excuse this time that he wished to borrow from her father a gun with which to shoot birds. The man was intent on the matter of the gun, but his wife noticed that Alexis had not come for a gun, but to feast his eyes on her little daughter. After Alexis had gone she said to her husband:

"I foresee great things for our Katia. Such beauty must elevate her to a higher rank than ours. Did you notice the admiration in the eyes of the young count?"

"No."

"It was plain to me. He will come here at times to gaze at her, and if her beauty holds when she comes to womanhood he will marry her, and, instead of spending her days in this hut, she will live up on the hill and be a countess."

Many were the excuses Alexis made to see his Lais, as he called her. Now it was fishing tackle, now his horse needed a shoe—for the peasant was a smith—but whatever it was he wanted his eyes never left the child while he was at her father's place, and Lais knew that she had made her first captive. When Christmas came and brought with it a little ring from Alexis she gave the kiss he asked for, but after he went away her young brows knit, and, her mother asking her if she was dissatisfied with her gift, she pouted and replied:

"Yes. There is no gem in it."

Alexis went to the university; but, though he left his father, his mother and his home behind him, he could not leave his Lais. Those innocent eyes, that delicately rounded face, those exquisitely curved lips that seemed formed only to be kissed, were present in his memory and in his thoughts during his absence, and each year when he returned she had grown a year older, and instead of losing her childish beauty there was added to it that of a budding womanhood.

And now the countess had learned the secret that her son was infatuated with a peasant's daughter. Realizing that such a passion could not be eradicated by argument, she said nothing to him, but arranged with her husband to send Alexis away as soon as he was graduated from the university. The count went to St. Petersburg and obtained a government position for his boy. But, alas, it came too late! The day the appointment arrived Alexis informed his parents that he had married the blacksmith's daughter.

There was nothing for it but to accept the situation. Alexis assured his father and mother that his wife's beauty would gain her an entrance into any society. An elaborate wardrobe was procured for her, and when her husband set out for the capital to enter upon his duties he took his young bride with him.

There was no disappointment in the reception of the young countess at the capital. From the moment she appeared at court she created a sensation. The czar showed his admiration upon receiving her, and the men of the imperial family vied with each other for her favor. The first painter in St. Petersburg begged to paint her. Her husband, far from fearing that he would be ignored from having a peasant wife, began to dread the attention of men who were loading her with every attention. It was not long before a certain grand duke fell under the influence of the countess' beauty, and one evening when she was preparing to go to a ball at the Winter palace her husband saw her putting on a necklace of pearls so valuable that his father's whole estate would not have purchased it.

The trouble had begun. The countess admitted that the grand duke who was so attentive to her had given it to her, and since her husband could not give her such presents she would get them where she could.

Alexis did not go with his wife that night to the ball, and when she came home he was not there. Nor was he ever seen again at the capital. His wife continued to live there sumptuously, but whence she derived her income no one knew. The Grand Duke Ivan was devoted to her and wished to marry her, but could not do so as long as she had a husband living.

One day papers came from America stating that a man had jumped from the deck of a steamer in New York bay. His baggage on being examined had revealed the fact that he was a Russian named Alexis Alexandrovich.

Had this news come a year earlier the Grand Duke Ivan would have married the widow. Unfortunately when it reached St. Petersburg she had had an illness that spoiled her beauty. So her lover settled 500,000 rubles upon her, thus purchasing an amicable separation between him and her.

But the countess had not been idle in the matter of drawing wealth into her net. Her gems alone were a fortune. She had been successful in the way she had planned. She was very rich, but she had no standing among her own sex. She left Russia and bought a villa on one of the Italian lakes, a chateau in an aristocratic quarter of Paris and several minor establishments elsewhere. But, while she lived in grandeur, she had not risen socially above the peasant she was born. She made several entrees into the social life of places where she was not known, but her story followed her, and she was dropped.

The countess had no conscience, but she had a dread. There were active as well as passive crimes to her debit, and she feared that some one of them would tear down the structure she had built up and leave her at the mercy of the law. She had no remorse for the young man whose life she had wrecked. She had been born without such sensibilities. She lived without either conscience or remorse, but the cloud that hung over her slowly deepened. At first it was no bigger than a man's hand. She had relied implicitly for immunity from punishment upon that puissant beauty with which she felt sure she could bring any man to do her bidding. Then came the loss of her weapon, and for the first time in her life she felt defenseless.

One day the cloud which had now become as black as midnight sent forth a bolt. She was in her garden in her villa on the lake. A man whose hair was as white as snow and whose face was furrowed met her face to face as she turned a clump of trees.

"Who are you?" asked the countess. "And what are you doing in my grounds?"

"I have come to warn you. As to who I am, I can prove my identity by a single word."

"Speak it," she said.

"Lais!"

She shuddered, but made no reply. But presently she said:

"I thought you were dead."

"I preferred you should think me dead and arranged the evidence of my demise. But there is no time to lose. For that love I bore you when you were a child and I but a youth I have come to save you. Go from here at once. The Italian police are coming this night to arrest you on the requisition of the czar of Russia. This I know; how I know it does not matter."

He turned and left the garden. The countess staggered to the house, and within half an hour, disguised as an old man, she was pulled in a boat across the lake, where she hired a post carriage and was drawn over the border into Switzerland.

Count Alexandrovich returned to Russia, intending to devote himself to his old father and mother, whom he had made to suffer for his ill fated marriage. He found them both dead, having succumbed to the ruin of the son they loved so well. The count sold his estates and, returning to America under an assumed name, made a home for himself in the far west, where he endeavored to forget his past in the work of raising grain. Amid the tall corn and the waving wheat he gradually became again a man with a future, for he was still barely past middle age.

An old woman, Lais now lives on a hill looking down into one of the seacoast cities of South America. She is a veritable hag. She has no servants to do her bidding, for all her visible fortune was sequestrated by the governments of the countries in which it lay, and her jewels she lost years ago at Monte Carlo. She has returned to the conditions under which she was born, except that her marvelous beauty has given place to hideous ugliness.

Since this was written her husband, having received the news of his wife's death, has married again.

RETURN TO NEW YORK BLOCKED

Thaw's Application For Federal Writ Is Suspended

PROTECTED AT LEAST A WEEK

Judge Finds No Statute Under Which Man In Fugitive's Position Can Be Extradited—Hearing Before Governor Is Postponed Until Tuesday—May Be Ultimately Freed

Littleton, N. H., Sept. 17.—In an open discussion with William T. Jerome, after announcing the suspension of the Thaw hearing, Judge Aldrich of the United States court said that search of the statutes had failed to reveal to him any law under which a man in Thaw's position could be extradited.

The hearing on the extradition requested by Acting Governor Glynn of New York, scheduled for this morning, was continued until next Tuesday. The information was telephoned here from Concord.

Thaw's application for a federal writ of habeas corpus was continued at least one week, on the request of Thaw's counsel, when the case was called before Judge Aldrich.

When Judge Aldrich took his seat Mr. Shurtleff, for Thaw, pointing out that the extradition hearing in the Thaw case was to be held in the near future, asked that the habeas corpus hearing be postponed.

Jerome objected. "There is no federal issue involved here," he said. "I feel constrained to say that this writ has been obtained under circumstances which approach very near trifling with the court."

Here he introduced an affidavit by a newspaper writer, setting forth that Thaw's counsel had told him that the writ had been obtained, not to bring about the fugitive's freedom now, but to safeguard him in the future against sudden removal should extradition be granted.

"This writ," Jerome concluded, "presents no serious question of law or fact, but was obtained for no other purpose than delay."

George F. Morris, one of Thaw's lawyers, answered Jerome. The application for the writ was entirely regular, he said, while the warrant on which New York sought to get Thaw was a mere subterfuge.

"It is an honest endeavor on our part to get this matter before the court," he said. "We have no assurance that Jerome would not take Thaw at once if the extradition warrant were signed."

"Do you wish to press the question of bad faith?" asked Aldrich of Jerome, after Morris had finished.

"No," said Jerome, "not in view of what Morris has said. We accept his word."

"What do you propose to do, then?" insisted the judge.

Jerome hesitated.

"The immediate question," continued the court, "is, whether the proceedings shall go on or be suspended. It is the judgment of the court that a suspension would not menace the interests of either side, and in view of the fact that the governor hesitates to proceed with the extradition hearing until the status of this matter is assured, I suspend it. It is not adjourned, but suspended, and I suggest that either side notify me within six days when they are prepared to go on with it."

Thaw, smiling, sat with his eyes riveted on the court. His lawyers were grinning.

Marshal Nute and Sheriff Drew were appointed to continue as custodians of the fugitive with instructions to let him confer freely with counsel.

When Governor Felker passes on the matter of his extradition to New York at the hearing to be held at Concord on Tuesday next, the findings, if adverse to Thaw, will be reviewed by the United States district court, and should a decision against him then be rendered, successive appeals will be taken until the case reaches the highest court in the land.

This was the announcement made by the Thaw lawyers after the most notable court victory for the fugitive, either in Canada or the United States, since his escape from the Matteawan asylum for the criminal insane.

STRIKE INVOLVES 10,000

Additions Expected to Ranks of Men Now Out In Dublin

Dublin, Sept. 17.—Over 10,000 men have joined in the strike movement started by the transport workers here, and the building and other trades are greatly affected.

It is estimated by the leaders that unless peace between the men and the employers is soon reached 6000 more men will be thrown out of work, as their labor depends on that of the men now on strike.

Thief Identified by Coattails

Paris, Sept. 17.—Miss Walmsley, a Baltimore girl, seized the coattails of a thief she found in her hotel room and they remained in her grasp when he escaped, but his torn coat served to identify him to the police.

Bites Off Tongue In Chasing Hat

Hartford, Sept. 17.—In chasing his hat which was being blown down the street, Joseph Brown stumbled and fell under a street car. He bit off his tongue.

YOUR FALL FROCK.

How to Do the Smart and Fashionable Bead Work.

The new fall blouses and gowns are profusely decorated with beads. Now is the time for the deft fingered girl to enhance her costumes with bead decoration. As most beadwork is done by hand, it would be expensive to buy bead trimmed clothes, as handwork is always costly.

Beaded motifs and ornaments, bead fringes and bead tassels will all be prominent, with the colors ranging from the subdued tones to the brightest known shades and combinations. Orange, yellow, bright green, purple, blue and red are used in combination on a background of black, navy or white net. Light colors will also be used for evening gowns, such as white, pale blue, pink, lavender, etc., with gold and silver bugles, seed beads and satin beads.

White china and satin beads are used on black net and chiffon with white or black embroidery and vice versa. Jet beads and bugles are used with white satin beads and white and black embroidery on white chiffon or net. New chiffons and nets have a printed design in contrasting colors, which are brought out by an outline of colored, gold or china beads or by colored silk or metal threads. In these designs oriental patterns are much used.

For the simple touches of scroll design used on yokes, sleeves and tunics the beads should be strung on a thread, fashioned into some graceful design and sewed to the gown or other article of wearing apparel. The pattern in embroideries may be worked up with silver, jet or colored beads.

Plain bands and beaded girdles are made by stringing the beads on firm linen thread. These strings of various colored beads are then couched down upon the net form bands and medallions. You must design as you go along when making this kind of beadwork, as it is impossible to have working patterns for it.

When following a design that is to be crocheted, insert the needle through the stitch, push the bead close to the edge of the work farthest from you, draw the thread through the loop on to the hook, leaving the bead on the other side, which, when finished, will be the right side of the work.

Fans are touched up with beads; there are beads on slippers, stockings, purses, neckwear and hair ornaments. If you wish to go into more extensive beadwork, for a small price you may buy a loom which you could easily learn to manipulate.

HOW TO APPLY A TIRE.

Always Remove Rust and All Other Foreign Matter.

Before applying tires remove rust and all other foreign matter. If the tire has been ridden deflated at any time, mud may have accumulated on the rim and unless this is removed the tire cannot adjust itself properly. Soapstone dusted on the rim will act as a lubricant and make it much easier for the tire beads to slip into their correct position, thereby reducing the danger of pinching the inner tube to a minimum.

Before placing the inner tube inside of case inflate just enough to round it out. Do not use a tube of the wrong size and be sure that the spreader of the valve is adapted for the particular type of case, whether regular, clincher, quick detachable clincher or Q. D. cable base. Dust tube and inside of case with talc, which will reduce the friction and prevent adhesion of the tube to case after heated in service.

If too much talc is used, however, and any water should work its way on the inside of the tire, there is danger of grit and attending injury to the tube. Powdered graphite is not quite so nice to handle as talc, but is a much more durable lubricant.

How to Make Children's Shoes Wear.

To make them wear longer wash children's shoes occasionally to remove the dirt and old polish and soften them with oil. When any part of the sole becomes badly worn it should be mended at once, for usually a shoe will wear out at one point more quickly than at another, and by paying 10 or 15 cents to have that part mended it will save dollars in time. Gun metal finished shoes are preferable for everyday wear, for such shoes are lusterless and can be cleaned with oils instead of polish, which is destructive to the best leather, even when sparingly used.

How to Use Old Chairs.

Do not throw away your old chairs. By cutting them down you can make them useful for the front steps. Take a saw and cut off the back legs entirely and then measure the depth of the step and cut off the front legs so that they will just reach the next lower step. In this way the chairs will fit on the steps, and the fact that they have back rests makes it a pleasure to sit on the steps summer evenings.

How to Bathe Baby.

Use a handful of absorbent cotton instead of a cloth the next time you bathe the baby. It has all the good qualities of the sponge and, being renewed each time, is absolutely sanitary. Place the child in the tub while it is empty, then gradually and carefully pour the water in, and there will be no more screaming with fright, but the bath will become a delightful affair.

How to Mark Clothing.

To bring the letters up black when marking clothing with indelible ink press firmly against the chimney of a lighted lamp or gas globe for a moment. This will do when a hot flatiron is not convenient.

DIFFER BUT DON'T ARGUE.

It is only Anglo-Saxons who feel that it is not necessary to fight merely because they widely differ. This truth was stated by a man of vast experience in countries of the world.

If it is true in a political and moral sense, why couldn't it be a maxim to be studied by all of us?

Much of the friction of life, much of the bitterness and unjust criticism could be avoided by keeping to the truth of this statement.

Why argue with any one who differs from us? What good does it do? What court of high appeal is there to prove that we are in the right and that others are in the wrong.

That woman is to be dreaded as a friend, a relative or a companion who goes through life trying to convince and convert every one who thinks differently from her on any question, from cookery to calculus.

This is an utterly different frame of mind from the one that makes us feel we are right in what we think and in what we do. The world would be a mighty feeble place to live in, and rapidly disintegrate, if every one of us born into it didn't have an opinion and could be relied upon to stick to it.

It is all right to have a conviction, right or wrong, and to believe that it is right because it is yours, but there is no excuse or palliation for the fault of tilting a lance at every one who thinks another way.

If two women see different sides of an affair, there is no reason why they should come to bitter words about it, drop into personalities and each go off and call for help.

It is always in the power of one woman to keep a difference of opinion from becoming a fight of words. She can always state her side of the case, listen, more or less amiably, to a different opinion and then desist from anything further.

There's no use trying to convince any one in a heated argument. This never worked out in political debate or in friendly conversation.

If you would be happy in your own mind, you should make it a maxim for your guidance not to argue with whom you differ.

Refuse to do it. This isn't weakness. This is strength.

WHERE TIM'S BROTHER WAS.

Timothy Olcott, an urchin of wretched appearance was hailed before a Boston magistrate, charged with obstructing traffic by playing ball in Tremont street.

"Can't your parents dress you better than this?" the magistrate asked, looking with disgust at Timothy Olcutt's filthy rags.

"Me parents is dead," Timothy blubbered.

"But you've got some friends, surely?" said the magistrate.

"I've got a brother," the boy answered. His brow cleared and he spoke proudly.

"Where he is?"

"He's at Harvard University," said Timothy, throwing out his chest.

"Is he in a good position there?" asked the magistrate.

"No," said Tim. "He's in a bottle there. He was born with two heads."—Exchange.

The cottage of John and Abigail Adams was open to public inspection until eleven o'clock and its many historic relics, large open fireplaces in which a slight fire burned merrily, and mottos were inspected many regretting that a longer time was not afforded in which to examine the many articles of historic interest.

The reception committee included President and Mrs. Brooks Adams, Mrs Herbert W. Lawton, Mrs. W. G. A. Pattee, Mrs. Richard R. Freeman and Rev. Adelbert Lathrop Hudson.

At the close of the addresses lunch was served by the following ladies:

REGISTER OF PROBATE.

It becomes necessary at the Primaries at the September 23rd to elect a successor to John D. Cobb, who voluntarily retires from office this year, and the nomination for his successor is one which should be carefully considered by the voters of the district.

After Mr. Cobb's long and very satisfactory service, it is incumbent upon us to select a competent and worthy successor.

This office is a very important one and requires that the Register be specially trained in the duties thereof, particularly as a great many people who have business connected with the office are not attorneys and it is vitally important that they be correctly informed as to the proper procedure.

Eighteen years ago J. Raphael McCoole, the present Assistant Register, began his duties in the Probate Office and after serving ten years was appointed Assistant Register by the Judge of Probate, Hon. James E. Flint, and has continued during the last eight years to faithfully and efficiently discharge the duties of this office.

He is a member of the Bar and as an attorney at law and from long training and special study has become proficient in Probate practice.

Mr. McCoole is a Republican of the Dedham Republican Club and also the Norfolk Republican Club.

Both the Democratic and Progressive Parties have signified their endorsement of Mr. McCoole.

Mr. McCoole is not seeking to advance his interests by misrepresentations and false statements, but relies entirely for his support upon a faithful and efficient discharge of the duties of the office during a long term of service ,and for this reason should receive the earnest and energetic support of all who wish a faithful administrator of public office.

Respectfully,
JOHN O. HALL.

NEW YORK FALL FASHIONS

New Tunics and Drapings—Turkish Models With Short Slashed Coats—The Silhouette—Hats.

Late summer styles seen at Newport during the tennis tournament when all the fashionable set wore their smartest and prettiest clothes, showed most of the models that will be exploited this Fall.

BALLET TUNICS.

"Ballet tunics" as the short full overskirts of flimsy materials are called, have evidently come to stay for a considerable period. These reach a line just above the knee, and are often stiffened at the hem with bindings of taffeta or satin, or finished with narrow gimp or trimmings which aid in producing the requisite flare. Tunics of this sort are often in triplicates, and when of silk materials are cut in circular form to give the outline. Blouse coats of satin or taffeta pleated where they are not tucked, and tucked where they are not pleated, finish at the same length as Ballet Tunics and give very much the same silhouette. Originally designed, as are all modish models for the svelte,, willowy figure, these half length drapings are successfully worn by many women of different build, but it takes a clever dressmaker to adapt them to any but slender types. Breaking the line in front with tucked up drapings, and adding sashes to produce a long effect are some of the devices employed. Ladders of small pump bows, and buttons are other trimmings much used to give a perpendicular line.

PLANNING THE FALL OUTFIT

Not every woman will care to adopt the ballet draperies, but draperies of one sort or another are almost universal in the new modes, and unless these are to be dowdy and slouchy in effect extra care is needed to secure the correct corset model.

Fortunately it is no longer necessary to buy expensive foreign makes, now that leading American manufacturers launch authoritative new types each season. These embody the latest ideas as to outlines and insure a graceful modish effect for one's new fall clothes, or remodelled old ones. The rust-proof corsets made by the Warner Bros. can be relied upon for wear as well as authoritative style, while types and prices vary so that everyone can be suited.

NEW MATERIALS

All the velvet faced woolens that were used a year ago are back in improved textures and many new ones make an enticing showing in basket weaves and brocades. These are especially adapted to the extra coats which are such an important feature of the outfit, since odd coats and skirts are firmly established in fashionable favor. While the majority of fancy imported cloths are expensive, the yardage required is small, so that in the end a careful buyer need not exceed her allowance.

PLAIDS AND CHECKS.

Wool plaids and checks make a great majority of the extra skirts, that everyone uses. Stripes are also considerably in vogue in a mixture of colorings and shadings. The rule is "plain coat and plaid skirt," or plain skirt with one of the plaided sport coats, which rival those up in brilliant colorings of soft faced woolens. Nothing is too gay, and emerald green and red seem to be the leading favorites.

FALL COLORINGS.

Browns, especially in the shade which the French call "tete de naigre," or negro's head are very much used both for whole costumes and as a contrasting note to lend style to a light or neutral tinted outfit. Brown veils, especially the draped lace ones are fashionable, turned back from the brims of the larger hats, or falling loose to the shoulders with small headgear.

Purple is similarly used, also vivid greens. The use of bright hosiery with low shoes of white or black increases, and this note is repeated in the hat, dress or its trimmnigs, sometimes only in the sash or necktie.

Fanny Field.

New York Sept 15, 1913.

THE LIMIT.

Jesting about railways of the South is rather an overworked profession. Before mason-jarring the crop, however, let Senator Burton, of Ohio, have the floor.

"Speaking of railroads," he says, "the ultimate word, in my experience, was a 'limited' on which I traveled in Georgia last summer. At a point where we were making our greatest speed, a man stood at the side of the track with a moving-picture machine. I leaned out of the window and called to him, How are you getting on?'"

"He stopped turning the crank, and spoke with an expression of deep disgust.

"'It don't seem to be no use,' he said. 'Hold your head still, please. I want to get a time exposure.'"—Everybodys for December.

Tips For Tennis Players.

One of the faults of the inexperienced doubles player which is most persistent is standing still. This is one of those necessities in doubles that are often overlooked. But no partner can do justice to his team unless he moves after every shot to the center of the angle of the return. In other words, both men must constantly change their positions, moving back and forth toward one side or the other, according to where they have sent the ball. If the net man has volleyed deep into the right hand corner both players move across to the right. The right hand player thereby protects the shot down his own side line, and the left hand player protects the cross court shot down the central diagonal of the court.—Outing.

Lubricant For Aluminium.

Many machinists, especially those employed in the motor engineering industry, are frequently called upon to work in aluminium. To satisfactorily do this work various lubricants have been tried, which, however, owing to their volatility, are of little use. A suitable lubricant is tallow or cobbler's wax. This latter does not dissolve quickly and consequently does not flow as freely as the volatile oils.—American Machinist.

Going On.

A terrible noise of thumping and stamping came from Bob's room early one morning.

"Bobby, Bobby," called his mother from downstairs, "what is going on up there?"

"My shoes," replied Bob.

Love's Paradox.

"Love results in many paradoxical situations," remarked the professor.

"What is one?"

"To keep the love of another one must return it."—Buffalo Express.

Satisfying a Customer Carried to an Extreme

By HOLLAND.

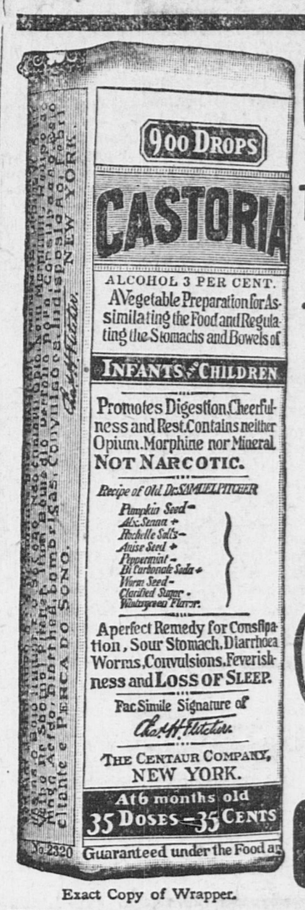

A WOMAN who bought a dress which she found was not just what she wanted went with it to one of the biggest stores in the world and said it did not suit her. She wanted her money back, but explained that she had lost the sales slip. The sum she claimed was given to her.

Two days later she found the sales slip and discovered that she had not bought the dress at the store to which she had taken it, but had bought it at a rival establishment. She went to the store and explained.

"We knew you had not bought the dress here," explained the manager, "but you were palpably dissatisfied with it, and our aim is to satisfy all our customers. If we have impressed on your mind the fact that we are more than fair we are satisfied. We covet nothing more than such a reputation as we are sure you will give us."

Many will think that this was carrying fairness too far. Perhaps it was, but it was done by the greatest retail merchant of this age, one whose name is known wherever the English language is spoken and whose expenditures for advertising run up to a million dollars a year.

Successful advertisers know that satisfied customers are an invaluable asset. You have an advantage in dealing with the liberal advertisers

There is more Catarrh in this section of the country than all other diseases put together, and until the last few years was supposed to be incurable. For a great many years doctors pronounced it a local disease and prescribed local remedies, and by constantly failing to cure local treatment, pronounced it incurable. Science has proven catarrh to be a constitutional disease and therefore requires constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. PLANNING FOR WINTER SEASON

Choral Society to Repeat Oratorio Elijah in the Spring

The Executive Board of Quincy choral society met on Tuesday evening at the home of the secretary Mrs. Edith C. Page on Upland road. The new conductor Mr. George S. Dunham was present and a most attractive plan for the season's work was mapped out. Two concerts will be given the second one, of more particular importance will come in the spring, at which the Oratorio "Elijah" will be presented. This masterpiece is always attractive and the Quincy Choral Society won its first laurels by a fine rendition of this wonderful work.

A definite plan for the first concert has not yet been fully decided upon, but will be announced very soon. Rehearsals for this season will begin on Tuesday evening October 7 at New Hancock hall. Singers from all parts of our city are cordially invited to become active members of the Society.

CITY SQUARE BARRY RALLY

Edward P. Barry, Democratic candidate for Lieutenant Governor, addressed a large audience in City Square Wednesday evening in the interest of his nomination. He criticised Richard H. Long his opponent, claiming that he was not an enrolled Democrat but a Republican who, because of his money was invited into the contest. With Mr. Barry was Joseph J. Maloney, Herbert A. Kenny and Thomas J. Powers of Boston and Dennis Lennan of Lowell.

FLOWER DAY.

The Quincy Day Nursery association is to have a flower Day all day Saturday, to raise money for the support of the Nursery for the coming year. The flower day to take the place of Tag day which has been held annually for several years. It is on the same principle, except the contributors receive a flower instead of a tag.

It is hoped each and every person will give as generously as they can afford toward the support of this worthy charity. The Nursery is always open for inspection and a visit will amply repay one for any generosity as it brings a realizing sense of the good work being carried on there.

FAMILIES ARE DRIVEN OUT

Early Morning Fire Forces Tenants Into Street

The alarm from Box 61 at 1.03 this morning called the department to a bad fire in the store of R. J. Barry at the corner of Hancock and Squantum streets. The fire evidently started in a shed in the rear of and attached to the store and when the department arrived the fire had worked up the outside of the building to the roof, and had also worked in through the windows and into the store.

This made it evident that the fire must have been burning some time before it was discovered. When the department arrived a stream was laid to the rear of the building. When it was found that the fire had worked inside, a stream was then taken into the front of the building and the fire driven out. It was also necessary to run chemical lines to the tenements above, where the fire had just commenced to creep in. The fire here was put out by the chemical streams although some water had worked into the tenements from the stream that was being played in the outside.

The firemen also found it necessary to tear away some of the copeing on the outside, as the fire had worked beneath it. The department however had the fire under control soon after its arrival although it was not until 2.30 that it was out and the recall sounded.

Chief Litchfield estimates the loss on the building and contents will be from $800 to $1,000.

There are two tenements over the store, one of which is occupied by Mrs. James Gilmartin and the other by John Dolan. Both of these families were driven into the street by the fire. The loss to their property however is largely by water and will not be heavy.

From what could be learned by Chief Litchfield the fire, as stated above, started in the shed adjoining the store on the rear. It seems that there was a wedding in the neighborhood Wednesday night and it is thought that some of the guests sought the shed for a quiet smoke and that a cigar or cigarette, carelessly thrown on the floor started the fire. It had evidently smouldered for a long time before it broke out into flame and was discovered.

Wednesday afternoon at 3.53 the department was summoned on an alarm from Box 36 for a fire in a hen house in the rear of John H. Gillis bicycle store on Franklin street. The hen house set within a few feet of a large gasoline tank, but fortunately the gasoline tank was buried under ground and the fire did not reach it.

When the department arrived they tipped over the hen house, which fell to pieces, and a chemical stream quickly extinguished it. The fire is thought to have been started by some children playing with matches.

John W. Walsh after 21 years of faithful service has severed his connection with H. L. Kincaide & Co. He will be missed by a large number of patrons who wish him success in his future undertaking.

RIVADAVIA COMING BACK

Something is the Matter With One of the Turbines

The battleship Rivadavia which has been undergoing her standardization trials off the Rockland, Me., course is expected back in Boston harbor sometime today, for repairs to her turbines. Something is wrong with one of the engines and what it is can not be determined until its jacket is taken off.

For what can be learned it seems to be taking too much steam which heats the buckets so hot that they curl up.

During her standardization trials she has attained a speed of 22 1-2 knots which is more than the contract calls for.

As soon as the minor repairs necessary are made she will return to the Rockland coast for her 30 hour runs at a 20 knot speed.

WILL SETTLE THE ESTATE

Special Administrators Appointed For Williams Estate

At Wednesdays session of the probate court for Norfolk County, held at Dedham, Judge Flint appointed the special administrators, for the will of George E. Williams late of Braintree, the tangled state of whose affairs has been well aired during the past week.

The condition of the estate first came to public notice through the Ledgers report of the hearing before Judge Flint at the Quincy session of the court last week Wednesday. Since that time the papers have been full of statements about his affairs.

At this hearing a large number of lawyers were present representing creditors, a minority of whom objected to having Atherton N. Hunt, who was named in the will as executor, from being appointed. It was openly stated at this hearing that the estate was hopelessly insolvent and the minority creditors desired someone else appointed .

Judge Flint however finally settled the matter by stating that he would appoint a special commission to administer the will, and that he would name Mr. Hunt as one of the two. He desired that the counsel for the creditors should get together and agree upon the second party. He also informed counsel that unless they did agreed upon the second man in forty-eight hours that he should select the second man.

Counsel failed to agree and Wednesday at the Dedham session Judge Flint announced that he had appointed Emery B. Gibbs the well known referee in bankruptcy, to act with Mr. Hunt. The amount of the bond will be announced later.

According to what can be learned the estate in such a mixed up condition and a long time will be required to settle it up. Williaim E. Hingston the handwriting expert has frequently been called upon during the past few weeks to examine signatures and he states that he has found many forgeries. In some of these cases it was the signature of Mrs. William that was forged.

The Milton woman who had figured in public print considerable in connection with the case is well known by many in Quincy being connected with a prominent Quincyfamily .

WARNING TO PRIZE FIGHTERS.

While the sport of boxing grows more popular, the big prize fighting contests are being outlawed. The public likes boxing as a display of physical efficiency and scientific training. It is less inclined to tolerate the brutality of finish fights.

Jess Willard, as principal, and 11 others, were held the past week in the California Superior court, on charges of murder in the second degree, growing out of the fatal Willard-Young contest near Los Angeles, Aug. 22. This marks a change in public sentiment.

The objection to prize fighting is not ordinarily the suffering inflicted on the fighter. The bruiser appears on the street the day after a defeat smiling cheerfully, and with no marks that show a month after.

Rex Beach, who described a recent battle for Everybody's Magazine, saw much to admire in the grace of motion of the combatants, their superb resistance to pain, the muscular perfection, the control of muscle by brains.

What sickened him happened when a 10 years old boy rose at the ringside and yelled. "Go it, go it, kill the nigger." The youngster's face was flushed, and he seemed to get satisfaction from seeing pain inflicted.

Also when the defeated fighter sank in collapse, his victorious opponent's face puckered into a plaintive wrinkle. He did not seem to care for that side of the job. But the only person in the audience who showed the emotion of pity or sympathy for defeat was the wife to the champion, who gave a cry of regret.

A sport that practically drives women from the spectators' seats needs a clean-up. The Willard-Young fight and its sequel should be a sharp warning to all who manage boxing contests, to keep the sport within the limits of chivalry and courtesy.

THE FLYING FISHERMAN.

A Famous Train And What It Does For New York and New England.

The Flying Fisherman is the name given to a freight train which runs from Boston to New York on the New York, New Haven and Hartford covering 234 miles in eight hours and five minutes, including the time taken in making four stops. This is believed to be the fastest freight train in this country. The average speed of the train by which Boston supplies New York daily with fish is 30 miles an hour, but there are portions of the route between the two cities over which it travels much faster than this, sometimes doing a mile in sixty-nine seconds.

The fish dealers at the T wharf in Boston get these orders and rush them to the train. The whole idea of the railroad men in arranging the schedule and running time or this train has been to give the fish dealers the most time possible. Did it have the usual running time of a freight train it would have to leave hours before it does, and this business of supplying New York with fish would be sadly disarranged and a good part of it lost no doubt.

The last case of fish is often put aboard this train when it is moving. It leaves Boston every day at 5.55 P. M., stops at Readville, Providence and Midway, and pulls into the Harlem River yards in New York at 1.50 A. M. Waiting for it every morning is the Fulton Market boat, with its own crew of stevedores to store the fish on board. This is but the work of an hour and then the boat speeds down the East River and ties up at Fulton Market about 3. A. M. Wagons are waiting for it there and the fish that was put aboard the train in the afternoon is ready to be cooked by breakfast time.

PERFECTLY PASSIVE.

"Jed Blade to the bar," ordered the judge in a rural Alabama court. A big hulking nergro ambled up to be arraigned for murder.

"Jed," began the judge, "you are charged with the gravest crime known to the law, that of taking the life of a fellow-man. One of the forms of punishment for murder is death. Hav you made any arrangements for your defense in this case, Jed?"

"No, suh, jedge. I ain't done nuthin'."

"Have you a lawyer, Jed?"

"No, sur jedge. I ain't got no lawyer. I ain't got nuthin', jedge."

"Well, Jed," said the judge, showing a little impatience, "have you talked to anybody about the case?"

"I talked to de sheriff some dat night when he come after me, jedge, but you knows dat didn't do no good."

"For your information Jed I will state that it is within the province of this court to appoint counsel for any defendant who has none. I am now ready to appoint a lawyer. Do you want one?"

"Fo, sur, jedge. I don't want nuthin'," replied Jed.

"See here," snapped the judge. "I won't have any more or this foolishness. You say you don't want any lawyer. Well, then, what do you intend to do about this case?"

"Well, I tells you, jedge, I ain't 'tendin' to do nuthin,. If its jes de same to you, jedge, as far as I's concerned I's willin' to let de whole matter drap right here."—Everybody's Magazine.

—Some musicians who play at dances in Boston and elsewhere have taken strong ground against some of the modern dances. Bandmaster Sousa, however, takes the ground that the turkey trot for one is all right and "conducive to longevity." Dancing the trot in places where most of such dances take place we should be more inclined to think conducive to an early collapse, physical, mental and moral. —Brockton Enterprise.

Women Will Marry For Love When Economically Independent

By Miss ESTHER DRESDEN, President of Chicago Young Women's Suffrage Alliance

MANY of our women in the wealthy middle classes live in a state of SEX PARASITISM, dependent on man and kept by him in luxury and comfort without doing an iota of mental or physical work. With the other classes marriaage simply means MORE WORK.

WHEN WOMEN BECOME ECONOMICALLY INDEPENDENT THEY WILL MARRY ONLY FOR LOVE.

Under present conditions they enter the industrial field until they can procure a life job of domestic work via a husband.

Today, NO MATTER WHAT WORK WOMEN DO BEFORE THEIR MARRIAGE—whether they are trained nurses, stenographers or other skilled workers—upon marriage they are ALL REDUCED TO THE LOW LEVEL OF KITCHEN DRUDGES. HAPHAZARD METHODS IN USE IN THE HOME TODAY are detrimental both to the family and to the individual.

TO STRAIGHTEN OUT HIS ESTATE

Court Names Administrators In the Williams Case

MYSTERY IN DRAWING OF WILL

Efforts to Ascertain by Whom It Was Done Prove Unavailing—Double Life of Insurance Man Was Known to His Chauffeur—Tried Hard to Save His Own Life

Dedham, Mass., Sept. 18.—Atherton N. Hunt and Emery B. Gibbs were appointed special administrators of the alleged tangled estate of the late George E. Williams, the insurance agent whose double life and methods of high finance were bared following his death, by Judge Flint in the Norfolk county probate court.

Hunt, an attorney with offices in Boston, by the will of Williams, was named a co-executor of the estate with Mrs. Williams. Gibbs is a referee in bankruptcy in Boston. Each administrator will furnish bonds of $50,000.

The reason for the naming of special administrators was the delay in probating the will because of the condition of the estate, and the necessity of someone taking charge of the real estate.

Williams died last summer and many creditors appeared when the will was offered for probate.

Considerable mystery is attached to the drawing of Williams' will. Efforts to find out who drafted it have proved unavailing. Max C. Brasel of Braintree, who was Williams' chauffeur during the last year of the insurance man's life, says he saw Emma R. Wellington of Milton reading over a typewritten document at the Parker House last May, before the will was executed. Miss Wellington was Williams' private secretary, and was left $25,000 by her employer as well as other interests in the estate.

In regard to the double life led by the insurance man, Brasel says: "I got on to his dual life right away. I had been working for him but a short time when I got 'wise' to what he was doing. I pitied Mrs. Williams and often felt like telling her that her husband was not true to her, but I did not want to 'butt' in. She was devoted to her husband and appeared to have all she could bear."

That Williams used every means within his power to save his life and that in his last days he realized that his acts must become known is the most recent information regarding his career. He was in the Oakland hospital sanatorium, Woburn, when he realized his grave danger and had physicians send abroad and buy some toxine which costs $10,000 an ounce. After it arrived the toxine was used and had a beneficial effect.

Williams and the hospital authorities were encouraged, until complications developed and the patient began to sink rapidly again. The physicians said that the only hope was to have an infusion of blood. Mrs. Williams and her daughter, Mrs. F. N. Patch, both volunteered for the operation, and the latter was accepted and gave much of her blood.

Williams was too weak, however, and died shortly after. While he was very weak, his desire to live was shown by a promise to a nurse that he would give her an automobile if he recovered.

Business experts are of the opinion that Williams could have continued to carry on his crooked dealings for twenty years longer without detection, so masterfully did he handle the most intricate problems of finance.

Thousands of notes were obtained by Williams during his career. They were discounted and constantly renewed, the great interest system ever moving without a slip. Through the manipulation of policies and new notes he was able when pressed for certain sums of money to raise the needed amount. He never failed, for he kept his credit good—a credit made possible through a perfect system of robbing Peter to Pay Paul.

Expert Accountant Permitted to Retire When Contract Expired

Washington, Sept. 18.—Harvey S. Chase of Boston, the government's highest paid employe, has quit his job at $50 a day. He is an expert accountant and has been engaged for the last two years in revising the bookkeeping methods in the treasury department.

Chase recently recommended several changes the installation of which would take two years more of his time at the same figure, but the secretary of the treasury decided this was not needed and permitted Chase to retire when his contract expired.

ARSON SQUAD STILL BUSY

Attack Is Made Upon Historical Mansion While It Is Occupied

London, Sept. 18.—A desperate attempt was made by a suffragette "arson squad" to burn down Penshurst Place, the historic fourteenth century country seat of Lord De L'Isle and Dudley, at Tunbridge, Kent.

The inmates of the great mansion, awakened by the crackling of wood and by clouds of smoke, found the framework of a number of windows ablaze. A working party of household employes extinguished the flames with the efficient apparatus on the premises.

Two women were seen fleeing across the lawn in front of the building, and a large amount of suffrage literature was found in the grounds, while heaps of rags soaked in petroleum were discovered in several places.

IMPEACHMENT TRIAL IS ON

What Friends and Opponents of Sulzer Think Result Will Be

Albany, Sept. 18.—The trial of the impeachment of William Sulzer, governor of New York, opened today. The fall of the gavel assembled the first high court of impeachment ever convened in this state to pass upon charges against her chief executive.

Friends of Sulzer renewed their assertions that he is confident of a verdict which will clear his name of the stigma cast upon it by the adoption of the articles of impeachment by the state assembly. They are no less certain that he has no thought of resigning and thus escape the ordeal of whoat promises to be a lengthy trial.

On the other hand, his opponents are free in expressing the opinion that after the legal preliminaries have been swept away and the taking of testimony begun, the governor will surrender his office rather than face a grilling cross examination which probably would search out the innermost secrets of his life.

MISSIONARY RIDGE FIGHT RE-ENACTED

Veterans Watch Regulars Attack Militia at Crest

Chattanooga, Sept. 18.—Missionary Ridge was the objective point of a majority of the veterans and visitors to the Grand Army encampment yesterday afternoon. The famous charge of fifty years ago was reproduced as accurately as possible with the aid of the Seventeenth United States infantry and companies of the national guard of Tennessee.

The maneuvers took place on the west slope of the ridge, the crest of which was held by the national guard, under command of Major Brown. United States troops advanced from the vicinity of Orchard Knob, where Commander-in-Chief Beers and staff witnessed the maneuvers.

HUNTING BOMB SENDER

Dynamite Intended For Otis Was of Extremely High Power

Los Angeles, Cal., Sept. 18.—To that area of the city which comprises the business section and a portion of the cheap hotel district the police authorities have confined their energies in the search for the sender of the dynamite bomb which was received through the mails by General Harrison G. Otis, proprietor of the Los Angeles Times.

The dynamite used was high-power explosive known as "85 percent," similar to that used by James B. McNamara in blowing up The Times building Oct. 1, 1910.

The legal limit for explosives in Los Angeles county is 40 percent nitro, and the police and county officials are trying to learn what purchases of 85 percent dynamite have been made recently at powder factories.

THINK SCHMIDT FEARED RESULT

Girl May Have Asked Him to Give Up Priesthood

WAS TO CONFIDE IN FRIEND

Slain on Day She Intended to Seek Advice—More Crimes by Slayer Are Unearthed—Stole Easter Collection, Robbed Priest, and Illegally Performed Mariage Ceremonies

New York, Sept. 18.—With the appearance of District Attorney Whitman in the case the wheels of justice were set in motion to claim the extreme penalty against Hans Schmidt, the assistant priest of St. Joseph's church, for the brutal murder of Anna Aumueller. At the same time it was learned that the fear of exposure probably prompted Schmidt to kill the the young woman, cut up her body and throw the fragments into the Hudson river.

It is believed Miss Aumueller had asked that Schmidt give up the priesthood so that he might openly appear as the father of her child. Annie Hirt, who was employed with Miss Aumueller at the St. Boniface rectory, and that on Aug. 30 Miss Aumuller went to her and said she was in great trouble.

"My eyes are filled with tears; and yet I can smile. I am unhappy; and yet I am happy," Miss Hirt said Anna declared.

Then she told Miss Hirt she would return the next Tuesday, confide in her and seek her advice. It was on the next Tuesday that Miss Aumueller was killed. Miss Hirt believes the girl had lost faith in Schmidt and that he feared exposure.

Whitman said the inquest would be held next week. James A. Delehanty will take charge of the case. The evidence will be presented to the October grand jury and the trial set before Judge Foster the latter part of October or the first of November.

A plea of insanity is expected, but the authorities now denounce Schmidt as a monster, a criminal with the keenest of intellects, and will combat the insanity plea to the limit.

Fr. Evers talked with Schmidt and asked him if he did not think it his duty to write his father and mother in Bavaria and tell them of his trouble. Schmidt replied that he would write, but was convinced it would not do any good.

In a note from newspaper men, Schmidt was asked what Anna Aumueller knew of his counterfeiting.

"Anna knew nothing of my plans to solve the social question by creating money for all the poor people here," he wrote.

Schmidt also sent out a note saying he never took money from the poor, but as a matter of fact gave freely to the needy. Investigation at St. Joseph's rectory, however, revealed evidence tending to show that Schmidt had robbed parishioners, and had stolen money from a visiting priest while the latter slept.

The wallet belonging to this priest, which had never been seen since the robbery, was found in Schmidt's room at the parish house. Inspector Faurot's men declared they also discovered that Schmidt stole about $400 of the collection taken at the church last Easter.

In the case of Ernest A. Muret, the pseudo dentist, who was arrested following a raid of the West One Hundred and Thirty-fourth street flat, charged with having in his possession a revolver in violation of law, the federal authorities hope to connect him with the counterfeiting, which Schmidt admitted he had entered into with the dentist.

Many young married couples living in the vicinity of St. Joseph's church are in a quandary concerning the legality of their marriages which had been performed by Schmidt. Another priest of the church said many such marriages had been discovered. Recently it was said Schmidt had performed many without licenses and had made no records on the church books. These marriages are illegal and must be performed over again.

THE EDUCATIONAL FIELD

High School — Public Schools
Woodward Institute — Parochial School

The superintendent called the grammar masters together Tuesday evening to discuss with him the provisions of the new child-labor law which went into effect September 1st. The enforcement of this law has not yet begun as the necessary blanks and instructions from the new Commission of Labor have not yet been received. The method of enforcement was discussed however and within a few days, the provisions of the law will be carried into effect. In brief, the conditions under the new law are as follows: All existing labor certificates, of whatever type are now null and void and are to be replaced at once with the new forms. A boy or girl between the ages of 14 and 16, must hereafter be either at school or at work. Even if the child is to remain at home during those years, there must still be written permission from the school authorities based on evidence that the child is engaged in profitable work.

A child of 14 to secure a labor certificate must, first of all, obtain from the prospective employer a card certifying his intention to employ the child and stating the specific nature of the employment. The child must then obtain from a physician, either the school physician or the family physician, a certificate that upon examination, he appear physically able to perform work of the nature specified upon the employers record. These two certificates are to be supplemented by a certificate of age to be obtained from the office of the city clerk in that city where he was born. He must then obtain from the principal of his school a certificate that he has completed the work of the fourth year in English and has attended school at least 130 days during the 12 months after his 13th year. The presentation of these four certificates to the attendance officer, Charles H. Johnson, will be necessary for the issuance of the employment certificate, which must be made out in duplicate. All papers connected with the certificate must be filed as records. Whenever the child leaves the place where employed, the employee is required by law to return the certificate to the attendance officer within two days. The child leaving employment must obtain new employment or return to school. A new certificate is required for each new employment and the return of the certificate to the attendance officer gives notice that the child is to be looked up at once and returned to school.

The employment certificates become void when the boy reaches the age of 16 and must be replaced at once with educational certificates which are to be held by all employed between the ages of 16 and 21.

The effect of the new law will be to increase very materially the number of school children between the ages of 14 and 16, since it becomes much more difficult for them to secure employment, many occupations now being closed to them. It will also increase very materially the duties of the attendance officer in making out the new certificates keeping his record full and complete and in looking up non-attendance between periods of employment. The new law is also very clear and insistent in regards to the evening school attendance of illiterate minors. This will no doubt have an effect upon the evening school attendance this year at the Adams and Willard buildings.

EVENING SCHOOLS.

Posters are being placed in various parts of the city today, calling attention to the opening of the evening schools and trade classes on Monday, October 6. These notices will be put in all the factories of the city as well as among the granite sheds. The schools for foreigners will also be advertised by small notices printed in the foreign languages.

In the schools for the non-English speaking people, the school committee expects to have some teachers who are familiar with the Finnish, Italian and Syrian languages. This will make it possible not only to teach the rudiments of English but to give through interpreters some simple instruction relative to American citizenship.

TRADE CLASSES.

It should be borne in mind by those desiring trade instruction that an advance registration is necessary and that the high school will be open on the evenings of the week preceding Oct. 6 for that purpose, Saturday excepted. Fifteen are necessary to start a class. The granite workers class will be in the Old Adams School, the others in the High school.

PUBLIC LIBRARY NOTES.

Many people are not aware perhaps of the monthly lists which are issued at the library on such subjects as "Boats and boating," "Panama canal," etc. The last list, "Some resorts and historic places in Massachusetts" deserves special attention as it includes an annotated list of historic Quincy which answers many questions often asked at the desk. The previous list "Stories for girls" is especially adapted to high school girls.

We would like also to draw the attention of our people to the quarterly index of new books added to the library. This list of new books is classified under such subjects as Sociology, Literature, Arts, History, Fiction, etc., also books added to the Children's room and should be of special value to the student who may see what has lately been added on his subject. All of these lists are for free distribution and the last ones may be taken from the rack under the bulletin board near the entrance door, the older ones may be had by applying at the desk. The books indexed in the later quarterlies are usually placed on the shelves near the delivery desk where patrons may see and handle them.

—Declaring that basket ball is an injurious form of exercise for girls, Miss Fannie Bickley has decreed that the game must not be indulged in by the girls under her charge in the physical department of the North Central high school in Spokane, Wash., "Basket ball for girls is a very bad form of exercise," observes Miss Bickley. "Hereafter I shall not allow it at all. I will not allow any form of competitive games, for many girls are strained in this manner and often do themselves injury for life. They will not be allowed to become overtaxed, and the gymnasium work will be more along systematic lines of study." Non-competitive gymnasium work, in which all girls may participate rather than a few who are athletically inclined will be substituted for basket ball. The new ruling has caused some disappointment on the part of many of the girls in the high school, as interschool basket ball games have been a feature since the school was founded.

—There has never been a better summing up of what high speed really means than the following statement by George Westinghouse: "When emergency brakes are set upon a train running at the rate of 80 miles an hour that train is still running 60 miles an hour. 1100 feet from the point of application, whereas if the train had been running 60 miles an hour it would have stopped in 1100 feet." Here is the whole problem of high speeds. For most travelers 60 miles an hour is sufficient, and the railroads are making their schedules and concentrating their attention on safety first.—Philadelphia Public Ledger.

A QUEER LAKE.

With Neither Inlet Nor Outlet It Has a Mysterious Tide.

There is a curious Swiss lake, Lake Marjelan, which at regular intervals completely disappears and does not begin to refill until the following winter or spring. On these occasions it empties itself so rapidly that the Rhone rises several meters in a few hours and overflows its banks.

But it is not necessary to go to Switzerland in order to find a freakish lake. There is a pond in the center of Long Island, at the present end of the Motor parkway, called Lake Ronkonkoma. It has neither inlet nor outlet and lies at the foot of the hills that form the backbone of Long Island. Round its shores are many pretty summer homes. The trees about it are much larger and more beautiful than elsewhere on Long Island. The waters of the lake are very clear and cold. In some places it seems bottomless.

The strange thing about Lake Ronkonkoma is that it has a tide; not a tide like the ocean that rises and falls every twelve hours, but one that takes seven years to rise and seven more to fall. The difference between high water and low water mark is between thirty and forty feet. Many scientific men have studied the curious phenomenon, but no one has found out what causes this mysterious tide. Neither long continued rains nor severe droughts affect the quantity of water in the lake.

The Indians used to hold the lake in great awe, and few dared to cross it in a canoe. There is a legend of one brave who, while fishing, was drowned in the lake. His body was found six months afterward nearly ten miles away in Long Island sound.—Youth's Companion.

HIS BACKING WAS GOOD.

And President Tyler Found a Place For Old Jack Dade.

President Tyler had a curious office seeking experience at the very beginning of his administration. Old Jack Dade, a character about Washington, who had been the president's classmate at college, went to the White House, and said he, "Jack, I want an office."

"You do?" said President Tyler. "What office on earth do you think you are fit for?"

"Why, one o' these 'sinecurees' I hear so much about—no work and good pay," Dade promptly replied.

"Well, Jack," said Tyler deprecatingly, "you know that I am president now and must have some kind of warrant for making an appointment. Can you get anybody to indorse you? Could you bring me a letter of recommendation?"

"Oh, yes," said Dade. "I'm fixed for that," and he produced a letter of four pages written by Tyler himself to President Harrison, whom he had just succeeded, urging the claims of his dear friend and classmate, Colonel John W. Dade, for a good, fat office. "Cast your eye over that!" he exclaimed in triumph.

Tyler read the letter attentively to the end, folded it carefully and said: "Jack, your backing is irresistible. Come up here tomorrow, and I'll have a place for you."

The next day Colonel John W. Dade was appointed keeper of the Federal prison of the District of Columbia.—Louisville Courier-Journal.

Appropriate Excuse.

"Before the establishment of righteous courts and trials by jury where justice could be obtained," explained the teacher, "persons suspected of certain crimes were tried by what was known as the 'ordeal.' One of these was the 'ordeal of fire.' Hot plowshares were laid at short intervals along the victim's path, and the suspected person was blindfolded and compelled to walk over them. If he succeeded in doing it without stepping on the hot irons he was deemed innocent. But if he received burns he was adjudged guilty. Who would submit to such an ordeal now? Johnny, would you?"

"No, ma'am," said Johnny.

"And why not?"

"I'd get cold feet."—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

UPLIFTING OF CACTUS JUNCTION.

The mercury stood at a hundred in the shade. The waves of heat rolling up from the blistering alkali sand struck the face like the breath of a blast furnace. Inside the little shack, which served as railroad station at Cactus Junction, the monotonous click-click of the telegraph instrument was the only sound to break the stillness.

The east-bound limited was late, and the two men, awaiting impatiently its arrival, sprawled on a baggage truck on the shady side of the station, mopped their perspiring faces, and cast lurid anathema at the desolate, sun-baked vista before them.

Nearby, on the edge of the uneven platform, a short, rotund individual, with a battered sombrero perched rakishly over one ear, dangled his legs and surveyed the landscape through half closed eyes.

"This here cummun'ty's had its share of moral upliftin's," remarked the rotund individual, apropos of nothing in particular. "They've riz and subsided regular. Sorter now-you-see 'em-now-you-don't. I guess most ev'ry denomination and ev'ry kind of missionary society has had a hack at it one time or another; but all of 'em's give it up sooner or later, and left the place to its own wickedness, which they wa'n't slow in statin' was beyond their powers to root out.

"So little old Cactus Junction was sorter put on the black list and left to its own devices, and what with its careless population—the placer-miners driftin' in from over San Carlos way, and the cow-punchers foregatherin' regular of a Sunday mornin', and One-Eyed Johnson's' layout, it was about the most blightin' morally unwholesome spot on this side of the Rockies.

"Then one day—'twas somethin' like two years after we thought we'd been give up for good—'long comes the afternoon west-bound, pulls up at this here very depot where we're sittin' and drops off a feller that looks like he'd spent most of his life apologizin' to folks for cumberin' the earth with his presence He was tall and thin and dressed in black. Had a long, shiny coat that flapped about his knees, and a pair of congress shoes that squealed like a roped calf at ev'ry step. He stands for a minute on the platform, grippin' a yeller valise in one hand and starin' up at the sign, 'Cactus Junction,' on the station, like he couldn't really believe he's fell off at the right place. Then he nods solemn to the bunch of us, who was camped on the baggage truck, and makes tracks for the town.

"Bein' took back, not one of us let out a yip till he was out of hearin'. Then Ginger Doane heaves a sigh and rubs his eyes like he'd seen somethin' he couldn't really believe was there.

" 'Did you see it?' says he, plaintive.

" 'We seen it,' says Mississip' Brown reassurin'.

"Ginger shook his head mournful. 'I wonder if its folks knows it's here?' he says.

" 'How'd you assay it?' asks one of the placer-miners from San Carlos, who was with the bunch.

" 'Give it up,' says Ginger. 'Maybe a lunger.'

" 'Sheepman,' puts in a cow-puncher lookin' ugly.

" 'One-Eyed's new faro dealer,' says Stubby Clark.

" 'Hoss doctor,' was Mississip's guess.

" 'Tell you what we'll do,' says Ginger. 'We'll go over to Johnson's and make a pool of it. Five dollars to come in and the feller that gets nearest to it takes the pot, Johnson to decide who's nearest.'

"Which we done immediate, but that pool had to be split up and the entrance money returned to each of us, for there wa'n't none of us within' gunshot of it. No, sir, not within a hundred miles of it.

" 'Twas two days before we finally found out what the feller was doin' here, and when we did it fair took the breath out of us. Second day after he come we heard he'd rented the hall across the street from Johnson's place, and that night he hung out a sign over the door: 'Cactus Junction Mission. All are welcome.' Below was a list of services—one for most ev'ry day in the week and three on Sunday.

"We'd had missions in our midst before, so we wa'n't so et up with surprise as we might have been. Took it more as a joke than anything else, considerin' the feller that was runnin' it. Agreed, sorter tacitlike, to let it alone and leave it to die a natural death as the others had done. No, sir, never give it another serious thought, we didn't after One-Eyed Johnson had called the pool off and returned our money.

"You see, havin' been uplifted before, and the novelty of it havin' wore off, so to speak, we never felt no interest whatever. Of course the stories goin' the rounds come to our ears, and we listened to 'em languid, and shook our heads knowin'. It seemed the mission was flourishin' less than the others had at the start. Bein' left alone so long, Cactus Junction was hard to stir up. The only ones who ever went to the meetin's, we heard, was Annie the cook at the Cactus House, and old man Boggs, who done chores round town, and them two didn't really count, for Annie was a poor, hysterical critter, and old man Boggs was more'n half nutty, anyway.

"Called 'em the congregation, we did, and use to crack a good many jokes about it. But after a time the jokes run out, and we never thought no more of that mission than as if it hadn't been there.

"That feller tried ev'ry dodge he could think of to get us to attend the meetin's. Distributed pamphlets by the ream, and had the glad hand ready for us whenever he met any of us. We took all the pamphlets he offered—they was just the right size for shavin' papers—and wrung his hand cordial whenever he offered it, but as for goin' to the meetin's, that was another matter.

"Three months went by, and the feller was beginnin' to look kinder thin and worried, but so fur as we could see the mission was still bein' run for the sole benefit of Annie and Boggs. Clearly we see the beginnin' of the end, and it wouldn't have surprised us none to see that sign come down at any time. 'Twas plain as the nose on your face that Cactus Junction was dead in its trespasses and sins, and perfectly willin' to remain so.

"Mississippi wanted to make up a pool on how much longer the feller could hold out, but there wa'n't even interest enough for that. Looked as if this last attempt to uplift Cactus Junction was goin' to be the weakest of the lot, but right there was where we was in the worst kind of error.

"So long as I live I sh'nt never forget that Sunday. 'Twas one of them just right days, neither too hot nor too cold. Sun was shinin' mild and pleasant, and way off to the west you could just make out the peaks, loomin' white and ghostly against one of the bluest skies you ever clapped eyes on.

"We got together 'long about noon at Johnson's place—the miners from San Carlos, the cow-punchers from the ranges, and all the rest of us, some twenty all told. Money was plenty, and 'twa'n't ten minutes before the wheels was clickin', the faro table goin' full blast, and a hot game of stud inaugurated in one corner.

"There sure was doin's that day. Every body was feelin' prime, and the game run high. Mississip' busted the wheel dry, and come over to the stud game lookin' for more worlds to conquer. Long about 4 o'clock he'd managed to peddle out most of his pile, and was beginnin' to play even more reckless, when from across the street come the sound of singin'—Annie's high-pitched, squeaky voice, and old Boggs' joinin' in with a homemade bass that didn't help out matters none, so fur as we could see.

"Some one cracked a stale joke about the reg'lar congregation, and we all laughed fit to kill, that is, all except Mississip', who was gettin' kinder ugly, and then the game went on again harder'n ever.

"Presently some one sung out: 'Meetin's over, boys.' From the hall across the street we see Annie come out and head for the hotel, and old man Boggs shufflin' up the street, his shoulders rollin' and his game leg draggin' at ev'ry step. Then it got kinder dusky, and Johnson lit the lamps.

"Mississip' was still losin' steady. He'd shoved up his watch to Ginger for a handful of chips and was cussin' somethin' frightful, when the door burst open sudden and some one slid in, shut it with a bang, and stood with his back against it.

"No one paid any particular attention. I doubt if any one so much as looked up. But a minute later ev'ry eye in that room was focused on the door; for a voice, very low and very steady, said:

" Hands up, boys!'

"Stanin' white and straight by the door was the mission feller, and in his hands were two ugly-lookin' forty-fours that never shook a mite.

" 'Hands up!' he said again, sharp.

"There seemed to be a sort of unanimous opinion among us. Up went ev'ry pair of hands as high as it could reach. That is, all except Johnson's. He tried to sidle to the bar and get his hands on the gun under it, but the feller stopped him short. He swung one of the guns on Johnson and his eyes begun to glow.

"Stop where you are!" he snaps. 'Put your hands up, quick.'

"There was silence for a minute. I don't suppose it was more'n a few seconds, but it seemed an hour to us there, holdin' up our hands and lookin' sheepish. Then the feller cleared his throat.

" Boys,' says he, 'there's no use repeatin' to you the old fable of Mahomet and the mountain. I've tried to get you to come to the mission, but since you won't, the mission has come to you. I don't intend to keep you long, but I want a chance to say a few words to you, and this seems about my only way of doin' it.'

"Then he opens up and gives us some right straight talk. He tells us how he's come here and how he's failed. He says it ain't his own personal failure that's affectin' him so much as the fact that he's got to leave us with the work he come to do still undone. And there's somethin' in what he says and the way he says it that rings true. He tells us his money's give out and that now he's forced to go away. Then he gets after us and hauls us over the coals, in great shape, not sneerin' and vicious, but so gentle and sorrerful that we all gets interested in spite of ourselves.

"I guess that was about the strangest meetin' ever held in Cactus Junction, or anywhere else, for that matter. There we was with our hands stretched up to the ceilin' and the feller gettin' after us like a Dutch uncle.

" 'And so, boys,' he says, in conclusion, 'I'm goin' to leave you and not trouble you further, but if one stray word I've said to you this afternoon sets any of you to thinkin', perhaps, after all, I've not come here entirely in vain.'

"With that, he tosses the guns to the floor, cool as you please, and puts his hand on the doorknob. But before he could turn it, Ginger Doane had jumped into the middle of the stud table.

" 'Wait a minute, parson,' he sings out. 'I guess we know nerve when we see it. Boys,' he goes on, turnin' to us, 'What we've just heard is the truth, every word of it—the truth told to us by a man. We need civilizin' and refinin' influences here in Cactus Junction, just as he says. We need him to show 'em to us.'

"He grabs up a hat and shoves his pile of chips into it. It was the largest pile on the table.

"'Here's my contribution toward keepin' him here,' says he. 'And if the rest of you are half men, you'll come up, as I have. Johnson'll cash 'em in for you, sir, he explains, turnin' to the feller who'd held us up. 'An' there's one thing more. I'm goin' to the meetin' at the mission tonight, and any man here that don't attend has got to answer to me.' "

The belated train came rumbling up to the station. The rotund individual arose lazily.

"That's how Cactus Junction come to get its real upliftin' ," he chuckled.

MAY PROVE FATAL

When Will Quincy People Learn the Importance of It?

Backache is only a simple thing at first;
But if you find 'tis from the kidneys;
That serious kidney troubles may follow;
That dropsy or Bright's disease may be the fatal end,
You will be glad to know the following experience.

'Tis the statement of a Quincy citizen.

Mrs. R. A. Neil, 40 Edison Park, Quincy, Mass.: "My hands and ankles swelled. I was worse at night after I had done a hard day's work. I used several remedies, but they did me little or no good. My husband brought home a box of Doan's Kidney Pills and I began taking them. I could see an improvement right away. Doan's Kidney Pills got my kidneys acting right and the swelling went down. I wasn't so nervous and felt better in every way. I now keep Doan's Kidney Pills in the house and consider them a fine family medicine."

GENERAL TORELLI KILLED

Italians Suffer Other Losses In Battle With Arab Tribesmen

Benghazi, Tripoli, Sept. 18.—General Torelli, the Italian commander, and thirty-three of his officers and men were killed and seventy-three others wounded in a hard-fought battle with a body of Arab tribesmen, who were eventually forced to retire.

The Italian column, which had been operating for some time against the tribesmen, found them posted strongly on a height commanding the valley of Tecniz.

When attacked the Arabs made a stubborn resistance. They disputed fiercely every effort of the Italian infantry to advance, but the Italian artillery poured a hail of shell on the position and compelled the Arabs to retreat to the desert. General Torelli fell at the head of his troops while urging them on to the attack.

KNOCKS LARGE HOLE IN STEAMER'S BOW

Whale Going at Terrific Speed Strikes Craft Head On

St. Johns, Sept. 18.—A collision with a whale resulted in such serious damage to the Danish steamer Vladimir Reitz that the vessel was forced to put in here for repairs.

The collision occurred about 250 miles east of St. Johns. The crew of the steamer saw the whale approaching at terrific speed, but there was not time to alter the ship's course and prevent the impact. The whale struck the ship head on, knocking a four-foot hole in the bow.

The collision is believed to have killed the whale, for the monster sank immediately, its blood discoloring the water over a large area.

MISS FALLON A SUICIDE

Conclusion of Authorities Who Probed Death In Reservior

Medford, Mass., Sept. 18.—Miss Margaret Fallon, whose body was found floating in the Tufts college reservoir by three students a few days ago, committed suicide, according to State Officer Smith, who has been at work on the case for two days.

The family of the girl still persist in the declaration that she was the victim of foul play by being choked and then hurled into the water.

The Medford police, who have had the case in hand since the body was discovered, feel sure that the 18-year-old girl took her own life and have continued in that statement since the day the body was discovered.

THAW OCCUPIES NEW QUARTERS

Has Hotel "Throne Room" In Granite State Capital

AWAITS EXTRADITION HEARING

Greeted by Crowds on Journey From Littleton and Buys Cigarets For Jerome—Nothing to Do but Lounge Around Until Tuesday—Appeal Rests With Aldrich

Concord, N. H., Sept. 18.—Harry K. Thaw was brought to the capital of New Hampshire to await a hearing before Governor Felker on Tuesday next on the matter of his extradition to New York.

If extradition is refused, he will be a free man to go where he will within the borders of the state; if it is granted, his case will be reviewed by the United States district court on a write of habeas corpus granted by Judge Aldrich, and perhaps appealed to the supreme court of the United States.

Thaw reached Concord from Littleton, N. H., where his lawyers obtained a continuance of the federal writ of habeas corpus in his behalf. A crowd, which cheered him with lusty enthusiasm, gathered about him at the station and followed him to his hotel.

Thaw slept last night in the "throne room" of the Eagle hotel, quarters made famous as the conference headquarters of New Hampshire politicians in days gone by, and since occupied by Taft and Roosevelt on their campaign tours.

The curious, the sympathetic and the enthusiastic greeted Thaw at every station between here and Littleton. Two women school teachers, a minister of the gospel and a venerable man of 80 were among the many who wished him good luck and good cheer.

At Plymouth, where the fugitive lunched, the restaurant proprietor presented him with a box of cigars. Thaw promptly purchased two boxes of cigarets and left them with the remark: "Give these to Jerome when he passes through."

Rooms have bee reserved in the Eagle hotel for Mrs. Mary C. Thaw, mother of the fugitive, and for Josiah Thaw, his brother. Thaw said he expected them today.

Between now and Tuesday, when the extradition hearing will be held, Thaw will have nothing to do but lounge around his room with his custodians. Being in charge of a United States marshal, all rumors of his being kidnapped have been crushed.

Appeal Rests With Aldrich

Washington, Sept. 18.—Weeks, months or possibly years might roll by before the supreme court would act finally, should Harry K. Thaw appeal from the habeas corpus proceedings now pending in New Hampshire. Of late, however, the court has disposed of such important cases quickly.

Whether an appeal to the supreme court from the action of Judge Aldrich, federal district judge in New Hampshire, before whom the habeas corpus proceedings were brought, may be granted, will rest entirely, it is said, with Aldrich himself.

A few years ago an appeal from the denial of a writ of habeas corpus was grantable as a matter of right. Practises grew up, however, which courts regarded as travesties on justice, and the law was changed to give the judge passing on the case the power to say whether there was sufficient doubt as to the points raised to justify an appeal.

Thaw's Chauffeur Set Free

Sherbrooke, Que., Sept. 18.—Roger Thompson, the chauffeur who drove Harry K. Thaw away from Matteawan in a touring car, was set at liberty. The crown authorities said they had no evidence to offer against him. Thompson was arrested on a charge of entering Canada by stealth and bringing a lunatic into the country.

BOSTON HEIRESS INSANE

Taken to Hospital After Peculiar Actions In Philadelphia Hotel

Philadelphia, Sept. 18.—Mrs. Martha Senter, who, ten years ago, figured in a sensational elopement from an academy in Boston, and for whom her millionaire father, Max E. Fleming of that city, searched for weeks before he finally located her, was taken last night to the Philadelphia hospital for the insane, following her peculiar actions in the Bellevue-Stratford hotel.

The young woman is now a widow, her husband having died some time ago. She is 28 years old and hardly less attractive than at the time of her spectacular elopment, when she was regarded as one of the most beautiful young women in Massachusetts.

JUDGE ALDRICH

Presided Over Court When New Thaw Writ Was Heard

After counsel for Harry Thaw were successful in gaining a writ of habeas corpus in the federal court the destinies of the much talked of fugitive were placed in the hands of Judge Edgar Aldrich of the United States court. It was the desire of Thaw's counsel to obtain a postponement of the writ until after action had been taken by Governor Felker of New Hampshire.

Promoters Expect to Interest Other Yachtsmen In Proposition

Newport, R. I., Sept. 18.—The proposed formation of still another syndicate to build a yacht to compete for the honor of defending the America's cup against Sir Thomas Lipton's latest challenger was announced here.

Heading this project are Commodore Clark of Philadelphia and George M. Pyncheon of New York. Both are members of the New York Yacht club.

They expect to attract other yachtsmen to their proposition, and hope to prevail upon Herreschoff, the Bristol designer, who already has a commission from the syndicate headed by Cornelius Vanderbilt, to design a boat for them.

The two men were recently found guilty of violating the white slave law. Federal Judge Van Fleet pronounced sentence on them in federal court.

A ten-day stay of execution was granted, and for that period Diggs was admitted to bail in $15,000 and Caminetti in $10,000, and meanwhile the defense will perfect an appeal to the United States circuit court of appeals.

Her Own Way

She Wouldn't Have It When She Could

By HELEN ORMSBY

Walter was an only son. He early developed an individuality and talent. Instead of being made worthless by petting, he was led to consider himself of especial importance. At college he was an honor man and a leader in class politics. He studied the profession of the law and was early picked out for a prominent man.

Such, in a nutshell, was Walter when I first met him. As for myself, I can only say that I was born inordinately selfish.

Both Walter and I, though we were conscious of an attachment for each other, were equally conscious of the difficulty of two persons, each accustomed to expecting all others to bend to their individual will, to get together, or, what would be more difficult still, to live together. However, for my part—I can't answer for Walter—my deliberations on the subject were naturally confined to myself until he proposed to me. Then the subject was opened between us without reserve.

"I confess," I said to him, "that I admire you, respect you, and I am not sure but that I love you. But there is one person whom I confess I love better than you."

He paled at this, supposing that I referred to a man. I quickly set him right.

"This person whom I love is a woman."

"I see. You refer to yourself."

While I am perfectly willing to acknowledge my shortcomings, it is not pleasant to have others agree with me. I was a bit piqued.

"BY WHAT RIGHT," I SAID, "DO YOU ACCUSE ME?"

"Quite right," I assented, and instead of continuing, as I had intended, I retorted in this wise: "It occurs to me that two persons cast in the same mold"—

"Selfishness," he interrupted.

"Yes, selfishness—would not be likely to get on together."

There was a brief pause between us, during which he seemed to be turning the matter over in his mind.

"I admit," he said presently, "that, while I am the most important man in the world to myself, I am not the most important"—

He had got mixed in his construction, and I took advantage of his dilemma.

"You couldn't very well be a woman without being born over again."

"I mean that the requirements of a woman might be of more importance to me than my own."

He had not put me in a good humor by agreeing with me as to my own selfishness, and I was indisposed to do my part in making room for him on the narrow path on which we were trying to walk side by side. Indeed, I concluded not to divide it with him, but to step before him.

"My selfishness," I said, "which, fortunately for an understanding between us, you have noticed"—

"Pardon me; I meant"—

"Never mind what you meant. You spoke the truth. I am quite sure that you could not give way to any one, man or woman."

"Well?"

"Then why do you make this proposition?"

"I have not denied that I could give way to a woman. I referred to a man."

There was a bit of triumph in his tone, and I knew very well that he had intended to trap me for taking advantage of him when he got mixed up in a sentence that brought him out in a reductio ad absurdum—in other words, ridiculous. Possibly had he said that he loved me so well he would be happy to give way to me in all things without this little sting attached to the declaration I would have been more yielding. As it was, the spiteful skirmishing must continue.

"I have not understood," I said, "from your words thus far—words, words, nothing but words—that you are capable of giving way to any one, man or woman. And since, as you have observed, I am inordinately selfish myself I don't see what object there would be for us in tying ourselves together."

"We would fulfill a natural law."

"By living unnatural lives. No, thanks; I prefer to rem in single. There are too many couples who fulfill a natural law and live a life of perpetual quarrel and end their effort in a divorce court."

He had taken my hand when making his proposition; now he dropped it, saying that since I could not give way to any man and I had no confidence that he could give way to any woman there was nothing for it but to drop the matter. This was not to my liking. Walter had a disagreeable way of agreeing with me.

"Since it is so soon done for," I said, with some acerbity, "the wonder is what it was begun for."

"It was experimental on my part," he said. "I am looking for a girl who will permit me to give way to her in all things. It seems that I shall have to look further."

What impudence!

He rose and was going to leave me when I called him back.

"By what right," I said, "do you accuse me of not permitting you to give way to me?"

"Did you not say that you were quite sure I could not give way to any one, man or woman?"

"You have shown no disposition to do so."

"Try me!"

"How?"

"I will put myself under your orders. The first time I refuse to obey you, to give way to you in any disputed point, send me about my business. The first time you refuse to be obeyed or to have your own way you are to accept me for your wedded husband with the words love, honor and obey thrown in."

Good gracious! He quite took away my breath.

There was a lot more talk in the same vein, I affecting to believe that he was not in earnest or that he would not keep his contract. But he adhered to his purpose, and since I must either lose him or yield to him I yielded. I didn't realize that I was yielding at the time or I would not have done it. He left me, it being understood that the next time we came together we were not to speak of the matter between us, but I was to be on trial. It seemed very absurd to suppose that I was to refuse to have my own way about anything, and I felt quite sure of standing the test. I also felt confident that he was so used to leading every one with whom he came in contact that he would try to make me follow him in all things.

A week passed, during which Walter did not come once to see me. The days seemed inordinately long, the evenings endless. All this time I was having my own way, every hour, every minute. What did Walter mean by keeping away? Was he never coming again? I would have sent for him had not my pride forbidden me. I entered upon a second week with misgivings, beginning to conjure up all manner of reasons for his keeping away from me. At last I settled down to this: He had been convinced that it was useless for two such selfish persons to get on together and had made up his mind to drop the matter.

Now, I am not one of those clinging creatures who rather than lose an idol will beg pitifully. Not I. I made up my mind that if this was his game, if he were intending to drop me, I would have the satisfaction of dropping him. I wrote him a note stating that after full consideration of his proposition I had decided that the facts would not warrant his going any further with the matter and I could not consent to receive him should he call again, except with the understanding that his suit was not to be renewed.

I received no reply at once, as I expected I would, but in four or five days a note came from Walter stating that he had been called away on important business soon after parting with me and had not written since he had expected to return every day. His departure had been delayed and he had reached home to find my note. He added, "Your forbidding me to call again as a suitor has broken my heart."

"Oh, heavens!" I exclaimed. "What have I done?" He had evidently taken my note for a dismissal. I must hasten to assure him that it had been sent through a misapprehension. I wrote him an explanation. He replied that the mistake had been very unfortunate, but since I had forbidden him to call except as a stranger he had not the heart to call at all.

How provoking! He should have understood that this prohibition was recalled without my saying so in words. However, I must withdraw it, and I did so.

The same evening he came to see me and, folding me in his arms, exclaimed: "I've won! You must love, honor and obey me, especially the obey."

"What do you mean?" I asked.

"You forbade me to call again as a suitor, and when I gave you your own way in the matter you would not have it."

"How ridiculous!"

"Ridiculous! Do you deny that you have refused to be humored?"

Of course there were a number of ways to get out of it. No woman can be cornered in a way like that. But I'd had quite enough of it in the two weeks I had been waiting for him, and I didn't care to go through any more of it. So I pretended that he had been very shrewd and had beaten me and I was quite content to let him have his own way.

"My own way!" he exclaimed. "I like that. I have proved conclusively that you won't have yours."

WEIGHS SUNSHINE, MEASURES WIND

New Weather Bureau Head Is Author and Scientist.

REPUTATION INTERNATIONAL

Charles Frederick Marvin, Who Succeeded Chief Willis Moore, Recognized Abroad as World's Foremost Authority on Meteorology and Seismology—Many Inventions.

What does a quart of sunshine weigh?

The obvious answer is that nobody knows. That answer would be wrong. Charles Frederick Marvin knows. He is the man who runs a tape measure over the wind and puts impalpable vapors in the scales and holds his thumb on the palpitating pulse of the earth. Between times he performs miracles. Always he is a quiet, kindly, infinitely patient man. Even the follies of Dame Nature do not make the chief of the weather bureau frown.

Marvin wasn't even a name to our ninety millions until lately. Eight years ago German scientists recognized him as the greatest meteorologist in the world. Then he became the greatest seismologist and earthquakes began calling him up to tell their symptoms. But he kept in his back office and off the first page until Secretary of Agriculture Houston accepted the resignation of Chief Willis Moore.

Begins Search For Scientist.

"Now," said Mr. Houston, "I must have a scientist. Doesn't any one know a nice scientist?"

So Houston wrote to members of the National Academy of Science, asking them to suggest a man for the place. He naturally expected them to nominate a member. Government employees are barred from membership in the academy, but the academicians replied:

"Marvin is the man."

And when Mr. Houston asked "Who is Marvin?" they replied vaguely to the effect that:

"Why, Marvin—why—Marvin! That's all."

Marvin entered by the civil service route in 1884, being the first high grade man to take a civil service examination. Two years later he was chief of the instrument division. He had had a thorough training in mechanical science at Ohio state university. Incidentally, he was a genius. All the work of the bureau is done by instruments. Marvin invented or improved them all.

Interminable Pages of Figures.

Between times he has written many books filled with interminable pages of figures. The lay reader finds them wildly incomprehensible. The scientist keeps them on his shelves for reference. His tables of vapor pressure first reduced to mathematical formulas the processes which result in rain, hail or snow. Twenty years ago Marvin did the first scientific kite flying. Then he invented a self registering instrument—the Marvin meteorograph—which brought back every item of information about conditions in the upper air. Then the world became excited about kite flying.

"I will offer a prize for the best paper on kites," said Octave Chanute, the Chicago engineer.

"I have just concluded my monograph on that subject," said Mr. Marvin. "It as awaiting publication. Do you care to look at it?"

Chanute paid him the prize. Then he began to play with earthquakes. He invented the seismograph which is in use wherever they use such things. He wrote a few large volumes about earth tremors. When not otherwise engaged he invented things for the government, not one of which ever profited him a penny, of course.

Known as Mechanical Genius.

Over and over he has been called a mechanical genius—it was only the other day that some one bought an invention that was fifteen years old and fifteen years forgotten—but he has never cared for money. He has preferred to stay in his office, doing the good, solid, substantial work that has made the weather bureau of the United States the first in efficiency on earth. He was born in Putnam, O., is fifty-two years old, thorough going and mentally honest and patient—patient—patient.

What difference do a few years make to a man who works with the forces that make years?

SEEKS COOKS FOR INDIANS.

Uncle Sam to Give Poor Lo Scientifically Prepared Food.

Lo, the poor Indian should dance with glee. He's going to have scientifically prepared biscuits and the like hereafter.

Uncle Sam has started on the hunt for a couple of cooks—a couple of honest-to-goodness, experienced, reliable cooks who can pass the civil service examination. So he's advertising for applicants to take a test on Oct. 6 in Washington.

These cooks are to be used on the White Earth reservation in Minnesota. Uncle Sam thinks the Indians are becoming extinct fast enough without the aid of ordinary "ham and" dispensers.

BABY MIDSHIPMEN.

In the Old Days When Children Were Sent to War.

Among other improvements in the art of war as attained by the world in these later days is the abolition of the practice of sending children to sea, as was the case when the midshipmen of the old "oak walls" of England often were boys of less than fourteen years.

The Marquis of Dufferin and Ava in telling about the siege of Bomarsund, in the Crimean war, which he witnessed from the frigate Penelope, related this story of one of these little fellows.

"What pleased me most during the whole business," he says, "was the gallant behavior of a little midshipman, a mere child, thirteen or fourteen years of age. About the time when the fire became pretty hot I happened to come across him, and, as he seemed to be as much out of a job as myself, I touched my cap and took the liberty of observing that it was a fine day, to which he politely replied that it was.

"Encouraged by his urbanity, I ventured to ask him how long he had been at sea, to which he answered, 'I have only left my mamma six weeks, but I ain't going to cry on her majesty's quarterdeck,' a remark which I think as worth recording as many a one made by more illustrious heroes. Soon after this, however, a man was killed close to him, and the little fellow fainted and was taken below."

OUR USELESS BUFFALOES.

They Have Passed Away Because They Were Economically Unfit.

As a typical species of American fauna the buffalo had his place in our history, but take him by and large he was a rather useless beast, with no adaptability for civilization. He served his purpose on the plains when men led a nomadic life there and existed on his rifle. But as soon as the range land, over which the buffalo "roamed in countless thousands," became fit for settlement the buffalo was decidedly de trop.

Very little of him was fit to eat. He was worth a bullet when there was no other meat to be had, but a people accustomed to modern steaks and roasts would find him not overappetizing once the novelty wore off. In a word, the buffalo was economically unfit, and he went the way of the unfit.

Had he been conserved he might now be affording opportunity for big game hunters to enjoy themselves in moderation. They are really the only persons who have suffered by his disappearance. To preserve the buffalo as a specimen in our zoos is proper. He is a curiosity and has a historical value. But entirely too many tears have been shed over his destruction. One steer was and still is worth a dozen bison.—Seattle Post-Intelligencer.

Japanese "Movies."

Even the remotest towns in Japan have their moving picture shows, and in large cities they seem to be nearly as plentiful as on this side of the Pacific. In Yokohama there is a whole street of them, and, as the program of each is endless and each picture is announced in huge symbols on a separate variegated banner flying from a tall bamboo pole, the aspect of Theater street is startlingly unique. The pictures illustrating the sensational points of the programs above the entrances and at their sides have a certain quaintness about them, which is accentuated by the fact that they are all originals, not mere stereotyped advertisements printed in raw colors. The "getas" or wooden sandals of the spectators are deposited on a rack before the entrance to a moving picture show, for where other people take off their hats the Japanese leave their shoes.—Popular Mechanics.

Basketball.

Basketball was the invention of one man and was completed at a single sitting. In 1891, in the course of a lecture at the Young Men's Christian association in Plainfield, Mass., the lecturer spoke of the mental processes of invention and used a game, with its limitations and necessities, as an illustration. James Naismith, who was a member of the class, worked out basketball that same night as an ideal game to meet the case. It was presented the next day in the lecture room and put in practice with the aid of the members of the gymnasium. From there it spread to other branches of the Young Men's Christian association and subsequently to athletic clubs and the general public.—New York Press.

An Optimist's Epitaph.

The Carlsbad invalid has ordinarily a surprisingly robust appearance. He looks strong. Scoffers say he has to be to live through the rigors of the cure. There is an apocryphal legend of an epitaph in a Carlsbad churchyard:

I was well.
I hoped to be better.
Here I am!
—Harper's.

Important to Him.

An old lady was telling her grandchildren about some trouble in Scotland in the course of which the chief of her clan was beheaded. "It was nae great thing of a head, to be sure," said the good old lady, "but it was a sad loss to him."

Spanish Peasants.

In Spain the peasant works all day and dances half the night, yet rarely is his food varied from black bread, onion and watermelon.

Things that never could have made a man happy develop a power to make him strong.—Phillips Brooks.

HISTORIC QUINCY.

City of Presidents Has Much of Interest

Old historic Quincy settled in 1625 has much of interest to visitors. When Braintree was incorporated in 1640, the territory now known as Quincy, was a part. In 1792 Quincy became an independent town, and in 1888 was incorporated as a city.

Quincy was named in honor of Col. John Quincy, descendant in the third generation from Ed und, 2d, who settled in Quincy, in 1634; grand-father of Abigail (Smith) Adams, the wife and mother of a President of the United States.

The city includes Wollaston, Atlantic, Quincy Point, South Quincy, West Quincy, Montclair, Norfolk Downs, Wollaston Park, Squantum, Houghs Neck, Adams Shore, Germantown and Quincy Neck, comprising in all over 16 square miles, of which 2,530 acres are in public parks.

FIRST SHE WOULD AND THEN—

An unwilling bride-to-be and mysterious husband-intended figured in quite a laughable little farce-comedy that enlivened the dull routine at the City Health Board offices.

It was early morning, just as the day's work got well started, that the telephone first rang. A clerk answered.

"Hello."

"Is that the Board of Health?" inquired a woman's voice.

"Yes, madam."

"Have you issued a marriage license to John?"

"John who, madam?"

"Why, John—, of course," as though there were not a million Johns in the world.

No, a license had not been issued to her John, she was informed.

"Well, please don't give him one," she pleaded anxiously. "He wants me to marry him, but I simply won't, and that's all there is to it," she added in an annoyed tone.

"Well, if he applies for a license we can't well refuse him," answered the clerk at the other end of the wire. "It's a matter between you and the gentleman afterward as to whether there will be a wedding," he continued, no little amused by the peculiar circumstances of the case.

The lady hurriedly hung up the receiver, and the officers of the board, not a little curious to see John put in an appearance, began an anxious wait.

But the whole day passed and no John showed up.

GIVEN SEVERE SENTENCE

Judge Aiken of the Superior court sustained the fine of $100 imposed by Judge Avery on August Terilla of Kent street, charged with the reckless operation of an automobile in Quincy on June 19 and doubled the sentence in the house of correction. Terila appealed from the finding of Judge Avery because he was sentenced to 10 days.

The government was represented by Assistant Ditstric Attorney Fred E. Katzman who strongly resetned what he termed personalities, injected into the case by J. Alfred Anderson of Anderson, Carney and Peterson, counsel for the defense. Both men made a strong plea to the jury.

On the evening of June 9, Terilla drove a Ford machine at a high rate of speed through a crowd boarding an East Milton car in City Square, and in trying to escape another crowd hit the curbing, almost upsetting the machine. His arrest followed an investigation by Inspector Goodhue,

MARIE L GETS MONEY

Controversy With Nutmeg Settled by Wednesdays Race

Another chapter in the Nutmeg-Marie L. $500 sweepstakes controversy has been enacted in a stiff southwester. Since mid-summer question as to which of the sloops is the faster has aroused interest among yachtsmen, particularly those racing in the Inter-club Association. The Marie L owned by A. W. Finlay, went over the course Wednesday alone, her rival remaining at moorings. The judges last Saturday mailed notices to A. C. Jones, owner of the Nutmeg, and Mr. Finlay, ordering a final race for Tuesday or Wednesday of this week. Mr. Finlay received his notice and took the Marie L. from Quincy to Marblehead, having assented to either Tuesday or Wednesday for the race. Mr. Jones, however, did not receive his notice according to employees at his place of business, he being out of the city and whereabouts so uncertain that it was deemed inexpedient to forward mail.

As Mr. Finlay and crew were ready the judges decided to send that boat over the course and the start was made at 2.30 P. M., with line established off the Corinthian Yacht Club. The Marie Ls. owner now lays claim to the purse. Yachtsmen regret that the two sloops did not race it out yesterday, there being plenty of wind and a troubled sea. The going would have been quite comfortable under a single reef.

DID NOT CARE TO BE FRIENDLY

James Brown, charged with assault on William Paul at Braintree was given a hearing before Judge Avery this morning and the case was continued until October 31, on the condition that no ill feeling would further exist between bith men. The alleged assault was committed according to Mr. Paul in the South Braintree freight yard and followed his recognition of Mr. Brown who was at work on the top of a freight car, about 12 feet from the ground.

Mr. Brown testified he did not care to be friendly with the complainant and ordered him from the yard. The evidence brought out that a son-in-law of Mr. Brown and Mr. Paul disagreed on the rights of chickeus to tresspass, and that Mr. Brown, rather than be drawn into the controversey desired to sidestep all friendly overtures of Mr. Paul, because they annoyed him. The defendant was represented by Carl Lothrop of Braintree.

COMPLAINT DISMISSED

The complaint of larceny against Samuel Hathaway was dismissed this morning after Stephen W. North, the complainant testified that a paint mill taken by Hathaway had been returned before the arrest.

Both men were partners and North loaned the mill, according to the testimony of Hathaway who neglected to return it after a disagreement between them. Civil action will probobly be taken by Mr. North.

—The influence of men of high character in business and professional life is far greater than mere individual example. It spreads through the whole force under them, and gives a personality to firms and a soul to corporations. Young men in choosing their calling or in selecting a starting-place had better consider the kind of men they work for than the kind of work they do. The ideals and aims dominating their employers will be the ideals and aims they will inevitably absorb. It was a happy turn of a railroad employee, writing for the paper published by the company men: "A man is known by the company he keeps, and a Company is known by the men it keeps." Look over the men employed by firms of high standing, and they will show what principles have dominated the men at the head.—Christian Register.

The only serious purpose the average modern stage producer ever has is to get the money, and if they permit him he is ready to put anything and everything on the boards that will draw good-sized audiences.—Brockton Enterprise.

After the business meeting, a Dutch supper of frankfurters, rolls and coffee was served by the team of Bullock and Drew.

EXCHANGE INSPECTED

Board of Trade Visits Quincy Telephone Exchange

In response to an invitation of Mr. Weatherby, of the main office of the New England Telephone & Telegraph Co., who has been in Quincy for the past few weeks investigating the complaints as to poor telephone service, the special committee of the Board of Trade, together with several of its members accepted his invitation to visit the Quincy exchange on Merrymount road this morning and see the working of the plant.

The visitors were taken all over the building, first going to the basement where the underground cables enter the building, then through the administration offices on the street floor, in the rear of which are located the ringing plant and the boards where the cables end. They then went to the operating room on the first floor where they had explained to them how calls were received and how connections of one line were made with another. They found a large number of operators busily at work answering calls and making connections, while back of them were several girls, who are known as supervisors. It is the duty of these supervisors to watch the work of the operators to see that they have no unnecessary talk with subscribers and they answer the calls and make connections promptly.

There is an entire absence of noise in the operating room for the fact that a subscriber is calling is made evident to the operator by a tiny electric light globe. The lines on these tiny globes tell the operator whether the party calling has unlimited zone or unlimited suburban service, or if it is a prepayment station. In fact the kind of service subscribers have is immediately communicated to the operator by the kind of marks on the globe.

The visitors were also shown how everything possible was being done to insure prompt and accurate service. How some mistakes were made were also explained, to the visitors.

ENDORSED BY LABOR.

"The Fight for Right" the great feature photoplay to be given at Music Hall Saturday night, written by James Oppenheim and produced by the Reliance Company has been given the approval of the trade-unions as correctly representing their attitude toward prison labor.

The trade-unions have never advocated that convicts should be kept in idleness, instead they have insisted that convicts should be employed and that the convict's reformation would be impossible without useful and healthful labor.

It is not the work of the convicts as producers which meets with trade-union opposition, or that by working they may keep some free men idle. It is the methods by which prison labor, when performed for the benefit of private contractors, places the convicts' labor on the market and thereby forces reductions in wages upon large numbers of free workmen and by so doing, lowers their standard of living.

For years the trade-unions have endeavored to have the convicts employed out of doors as much as possible where the sunshine and pure air would build up the physical man and give that rugged health which would enable the unfortunates upon their release to have clear heads and strong bodies, instead of being the pallid wrecks which so often leave the prison door, nerveless, spineless and unfit to undertake the task of reclaiming their places as useful members of society or to properly support themselves through their labor.

Briefly reviewed the trade union attitude towards prison labor is that its first object should be the prisoner's reformation and under no circumstances should any element of private profit enter into consideration, that the labor performed by the prisoner should be of a useful nature and that for this labor the convict should be paid for the benefit of those dependent upon him and for his own assistance upon regaining freedom and finally that the principal object of the state should be to protect itself from the vicious and unfortunate to give them an adequate opportunity for reformation and not to derive profit from their labor.

PRATT'S BREAD never varies. It is made and baked by a fixed rule. Ask your grocer.

There is more catarrh in this section of the country than all other diseases put together, and until the last few years was supposed to be incurable. For a great many years doctors pronounced it a local disease and prescribed local remedies, and by constantly failing to cure local treatment, pronounced it incurable. Science has proven catarrh to be a constitutional disease and therefore requires constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, Ohio, is the only constitutional cure on the market. It is taken internally in doses from 10 drops to a teaspoonful. Vol. 28 No. 218 QUINCY MASS. FRIDAY EVENING, SEPTEMBER 19, 1913 PRICE TWO CENTS

REPORT WILLIAMS LEFT ESTATE OF $230,000

Claims Against Estate Will Total More Than $1,000,000

Atherton N. Hunt and Emery B. Gibbs who have been appointed special administrators of the will of George E. Williams of Braintree filed bonds Thursday in the sum of $50,000 each.

They also filed a statement that the estate consisted of real estate valued at $30,000 and personal property at $200,000, a total considerably in excess of what he was thought to possess.

Nevertheless, the insurance agent's estate is hopelessly insolvent. Messrs. Hunt and Gibbs at once began on the work of straightening out the tangle. The liabilities left by Williams have been estimated at upward of $1,000,000 but it will be at least two days before a definite idea may be obtained of the claims.

The register of probate stated on Thursday that he has an older will executed by Williams.

Even Mr. Hunt had never heard of the earlier will. "I have never seen such a will," declared Mr. Hunt, "and never heard that such a paper existed. At the same time I would not be surprised if such a legal document should be presented to the Probate Court."

Williams' associates at the office at 111 Devonshire street declared the instrument drawn last May was the only one in existence.

Attorneys interested in the estate for creditors said that the only effect of another will would be a possible clearing up of the whole situation. That one will more or less would cause any change in the outlook was doubted.

The estate is so evidently sufficient to meet claims, they say, that nobody named as a beneficiary under the will could hope to collect anything. As to the widow's rights, whatever they may be, these lie entirely outside the will. If she is to recover anything, it will probably be from insurance policies made out in her name, and anything that might be done in that direction would be entirely independent of either will.

One lawyer who represents a considerable number of creditors said yesterday: "I do not see that the filing of another will or of a number of wills would make any difference now. So far as the estate is concerned, all wills are very much like stock in a bankrupt enterprise. All the assets must go, in the nature of things, toward settling the claims of creditors. About the only useful purpose served by any will was to secure the appointment of a capable executor to handle the affairs of the estate until administrators were appointed."

One man familiar with William's affairs, said: "The finding of other wills than the one offered for probate would be no surprise to me. In fact, I believe that the making of wills was just another of those many shifts of his many-sided character.

"He was always a man of an infinite number of expedients, and I suppose he drew up these documents as a blind. Imagine, for instance, that he wanted to borrow $15,000 from one of his business friends. In that case it would be too crude for him to try to argue a man into a belief that he was a very wealthy man in need of temporary accommodation.

"It would be much better from the Williams standpoint to create the impression in another way. I can imagine him making an appointment with his prospective lender, and when the man arrived I can imagine him having the stage all set. He might ask the man to be one of the witnesses to the document and drop some hints as to its contents. The natural inference would be that Williams had considerable property and would not be making a will if he had not. The whole thing made his credit good."

BEAGLE CLUB FIELD DAY

The nineteenth annual Field Trial of the New England Beagle Club will be held at Hubbardston, Mass., commencing Monday, Oct. 27th, 1913.

There will be classes for dogs and bitches, 15 inches and under, and 13 inches and under. There will also be a derby for dogs and bitches whelped since Jan. 1st, 1912. In addition to this there will be the usual all day stake, open to any beagle, 15 inches or under.

Pack stakes for packs of four and eight will also be run.

All stakes except the all-day stake will be run on Coney rabbits.

The all day stake, eight hours continuous running, will be on white hares.

A. D. Fiske, 10 Wheeler Ave., Worcester, Mass., Secy., of the club will be glad to furnish entry forms, premium lists and running rules to interested parties.

Accommodations for owners and hounds may be had at the Hubbardston Inn, adjacent to the field trial grounds at $2.00 per day.

The hounds will be run on grounds where game is abundant and conditions are such that the work can be readily observed by the judges, who will be men of national reputation in the Beagle world.

The Club extends a cordial invitation to all Beagle owners to enter their hounds, and all others to attend the trials.

The many friends of Horace P. Titus will be pleased to learn that the operation performed on him at the Homoeopathic hospital for appendicitis was successful and that he has returned to his home on Kendrick avenue.

POST SEASON BASE BALL

Several Good Games to be Arrainged to be Played Saturday

A week ago it looked as though the bottom had fallen out of base ball but several post season contests will furnish enough base ball for a few weeks. The Colonials will meet an aggregation of All Stars on the Ward Four playground Saturday afternoon and the first of a five game series between the Walnuts and the Atlantics for the ward championship will take place on the Ward Six playground.

The Colonials have secured Hebert for the box work and Cy O'Rourke will probably catch. The All Stars battery will be Dick Williams of the fire department and Willie McDonnell with Joe Desmond at first and Jimmie Sullivan on second. Link Elcock who played this summer at Newburg, N. Y., will handle short and Blinker Desmond will hold down third. Dick Barry will play his first game of the season in left, Joe McTiernan of the champion "Mets" of the police league is booked for centre and Brick Berry for right field.

The Ward Six game is the first chapter of an unwritten story of ward base ball and inasmuch as the players were banded under the one color earlier in the season the enthusiasm will run high. Jack Duffy, the peerless twirler and hitter of the Atlantics will perform with Tim O'Connell in the receiving end. Pitts and Gregory, two promising youths, will uphold the Walnut's honors.

Atlantic has won 33 of the 37 games played and many of their victories have been due to the string of pitchers Tom McNally, Will Curtin and Jack Duffy, all of whom made history for their club.

The Walnuts have had a most successful season also having met and also defeated the teams that bowed to their rivals, but they have played less because of their late organization.

The Atlantic team will be Pete Creedon, short; Johnson, centre; Duffy, left; Donnelly, first; Curtin, third; Duffy, pitcher; McNally, right; and O'Connell, catcher.

The Walnuts will play Gregory, catcher; Pitts, pitcher; Duggan, first; Nelson, short; Spinney, third; Chassion, short; Price, Chassion and Spinney in the field.

OPENS SEASON WITH DANCE

The dancing season opened here Thursday evening with a largely attended party in Alpha hall under the auspices of the Young Women's Hebrew Club. Clubs from Lynn, Beverly, East Boston, Malden, Chelsea, Brockton were represented. Music was by Wilson's orchestra and refreshments were served in Union hall. The committee in charge was Miss Etta Litchman, chairman; Miss Frances Catler and Miss Marion Litchman.

The floor director was Miss Frances Catler and Miss Sadie Berman was her assistant. Miss Anna Grossman, chief of aids was assisted by the Misses, Alice Aronsen, Sadie Cohen, Ethel Edelstein, Dora Grabowsky, Etta Grossman, Marion Litchman, Annie Lubarsky, Mollie Sherad, Esther Sherman, Sophie Solow and Rosie Schwartz.

TO HOLD SMOKER.

The first of a series of smokers under the auspices of the Quincy A. A. will take place this evening in Hibernian hall. The affair is under the direction of William H. Flynn, manager of the football team of the club. He is being assisted by the players, headed by Captain Matthew Cummings. A long program has been arranged.

A large force of extra clerks are busy at City Hall making out tax bills for the 1913 assessment and it is expected that the bills will be sent out the first of next week. Although the tax rate is known property owners are anxious to see how much real money they have got to part with this year for their taxes.

COM. GILMAN WILL LECTURE

To Give Reminisences of Civil War Before K. of C.

A lecture on the "Church and her Institutions" by Charles J. F. O'Brien, district deputy of Jamaica Plain Council, Knights of Columbus and plans for an open meeting and lecture by John E. Gilman, past national commander-in-chief of the Grand Army of the Republic were part of the program at the meeting of Quincy Council, Knights of Columbus, in the New Colonial hall, Thursday evening.

Commander Gilman will deliver his "Reminesences in the Civil War" in October and an invitation will be extended to Post 88, G. A. R. to attend in a body.

Com. Gilman is minus one arm which he forfeited in the battle of Gettysburg. He is one of the few in the 12th Massachusetts infantry that left the field of that battle and with him was George L. Philips of this city.

The club will hold open house in their rooms the Saturday night preceding Columbus Day and a barn party is being planned by Peter M. Sullivan, Henry F. McGee, J. Lawrence Kateon, Andrew M. Driscoll, Paul E. Avery and Joseph H. Elcock, the lecturer of the council.

A committee was appointed to draw up resolutions on the death of John Harkins, a trustee and long time member of the council, who died recently.

RUN OVER BY AUTOMOBILE

Mrs. Brenner Severely Bruised and Shaken Up

Mrs. Annie N. Brenner of 72 Granite street, aged about 50 years was run over by an automobile service car of the Electric Light Co. on Hancock street Thursday evening and severely injured. The affair was an accident pure and simple and no blame is attached to John J. Smith, the driver of the car who did all in his power to avert the accident.

Mrs. Brenner had attended the performance at the auditorium and as she came out, a street car bound for Quincy stood in the street. Mrs. Brenner stepped behind this car onto the westerly track directly in front of the automobile, driven by Mr. Smith. He was moving slowly at the time and shouted a warning to the woman. Before she could get out of the way however the automobile struck her and knocked her down.

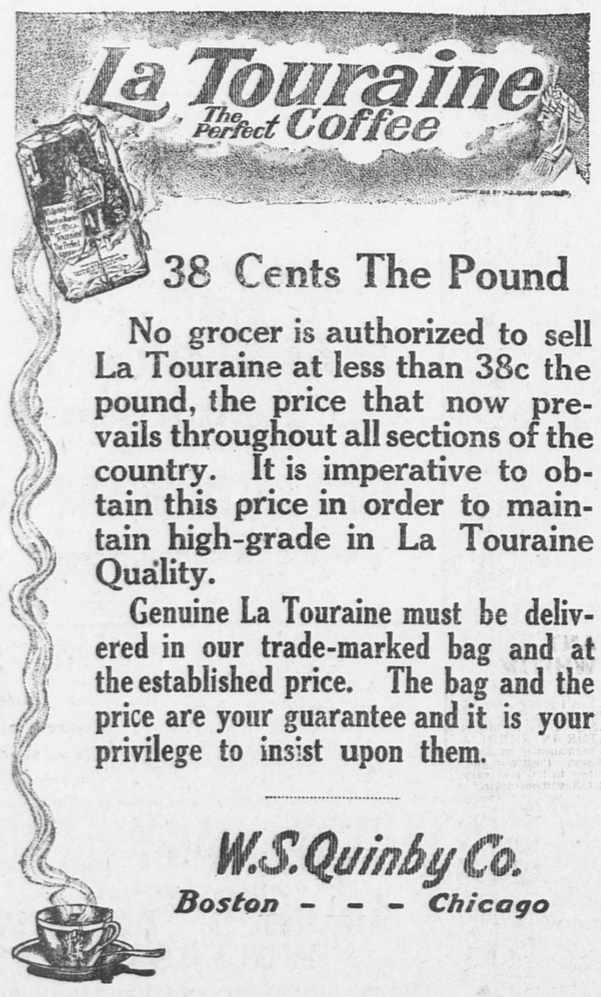

Smith stopped his car almost immediately and in an instant was on the ground assisting in taking the woman from beneath the front of the car. He was assisted by a crowd of young men who were near and Dr. W. H. Blanchard, who resides near by was summoned.

Officer Fallon called the police ambulance and after receiving first aid treatment by Dr. Blanchard the woman was taken to her home.

A daughter of Mrs. Brenner was just behind her at the time of the accident and when she realized that her mother had been injured she screamed loudly.

Mrs. Brenner it is thought was not seriously injured. She however was badly shaken up and bruised and received a number of bruises and her ankle was also somewhat strained. Fortunately no bones were broken and she will recover.

Mr. and Mrs. Herbert Walker formerly of Quincy are in town for a few days visiting friends. Mr. Walker is now located in North Hampton and is spending his vacation trolleying about Massachusetts.

Mr. Jerome is not liked in Canada. He will have to shoot somebody to make himself popular up there.

The proper time to quit wearing a straw hat is not when it becomes uncomfortable on your head, but when some one in New York or London gets sick of it.

The big league ball players can't write signed articles for the newspaper articles for the newspapers any longer, which cuts off a tidy source of income from many obscure newspaper reporters.

It may be necessary to explain to the masculine reader that those pictures in the department store ads do not represent mermaids but simply the new fall styles.

Anyway, the millionaires who are kicking on the income tax can give away their money.

PETTY GAMBLING.

Is gambling necessarily and inherently evil under any and all circumstances? Debating society orators have thumped the desk on this question from time immemorial.

Your tender offspring playing marbles for keeps. and the haggard gamester in Monte Carlo's Inferno are essentially alike, though separated by Infinity of degree. Yet most parents smilingly permit the one. and sternly condemn the other.

William Travers Jerome was arrested at Coaticook. P. Q., as an incident of the Thaw case, on the charge of participating in a 25 cent limit game of poker. He thereby furnished an example for the debating society Demosthenes. On one side it could be truly said that Mr. Jerome suffered no moral harm whatever from his act. He passed a pleasant hour at a cost of one dollar. It gave the party needed diversion at a cheaper rate than if they had hired an automobile or gone out for a game of golf.

On the other it will be contended that the petty gambling of card parties in railroad trains gives the social sanction of influential people to acts that kindle the fire of the gambling lusts in others.

The petty gambling that is becoming prominent in athletics and games like bridge forms another kind of case. Perhaps most people would agree to this statement:—A game of sport gives keenest enjoyment when you play purely from love of doing it well. If your best reward from the swift and accurate line drive at tennis is the sense of power and skill, you get all the game has to give you.

But if your principal reward from the stroke is that through it you won the box of balls you had bet with your opponent, it shows that your sport is not giving you the good results it ought to. It indicates that you had to be paid in order to get full satisfaction from your efficiency on that occasion. People who are not efficient unless they are paid for it may make business successes, but they don't get the most fun.

Hookworm Is the Greatest Insect Menace to Human Health

By Dr. NELSON DU VAL BRECHT, Former Assistant Surgeon of United States Public Health Service

FLIES, MOSQUITOES, ROACHES AND OTHER INSECTS ARE RESPONSIBLE FOR THE DEATHS OF THOUSANDS OF PERSONS ANNUALLY, BUT THESE PESTS COMBINED DO NOT CONSTITUTE AS ALARMING A MENACE TO MANKIND AS DOES THE HOOKWORM.

Hookworm disease has become a NATIONAL PUBLIC HEALTH PROBLEM in the United States since Dr. Charles Wardell Stiles of the United States public health service demonstrated in 1902 that it was endemic in many states and the cause of the common anaemia of the south.

Hookworm disease is the greatest enemy of the human race in the tropics—GREATER EVEN THAN CHOLERA OR PLAGUE. It has been the MOST DISABLING OF ALL DISEASES IN THE EGYPTIAN ARMY, as well as the greatest cause for the rejection of recruits. In Egypt the parasite of the disease is found at NEARLY EVERY POSTMORTEM.

ESTATE OF AT LEAST $230-000

Sta'ement Filed by Williams Special Administrators

DOUBTFUL IF WIDOW BENEFITS

Will Lose All Unless It Is Shown That Husband Forged Her Name—Rumor That Filing of New Will, Said to Have Been Drawn in 1911, Will Be Next Move

Dedham, Mass., Sept. 19.—The estate of George E. Williams, the Braintree millionaire, revelations of whose career as writer of passionate love letters, wooer of many women, all around swindler and forger, have astonished his scores of confiding friends and victims, will amount to at least $230,000, according to the statement filed in the probate court of Norfolk county by the special administrators appointed by the court to administer the affairs of the late insurance man.

Atherton N. Hunt and Emery Gibbs, special administrators, each filed a bond for $50,000 in the probate court. The bonds were furnished by the American Surety company of New York.

In their statements accompanying the bond both gave the amount of the estate of Williams as consisting of real estate valued at $30,000 and personal property valued at $200,000. The liabilities left by Williams have been estimated at upward of $1,000,000.

Whether Williams' widow will get anything out of the estate is doubtful. It is also doubtful if his secretary, Miss Emma R. Wellington, will get the $25,000 which he left her in his will. If it can be proved that Williams forged his wife's name to certain papers, Mrs. Williams may be able to keep certain property. Otherwise she will probably lose all.

A new turn was given to the already complicated situation arising from the death of Williams when a well defined rumor developed that the next move in the case would be the filing of a new will at the office of the Norfolk county probate court.

The story, which was told with all the indications of authenticity, had it that the financier had drawn up another testament which bore a prior date to that offered for allowance by Hunt, who was named as executor under the will.

There is no hint that the document before the court is not genuine, but it is stated that if there is any action to be taken with a view to displacing it, that action will be based on the claim that Williams was of unsound mind when he made the will which has been under consideration since the estate came into the public eye.

According to the assertions made in several quarters, Williams made his first will in 1911. This, it is said, was drawn by an attorney and named a set of executors different from those named in the second will. The latter document, about which there has been considerable mystery, is said to have been drawn by Williams himself. This is the will in which Miss Wellington is named as a beneficiary to the extent of $25,000 and the one offered for probate.

FORGED POLICIES

Will Not Be Recognized by Company Which Employed Williams

Hartford, Sept. 19.—Holders of any bogus policies issued by the late George E. Williams of Boston, the exploded and disgraced "marvel" of the insurance world, must fight in the Massachusetts courts for recognition from the Connecticut Mutual Life Insurance company.

The attitude of the company was emphatically stated by John M. Taylor, president of the insurance company.

"Not a dollar will be allowed on any forged policy," said Taylor. "The company could not do so, it being in duty bound to protect the holders of legal policies."

Taylor declared that no knowledge of existing bogus policies has as yet reached the home office.

KILLS NEGRO CHAUFFEUR

Guth Has Hand-to-Hand Conflict With Man Armed With Axe

Baltimore, Sept. 19.—In a terrific hand-to-hand combat with a crazed negro, armed with an axe, which occurred in the garage at his residence in Eutaw place, Charles G. Guth, former president of the Guth Chocolate company, shot and mortally wounded the negro.

The latter, George Murphy, who had been Guth's chauffeur, died while being conveyed to a hospital. Guth is being held pending an investigation by the coroner and police.

A Little White House Scare

Washington, Sept. 19.—White House attaches at first thought Representative Lindquist of Michigan was a crank with a bomb when he called on President Wilson to show him some "clothing adulterations."

Bulkeley Criticises New Haven Management For Past Ten Years

Boston, Sept. 19.—Morgan G. Bulkeley, president of the Aetna Life Insurance company, former governor and former senator of Connecticut, denounced the proposal now before the public service commission to issue $67,000,000 of convertible New Heven debentures when he appeared as an expert witness before the commission.

The management of the road for the past ten years, he charged, has been "rotten." The stockholders' meetings, he said, were run in such a manner that minority stockholders were absolutely powerless.

He claimed the proposed bond issue could have been floated with perfect ease on a 5 percent basis; that it would have been "on the bargain counter" at that rate. He charged that the stockholders' committee was formed by the same "interests" that already controlled the road.

Of the $19,400,000 Billard notes in the possession of the company he said that in his belief there was "not a dollar behind them."

FREAK OF INSANE MAN

Disrobes, Runs Through Streets, and Falls to His Death

Boston, Sept. 19.—Antonio Morano, the insane man who fell from the top floor of the building, 641 Atlantic avenue, after running naked through Dewey square, died from the effects of his fall, at the Psycopathic hospital last evening. He was 30 years of age.

Apparently sane and normal, Morano asked for a drink of water in a haberdashery store at 612 Atlantic avenue and was shown to the sink room. There he disrobed and dashed to the street, frightening passersby and running the gauntlet of policemen and citizens, who tried to stop him.

Pursued by hundreds through Dewey square, Morano dashed into the doorway of 641 Atlantic avenue and hurried to the fourth floor. There he ran through the office of the Boston Fastener company, out of a window and along the coping of the building. He lost his footing and fell while trying to lift a window sash from outside.

MANY REPUBLICANS SUPPORT MEASURE

House Adopts Currency Bill Without Material Change

Washington, Sept. 19.—The administration currency bill was passed by the house by a vote of 286 to 84, practically unamended in its essential provisions.

The final vote brought a number of Republicans to the support of the administration measure. A final fight on an amendment reaffirming the present financial policy of a gold money standard caused some defections from the Democratic side. A burst of applause greeted the passage of the bill.

Three Democrats voted against the bill and twenty-four Republicans voted for it. The Progressives divided, two voting against and fifteen for the bill.

JAIL FOR WIFE DESERTERS

New Law Is Put Into Operation In the Keystone State

Philadelphia, Sept. 19.—When six deserting husbands were sentenced to three months' work breaking stone at the house of correction by Judge Bregy, there was put into operation for the first time in Pennsylvania a law passed by the last legislature.

The law empowers the court to commit recalcitrant husbands to the house of correction, there to be placed at some profitable employment at hard labor, and provides that 65 cents a day shall be deducted from their earnings and paid to the wife.

Great Fleet to Celebrate the Opening of Panama Canal

Washington, Sept. 19.—Invitations are now being prepared at the state department for transmittal to the naval powers of the world to ensure the gathering of a great international fleet at Hampton Roads to celebrate the opening of the Panama canal.

It is expected that some of the powers will send as many as four warships, and the total number of vessels in the fleet is expected to surpass any international naval force ever assembled.

Unguarded Convicts Return to Prison From New York State Farm

Comstock, N. Y., Sept. 19.—Eight convicts who have been employed for the summer at the state farm for women at Valatio returned to Great Meadow prison without guards.

The men, who were accompanied as far as Albany by Warden Mealey of the state farm, gave their word of honor that they would return to the prison unaccompanied by an official. They kept their word.

Bride Couldn't Bake Pies

New York, Sept. 19.—Justice Tompkins annulled the marriage of Mary Francis and George H. Knapp after the bride was deserted because, so her husband said, she couldn't bake pies.

SMOKE TALK AND BANQUET.

As the final wind-up to a very successful season the officials of the Sunset base ball league tendered a smoke talk and banquet to the players Thursday evening in Grand Army hall, South Braintree. The affair was well carried out, highly enjoyable and attended by a large gathering of fans. Among the invited guests were noted H. F. Stackhouse and Ralph A. Newcomb, managers respectively of the Braintree A. A. and Braintree White Sox, umpires, Thomas McLoughlin of Braintree and Henry Sullivan of Holbrook and William Ross of Boston the crack pitcher of the White Sox.

The management endeavored to secure Timothy Murnane the base ball writer of the Globe and editor George B. Gavin of the same paper but they could not be present.

A witty letter of regret read from I. Wendell Gammons and also one from George Cramer a former secretary of the league and manager of the Monatiquots for two seasons. Mr. Cramer is at present at his home in Dixon, Illinois. His letter contained the following toast:

"Here's to the Heights
A fine team indeed,
And to the Squares
A team of every creed
And to the Pond Streets
At clambaking they are fine
But when it comes to real baseball
The Monatiquots for mine."

President Albert F. Hollis of the league was master of ceremonies and the program went without a hitch. First came a piano solo played by Ray Glover. Next were remarks by Managers Stackhouse and Newcomb followed by the reading "Ostler Joe" rendered by Urban T. Landry. Remarks on baseball topics were listened to from managers Felix Atkinson, Leo Dennehy, umpires Sullivan and McLoughlin and pitcher Ross.

Tuneful vocal selections were rendered bythe Milo quartette which consists of Edward Cullinan, Ray Glover, George Packard and Horace Burgess.

At this time all adjourned to the banquet hall where were served appetizing refreshments of sandwiches, coffee loughnuts, cheese, tonics and ice cream. The food was of the best and served by an efficient corps of waiters. After the inner man had been satisfied all adjourned again to the main hall and Master Stephen Levangie gave a touching rendition of The face on the bar-room floor" and received great applause. Next in order was a three round boxing bout between Elmer Johnson and James Gardner followed by remarks by Fred R. Carmichael and Louis King.

That talented reader Urban T. Landry, gave "Kissing Cup's last race" and pleased his audience so that he was obliged to respond to encores. After remarks by Messrs. Hanson of North Abington and Hess of Randolph, the proceedings came to a close with the singing of "America."

The evening's program was full of pleasure for all and will long be a pleasant memory to all who attended. Great credit for the success of the affair is due to the efficient and hustling committee of arrangements consisting of Albert F. Hollis, Felix Atkinson, John Frazier, Leo Dennehy, Martin Dillon and Guy E. Wood.

OCTOBER AMERICAN MAGAZINE

One of the most astonishing contributions to the October American Magazine is an article by a Yale teacher entitled "The Village of a Thousand Souls." The author of the article, Arnold L. Gesell, has made a complete investigation of the 220 families that constitute a certain small village in the Middle West. His investigation reaches back through one whole generation—thirty-three years. The results of his investigation indicate an appalling amount of feeble-mindedness, insanity, alcoholism and general delinquency in small villages.

Fiction is contributed by Inez Haynes Gillmore, Henry Wallace Phillips, Leonard Hatch, John Taintor Foote and Clifford S. Raymond.

James Montgomery Flagg and Stephen Leacock write humorous pieces. David Grayson contributes another of his "Friendly Road" sketches. The regular departments, "Interesting People," "The Theatre" and "The Interpreter's House" are included.

The prize winning letters in a contest entitled "How I Saved My First $100" complete an unusually spirited number.

EMILY C. AMSDEN.

DOINGS ON THE STAGE IN

BOSTON AND VICINITY

B. F. KEITH'S THEATRE.

George McManus, the famous creator of "The Newly Weds," at the antics of whom so many New Englanders have laughed every morning, will make his vaudeville debut at B. F. Keith's Theatre next week. Mr. McManus will be assisted by Mrs. McManus, and will present a brand new and unique cartoon novelty, entirely different from anything of its kind ever seen on the American stage. Another star feature of the week will be Digby Bell, the popular legitimate comedian, who will appear in a new comedy written especially for him by George V. Hobart and entitled "It Happened In Topeka." This is a new and uproariously funny comedy of life in a small town in the middle West, and Mr. Bell is said to have a role that fits him like a glove and affords fully as good a vehicle for his talents as did "The Awakening of Mr. Pipp." Mr. Bell will be supported by a large and capable company of comedians, who will lend solemnity to the occasion. Other strong features of the week will be the Carl Eugene Troupe of sensational European acrobats in startling feats in midair; the Florentine Singers, a really great combination of grand opera artistes, who present a splendid series of operatic selections appropriately costumed and mounted; Newhoff and Phelps two singing comedians, in a brand new sketch; John T. Murray, the lightest of light comedians, better known as the man in lavender, from his costume; the Gardner Trio of terpsichorean experts in the latest society dances; F. Artusa, the world's greatest hand balancer; the Pathe Weekly, world's current events in motion pictures; and many others yet to be announced.

PLYMOUTH THEATRE.

On next Monday, May Irwin who has been delighting thousands of theatregoers, in he new and screamingly funny piece, "Widow by Proxy," will begin the farewell week of her engagement at the Plymouth theatre, Boston. Miss Irwin was never funnier than she is in her present play. As a widow, which by the way, has become a familiar role, she is apparently in the height of her glory. Miss Irwin will be followed by a return engagement of George Arliss in "Disraeli." Mr. Arliss makes his reappearance in Boston, for a short stay of four weeks, beginning Sept. 29. The phenomenal success scored by both play and star is still fresh in the minds of the thousands of theatregoers who witnessed the star's masterful characterization of the great English statesman. With one or two exceptions Mr. Arliss returns with identically the same cast and equipment as when he achieved his record run. The usual scale of prices will prevail as well as the Thursday and Saturday matinees.

SHUBERT THEATRE.

A brilliant new operatic spectacle, "The Purple Road" is coming to the Shubert Theatre, Boston, for a limited engagement. Monday with regular matinees Wednesdays and Saturdays. The music of "The Purple Road" is by Heinrich Reinhardt, composer of "The Spring Maid," and rarely has Reinhardt shown himself in a more pleasant vein than in this delightful new piece which had so long and prosperous a run the past summer at the New York Casino. Indeed, many critics declare that it equals, if not surpasses, his other famous successes. William Frederick Peters has added many additional charming numbers to the score.

"The Purple Road" is a genuine light opera, woven around a love story of the Emperor Napoleon. The book and lyrics are the combined work of Mme. Fred de Gresac and William Cary Duncan—Mme. de Gresac is well known as the author of "The Enchantress" and "La Peserale which is one of Mme. Rejane's most popular impersonations. The production will be lavish. The producers have sought in both acts and epologue to make it a brilliant, colorful spectacle, both through scenery and rich costuming. Rarely has a more appealing scene been presented in light opera than that of the Throne scene of the second act. Yet the greatest charm of this operetta lies in the music, which is said to be as sparkling as champagne one moment and swelling into triumphant finales worthy of grand opera, the next. Among the principal numbers are "When Someone Marries Me," "The Mysterious Kiss," "Feed Me With Love," "The Love Spell," "I Am All Alone," "A Hit in Paris," "Diplomacy," "Pretty Little Chickis," "In the Valley of Beautiful Dreams," "Dear Little Pages," and "Irresistible."

In presenting "The Purple Road," the management has taken unusual pains in selecting a notable cast of principals and a singing chorus and the famous octet of brides has been praised as a revelation of what thoughtful selection and excellent direction can do. In the company of one hundred are Valli Valli, Harrison Brockbank, Eva Fallon, Eleanor Gordon, late leading lady of the stock company at the Plymouth Theatre, Boston, Edward Martindale, Elita Proctor Otis, Ernest Stoddard, Harriet Burt, Leslie Gaye, Clifton Webb, Ann Walker, and a big singing and acting chorus. The orchestra will be augmented to thirty pieces.

CASTLE SQUARE THEATRE.

"The Ninety and Nine," one of the most successful of romantic melodramas, will be John Craig's attraction at the Castle Square next week. Its author is Ramsay Norris, well known as a theatrical manager and dramatist, and he has chosen for his scenes the picturesque rural regions of Indiana. Its dialogue and incidents are filled with the rustic flavor that playgoers like so well. Its heroine is the belle of the village, and its hero a young man from New York, who proves himself a veritable hero before the play is over. When no one else will come forward, he volunteers and goes to the rescue of a town that is threatened by a prairie fire. This forms the most thrilling scene in the play, the rush of the locomotive engine that he is driving through the fire being realistically shown. The entire play will be well staged at the Castle Square, and the cast will include Mr. Craig's entire company. Tom Silverton, the hero, will be played by Mr. Carleton, and Miss Doris Olsson, who has already become a favorite with Boston theatre-goers will appear as Ruth Blake, the heroine. There are some twenty other characters, and they will all be cast in the capable hands of Mr. Craig's players.

HOLLIS STREET THEATRE.

There is but little doubt that the most popular of all the early season attractions in Boston will be Julia Sanderson in "The Sunshine Girl" at the Hollis Street theatre, where that daintiest of musical comedy stars comes for a long engagement commencing Monday evening, Sept. 22. Miss Sanderson who has captivated playgoers in many tuneful musical entertainments such as "The Arcadians" and "The Siren" is coming to Boston this time as a star, Charles Frohman her manager having elevated the little artist to this high position last season when he produced "The Sunshine Girl" in New York where it scientillated and rivaled the orb it is named after, for over six months. "The Sunshine Girl" was written in collaboration by Cecil Raleigh and Paul Rubens and Mr. Rubens who is better known as a composer than a librettist wrote the score also. It is redundant with catchy numbers and is superior to either of Rubens' previous successes "Three Little Maids" and "Hook of Holland." The plot and story are laid in the famous Sunshine soap works at Port Sunshine, England, where Vernon Blundell a young man about town has just fallen heir to the entire plant with a peculiar proviso that if he marry within five years the works will become the property of the employes. The chorus and cast number over 100 persons and the production is a magnificent one. Matinees will be given on Wednesdays and Saturdays during the Boston engagement.

TREMONT TEMPLE.

To say that "Les Miserables," Victor Hugo's remarkable story, now being presented in motion pictures, at the Tremont Temple, Boston, has scored a big success is really putting it mildly. The wonderful life-like production, of this monumental task, is truly the greatest achievement of motion photography. Those who have viewed the work of this world-famous story agree that the result is impressive almost beyond belief. One comes away from the performance with well-nigh the feeling that one has seen "Les Miserables" lived out from start to finish in breathing reality. Every audience is held spell-bound by the combined dramatic and pictorial value of the entertainment. The important role of Jean Valjean is played by M. Henri Krauss, a leading member of the Sarah Bernhardt theatre in Paris. During the engagement at the Tremont Temple there will be daily matinees with a popular scale of price.

QUINCY MUSIC HALL.

Quincy Music hall will open for the season Saturday night under new management. The very best vaudeville and photoplays that can be secured will be given to the Quincy public and a very enjoyable evening is promised to all who attend the Saturday night performances. By offering a big salary to Prof. Neville the manager has secured the greatest photoplay lecturer on the American stage who will lecture on that great labor feature "The Fight for Right" this will be a treat for all labor union men and women. Prof. Neville has agreed to appear at Quincy Music hall every Saturday night with a new feature photoplay. Doors open at 7.15, Show starts at 8.

VALLI VALLI.

A RAGE FOR COLOR IN CLOTHES.

Grace Margaret Gould, fashion editor of the Woman's Home Companion, in an article entitled "The Vogue for Color," shows that in the new fashions it is the color combinations that count this year. Following is an extract:

"The old way of buying a dress, that is, the old way of a few years ago, was never to pay particular attention to the color combination. If blue was liked one bought a blue dress, or if brown was considered a practical good-wearing color then it was brown that was chosen, and the dress was generally trimmed in the selfsame tone. That is really about all the color question amounted to.

"Today the position of color in fashion is on an entirely different basis. The painter and the dressmaker are today collaborating, with the result that the new fashions will show much originality in design and many daring color combinations. It is true that the new fashions show the influence of modern art.

The actual entrance of Leon Bakst, the greatest of the scenic painters, into the Rue de la Paix really had a wonderful influence upon the color harmonies of the new gowns. Bakst, who is working in connection with Madame Paquin, stands for the frank use of color. At present he is showing marked preference for a certain red tone that is lighter than terra cotta and just a bit deeper than coral."

TO GIVE UP SUNDAY TENNIS

The prosecution of 16 Sunday tennis players will probably not take place because the members voted at a meeting on Thursday evening to refrain from further playing on the Sabbath.

This action, it is understood, is agreeable to Chief Burrell of the police force who was about to serve summons on the members for violation of the Sabbath laws.

The campaign against Sunday tennis followed the conviction of Quincy Point foreigners for dominoe playing in their house on Sunday. Numbered in the opposition was Rev. B. A. Willmott of the Bethany Congregational Church and other prominent residents of the city.

PRINCESS ENDS HER OWN LIFE

Puts Bullet Into Her Head When Hope Dies

A VICTIM OF PRIDE IN RANK

Unusually Popular Young Woman Forbidden by Reigning Grand Duke to Marry Man Below Her Station In Life Unless She Renounced All Titles and Dignities

Heidelberg, Ger., Sept. 19.—Princess Sophia of Saxe-Weimar-Eisenach, a beautiful young woman, unusually popular, of sunny disposition and much courted by the officers, committed suicide, her body with a bullet wound in the temple being found in her room in the palace of her father, Prince William.

The princess was engaged to Han von Bleichroeder, oldest son of the senior member of one of the most powerful banking houses in Germany. When the engagement was announced, it was learned that reigning Grand Duke Prince William Ernest strenuously prohibited the union unless the princess renounced all her titles and dignities. This she refused to do.

Princess Sophia and her parents were much beloved in Heidelberg for the interest they had taken in the poor and the general public welfare, although the father was by no means wealthy and was living on an appanage from the reigning grand duke.

As head of the family, the grand duke objected to the union of the princess with a man who occupied an inferior station in life. Her father, it is said, was inclined to accede to his daughter's wishes, but was unable to take an independent stand owing to his financial relations with the grand duke.

While the princess had been prevented from marrying von Bleichroeder, they had often been seen together at Heidelberg since the engagement was announced. He studied for several years at Heidelberg and made the doctor's degree last winter.

No statement relative to the tragedy has been given out, and official confirmation of the suicide could not be obtained at Prince William's palace. The princess was born July 25, 1888.

A brother, Prince Hermann, resigned from the Prussian army several years ago, settled in London and married an Italian actress. Compelled to renounce his title, he took the name of Count Osthelm.

WE CAN WAIT, SAYS THAW

But Fugitive Hopes Governor Felker Will Help Him at Once

Concord, N. H., Sept. 19.—Harry K. Thaw sat behind a great heap of newspapers, reading Washington dispatches saying that, if his case went to the United States supreme court, years might pass before a decision was handed down.

"We can wait," said the fugitive, "but I hope Governor Felker will decide against my extradition at once so that it will not be necessary to press our habeas corpus writ in the federal courts."

Ten law clerks, retained by Thaw's counsel, were busy yesterday looking up state and federal court rulings in the matter of extraditing a person charged with a crime yet held to be legally insane.

"So far we have been unable to find any case where a person in Thaw's position was extradited," said one of Thaw's lawyers.

The same statement, in substance, was made by Federal Judge Aldrich at Littleton on Tuesday, in a discussion with William T. Jerome.

THREE IN SUICIDE PACT

Two Women and Man In Arkansas "Wanted to Go Together"

Glenwood, Ark., Sept. 19.—J. T. Turner, a real estate dealer, his wife and Miss Carter, who came here recently from Massachusetts, carried out a suicide agreement here.

When neighbors forced an entrance into the Turner home they found the women dead and Turner dying. All had taken poison.

A note signed by Turner, left in the room where the three were found, read: "There is no use asking questions. We are all tired of living and wanted to go together."

GUNMEN KILL TWO CLERKS

Refused to Hold Up Their Hands When Ordered by Robbers

Grand Rapids, Mich., Sept. 19.—Two robbers entered the jewelry store of J. J. Thompson last night, commanded the clerks to throw up their hands and, when they refused, opened fire.

John A. Thompson and Ed Smith fell dead and Paul Townsend was probably fatally wounded. The bandits escaped.

Flood From Broken Reservoir

Pittston, Pa., Sept. 19.—A million and a half gallons of water from a collapsed reservoir rushed down one of the side streets of Pittston, causing a small panic. No one was hurt.

Reunited After Forty Years

New York, Sept. 19.—When a page in the Astor called for "Mr. Waldman" two men answered. When they met they discovered they were brothers. They hadn't met for forty years.

These September Mornings Are Beautiful

Even the old turnpikes are certainly beautiful with their processions of two-horsed hay wagons, jogging along to the hay market, loaded with new-mown hay.

But finer still are the smiling cornfields, tall and graceful, long eared and royal tasseled, with pride in that they enrich the world for man and beast.

Trees and closecut lawns of June time green are at their best, and so are the winding, narrow roads with patches every now and then of crimson gladioli and zinnias and white altheas with purple eyes looking at you.

But the cities are putting on new signs of life, the streets are more crowded these days and so are the stores.

This onestore already seems too big now to receive its guests. It is a cheerful sound to hear people say—

It is so good to get back home with you again

This one store already seems too big people to this good store, kept so neat, clean and wholesome, and with goods so fresh and desirable.

MANCHESTER SAVED FROM BANKRUPTCY

Father-in-Law Comes to Financial Rescue of Duke

London, Sept. 19.—The Duke of Manchester has escaped the toils of the money-lenders and their bankruptcy petitions. When his case came before the registrar in bankruptcy it was announced that it had been settled.

Eugene Zimmerman, the American father-in-law of the duke, came forward at the last moment and settled the duke's pressing debts.

Manchester this time had a very narrow escape. Had the latest petition not been withdrawn every other creditor would have swarmed upon him.

CARS PLUNGE FROM BRIDGE

Only Two Persons Hurt In Accident on Great Northern Road

Winona, Minn., Sept. 19.—Six cars of the Great Northern's eastbound Oriental limited were hurled from the track by a burning bridge on the Burlington railway, three miles east of East Winona. Two persons were hurt, but only slightly. The cars were destroyed by fire.

The train was running fifty miles an hour and was within 500 feet of the trestle when Engineer Hadley observed the fire. The emergency brakes were applied, but it was too late to stop.

The burning trestle was about forty feet long and the tender and baggage car tipped over on the north side and two day coaches, two tourist cars and the dining car fell on the south side. Three cars remained on the track.

THE ULSTER VOLUNTEERS

Carson Hopes "Every Man Will Have a Rifle on His Shoulder"

Belfast, Sept. 19.—Captain James Craig, Unionist member of parliament for the east division of Down, announced at a public meeting here last night, the acceptance by General Sir George Richardson of the post of "general officer commanding the volunteers."

Sir Edward Carson, leader of the Irish Unionists, expressed the hope in addressing the volunteers that the next time he saw them "every man will have a rifle on his shoulder." He advised them to leave no stone unturned to resist the invaders.

FIGHT TO THE FINISH

Roosevelt Tells Progressives That Battle Has but Just Begun

Washington, Sept. 19.—"We are in this fight to the finish, regardless of results. We have only just begun to fight."

This was the message from Theodore Roosevelt conveyed to Progressive members of the house by Representative Hinebaugh of Illinois at a special conference.

Fire Loss of $200,000

Ghent, Sept. 19.—Three pavilions at the International Industrial Exposition here were destroyed by a fire which started in a German restaurant. This is the fifth fire since the opening of the exposition, and altogether property valued at upwards of $200,000 has been burned.

Big Mackerel Catch Landed

Boston, Sept. 19.—Fourteen vessels brought to T wharf 91,000 mackerel, an unusually large catch, particularly in view of the lateness of the season. The fish were mostly "tinkers," and were caught off Chatham.

SCHMIDT'S DOOM SEEMS SEALED

Electric Chair Is Probable Fate Awaiting Him

A CRIMINAL OF DEEPEST DYE

Priest, Counterfeiter, Thief and Murderer Believed to Have Also Illegally Practiced Medicine—Indications That Muret Knew Arch Criminal Before He Left Germany

New York, Sept. 19.—As police and secret service operatives follow the trail of crime which has marked the career of Hans Schmidt, confessed murderer of Anna Aumueller, and assistant priest of St. Joseph's church, they expect to disclose the operations of one of the greatest criminals of a generation.

Priest, counterfeiter, thief and murderer represents the scope of Schmidt's activity so far discovered, and there is also evidence that he probably engaged in the illicit practice of medicine. The district attorney's office is confident that any attempt to save Schmidt from the electric chair will fail. William J. Flynn, chief of the United States secret service, declares he never knew a man who attempted counterfeiting to be insane and further never heard of an insane counterfeiter.

Despite the assertions of Ernest Muret, the dentist arrested as an accomplice of Schmidt in the counterfeiting scheme, that he first met Schmidt last December, detectives have advices from Germany indicating that he knew Schmidt in that country.

The detectives also indicated that another arrest might be expected soon. They believe another man is involved. Letters were also found in Schmidt's trunk signed "Helen" and the detectives are searching for this woman. They have learned she was known as "Helen Green." The letters are addressed in the most endearing terms.

The engraver who sold Schmidt the copper plates used in his counterfeiting work told the police that Muret frequently had accompanied Schmidt to his shop. Muret had contended that he knew nothing of the priest's counterfeiting plans.

Muret pleaded guilty to the charge of having in his possession a dangerous weapon. His case was put over until Oct. 2. The district attorney asked for this delay to enable his office to investigate further the charge of counterfeiting.

Schmidt has become suddenly taciturn. Hitherto he seemed glad to answer notes sent to his cell, although his answers cast no light on his record.

SHORT SESSION OF COURT

Sulzer Fails to Appear Before the Impeachment Tribunal

Albany, Sept. 19.—William Sulzer, governor of New York, charged by the assembly with high crimes and misdemeanors, failed to appear in person before the high court of impeachment when it convened to begin the trial which will determine his guilt or innocence.

Instead, his attorneys entered a "special appearance" in the governor's behalf, and challenged the organization of the court and its jurisdiction over the accused.

The objections of counsel were overruled temporarily by Chief Justice Cullen of the court of appeals, presiding, and the impeachment tribunal proceeded to organize.

The court adjourned an hour later until today to permit a committee of three to prepare and report rules of procedure.

ENTERS TWO SUITS

Doctor Who Performed Operation Upon Richeson Wants His Pay

Boston, Sept. 19.—Who is to pay Dr. Howard A. Lothrop for performing a delicate operation and saving the life of Clarence V. T. Richeson, at the Charles street jail, Dec. 20, 1911, in order that the self-confessed murderer of Avis Linnell might die in the electric chair, is an interesting question to be decided by a Suffolk county jury.

Lothrop has entered two suits, each for $1000, in the Suffolk superior court, one against Belle A. Floyd, administratrix of the estate of the late Sheriff Seavey, and the other against the county of Suffolk for his services.

CALLED BACK TO MEXICO'

Huerta Will Permit Diaz to Become Candidate For President

Mexico City, Sept. 19.—Instructions have been sent by President Huerta to General Felix Diaz, who is now in Europe, to return to Mexico immediately. It is expected he will sail within a few days.

This fact is learned on high authority and it is regarded here as indicating that Huerta intends to abide by the pact signed at the American embassy last February to place no obstacle in the path of Diaz in his candidacy for the presidency.

Must Not Ridicule Straw Lids

Washington, Sept. 19.—Not only is it illegal to smash straw hats, but also to deride wearers of such lids, according to a decision by Police Judge Mulowney.

FIGURES IN TRAGEDY

Dentist Muret and Zech Girl, Who Was Released

Students of character and facial resemblance have pointed to the marked similarity of features of Hans Schmidt, the confessed slayer of Anna Aumuller, the girl whose torso was found in the Hudson river, and Dr. Ernest A. Muret, held on a charge of counterfeiting. No definite evidence has appeared that will connect the dentist with aiding in the killing, but detectives are working on the case. It is believed that both have displayed evidence of insanity. Bertha Zech, also shown in the picture, was employed by the dentist and was held as a material witness, but later released.

POOR WILL NOT BE TREATED BY NEGRO

Doctor Is Barred From Job in a British Community

London, Sept. 19.—The "color line" is not often drawn in England, but the Camberwell poor law guardians declined to appoint a negro as district medical officer.

It was admitted during the session of the guardians that the negro doctor's qualifications were better than those of the other candidates, and some of the guardians wanted to treat him as "a brother."

The majority of the guardians, however, supported Dr. Capes, who opposed the appointment of the negro physician. In doing so he said: "In plain English, he is not a suitable doctor for a post of this sort. The poor are a great deal more fastidious than people imagine. They would refuse to be attended by a man of color."

BIG HAUL BY AUTO BANDITS

Trio Chased and Captured After Robbing Tourists In Ohio

Bryan, O., Sept. 19.—Motoring from Toledo westward, Herman C. G. Luyties of St. Louis and party of five were held up by three men in an automobile, six miles east of here. Threatening the tourists with revolvers, the thieves secured $2000 in cash, a gold purse carried by one of the women, several diamonds and other jewelry.

The Luyties party called Sheriff Weinland. He found the two automobiles at a farmhouse out of gasolene. As he approached Weinland was shot in the left arm and head. He arrested one man, who said he was R. W. Duffy. Two other suspects were taken later.

LAUGHING AT BRYAN

Secretary of State Crowds Wilson Out of European Papers

New York, Sept. 19.—Elbert H. Gary, chairman of the board of directors of the United States Steel corporation, on his return from Europe, said:

"All Europe is talking about Secretary of State Bryan's circus stunt, and laughing at the numerous cartoons published in their papers. There is nothing but adverse criticism for him abroad, and he is so much in the news that I did not hear President Wilson mentioned very much."

AFTER SEVEN YEARS

Man Wanted For Alleged Mail Fraud Is Finally Captured

New York, Sept. 19.—For seven years the postal authorities have kept watch abroad of Walter C. Furnald. They caught him when he returned to the United States on the steamship Majestic.

Furnald was indicted in Trenton seven years ago on a charge of using the mails in a conspiracy to defraud. This crime is not extraditable and since 1906 the postal authorities have been watching for an opportunity to get the man within their jurisdiction.

Chinese Laundries In Rate War

Boston, Sept. 19.—Three Chinese laundrymen in South Boston have broken away from the old-fashioned way of conducting business and, in order to compete with one another, have been cutting prices so that now South Boston people can have their collars laundered for 1 cent each.

FUTURE PROBLEM IN FOOD SUPPLY

Resources of World Will be Taxed In Century.

WHEAT GROWING PROBLEM.

English Professor Points Out New Field of Endeavor For Geographers. Equalization in the Distribution of Population Must Begin In Near Future, Says Expert.

The day of striking geographical explorations passed with the finding of the earth's two poles. The geographer of the future will have as his field the vital questions of supplying and distributing food and clothes to the world in the opinion of H. N. Dickson, president of a section of the British Association For the Advancement of Science. Mr. Dickson so asserted in an address delivered before the association in Birmingham, England.

Foremost of these questions, Mr. Dickson believes, will be that of growing wheat enough for the world's bread. A host of problems of the future are marshaled behind this, among them being the questions of obtaining power and energy sufficient to operate the needed increase in factories, the fuel question and the distribution of population. Within a century, he estimates, the resources of the world will be taxed to their full capacity.

Mr. Dickson is professor of geography at University college, Edinburgh; president of the Royal Meteorological society and a recognized authority and writer on meteorological and geographical topics.

Problem of Accommodation.

"Civilized man is or ought to be beginning to realize," Mr. Dickson said, "that in reducing more and more of the surface of the earth to what he considers a habitable condition he is making so much progress and making it so rapidly that the problem of finding suitable accommodation for his increasing numbers must become urgent within a few generations. We are getting into the position of the merchant whose trade is constantly expanding and who foresees that his premises will shortly be too small for him. In our case removal to more commodious premises elsewhere seems impossible—we are not likely to find a means of migration to another planet—so we are driven to consider means of rebuilding on the old site and thus making the best of what we have that our business may not suffer.

"In the type of civilization with which we are most familiar there are two fundamental elements—supplies of food energy and supplies of mechanical energy. Since at present, partly because of geographical conditions, these do not necessarily (or even in general) occur together, there is a third essential factor, the line of transport."

Mr. Dickson referred to the wheat acreage as not keeping pace with the increase in population.

"If prophecies based on population statistics are trustworthy," Mr. Dickson declared, "the crisis will be upon us before the end of the century. After that we must either depend upon some substitute to reduce the consumption per head or we must take to intensive farming of the most strenuous sort."

Takes Up Coal Supply.

As to the world's coal supply, Mr. Dickson said that the largest fields would last barely three centuries even at the present rate of consumption. Of other fields, yet undiscovered, he could, of course, make no reckoning.

"There must begin in the near future," Mr. Dickson continued, "a great equalization in the distribution of our population. This equalization will arise from a number of causes, among them being intensive cultivation of the soil and more uniform distribution of manufactures.

"What is wanted," he concluded, "is that we should seriously address ourselves to a stock taking of our resources. We should vigorously proceed with the collection and discussion of geographical data of all kinds so that the major natural distributions shall be adequately known. Eventually we shall find that country planning will become as important as town planning. In the meantime geographical knowledge will yield scientific results of much significance about such matters as distribution of population and industries and the degree of adjustment to new conditions which occurs or is possible in different regions and among different peoples."

MOONSTONES AND OPALS.

Will Be Fashion's Favorites This Season, According to Report.

Moonstones in early Celtic mountings of gold, silver and platinum will be fashionable this season, says a dispatch from London. Black opals are second favorites. Pendants are taking the place of necklets. Earrings have long hanging lobes.

The King Croesus stone, a fire opal from the mine in Asia Minor that King Croesus is said to have worked, is being worn a good deal.

Women with a taste for the oriental are adorning themselves with charms suspended from a long neck chain. They are carved out of amethyst, turquoise, onyx, lapis lazuli and other stones, and represent peacocks and elephants and strange eastern beasts.

Pendleton's Lucky Dollar

And How It Found Him a Wife

By CLARISSA MACKIE

Bob Pendleton saw it gleaming in the dust of the road and stooped to pick it up. It was a small round gold dollar of the year 1852, and there was a tiny hole bored through it near the edge.

"Mine for luck," said Bob to himself as he tucked it away in a corner of his cardcase. "Wonder when it begins."

At that moment a motorcar came swiftly around the bend of the road, and Bob having unheeded the warning blast of its siren was unceremoniously hurled to one side as the machine tore on its way.

It was a matter of a broken arm and many bruises, and so Mr. Pendleton, cursing his ill luck, was borne to the nearest hospital and placed under the care of an extremely pretty nurse.

"I'm glad that I have no inclination to sleep in the daytime," said Bob one day to Miss Furniss, the day nurse.

"Why?" she asked absently.

"It would be such a waste of time when I might be"— he paused and blushed. He had been about to add rather a broad compliment, but the pretty nurse was gazing sadly from the window, her beautiful blue eyes heavy with unshed tears.

"I SAY, WHAT IS THE MATTER?" HE ASKED GRUFFLY.

Bob's heart thrilled as it had never thrilled before. He had never cared for girls, but Miss Furniss! She was quite different, and, by Jove, she mustn't cry like that.

"I say, what is the matter?" he asked gruffly. "Any of your folks dead or anything?"

The tears fell in a silvery shower, and one warm drop landed on Bob's handsome nose, and he foolishly imagined that its presence formed a bond of intimacy between them.

"No," Miss Furniss sobbed softly; "it isn't anything like that. I haven't any people. I'm rather alone, you know."

"If you're in trouble it does a lot of good to tell it to some one," urged Bob kindly. "Don't you like your job here?"

"I hate it!" she cried viciously.

This was rather chilling information to the invalid, but Bob persisted:

"What's the matter with it? What would you rather do?" he asked.

Her reply was so unexpected that it left him speechless.

"I—I'd rather be married!" she sobbed.

"Married?" Bob asked this question after a long, long silence.

"Yes, married!" she retorted. "Sounds horrid, doesn't it?"

"Sounds rather interesting," returned Bob slowly. "You ought not to—er—have any worry over that, don't you know."

"It's his—m-m-mother," quavered Miss Furniss sadly.

"Oh, his mother!"

"She is—she is only his stepmother, and I was her nurse during a severe illness and long convalescence. Of course I met him there."

"Oh!" and Bob winced as he moved his injured arm. "And she didn't approve?"

"She was quite resigned to it, but she was a very eccentric woman and of a suspicious nature. One day I was with her in the motorcar, and she suddenly cried that she had lost something. It was an ornament. She accused me of taking it. She took me home and had me searched."

"And him—what of him?" demanded Bob fiercely.

"Peyton? Oh, he laughed and said it was all Mrs. Winton's nonsense and I was not to mind, but I am proud, and I felt hurt that he did not fly more quickly to my defense, so I said that I would not marry him until the article had been found and both he and his mother had apologized. He made rather a fuss over it."

"When did it happen?"

"Two months ago," she said, glancing at her watch and rising. "Oh, Mr. Pendleton, I am afraid I have given you a dreary half hour! You will forgive me?"

"I will if you will promise to let me help you out of your trouble," said Bob gravely. "Tell me what it was Mrs. Winton lost and where she lost it. I'm something of an amateur detective. Perhaps I can help."

"You are very good," she said, with a tender little smile that brought his heart to his throat. "We were driving on the Merrivale road when she said she had lost the charm from her long gold watch chain. She valued the charm because it had been given to her by her husband, who was dead."

"And the charm—what was it?"

"Oh, just a little gold dollar of the year 1852. Her initials were engraved on one side. Now, Monsieur Detective, what are you going to do about it?" She smiled mischievously down at him, her dainty cap poised like a white moth on her sunny brown hair.

Bob Pendleton's brown eyes flashed in a rare smile.

"I'm going to find it and restore it to the owner," he said briskly. "After that you will give me news of what happens?"

She blushed and nodded.

"They are sure to come to you at once," said Bob.

"Oh, you think so?" she asked, with a quick catch of the breath.

"How could they help it?" he asked and turned away his head so that she could not see the pain in his eyes.

She went away very softly, and Bob threw his well arm across his eyes and lay very still for a long time.

It was two weeks after that conversation that Bob Pendleton was discharged from the hospital. During the period of his confinement his beard had grown, and now, after having it trimmed to a careful and most becoming vandyke fashion, he made his way to the residence of Mrs. Henry Winton on Oakleigh avenue.

"You wish to see me?" inquired Mrs. Winton.

"Yes, Mrs. Winton. I was walking along the Merrivale road a few weeks ago, and I found this." Bob held out the gold dollar, one side of which was smoothly polished and bore three initials, "F. M. W."

"My charm!" she cried with pleasure as she snatched the coin from his fingers. "I rather thought it had been stolen," she said.

"I hope that if you suspected any one my returning it to you will establish their innocence," he said, with a keen glance at her harsh countenance.

She shrugged her shoulders.

"The person is no longer in my employ. It doesn't matter. No harm has been done. I am extremely obliged to you, Mr—er"—

"Smith," supplied Bob, rising to depart.

"Mr. Smith," she finished, with a smile. "Perhaps you will excuse me now, but my son is to be married this evening, and I have a long motor drive before me."

"Ah, good morning, Mrs. Winton," said Bob dazedly, and he went away from the house with a stunned look in his face.

"Married! Married! What of her?" he muttered over and over again as he went back to his rooms. "The cur! And the woman, of course—they will never apologize to my poor darling." He paced the floor restlessly until the evening papers were in his hands.

There was an account of the wedding of Peyton Winton and some well known society girl at a magnificent country place. Bob Pendleton read every word, and then he put on his hat and went to the hospital.

It was Miss Furniss' evening off, and the attendant told him that he would undoubtedly find her at the Nurses' club near by. Presently he was seated in the empty reception room of the little club waiting with beating heart for the advent of Stella Furniss.

She came, looking strangely unfamiliar without her uniform.

"I have come to report," he said, smiling gravely at her look of inquiry.

"You haven't found it?" she asked, waves of rose color rising in her cheeks.

"Yes, I found it three weeks ago," and Bob told her all about finding the "lucky" dollar which in the beginning had proved so unlucky for him.

"So I restored it to Mrs. Winton today," he ended; "but, Miss Furniss, she impresses me as being a lady who would not trouble to apologize for an unjust accusation."

The color in her cheeks receded, but her eyes met his bravely. "Mr. Pendleton, you will think it strange, but since I had that conversation with you one day somehow I have not cared whether she—they apologize or not."

"Then you don't care a hang?" demanded Bob excitedly.

She smiled faintly, and her eyes dropped.

"Not a hang!" she said demurely.

"Then—then I'll have a chance. Stella, I'm rushing in where angels fear to tread, but I don't suppose you could like me a little bit? I love you, darling, I do, and if you only could care—why, Stella!" Something in the swift, shy glance she sent at him brought him to her side.

"When?" he asked.

"Oh, ever since—ever since you arrived," she whispered softly.

"Dearest!" This time their lips met.

And then later he told her of the wedding of Peyton Winton. She smiled scornfully. "Suppose I had married him!" she shuddered. "This all happened through that blessed dollar, Bob, and I never thought my road of bitter trouble would bring me to the broad highway of happiness."

"I shall always call it my lucky dollar," smiled Bob. "You see, it found a wife for me, and I never knew I needed one until I saw you."

PRESENTING THE PASSION PLAY AT THE SWISS OBERAMMERGAU

Simple, Pious Folk of Selzach Play Drama Each Sunday.

Origin of the Play Extends Back to the Middle Ages.

SELZACH, a charming village nestling at the foot of the Weissenstein and encircled by verdant meadows and forests of a wonderful bluish green tint—such is the Swiss Oberammergau, where once again the great drama of the passion and resurrection of Christ was represented every Sunday during the summer.

While the origin of the Passion play performances in Switzerland is not based on facts similar to those connected with the origin of the Oberammergau performances, the purpose is nevertheless the same, and it is, moreover, interesting to know that the history of religious plays in Switzerland can be traced back to the early middle ages, when it was the custom of certain monasteries to represent the Lord's resurrection to their congregations on Easter Sunday. Simple as those Easter plays were at first, they gradually gained in value and importance; more details were added from the Bible history until they included the whole passion of the Saviour.

A decline in the production of sacred dramas made itself felt in the seventeenth century.

It was thus reserved for the then unknown village of Selzach at the close of the nineteenth century to give new life to Passion play performances in Switzerland. The inhabitants of Selzach, a simple and pious people, had for many years in the past been accustomed to devote the long winter evenings to the study and rendering of religious plays and oratorios, and when A. Schafli, one of the pioneers in the village, went to Oberammergau in 1890 the representation made such an extraordinary impression on him and his four companions that they resolved that Selzach, with its natural inclination for the reproduction of religious dramas, could make a success of the play in Switzerland. Numerous obstacles seemed, however, at first to make a carrying out of their plans impossible, and it was only in the winter of 1892, when the local choral society performed the beautiful Christmas oratorio by Hering with such an astonishing success, that the villagers could be induced to attempt the study of the great Passion oratorio by the Rev. H. F. Muller of Fulda.

The oratorio was consequently developed into a dramatic reproduction, and the first representation of the same, which was divided into morning and afternoon parts, took place in 1895 in a spacious theater especially erected for the purpose. The performances gained now a reputation which extended far beyond the Swiss frontiers; the fervor of these simple actors and their devout love and intimate understanding of their noble task caused wonder and admiration on every part.

In 1896, 1898, 1901, 1905 and 1909 the representations, showing new improvements on each occasion, were again repeated, and Selzach is now universally known as the Swiss Oberammergau.

An American visitor who has witnessed the play said: "And now to the play itself. It consists of two parts, a morning performance from 11 to 12:30 and an afternoon performance from 2:30 to 5. While the morning presentation consists of a series of tableaux vivants showing incidents and episodes from the Old and New Testaments, also scenes depicting the childhood and ministry of Christ, the afternoon program represents the sufferings and death of Christ and his glorious resurrection and ascension.

"'Let There Be Light,' a strikingly beautiful representation of the creation, forms the opening of the play. Then come the story of Adam and Eve, the fratricide, Abraham's temptation, Jacob's dream, Joseph sold by his brethren and Joseph in Egypt, the finding of Moses, the manna and the giving of the law of Mount Sinai. Each number on the program seemed to surpass its predecessor, and the large audience listened and watched spellbound, for who would have suspected an ensemble of such accomplished and highly gifted artists among the simple village populace of Selzach?

"The second part of the morning performance included ten scenes from the New Testament—the angelic salutation, the angel appearing to the shepherds, the star of Bethlehem, the birth of Christ, the adoration of the Magi, the flight into Egypt, the baptism in the river Jordan, the Sermon on the Mount, Jesus, the divine friend of children, and the entry into Jerusalem.

"Altogether marvelous light effects were obtained by means of a most skillfully managed artificial illumination. In 'Jacob's Dream' a real impression of a golden path to heaven was shown, and the angels in all scenes appeared much more real than they are seen in the Oberammergau play.

"The afternoon program, opening with the 'Designs of the High Council' and ending with the 'Ascension,' was rendered with such exquisite art and heart touching devotion that the memory of it will forever remain with those who were present. After the great tragic of the crucifixion the dazzling representation of the resurrection and ascension formed a rare illustration of what is embodied in Christian hope and a most impressive finale to this most sacred of dramatic plays."

HEAVY FINE FOR SWEEPING

Argument as to Who Was Captain of the Sweepers

The watchfulness of the police of Cohasset for violation of the fish and game laws resulted in a midnight raid in Cohasset Harbor last night and the arrest of five men on a charge of sweeping. This morning Judge Avery fined Lawrence and Louis Scola $100 each and the cases of Peter and John Bramanti and William D. Litchfield were placed on file.

The men had stretched a large seine from shore and had made one sweep when Officers Antone and Grassey spotted them. The raid was made while they were preparing to make another sweep.

Judge Avery said that he would only fine the captain. A conference to determine who was captain resulted in a disagreement, and after a hearing the court imposed the fine on the Scolas.

There is more Catarrh in this section of the country than all other diseases put together, and until the last few years was supposed to be incurable. For a great many years doctors pronounced it a local disease and prescribed local remedies, and by constantly failing to cure local treatment, pronounced it incurable. Science has proven catarrh to be a constitutional disease and therefore requires constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, Ohio, is the only constitutional cure on the market. It is taken internally in doses from 10 drops to a teaspoonful. It acts directly on the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. They offer one hundred dollars for any case it fails to cure. Send for circulars and testimonials.

SUGGESTION FOR QUINCY

Malden to Have Planning Board of Five Citizens

Following out the suggestions made by the committee who a few years ago were considering the subject of a planning board for the greater Boston community, the City of Malden has posed an ordinance which might be followed with good results in Quincy.

Malden's proposed ordinance provides for a council of five citizens to be appointed by the Mayor for a term of five years.

The council will give attention to the housing and comforts of the residents of the city, have charge of all proposed city buildings to be erected and of alterations to existing buildings, plan the care of the public grounds, highways and city property, establish street lines, pass upon proposed buildings, franchises and perform any other duties in the line of civic betterment which they may be called upon to perform by the city council.

RENDERS OWN COMPOSITIONS

American Benefit Society Hear Arthur S. Kendall

Under the direction of the American Benefit society an entertainment of music and moving pictures was held in Odd Fellows hall, Wollaston Thursday evening.

One of the features was the singing of Arthur S. Kendall who rendered a number of selections to music of his own composing. His renditions were greatly appreciated and included Kipling's poems "Trade Winds" and "Gunga Din" set to music, and "What's the use o' workin'" and "Bugaboo."

Harry Warren of Newton and Clifton Young of Quincy were the other vocalists.

The moving pictures consisted of scenes from the Bronx Zoo, New York and a number of comic films.

This part of the entertainment was given by the Larkin Company of Boston and the last subject was a photo story of "The Good family in Pleasantville," showing how one family took advantage of the Larkin plan. The story was interpreted by Walter Techan.

The committee for the affair consisted of Mrs. Rosa M. Taylor, Mrs. L. W. Collett, Mrs. Grace Polson, Mrs. Annie Coleman, Miss Irene Coleman, N. S. Sanford and C. R. Brown.

—"Safety first!" that's what the railroad mangers and railroad newspapers are saving now; it's, what they should have said—and seen to—all along. Citizens who travel by rail prefer cleanliness to dirt, comfort to discomfort, but their chief concern is and always has been to reach the end of their journey alive and with whole bones. The swiftest and most luxuriously appointed train would not tempt a man of them if she knew that for him the terminal was to be the grave or the hospital.—Hartford Courant.

PATIENT HAS RARE DISEASE

Case of "Noma" Developes In Italian at City Hospital

One of the few cases of Noma, Massachusetts has had, developed in an Italian about to be discharged from the Quincy City Hospital this week. The man had practically recovered from a fractured leg when the disease made its appearance.

Noma, while not on the list of cantagious diseases is infectious. The name is taken from the Greek, meaning "to eat." It is a grave and usually form of stomatitis, occurring generally in debilitated children, generally convalescent and is a rare disease in adults. It is characterized by a formation of a rapidly spreading ulcer involving the cheek which soon becomes gangrenous. The disease is micro-organismal in origin.

The last time the disease made its appearance in Massachusetts was about five years ago when several cases were treated at the Boston City Hospital and most of them resulted fatally.

To safeguard the public the Board of Health considered isolating the patient in the pest house but arrangements have been made with the authorities of the State Hospital at Tewkesbury and he will be taken there for treatment.

WILL TAKE UP NEW COURSE

Two Quincy boys, graduates of the class of 1913 at the Quincy High are to take the four years business administration course at the Boston University. They are George E. Dahlquist, who has recently moved to Dedham and H. W. Safford of Atlantic.

The boys intended to take the regular law course but on advice of the Dean they will take up the course noted above. There is a constant demand on the part of business men throughout the country for young men with business administration training, and the demand more than exceeds the supply. The young men will commence their college work on Monday, Oct. 6.

The course is a new one recently established by Boston University to fill the demand for such young men.

OPPORTUNITY TO HELP GRANITE INDUSTRY

Correspondent Suggests Quincy Granite be Used For Boston's Dry Dock

Of Two Materials, Granite or Concrete, Former is Most Durable

Alexander W. Russell, of the Granite Cutters Union, calls attention to the fact that now is the time for the citizens of Quincy to say a good word for the city's main industry, by urging that Quincy granite be used in the construction of the new dry dock to be built by the Directors of the Port of Boston. His suggestion is a timely one and should be furthered. Here is an opportunity for the Quincy Board of Trade to show its good offices and help along the project. Mr. Russells letter follows:

Quincy, Mass., Sept. 19, 1913.
Editor Daily Ledger:

The public spirited citizens of this city have at present an excellent opportunity to help one of its principal industries by showing that the contemplated dry dock to be built by the Directors of the Port of Boston on the Commonwealth flats at South Boston should be built of granite.

The Directors of the Port of Boston realizing that a dry dock is one of the greatest assets Boston can have, intend to have built, a dry dock large enough to be used by the largest craft afloat or that may be built for many years to come. There are two materials of which the dock may be built, namely granite or concrete. When it comes to be a question of durability there is no comparison. Granite greatly excels concrete in durability and in all the requisites necessary to make a first class dry dock. The cheapness of concrete may help to a considerable extent in causing the dock to be built of that material and present needs may cause its selection; therefore every effort should be made to show why granite should be used. Anything built of granite is practically there for all time while anything built of concrete cannot, because of the nature of its composition, withstand the ravages of time and the elements, particularly sea water, and what may appear cheap now, may prove to be very dear in the end. To prove this assertion anyone who has seen the docks of any description in the large commercial cities of the world must admit that granite is the material generally used.

The docks at Liverpool, England are built of granite. So are those at Glasgow, Scotland. The dry docks at Charlestown Navy yard and also at Bremerton, Wash., are built of Granite. Many other instances could be cited to show that granite has been used where durability, and in the end cheapness was the objective point of view.

It may be necessary for the Legis-

DAY NURSERY FLOWER DAY

Ladies Doing Thriving Business in Spite of the Weather

Today is flower day with the day nursery, and although the weather is not just what the ladies would have liked, nothing daunted by the rain, a large number of young people are about selling flowers.

Flower day is carried on along the same lines as are the tag days, that have proved so successful in other enterprizes. Everybody is asked to buy a flower, and the more that one pays for it better the ladies like it.

In the Wollaston and Norfolk Downs section, the following young ladies started out bright and early this morning, Miss Margaret Taylor, Miss Dorothy Atwood, Miss Ada Nelson and Miss Elsie Thompson.

In Ward One, Mrs. E. C. Hultman, the chairman of the flower day was on hand bright and early with a corps of young ladies and masters and they were doing a thriving business all along the line.

The other wards of the city are not being negleted for in every ward either young ladies or boys are making a canvass of the ward with their flowers and every passer on the street is being held up.

While a good sum will be realized for this most worthy object, it is to be regretted that the weather could not have been more pleasant.

Seaton McLennan, assistant manager of the Summerfield stores of the United States, has been engaged as manager of the Henry L. Kincaide & Co., furniture store of this city.

A whist party for the benefit of Paul Revere Womens Relief Corps will be held with Mrs. Mary A. Jones at 58 River street, Monday afternoon.

BROTHERS MEET AFTER 25 YEARS

Street Car Conductor Finds Long Lost Brother

Finney Thorne of St. Louis a Government inspector, came to Boston on government business this week and met his brother Charles Thorne, a conductor on the Bay State Street Railway, whom he had not seen for 25 years. The meeting was a strange one and as accidental as such meetings can be.

Finney, was riding in the vestiblue of a car and being a stranger was naturally interested in points along the car line. He engaged the conductor in conversation and said he was trying to locate a man named Charles Thorne.

Well, replied the conductor, my name is Thorne. What can I do for you?

Finney, surprised for the moment, recovered and asked "do you know me?"

No, said Charlie.

Finney smiled extended his hand and said "Charlie, I'm your brother and we better shake," and they did.

Finney was the guest of his brother part of the week and has returned to St. Louis. He is about 60 years of age and carries a bullet received in an Indian fight while a member of the United States Army.

Popular Couple Are United at St. John's Church

Miss Julia Brown Roche, daughter of the late John Roche and John J. O'Hara were married at noon today in St. John's church. The marriage was solemnized by Rev. Fr. John J. Coan and the ceremony was witnessed by the immediate members of the family and relatives.

Miss Katherine F. Roche a sister of the bridesmaid was her attendant and Michael J. O'Hara, a brother of the groom was the best man. The bride was gowned in a travelling suit of blue and wore a black velvet hat. The bridesmaid was gowned in blue charmeuse with hat to match.

A wedding breakfast was served at the home of Representative and Mrs. Michael T. Sullivan following the ceremony after which Mr. and Mrs. O'Hara left on a wedding trip to Savannah and Atlanta. They will be at their home, 86 Revere road after Dec. 1.

Mr. O'Hara is a graduate of Adams Academy, class of 1897 and had a remarkable athletic record while at the school. In addition to equalling the amateur record for the 100 yard dash at Lovell's grove in the famous Adams-Thayer meet of that year he clinched the winning point for Adams by taking the broad jump, the last event, and smashed the South Shore record. He received his degree at Boston College in 1901 and studied law at Georgetown University graduating in 1904. He was admitted to the Massachusetts bar in 1905, and was elected to the School committee from Ward Two in 1907. In 1908 he was appointed tax collector by Mayor Shea to fill the vacancy caused by the resignation of Timothy J. Carey.

Miss Roche is one of the most attractive young ladies in the city and is the sister of Mrs. Michael T. Sullivan of School street. She is well known in club circles.

They were the recipients of many beautful gifts.

The two Wollaston troops of the Boy Scouts have united and will meet Tuesday evenings in the Wollaston garage. Mr. Brown the scout master has accompilshed much in the past for the boys and future meetings promise much.

TO HAVE SIX TEAM LEAGUE

Some Classy Bowling Assured in New Clan League

The organization of six team league among the members of Clan MacGregor, Order of Scottish Clans has aroused more legitimate sporting interest in the South Quincy section than anything that has occurred within the precincts of the ward for years. In addition to the local league, the clan will defend its title of champion in the Scottish Clans league. Commencing Tuesday night 30 contests will be rolled on the Coliseum alleys and $90 will be distributed in prize money. Beyond doubt, the fastest rolling of the year will be done by this league since many of them are finished bowlers and have had wide experience as alley men in several fast teams.

The teams will roll under the name of the captains, all of whom comprise the executive committee. They are Charles MacKenzie, William O'Neil, William McLean, Alex Mavers, George Thompson and James Michaels.

The officers are Mathew Nicol, president: Harley Smith, vice president; Charles Oswald, secretary; John Gordon treasurer.

Among the prizes that are offered is $15 and $10 for the first two teams, $5 prizes for high team average, high three string team total, high individual average and high individual three string total. Other prizes include $2.50 to the highest individual average in each team.

SUPPER AND ENTERTAINMENT

The fair committee of Col. Abner Packard Camp, Sons of Veterans gave the members of the allied patriotic societies an old fashioned supper and entertainment in Grand Army hall Friday evening which was largely attended. Plans were discussed for the annual fair which will take place in Faxon hall from Nov. 3 to 8th, inclusive, in aid of the relief fund. "Billy" Troy and the orchestra of the Sons of Veterans furnished music during the evening.

NORTH STATION THE BUSIEST

Leads South Station by More Than 1,000,000

Some idea of the number of passengers handled each day by three greatest railroad terminals in the United States may be had from the comparisons of the number of passengers handled by the South Station and North Station Boston and the Grand Central Station in New York. Both of the Boston stations, according to figures submitted handle more passengers than the Grand Central of New York.

According to the reports the average number of passengers handled each day by the North Station is 80,852, South Station, 77,664 and Grand Central Station, 61,379.

Figures prepared show the number of incoming and outgoing passengers for the year ending June 30, 1913 and the three great railroad terminals to have been as follows:

North Station,	29,510,857
South Station,	28,347,399
Grand Central, New York,	22,403,295

When it comes to the number of trains handled each day it is found that at the South Station the number of trains is 843 per day, North Station, 573, Grand Central Station 450.

When considering the above facts it must be born in mind that the Grand Central Station, New York is not finished as yet, and that it will be the largest railroad terminal in the world. There are 21 tracks yet to be laid in the terminal and when completed it will be able to handle 70,000 passengers a day, whilte it now handles but 62,000 a day.

NIMROD WINS MORE PRIZES

"Nimrod" Elcock, who has been exhibiting her dogs at recent fairs, has as usual carried off the best prizes. At Clinton Sept. 12, she won the open contest for winners and $8 with her "Comet" and "Nimrod Sarah" her fox hounds. At Framingham she won the contest for open winners with the same dogs also four specials. "Comet" got the honor of being the best fox hound, beating "Nimrod Sarah" one point.

These September Mornings Are Beautiful

Even the old turnpikes are certainly beautiful with their processions of two-horsed hay wagons, jogging along to the hay market, loaded with new mown hay.

But finer still are the smiling cornfields, tall and graceful, long eared and royal tasseled, with pride in that they enrich the world for man and beast.

Trees and closecut lawns of June time green are at their best, and so are the winding, narrow roads with patches every now and then of crimson gladioli and zinnias and white alders with purple eyes looking at you.

But the cities are putting on new signs of life, the streets are more crowded these days and so are the stores.

This onestore already seems too big now to receive its guests. It is a cheerful sound to hear people say—

It is so good to get back home with you again

This one store already seems too big people to this good store, kept so neat, clean and wholesome, and with goods so fresh and desirable.

Canada lost one of its promising industries when Thaw was deported.

The editors have positive views about the meaning of the Maine election, but some of them would be susceptible to change if another paper offered a higher silary.

Perhaps what interests the Congressmen is not so much the fact that the tariff bill has passed the Senate, as that their speeches are now safely mailed to the constituents.

Last spring's derby hat may be all right, but the hatmakers have seen to it that it doesn't look all right.

Corn roasts are popular in the rural districts, and the more the corn is scorched and smoked, the better it tastes.

Now that cheaper rubber is promised, it is believed the time will again come when a pair of rubber overshoes will wear as much as a fortnight.

AT THE HUSKIN'S.

City people thing of the country as horribly isolated and lonesome. Actually, however, village life is often full of social engagements. In many a cross roads hamlet. the first event on the fall program is the corn husking.

Under ordinary circumstances husking corn is a laborious employment. The husks are full of stuffy dust which sets one coughing and dulls the energy of the workers.

But with the girls of the neighborhood at your side, the glamor of social pleasure surrounds even the tedious task. The tradition of red ears makes the occasion one of coquetry and romance.

Uncle Reuben is a pretty shrewd old fellow. He has a good idea of the conditions under which work is done easily. No American custom shows a keener notion of how to get something for nothing. With an inexpensive spread of sandwiches, apples, roast corn, and sweet cider, the mountain of stalks, the sight of which made the farm hepl so tired, is quickly turned to a heap of golden ears.

ECONOMY OF ADVERTISING.

Some people seem to think that much of the money spent in advertising is wasted. But does it seem likely that the business men of the United States would spend their billions in this way unless it produced returns?

The simple truth is that advertising is the least expensive form of salesmanship. To send a man around to canvass for your goods the people who read this newspaper , would cost a hundred or more times as much as the price of an advertisement in the newspaper.

And the canvasser would not get as good results as the newspaper ad brings. He would find half his "prospects" out. Three-quarters of the rest would give him no serious attention, because when he called they would be busy about other matters.

The newspaper is picked up when people are at leisure. They read its advertising as carefully as any part of the paper, and what the merchant says is given thoughtful attention.

MAYOR GAYNOR'S POWER.

Even the people who have dissented most sharply from Mayor Mayor Gaynor's philosophy regret his death, and are glad to acknowledge the many aspects in which he possessed original and unique force.

Shortly after he was elected mayor of New York, he walked seven miles one day through the slush, his feet clad in rubber boots to attend the raising of a flag he had given to an outlying village.

Most public men would not have bothered. They would scarcely have taken pains to write a personal letter of regret. A secretary could compose something perfectly appropriate. But Mayor Gaynor wanted to expound the true meaning of the flag to a group of his neighbors.

Possessing gracious gifts of public speech, Judge Gaynor was in demand for after dinner oratory. But if anyone was tardy or undignified, he might snub and lecture the committee who invited him, admonish the chairman, and scold the audience. What the etiquette book said about such occasions did not seem to him vital, if there were things in his mind that he felt should be said.

The parent whose child had got lost, the citizen whose walk was neglected by the street sweeper, the woman whose husband had deserted—everyone wrote to the Mayor of New York for help. In the case of most public men, many of these letters would never get further than the clever secretary who acts as a buffer to the outside world. Mayor Gaynor turned out 50 or more personal letters daily, full of penetrating admonition.

Modern life is too full of machinery. There is too little personal contact. In the old days, the Greek philosophers talked man to man with any one who asked their counsel on the street. This was one source of their enduring power. Mayor Gaynor seems like a reincarnation of this type.

Civilization Promotes Its Own Destruction.

Segregation of Unfit a Duty

By Dr. CHARLES W. ELIOT, President Emeritus of Harvard University

THE progressive civilization of the last one hundred years has worked terribly against the health and perpetuity of the whole race. This is seen in the REDUCED VITALITY of the multitudes that inhabit closely built cities, in the DIMINISHING SIZE OF FAMILIES, in the incapacity of many women for bearing and nursing children and in the disproportionate increase in the number of the insane, the defective and the criminally inclined.

SUCH CITIES AS PARIS, LONDON, BERLIN, NEW YORK AND CHICAGO BEAR WITNESS TO THE FACT THAT MODERN CIVILIZATION IS ALL THE TIME PREPARING AND PROMOTING ITS OWN DESTRUCTION.

It is a plain duty of the state to provide SEGREGATION of the DEFECTIVE, the INSANE and the HABITUAL CRIMINAL in order to prevent the breeding of human beings from such stock. It is not yet clear how good breeding can be promoted among free men and women, but it is clear how BAD BREEDING CAN AND SHOULD BE PREVENTED.

Society should be enlightened concerning the means of defending civilization against ITS OWN TENDENCIES OF DECAY AND DISSOLUTION and the strengthening of the social resolution to put into execution all the measures which Christian ethics and the medical arts and sciences recommend.

Among defensive measures against the evils which crowded cities and the factory system have brought on mankind the subject of school hygiene is of FIRST IMPORTANCE. The evils which result from bad housing, overcrowding and unwholesome excitement in cities and from the factory system which prevails in many important industries have their WORST EFFECT ON CHILDREN AND YOUNG PEOPLE. It is to the rising generation, therefore, that PREVENTIVE AND REMEDIAL MEASURES may be most hopefully applied.

DYNAMITES HIS HOME

Human Bomb Succeeds In Killing Himself and Daughter

Bloomington, Ills., Sept. 20.—Mack Hurst, 50 years old, a stone mason, blew up his home here with dynamite, killing himself and his 17-year-old daughter, Maud, injuring two other children, girls of 13 and 6 years, and stunning his wife.

Hurst had been separated from his wife for six weeks and she refused to take him back. It is believed he then determined to wipe out the entire family, consisting of his wife and eight children.

The dead girl met the fate intended for her mother, and the fact that they had changed beds for the night cost the daughter her life. Hurst, after stealthily planting a stick of dynamite under each of the beds in the house, tied two sticks to his own body, crawled into the bed which he had formerly occupied with his wife, but which contained the three daughters, Maud, Fannie and Elizabeth.

The fact that only the dynamite attached to Hurst's body had exploded accounted for the escape of the other members of the family.

NATHAN HITS CHURCH

Mayor of Rome Delivers Bitter Speech Against Catholics

Rome, Sept. 20.—Ernest Nathan, mayor of Rome, in connection with exercises commemorating the anniversary of the fall of the temporal power, delivered a bitter anti-Catholic speech.

"The political reactionists," he said, "deaf to the voices of the national will, wrapped in their vestments of religion and flattered by the hope that they will regain lost prestige, are insinuating themselves among the masses of the people called to the ballot in an endeavor to secure their support."

Referring to the recent games of the International Catholic league, held under the patronage of the Vatican, the mayor said:

"The athletic squadrons marched the streets of Rome and with impunity affirmed in various languages their impotent desire to restore it to the papacy."

SCHMIDT SAYS LIFE IS NOT WORTH LIVING

Tells Reporters He Wants to Go to Electric Chair

New York, Sept. 20.—"What's the difference if I killed one or half a dozen?" asked Hans Schmidt, the confessed slayer of Anna Aumuller.

It was the first opportunity the newspaper men had been given to talk with the prisoner, and in the course of the interview the priest made some startling statements.

"The disrict attorney wants me to go to the electric chair quickly," said Schmidt. "What's the use of all this delay? I am sorry for anyone who thinks this life is worth living. I have faced death many times and I will face death in the electric chair without moving a muscle."

BRONZE DECIDED UPON

Result of Conference Over Construction of Cup Defender

Bristol, R. I., Sept. 20.—The Herreshoff sloop to be built for the Vanderbilt syndicate to enter next year's trial races for the honor of defending the America's cup against Sir Thomas Lipton's new challenger will be constructed of bronze.

This was decided after a long conference between Robert W. Emmons of Boston, who has been appointed manager of the boat, and Designer Herreshoff. While a heavy steel boat was first considered it was decided that a lighter boat should be more desirable.

BOMB FOR WOODWARD

Mayor of Atlanta Receives Harmless "Infernal Machine"

Atlanta, Sept. 20.—A metal tube containing an explosive was received through the mail by Mayor Woodward. It was wrapped in paper.

An expert in explosives examined the tube and reported that it contained a substance which would have exploded if the tube had been opened carelessly, but he said the explosion would have resulted in no injury.

The tube was mailed in Atlanta. Closing of disreputable places by policemen was criticised by the mayor recently.

Belfast, Me., Sept. 20.—Freeman Harvey, aged 18, was held without bail for the grand jury on a charge of murder after a hearing in the municipal court. He was accused by George H. Harvey with having killed the latter's son, Elmer S. Harvey. The two young men were cousins.

Elmer Harvey died a short time after being engaged in a scuffle with several companions, it is alleged.

WILL DECIDE AGAINST THAW

Felker Expected to Grant Request For Extradition

WON'T HESITATE VERY LONG

Case Will Then Be Fought Out In United States Court, the Matteawan Fugitive Meanwhile Being Safe Anywhere For Long Time—Counsel Grossman Is Dismissed

Concord, N. H., Sept. 20.—Governor Felker will probably grant the request of the state of New York for the extradition of Harry K. Thaw. He has had the state law department busily engaged in examining the legal aspect of the case in anticipation of the hearing Tuesday, and it was stated here that the results of this investigation point to favorable action upon the New York request.

From his researches the governor is convinced that it is his duty to grant New York's request for extradition.

When extradition is granted the case will immediately go to the federal courts on habeas corpus proceedings. The entire Thaw case will then be up to the United States tribunals. It will doubtless be many months before the ultimate fate of Thaw will be decided.

One closely associated with the governor said that in his opinion Felker would not hesitate long before granting the request of the New York authorities.

If the governor grants the extradition he will thereby be putting the entire Thaw matter upon the broad shoulders of the federal government, and the final outcome of the greatly involved case will in no wise have depended upon the attitude of the chief executive of the Granite State.

Wih extradition granted, the matter will be immediately transferred to the United States court, district of New Hampshire, and there it will be fought out, the final decision perhaps being held in abeyance for a long time.

In the case of extradition, Felker sits alone, and not with the members of his council, as is the case in considering many other matters. This is said by some to constitute another reason why the governor will not assume the burden of giving Thaw the right to remain free in this state.

Many believe Thaw's counsel would be pleased to have the governor sign the extradition papers.

With Thaw free in this state, a chance would be open for more of the so-called "strong-arm" work, and if the fugitive feared being kidnapped in Canada, he certainly would worry after being turned loose in this state without the protection of the strong arm of Uncle Sam. New Hampshire would be his only real safe haven in the whole world.

On the other hand, if the governor grants the extradition requested by New York, the habeas corpus writ in the United States courts or some other action will hold the matter in abeyance for a long time, and during that time Thaw would be safe anywhere until the injunction granted by Judge Aldrich against the interference of outside parties dissolved.

Thaw last night dismissed Morris Grossman of New York from his score or more of attorneys. Grossman will not return to assist in the case when it comes up before Felker, nor, in fact, will he have anything more to do with it at all if Thaw can have his way.

Thaw has been disturbed by the manner in which Grossman has conducted himself. He does not like the claims of this member of his counsel to the lion's share of the credit for the success of the case in general.

Supreme Court Judge Refuses to Sign Brokaw Divorce Decree

New York, Sept. 20.—Supreme Court Justice Kelly of Brooklyn, who granted an interlocutory decree of divorce to Mrs. Mary B. Brokaw in her suit against W. G. Brokaw, has refused to sign the decree submitted by her counsel.

"If the plaintiff will submit an interlocutory decree in proper form I will sign it," he wrote.

The Brokaws were separated in 1910, when Mrs. Brokaw by a court decree was allowed $15,000 a year alimony.

GRANITE INDUSTRY

lature to authorize an increased expenditure in order to have the dock built entirely of granite and so public spirited citizens should direct their energies towards attaining that result; particularly on account of the fact that Quincy is so near Boston and our granite manufacturers and quarry owners would have an opportunity to enter in competition for a share at least of the immense amount of granite which will be necessary to build the dock. More work for our citizens means increased prosperity to our city, and this matter should be taken up by all organizations interested in this city's welfare and furthermore, the candidates for election to the Legislature and State Senate should be asked for an expression of opinion as to whether or not they would be in favor of voting for an appropriation that would allow of the material to be used in the building of the dock to be principally granite. From what I know of the men who have represented this city in the Legislature and the Senate during the past decade, there is no question in my mind but what Quincy's representatives will do their best towards adding to Quincy's welfare by voting for an increased appropriation if it is necessary.

A great deal depends on prompt action in this matter because there is no question but what the engineers will soon be, if not already at work on their plans, and as the plans for concrete and granite would differ in detail, strenuous efforts should be made towards imbueing the powers that be with the idea that granite is the material, and I would suggest that every public spirited citizen and all our local organizations should memorialize the Directors of the Port of Boston to the effect that the proposed dry dock be of granite.

The Quincy Manufacturers Association have, I understand, taken up the matter. The Granite Cutters Organizations have also acted but as every little helps in matters of this kind, I hope that our citizens prominent in public affairs will act promptly

In conclusion I may state that this will be one of the biggest jobs ever erected or attempted in this vicinity, the amount of granite used will be enormous and that fact alone should have considerable weight with the organizations of this city who have the welfare of Quincy at heart. I may also state that the cement manufacturers are working night and day to have the dock built of concrete. Let us hope that the granite interests will be also alive to the opportunity at hand and show the Directors of the Port of Boston that the bed rock of the world is the cheapest in the end, because what may be saved in a first expenditure on concrete, will be swallowed up in repairs in a few years, and also that granite exceeds concrete in appearance strength and durability and is about the only material that sea water has no effect on as the years go by.

Yours for Quincy,
Alex W. Russell.

CONSULAR SERVICE.

Morning, afternoon and evening sessions are held by the New York University School of Commerce, Accounts and Finance, the university year beginning Sept. 25. There are about 1,100 positions in the Consular Service of the United States. For the past eight years the more important of these positions have been filled either by promotions from the classes in the service next below in rank, or by appointment from a list of those who had qualified by means of an examination conducted by the State Department. An announcement has just been made that this policy in reference to filling vacancies in our foreign service is to be continued during the present administration. These facts have led the New York University School of Commerce, Accounts and Finance, to extend its courses for Consular service.

The consular service is constantly drawing more young men to itself because of the opportunity for foreign travel, the salary and the prospects for promotion. With the steady increase in American travel, moreover, and the growth of the international trade, the consular offices are becoming of increasing importance; and such a movement will be even more noticeable after the completion of the Panama Canal, when the shifting of the oceanic trade routes will demand that more careful attention than ever be paid to the promotion of American commerce and trade relations. The young man who is able to pass the consular examination and thus indicate his fitness for an appointment to a sub-post as clerk, assistant or student interpreter and who shows in his work both ability and efficiency has bright possibilities for the future.

The courses in Consular Service have been prepared with a view of interesting and benefiting not only those who are actually preparing themselves for positions as consuls but also those whose business interests, present and prospective, will bring them in contact with business conditions and methods of foreign countries.

FIRST YEAR.

Consular Service and Consular Methods (30 hours.) Given by J. P. Seldon, who was for four years United States Vice-Consul-General at Bangkok, Siam This course deals with the actual work to be done in an American Consulate. Among the subjects treated are the following: History and Organization of the Consular Service; Consular Appointments and Examinations; Routine Work in the Consulate; Quasi-Diplomatic Functions of a consul; Judicial Functions; Consular Methods of Other Countries. The regular lectures will be supplemented by the preparation on the part of the students of the reports, returns, etc., which a consular officer is required to make.

Bookkeeping Practice. (30 hours.) Embracing the analysis of book entries and the practice in framing them, opening and closing books, taking off trial balances and preparing simple financial statements.

Political Economy and Economic Problems. (60 hours.) Economic theories and the application of these theories to current business and social problems are studied.

TO EXPOSE THE HOUSE

Members Do Nothing but Draw Their Salary, According to Mann

Washington, Sept. 20.—Minority Leader Mann is planning to use all his parliamentary skill next week to "show up" the house. The house is scheduled to meet on Monday, and the understood program is to adjourn for three days at a time, thus imitating the senate and killing the dull hours till he final adjournment of the session is in sight.

Mann will demand rollcalls on the motion to adjourn, and in every possible way show to the country that the house is actually recessing and doing nothing but drawing its salary.

Nobody expects to find a majority of the members of the house in town next week. Mann wants the public to understand the amount of political buncombe which emanates from members.

WOMAN FORGER GETS FOUR YEARS IN JAIL

Had Previously Served Term For Similar Offenses

New York, Sept. 20.—Guilty of forgery, Harriet Cohen, 23 years old, a stenographer, was sentenced by Judge Mulqueen to four years in the Auburn prison for women.

In 1908 Miss Cohen was found guilty of fourteen charges of forgery and was sentenced to the Bedford reformatory. She was discharged after three years. After leaving the reformatory she became stenographer for the Standard Steam Specialty company, on whose complaint she was arrested.

It was alleged that 100 checks were forged by Miss Cohen when in the company's employ and that, in all, she collected over $2000.

HAD TOO MUCH POWER

State to Investigate Insurance Manipulations of Williams

Boston, Sept. 20.—A sensation was created in insurance circles when it became known that the state authorities are to investigate matters concerning the manipulations of George E. Williams, the insurance man whose death brought to light many questionable transactions.

The investigation may result in certain changes in the insurance system, ultimately resulting in legislation recommended by the insurance commissioners.

Countless business men have maintained that Williams had altogether too much power to manipulate on his own hook as an agent. This question will be the basis of the investigation.

ASK LOWER WAGE RATE

Lynn Shoe Manufacturers Cannot Meet Prices of Competitors

Lynn, Mass., Sept. 20.—That this city is facing a grave crisis in the manufacture of cheap and medium grades of shoes was the announcement of twelve manufacturers to union representatives at a conference in which the manufacturers asked the unions to approve a graded price list.

Charles F. Cotter presided at the meeting and declared that the manufacturers of medium and cheap grade shoes find it impossible to obtain orders because of their inability to meet prices of competitors in other shoe centres. There was only one answer to the question, he said, and that was the lowering of the cost of production.

Yaquis War on Mexicans

Douglas, Ariz., Sept. 20.—Official reports of new outbreaks among the Yaquis say they are engaged in continuous warfare against the Mexicans, although they have not molested Americans.

QUALIFIED TO RETAIN SEATS

Sulzer's Challange of Investigators Is Rejected

UNANIMOUS VOTE OF COURT

Validity of Proceedings of Impeachment Tribunal Attacked by Defense—Prosecution Argues That Members Are Representatives of the People—Sulzer Recognizes Glynn

Albany, Sept. 20.—Governor Sulzer's counsel lost its first fight in the high court of impeachment when the four senators challenged by the defense were permitted to retain their seats.

The vote, which was on the question of whether the court should entertain the challenges, was unanimously against such procedure. The four senators directly concerned, Frawley, Wagner, Ramsperger and Sanner, did not vote.

Immediately following the vote of the court, the reading of the long articles of impeachment were begun.

Although Presiding Judge Cullen had the right to decide the question of the qualifications of the senators for holding their seats, he did not take advantage of this prerogative. He first expressed his opinion that the objections were not well grounded and then permitted the entire court to vote on the issue.

The vote came after a long legal argument between Attorneys Herrick and Parker, representing the defense and the prosecution, respectively. Herrick's chief argument was that precedent established that no man might sit both as prosecutor and judge.

In reply Parker said the members of the court were here as representatives of the whole people, that the people established the court of impeachment in the beginning and that none other than the people had a right to remove their representatives. The two attorneys were the only speakers.

The high court of impeachment was called to order by Chief Justice Cullen. The rollcall showed a quorum present.

Senator Wagner, chairman of the committee on rules, submitted the report of the committee, which was adopted without objection. The rules provide for two sessions daily, except Saturday. The hours may be changed from time to time by the court for lack of witnesses or other cause.

The conduct of the trial is to be governed by the rules prevailing in the supreme court of the state, and the final judgment of the court shall be certified by the president of the court and clerk of the court.

Meanwhile Sulzer formally conceded that he had no right to exercise the functions of chief executive pending the determination of the impeachment. In a letter to Lieutenant Governor Glynn, inclosing a request received for the extradition of a prisoner, he explained that he had taken such action because of recent decisions of the supreme court that the "executive functions should be performed by yourself as acting governor."

Charged Husband, Who Is a Judge, With Extreme Cruelty

Providence, Sept. 20.—Mrs. Mary A. Lee was granted a divorce by Judge Sweeney from Judge Thomas Z. Lee, a local lawyer, who was her counsel in a winning fight when relatives strove two years ago to break the $2,000,000 will by which her first husband—Fred A. Newell—had left her the bulk of his fortune. Newell was a manufacturing jeweler of Attleboro, Mass.

In her divorce papers Mrs. Lee alleged extreme cruelty.

DENIES MULHALL CHARGES

Littlefield Received Money From Manufacturers as Individuals

Washington, Sept. 20.—Testifying before the lobby committee, former Congressman Littlefield of Maine denied Mulhall's testimony that the National Association of Manufacturers spent $60,000 in his district in the campaign of 1906.

He produced an affidavit from the cashier of a Rockland, Me., bank, where Fred Wight, the treasurer of the district Republican committee, banked at the time, showing deposits of $20,660.

He added that part of this money came from individuals who were members of the National Association of Manufacturers, but denied that it as an association ever contributed, and the money went to support the state and county ticket, as well as to help him.

WILL INVESTIGATE DEATH OF "BIG TIM"

District Attorney and Police Commissioner Take Action

New York, Sept. 20.—The attention of the district attorney's office has been called to the death of "Big Tim" Sullivan and an investigation has been ordered. Assistant District Attorney Groehl will direct the inquiry. Neither District Attorney Whitman nor Groehl would disclose the nature of the information laid before them.

Police Commissioner Waldo has preferred charges against Police Lieutenant Wines and Detectives Clark and Cavanaugh of the Westchester station for neglect of duty in connection with the identification of Sullivan's body.

Both detectives were transferred from the detective bureau and placed on patrol duty. No date has been set for the hearing of the three men.

FOLK'S SACRIFICE

Gives Up $35,000 a Year For $5000 Position at Washington

St. Louis, Sept. 20.—That he is sacrificing a $35,000 yearly income from Chatauqua lectures alone to become solicitor of the state department was the statement of Joseph W. Folk. His new salary is $5000 a year.

He said he was undecided whether he would do any Chatauqua work while he holds that position, but added that he did not see any impropriety in Secretary Bryan's lecturing during his vacation time.

STOLE JEWELS AT WRECK

Man Who Also Did Heroic Work Is Sent to State Prison

Bridgeport, Conn., Sept. 20.—Hanford Donnelly, who did heroic rescue work in the wreck of the Springfield express on the New Haven road at Westport last October, was found guilty in the superior court of the theft of jewels valued at $3500, taken from one of the wrecked cars.

Donnelly was sentenced to not less than one nor more than five years in the state prison.

"Husband's Ghost" on the Job

Philadelphia, Sept. 20.—The ghost of her husband, dead eleven years, shook her by the shoulders and screamed in her ear "The house is afire!" said Katey Quinn. She awoke to find the rear of the house in flames.

How It Happened.

The Chronic Meddler—You are extremely bald for one of your age. The Bare Pated Party—Yes; got this way by butting into other people's affairs.—

KINCAIDE THEATRE.

At both matinee and evening performances, there has been a big attendance all the week at Quincy's pretty playhouse. The show this last half is a hummer and tonight one wants to be on hand early to secure a seat.

Crotton and Skremka have a very pretty posing act, and do some stunts on the horizontal bars that show skill and training. Ford and Edwin, two clever black-faced comedians, are very pleasant entertainers, and they keep the audience in laughter for many minutes. Jack Joyce in his character sketches, well merits the great applause he gets. Seymour and Dupree, "the Chink and the Soubrett" are the feature of the show, and the "Chink's" jumping is worthy of especial mention. "The Barrier" is a feature picture in three parts that tells the story of the Wyoming "Rustler War." It is full of interest from start to finish. And the other pictures are splendid too.

Beginning Monday, "Advance 1914 Vaudeville" will be the attraction. Among the artists on the program are Elmo and Bob, with an act of magic in which they present their talking and laughing dog; Carter and Bluford, character songs and dances; Dixie Norton in clever impersonation; and a comedy acrobatic act of four people, "The New Chef and his Maniac Cooks." This is without question the greatest acrobatic act ever seen in the city.

All new photo plays and the usual good lively music by the regular orchestra make up the big 2-hour show afternoons and evenings.

How It Was Answered

The Prayer of a Lonely Woman

By LILLIAN WARTZ

Mrs. Tompkins, rocking in the shade of her vine wreathed porch, peered down the short length of the street.

"An automobile in front of Pikes'," she murmured bitterly. "I expect it's her brother-in-law from Marlin. He's in the business. I declare it ain't right, it ain't fair!" Her black eyes snapped angrily as she drew back and plied her crochet needle.

"Honk, honk!" sounded defiantly, and a small motorcar turned into Willow street and stopped in front of Mrs. Tompkins' house.

She arose, and an expectant light came into her eyes. Was it possible that she was to have "automobile company" at last? Thus far she was the only resident on the street who could not boast an acquaintance who owned a motorcar.

As she reached the head of the steps a becapped and begoggled head was thrust from under the top, and a man asked quickly:

"Does Mrs. Mills live here?"

Amelia Tompkins drew herself up stiffly.

"Next house," she said grimly, and a dull flush reddened her cheeks as she went back to her chair.

"You might have known it was for me," tossed Susie Mills across the space that separated the two houses as she came around from the side door to greet her visitor.

Amelia Tompkins made no reply as she rolled up a length of crocheted lace and tucked it in her workbasket. Her lips were set grimly as she gathered up workbasket and the weekly newspaper and went into the house, carefully latching the screen door behind her.

Her movements were very deliberate. She went through the house and set the teakettle on the stove; then she went upstairs to her bedroom and locked the door. After that she knelt down beside her bed and prayed with real anguish of soul.

Her neighbors in Willow street might have been horrified if they had heard the prayer of Amelia Tompkins. Undoubtedly they would have called her worldly, for she prayed earnestly that the Lord would send her "automobile company."

There were six houses in Willow street, and the only house that knew no automobile company was the white cottage of Amelia Tompkins. It stood at the end of the little blind street and faced all the others, three on a side.

Not one of Amelia's kind hearted neighbors realized how the lonely widow longed for the flash of big lamps before her gate on a summer evening and the gay summons of a motor horn. So many times had she run to door or window at the sound only to see the much desired vehicle pause at the gate of one or another of her more fortunate neighbors. She was glad when night closed down and she could retire to her room, undisturbed by honkings or brilliant flashes of lanterns.

One might say that Amelia Tompkins was foolish, but who can blame her? She was one of a small community. Willow street was a little settlement by itself. Everybody owned his own home, and all attended the same church. Beyond Willow street the city went its own way. To the Widow Tompkins Willow street was life.

And life was very dull without automobile company.

One morning she stood on the front porch watering her hanging baskets. Amelia was fond of flowers, and her little place was a perfect bower of beauty.

"You're looking kinder peaked, Amelia," called Susie Mills, whipping around the corner of the house, very trig in her green veil and brown duster. "What you need is a good spin into the country."

Amelia's pale cheeks flushed, and she looked really pretty. She had a certain plump prettiness that had been much admired when she was a girl. Since her husband had died Amelia had clung tenaciously to black and white gowns, which were not at all becoming. Wearing the right sort of clothes, Amelia would have regained much of her youthful prettiness. She was lonely, and she was sad, and she seldom found cause to smile, which is very sad when one is only forty-five and a comely widow.

"A little spin in the country is what you need, Amelia," repeated Susie, hanging over the gate expectantly.

"I s'pose that's what you're going to take," said Amelia, with what grace she could muster.

"Oh, yes! Fred's going over to Winslow and said he would take me along."

"In the yeast wagon?" flew off the end of Amelia's tongue.

Mrs. Mills turned sharply.

"Yeast automobile is better than walking," she said loftily.

Amelia agitatedly snipped off an unoffending lobelia blossom.

"It's too hot even to walk," she retorted. "I'm going to have a car myself," she said impulsively.

"Humph!" sniffed Susie Mills. "I guess it's coming now," she added sarcastically.

There came a honk from the end of the street, and a large motorcar turned from the avenue into Willow street and came unerringly up to the little white cottage. As it wheeled about and came puffingly to a standstill the solitary occupant stepped to the ground and shook out his long linen duster.

Susie Mills was agog.

"You looking for me?" she chirruped. "I'm Mrs. Mills."

The man smiled pleasantly. "I am looking for Mrs. Tompkins," he informed her, his hand on Amelia's front gate.

"Oh!" cried Mrs. Mills enviously, and she was enraged because the yeast car came noisily up the street just then and bore her away. She could not see the meeting between Amelia Tompkins and the man in the beautiful car.

As for the other motor enthusiasts of Willow street, every man, woman and child found imperative business near the respective front gates.

The stranger pushed open Mrs. Tompkins' front gate and in three long strides had reached the front porch.

Amelia, outwardly calm, but inwardly exulting at this answer to prayer, came forward, tall and rather graceful and very attractive in the uncertain light.

"Mrs. Tompkins?" asked the man courteously.

"Yes," said Amelia. "Won't you sit down?"

"Thank you." He placed a chair for Amelia and sat down on a hickory chair. He laid his motor cap beside him, and Amelia noted with a faint stirring of her pulses that his forehead was very nice and it was too bad that his cap had left a red crease there.

It was rather a familiar looking forehead. The way the brown hair was brushed up and back reminded her of some one. The memory was a painful one for Amelia, for it aroused the one grief of her girlhood. She wondered what this man wanted. To sell something, of course.

"I am afraid that you will think I am impertinent, Mrs. Tompkins," he said, rapping the edge of his cap against the seat and looking at her rather doubtfully, "but I couldn't help coming. I've been wanting to for some time—in fact, ever since—well, since you were free."

Amelia leaned back in the rocker and panted a little. She felt that something very unusual was about to happen in her quiet, uneventful life. Such things happened in books, but—he was speaking again. "It's twenty years since we met, Amelia. I don't wonder you've forgotten me," he blurted forth at last.

Forgotten him?

Amelia leaned forward, her heart in her blue eyes. Could any girl forget her first lover? Could any woman forget the man she had loved and whom her parents had bade her cast off for another and more advantageous match? If such things could be forgotten then Amelia Tompkins could forget Ralph Blake.

"Oh!" she cried sharply. And after a few moments she cried again, "Oh, Ralph!"

He was leaning eagerly forward now, a good looking middle aged man with boyish eyes and a general air of prosperity that seemed out of place upon a man whom Amelia had known only as a shy country youth.

"Amelia, I've waited and waited, and I can't forget you!" he said tensely. "It will take some time for you to pick up the threads after all these years of separation, but I've never changed. I feel just the same as I did that night when—I told you!" he ended in a whisper.

"Ralph, Ralph!" she cried, with a shaking voice, and so the intervening years vanished with the warm breath of true love, and their hands met and afterward their patient lips.

So "automobile company" came to Amelia Tompkins in a strange way. It came in direct answer to prayer, so Amelia firmly believes, and, while Ralph Blake is in the automobile business and owns many cars, somehow, for Amelia, automobile company has resolved itself into one meaning.

That is the daily homecoming of Amelia's husband.

And I may add that the Blakes are generous, and all of Willow street revels in countless automobile excursions.

DIAZ CLASSED WITH HUERTA

Wilson Cool Toward Candidate For Mexican Presidency

UNLIKELY TO BRING PEACE

American Officials Hampered In Predicting What Their Attitude May Be —Recognition of Any New Government Will Be Withheld Until Satisfactory Conditions Prevail

Washington, Sept. 20.—News that Felix Diaz, nephew of Porfirio Diaz, has been recalled to Mexico to become the candidate of the Huerta faction in the coming presidential election arouses much interest here in official circles.

The general feeling is that the return of Diaz means a compliance with President Wilson's principal demand, that General Huerta should not be a candidate. So far as arguing an era of peace, however, the outlook was described as discouraging.

While the American government is on record with a promise to extend recognition to the government set up by a legal and free election, it is said to be practically certain that the United States should not hasten to recognize Diaz if he were elected, but would wait, in accord with the precedents of President Hayes' administration, to determine whether the resulting government was strong enough to maintain peace and guarantee international obligations.

The policy of strict neutrality with respect to the exportation of arms and munitions of war from his country, however, will be continued until recognition is actually extended.

The fact that the constitutionalist faction regards Diaz as being jointly responsible with Huerta for Madero's downfall, it is thought here, will mean a sharpening of the contest between the warring factions.

Just what course the United States will pursue in scrutinizing the coming election has not been definitely decided. The claims of the Huerta government that, while it does not control all the states of the north, it does directly have jurisdiction over the districts containing the great bulk of the Mexican population, has hampered American officials in predicting what their attitude might be.

Certain it is, however, officials say, that if the election is conducted under military auspices and with large garrisons at the polls the American government is not likely to construe the result as having been accomplished by a fair and free election.

The attitude of the United States for the next few weeks is likely to be that of an interested spectator, with John Lind being retained at Vera Cruz to show the world generally that the United States stands ready to assist in the situation by pacific means if its friendly offices are desired.

CRIME NOT PUNISHABLE

Madero and Suarez Slayers Cleared by Mexican Military Court

Mexico City, Sept. 20.—The deaths of the late President Madero and Vice President Suarez were not brought about by a punishable crime, according to a decision pronounced by the military court here.

Madero and Suarez were shot to death the night of Feb. 22, while they were being transferred from the national palace to the penitentiary, following their betrayal, after a siege, to the Huerta and Diaz forces. It was given out that they were killed during an attempted rescue, but their friends and members of their families have always contended their deaths were due to deliberate murder.

Owing to the question as to the manner of their deaths, the United States has refused to recognize Huerta as real head of the Mexican government.

AUTO TRIP TO VERMONT

William Nash, chauffeur, for Penniman & Son returned Friday evening from a weeks automobile trip with the family of Charles W. Jones of Wollaston. The trip which was made without a breakdown of any kind to the automobile, not even a puncture or skip, included a trip through the hills of Vermont and down Lake Champlain. The family of Mr. Jones report the trip to have been a very enjoyable one as the scenery along the trip at this season of the year is unsurpassed for beauty.

GILRAINE TAKEN HOME

Francis Gilraine who was shot in the hip by Officer Avery while trying to escape on the evening of June 26 has been removed from the Quincy City Hospital and is at his home on 35 Carruth street. The silver plate set in the hip fractured by the bullet will probably be removed and he is rapidly improving.

Officer Avery who was relieved from police duty for a time has since been exonerated by Mayor Stone who held a hearing on the shooting. James E. O'Connell counsel for Gilraine applied for a warrant for the arrest of Officer Avery before he was exonerated but postponed action at the suggestion of Judge Avery. It will be decided this week if further action will be taken.

Thomas McDonnell who was with Gilraine that evening was arrested on a charge of drunkenness and assault and battery and his case was called this morning and continued until Sept. 22.

STEAMER READY FOR DELIVERY

The oil steamer Richmond, built at the Fore River yards for the Standard Oil Co. is ready for delivery and will drop down to Nantasket roads Monday where her tanks will be filled with water to ensure a safe passage to New York. The capacity of the boat is 1,260,000 gallons in winter and in summer 340,000 gallons more can be carried because of calmer waters. Before heading for New York she will be given a six hour full speed run to test the engines. Her underbottom will be painted at the New York dry dock.

CUTLER HAS RIDE OF LIFE

John Cutler, a South Quincy peddler had the ride of his life this morning when his horse ran away in City Square as he was about to climb over the tailboard into the wagon. Patrick O'Brien who saw the horse start made a jump for the animal's head but missed and was thrown heavily to the ground, fortunately escaping serious injury.

Cutler, in order to avoid being thrown, clung hold of the sides of the tailboard with both hands, the outfit presenting a funny sight as it sped through City Square and down Granite street where the horse was stopped.

There is more Catarrh in this section of the country than all other diseases put together, and until the last few years was supposed to be incurable. For a great many years doctors pronounced it a local disease and prescribed local remedies, and by constantly failing to cure local treatment pronounced it incurable. Science has proven catarrh to be a constitutional disease and therefore requires constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, Ohio, is the only constitutional cure on the market. It is taken internally in doses from 10 drops to a teaspoonful. It acts directly on the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. They offer one hundred dollars for any case it fails to cure. Send for circulars and testimonials.

The Manet club has changed its headquarters from Hibernian hall to the Pinel block where they are fitting up three large rooms.

The Woman's Guild of St. Chrysostoni's church meets Wednesday afternoon to plan for the fall and winter work.

The case of Frank Swanson, arrested in connection with the burglary at the Granite City Club was called this morning and continued until Sept. 20.

Owing to the popularity of the "Hops" at the Quincy Yacht club this season, an extra one will be held Tuesday, Sept. 23.

The Girls Friendly society of St. Chrysostom's church is to open its season of meetings Friday evening with a service in the church at eight o'clock, followed by a discussion of plans for the Mothers' night on Oct. 3.

The Sunday evening services at Christ church which have been omitted during the summer will be resumed Sunday evening with evening service and address. The music will be under the direction of Prof. Frank Wrigley.

The Women's club news, a feature of the Wednesday Ledger during the club season, will be resumed Oct. 1. Attractive programs have been arranged for the season by all the local clubs and the printers are busy getting out the annual year books.

Rev. Alfred J. Barnard of Quincy Point, a student at Oberlin Theological Seminary, class 1914, preaches at the Washington Street Congregational church, Sunday at both the morning and evening services. In the removal of Henry Cunningham from Atlantic, and his resignation from the Quincy city council Ward Six and the city are losing a valuable citizen and councilman. As a councilman he was thorough in looking into the needs of his ward and the city, and when he spoke he was generally well posted, and being an able debater he uttered his convictions fearlessly. The Improvement Association and other organizations wanting improvements and lower taxes, will play an important part in the selection of a candidate to fill Mr. Cunningham's plan this fall.

The Ladies Benevolent society of Memorial church had its first meeting of the season Wednesday. It was a meeting full of inspiration and enthusiasm, as Mrs. Sarah Butler the president outlined her plan to pay $1000 on the church mortgage the first of October and to pay the second thousand by the first of January. The undertaking was so big and the result so promising for the church that before the close of the meeting the ladies had within twelve dollars of the first thousand. Most of the members had promised to earn one dollar during the summer and the dollars flowed in from both absent and present members with words of rhyme telling how they earned the money. Refreshments were served by the hospitality committee who were Mrs. Isabel Smith, Mrs. Wm. T. Davy, Mrs. Alva Beede, Mrs. Wm. Hersey and Mrs. John Welsh.

TOWN RIVER CLUB DANCE

Weather conditions were again unkind to the Town River Yacht Club which opened its social season with a dancing party in Alpha hall Thursday evening, but the attendance was good and all those present enjoyed themselves. Mhsic was furnished by Wilson's orchestra and potted plants and palms screened them from the view of the dancers. Refreshments were served in Union hall by Mr. and Mrs. Marvin.

D. M. Baker was floor director and he was assisted by the committee of arrangements consisting of A. MacGeachie, William Kemp, W. T. Irvine, T. S. Gabler and Anthony Gregory.

RABIES.

The popular belief that there is an undue prevalence of rabies during that part of the year known as "dog days" has been pretty thoroughly exploded; yet the heated period of the year does bring this subject to mind. It is fully recognized that not all dogs called "mad" are suffering from rabies, and that in hot weather dogs may have convulsions from heat-stroke or from other causes as well as from rabies. In fact, many have found that this good-natured animal may be annoyed to the point at which it will turn on those who pet it; especially will a harmless, starved mongrel, annoyed by the heat, the dust, the fleas and the persecution of persons and things that surround him, attempt to defend himself and snap. Immediately those in the street jump at the conclusion that the dog is mad, and a scare is on. It must be remembered, however, says The Journal of the American Medical Association, that in the mingling of a multitude of like animals which are constantly snarling and quarreling among themselves, when one animal is infected the chances are that the infection will be spread rapidly.

While the precaution already suggested—that not every dog that bites is the subject of rabies—should be borne in mind, nevertheless, for the welfare of the person who may have been bitten by a dog, it is important to know whether or not the dog is rabid. It is unfortunate when an animal that has inflicted such a wound is destroyed immediately. The sane procedure is to quarantine it, in order that a definite diagnosis may be determined. It should be properly guarded and kept from contact with other dogs or animals, but under comfortable conditions. If it is rabid the fact soon becomes evident. If it is simply a case of bad temper and not of disease, the proper punishment or disposal of the dog may be decided after this fact has been established. If for any reason it becomes necessary to kill the animal at once, or if this mistake has been made, the head and neck of the animal should be packed in ice and sent to a properly equipped laboratory as quickly as possible.

It is hardly necessary to suggest that a wound resulting from the bite of an animal should be thoroughly cleansed; carbolic acid should be thoroughly applied, and then neutralized with alcohol, and the wound covered with a large, wet antiseptic dressing. Of course this local dressing alone is not to be depended on when the diagnosis of rabies in the animal inflicting the wound has been established. As soon as this condition of the animal is definitely determined, the patient should be given the benefit of the Pasteur treatment, which is most effective when begun within a fortnight after the wound was inflicted.

More important than the cure of hyrophobia is its prevention by administrative measures. The British muzzling order absolutely enforced, has rendered Great Britain practically free from rabies. Surely all dogs worth the price of a muzzle or a leash should be thus restrained; the rest should be destroyed. This procedure would rob rabies of its terrors.

SOCCER FOOT BALL NOTES

J. Hendry of Quincy Point, one of the fastest soccer players in the state will not play with the Taylor A. C. of Pawtucket against the J. P. Coats team today because his contract was not recevied by the manager in time to present his name to the league for approval. He will appear this afternoon in the Brockton lineup where he has performed to the satisfaction of a large gallery in two pretty games.

Reports from Scotland state that Boyd and Robertson two former Fore River men are playing a powerful game with the Morgan A. C. at Grenoch. Both are on a visit to their home and found it difficult to watch the games from the line and they signed up with the Morgans.

Harrison, one of the recognized factors in soccer is back from Bethlehem, Pa., after a short stay. A few weeks ago he signed with the team of the place but he preferred Quincy because of its pleasant associations for him.

Meldrum who signed with Bethlehem at the same time is still there and as a member of the team is doing good work.

MRS. EMILY C. AMSDEN.

The funeral of Mrs. Emily C. Amsden, widow of Thomas J. Amsden who died Thursday in her 83rd year was held this afternoon from her home, 174 Warren avenue. Services were conducted by Rev. Isaiah W. Sneath of the Wollaston Congregational church. Burial was in Mt. Auburn cemetery, Cambridge.

TEACHERS WANT SALARY IN CASH

The 300 or more teachers in Brockton's public schools are angry, and when 300 school teachers, mostly women, get mad something is bound to happen. There present grievance is the new rule that went into effect on Aug. 30, in the City Treasurer's office.

Under this rule the teachers instead of getting the cold cash for their salaries are given checks, and it has caused no amount of inconvenience.

Under the old rule the masters of the different buildings would get the pay envelopes, containing their salary in cash, and distribute the envelopes to the teachers. Now however they get their pay in checks, and they are putting up a vigorous protest, and if kicking will do any good the system will be changed back to the old method.

Checks are all right but it is a nuisance to the teachers to have to scurry around and find someone who will exchange the check for cash.

WOLLASTON MAN IS SHIPWRECKED

Arthur P. Homer Driven from His Power Boat When Off the Graves

Picked Up by Fishermen-- Landed at Provincetown

Arthur P. Homer of Wollaston, the well known yachtsman had a tough experience in his power boat Remoh IV Saturday afternoon when the boat took fire while he was on his way from Marblehead to Quincy and was burned to the edge. The facts of the accident were not known however until Sunday when he telephoned his family from Provincetown that he was safe and sound. In the meantime his family, who were aware that he had started from Marblehead, were much concerned as to his whereabouts and the police boat Guardian was searching for him about the harbor.

Mr. Homer had started in his 35-foot power boat Remoh IV from Marblehead for Quincy shortly before 3 P. M. Saturday, and was about two miles northeast of the Graves when suddenly his carburetor "backfired," and in a moment the engine room was filled with gas.

An explosion followed, and the inside of the boat was enveloped in flames. Homer did not even have time to secure his coat, which contained his money from the cabin; but hauled his little tender alongside and put off from the burning boat.

He remained alongside until his power boat had burned to the water's edge, then looked about him for the nearest place of refuge. It was now about 4, as nearly as he could estimate. He was dressed in a light khaki suit and a drizzling rain was falling.

Because of the dense fog that was hanging over the water, he could see nothing, and the only sound that came to his ears was the shrill whistle of the Boston Lightship. He started to row in the direction of the lightship with nothing but the whistle to guide him.

After rowing for two hours he did not seem to be approaching his destination; the whistle seemed no louder. Darkness had settled and the east wind had begun to kick up a nasty sea. It was all that he could do to keep his tender from being swamped. Although he saw he was making only little headway he continued to row.

At last, shortly after 7, Homer thinks, he received a ray of hope. A steamer loomed up in the darkness within 100 yards of him. He stood up in his boat, balancing as best he could, waved one oar in the air and shouted at the top of his voice. The steamer passed by, without having seen him evidently, and Homer sank back discouraged and physically exhausted.

At last he observed another light, a green one this time a quarter of a mile to the leeward. Homer bent all his strength to getting his little boat in the path of the oncoming craft, and his efforts were rewarded.

He was picked up by the vessel, which proved to be the fisherman Matthew S. Greer bound for Provincetown after bait. It was 7.15 when Homer climbed over the side of the Greer. Nearly five hours had passed since he left Marblehead Harbor, and for more than three hours he had been battling for his life in a dangerous sea.

Homer received clothing and food from the fishermen and at 7 Sunday morning was landed at Provincetown and was able to send the first word of his safety to his kinsfolk in Quincy.

On the initial trip of the Remoh IV. in May of this year, Homer had a similar experience with fire at sea, but on this occasion was more fortunate. With William H. Brown of Marblehead and W. H. Blanchard of Boston aboard, he started out from the building place, Bar Harbor, and on the same evening put in at Rockland. During the following week, while at anchorage in Biddeford pool, the alcohol pipe running to the stove in the galley was broken and the cabin caught fire.

While off the Isles of Shoals on the same trip, Homer and his companions nearly met disaster in a southwesterly blow, but were able to make White Island.

Mr. Homer was not burned by gasoline Saturday, as some papers stated, but escaped without injury other than that incident to exhaustion, by exposure to the weather.

He however lost everything he had aboard the boat. These included about $20 in money and a lot of valuable navigating instruments, also a number of other articles. He arrived home from Provincetown Sunday and was able to go to his office in Boston this morning.

NORWEGIAN ANNIVERSARY

Quincy Society Is Now Nine Years Old

The Norwegian Society of Quincy observed its ninth anniversary in Protection hall Saturday evening and entertained the largest crowd that ever attended any of their many affairs. Silken banners of the United States and Norway were stretched across the front of the hall and national colors, bunting and potted plants and palms gave the surroundings an inviting appearance.

Most of those present enjoyed dancing which commenced at the opening of the festivities and continued until midnight. About ten o'clock a supper was served by Mrs. Andrew Olsen and Mrs. Lawrence A. Jacobsen. Music for the evening was furnished by Arthur Robsham and the committee in charge consisted of A. E. Olsen, Axel Anderson, Lawrence A. Jacobsen, Ted Johnson.

NO MORE SUNDAY GOLF

Wollaston Club Vote to Discontinue Play

The Wollaston Golf club has followed the example of the Quincy Tennis club, having voted on Saturday to refrain from Sunday playing on the Montclair links in the future.

For the first time in many years there were no matches on these links on Sunday. The action was taken because of a rumor on Friday that the Quincy police would make a visit to the links on Sunday, as they did to the Tennis club last week.

Protests have been made to the police of late by citizens who believe that there should not be one law for the rich and another for the poor. That there should be no favoritism in the enforcement of laws.

Nine of the holes of the Wollaston Golf club are in Quincy, and nine holes in Milton. For several years the Milton police have forbidden Sunday playing on the Milton side, but in Quincy it has been permitted up to the present time.

The enforcement of laws was the text of the Sunday evening address of Rev. B. A. Willmott at Bethany church on Sunday evening which is reported at length in another column. His subject was "The making of an Anarchist."

BRADBURY—MALNATI.

Miss Clara Malnati of 90 Intervale street and Luther M. Bradbury, Jr., of 33 Kent street, were married at Boston on Sunday in the presence of their immediate relatives and friends. They were attended by Miss Ida and Mario Malnati, sister and brother of the bride. Miss Malnati was dressed in a gray travelling suit and wore a black velvet hat. Her sister wore a blue travelling suit and brown velvet hat. After the ceremony they left for a trip to New York and Washington, and on their return will reside at 33 Kent street. The groom is an electrician at the Fore River yards and well known in this city. His bride is a popular South Quincy girl.

HOW THEY LINE UP

Several Contests at Primaries

Some Vacancies On Tickets

Tomorrow is caucus day, the Democrats, Republicans and Progressives holding primaries throughout the state for the nomination of State and county candidates, members of the Legislature, delegates to State convention, and members of ward committees.

Quincy, as usual, will vote in six wards the voting places being those generally used at caucuses. It is the elections and not the caucuses that are held by precincts.

REPUBLICAN CONTESTS.

This year the Republicans have only four contests as follows:

For Governor—Everett C. Benton or Augustus P. Gardner.

For Treasurer—Charles L. Burrill or Maurice Kane.

For Senator—Louis F. R. Langelier or William R. Thomas.

For Register of Probate—Alonzo B. Cook or J. Raphael McCoole.

The Republicans have a complete ticket for all offices.

DEMOCRATIC CONTESTS.

The Democrats have five contests as follows:

For Lieutenant Governor—Edward P. Barry or Richard H. Long.

For Treasurer—Frederick W. Mansfield or Joseph L. P. H. Coeur.

For Senator—John J. McDevitt, David W. Murray or James H. Shea.

For District Attorney—Thomas H. Buttimer, William J. Good, Eugene F. O'Neill or John P. Vahey.

The Democrats have vacancies for associate commissioners delegates to State convention and ward committees.

THE PROGRESSIVES.

The Progressives have no contests. With the exception of associate commissioners, register of probate, delegates to State convention, and ward committees, the Progressives have a complete ticket.

SENATORIAL CONTESTS.

The contest for the Senatorial nomination on the Republican ticket is between ex-Representative Louis F. R. Langelier and ex-Representative William R. Thomas. The contest is a good natured one ,and whoever wins the defeated candidate has promised to work for the election of his successful rival.

Ex-Representative Langelier was a candidate for the nomination last year at the caucuses, opposing Roger Wolcott. Mr. Langelier however was defeated at the polls, but took his defeat in a manly fashion and did all that he could to further the election of Mr. Wolcott.

Both candidates are too well known to voters of Quincy to need any introduction. Both have served the city in the state legislature, Mr. Langelier also serving Ward Six at one time in the City Council. He has also been the President of the Republican City Committee and has served as its secretary as well. He has always taken an active part in national, state and local politics and has been a hard worker for the success of his party candidates. He made a good record for himself while in the legislature and was a hard worker for the interests of the city. He is connected with the Educational Publishing Co. of Boston. His record shows that he has been a member of the Republican city committee for 16 years of which 3 years were as president and five years as secretary. He served the Sixth district in the legislature in 1909, 10 and 11, and was in the City Council for four years. He also served for two

ROBBED AT DORCHESTER

Quincy Granite Manufacturer Parts With $135

James Hector of 122 Goddard street and a well known granite manufacturer, had a rough experience at Dorchester Saturday night, when he was knocked unconscious and robbed of his pocketbook containing $135 in money.

Hector went to Dorchester Saturday night to make some purchases, and was walking along Dorchester avenue near Fields Corner, when someone stepped up behind him and dealt him a powerful blow on the back of the head and he fell unconscious. He was dragged to the rear of a nearby building, where he was robbed of his pocketbook containing $135 in money.

Some hours afterward he revived somewhat and was able to make his way to station 11 which was nearby and report the assault. He however was unable to give any description of the parties who made the assault as they came up behind him and struck the blow.

Mr. Hector is a large and powerful man, weighing in the vicinity of 200 pounds. He is about 40 years of age and rugged and with half a show would have given his assailants a hard tussle. He is a prominent member of the Quincy Yacht club, and his constant employment out of doors coupled with his being much on the water has made him as brown as a nut.

KILLED ON RAILROAD.

Luigi Lorentino, a track walker, found the badly mutilated body of John Johnson of 65 Wells street, Abington, on the tracks at Mayflower park on Sunday morning. Pieces of the body were strewn along the tracks for a distance of 240 feet and were picked up by Medical Examiner Frasier who viewed the remains.

The clue to his indentity was furnished by a billhead of an Abington business house, and Chief of Police Hollis accompanied by two of Johnson's friends indentified the body. Johnson was a shoemaker by trade and was well known in Abington where he has made his home for some time.

WILL PETITION LEGISLATURE.

A petition calling for the removal of the metal wheel guard on the running board of open cars is being circulated in Quincy and will be presented to the legislature together with petitions from other places. Its purport is to remedy the danger to passengers boarding and leaving cars. The guard is about 18 inches wide and ten inches in height and the upper section is beveled. The petitioners claim that the slight space between the side of the car and the end of the bevel is the direct cause of many falls.

Rev. B. A. Willmott Asserts That They Have Lost Their Grip on Affairs

Makes Reference to Dominoes and Tennis on Lord's Day

When Rev. Benjamin A. Willmott of Bethany Congregational church announced as the subject for his Sunday evening address—"The making of an Anarchist"—few people expected that his lesson would be drawn from the enforcement of the Sunday laws in Quincy. But the arrest of three Syrians for playing dominoes, and the attitude of the police relative to Sunday tennis and golf furnished just the facts needed. Although a stormy evening, the auditorium was crowded, the audience including a large number of men. Good music by the girls' vested choir, and congregational singing were enjoyed. The address was generally endorsed.

The address in brief:

"The appalling spread of practical anarchism and the steady growth of theoretical anarchism compose together one of the most appalling social portents of this age of social unrest. We distinguish between theoretical and practical anarchism, tho' it is difficult to draw a dividing line.

"There are those who hold anarchism as a political theory, well reasoned brutally frank. They purpose to overthrow all government, repudiate all social responsibility, each man to be a law unto himself, and regards all government and law as tyrannical either plutocratic or aristocratic.

"These men who would reduce to chaos these institutions that the accumulated experience of the centuries has reared do not flourish in America. It is an important article, having its origin in countries where political and religious freedom have been denied These men have reacted from the tyranny of both, and have become impatient at all forms of political or religious restraint.

"At this we cannot be surprised when we study the religious and political history of those lands. As sunlight is the best germicide, even so this theory, so destructive to our body politic languishes where free men enact laws for free men in the interests of free government; where education is free from sectarian control, free to think and to study facts; where religion cherishes that freedom wherewith it has made them free, refusing to be in bondage to church or to man-made tradition.

OUR BIRD FRIENDS.

The argument for preserving bird life is commonly put on a dollars and cents basis. The business man and the farmer are reminded that without birds, caterpillars and other pests would destroy all vegetation.

A startling comparison then becomes possible. The birds save various billion dollars worth of food, while their value for pie or hat trimmings for women could be only a few millions. While milliners and other special interests have great influence with the politicians, yet these plain considerations are beginning to make headway.

At the summer home of President Wilson a few nights ago, a play symbolical of the beauty of bird life was presented. Miss Eleanor Wilson personified a thrush. The occasion suggested an aspect of the subject that is very far reaching.

From the elegant grace of Shelley's "To a Skylark," down to the more every day "Listen to the Mocking Bird," bird life is so interwoven with the songs of the people that it must lie close to the popular heart. The tricksome little sprites fill the solitudes of country life with companionship. There waking notes calm the fever of insomnia, and lead on calmer thoughts that lull to sleep.

For the man who was brought up in the country and has gone to the city, the songs of the birds are one of the most appealing memories of youth. A bird note recalls the careless freedom of boyhood, and brings back the emotions of long ago.

Love for bird life is not confined either to the intelligence of the farmers who want to save their crops, or to the emotional women of the Audubon societies who live in a dream world of sensuous beauty. There is no phase of nature that brings a more intimate sense of friendship to the average man. The law maker or the milliner or the importer who remains indifferent in the face of this sentiment is taking chances on his business.

SWANSON CASES HEARD

One Continued Until Nov. 28 and Other to Dec. 20

The continued case of Frank Swanson, for breaking into the rooms of the Granite City club and the larceny of money and cigars to the value of $59 was heard this morning. The evidence showed that Swanson was employed by W. E. Dewhurst, janitor of the Savings Bank Building, to care for the rooms during his absence. He, it was who reported the break the morning of Labor Day to Mrs. Dewhurst and accompanied two members of the club to the rooms and showed them how the burglars got in, which he said was evidently by climbing over the partition between the corridor and what is known as the kitchen.

It was brought out that shortly after this Swanson left the rooms and did not return home until the following Wednesday night.

On thenight before Labor Day it was shown by Swanson's room mate that he did not get in until 1.30 Monday morning.

Inspector Goodhue testified that in conversation with Swanson at the police station he had said that on Monday he went to Boston and hung about the city all day until afternoon when he went to Nantasket. He returned to Boston that night and slept on the Common. Tuesday he again went to Nantasket and slept on the sand that night. Wednesday night he came home.

Inspector Goodhue also stated that Swanson told him that if he could only keep away from the gang and let the booze alone he could help the old folks along and pay up for the damage done

It was also brought out by the different witnesses that although Swanson had pointed out the partition as the way the parties got in, that entrance was evidently made by the door, for the reason that the thick dust on the top of the partition in question had not been disturbed as it would have been if anyone had climbed over that way.

Swanson in his own defense told practically the same story as testified to by Inspector Goodhue. He declared that on the Sunday night previous to Labor Day he did not get home until 1.30 A. M., and that two friends went home with him. These two friends also testified to accompanying him home..

After the hearing the court continued the case until Nov. 28.

On the complaint against Swanson for drunkenness he was found guilty and sentenced to two months in the house of correction. Sentence suspended until Dec. 20.

DISTRICT COURT.

John Sullivan was fined $15 for drunkenness at Weymouth, Edward Ford, $10 for drunkenness at Quincy, and John Moran $10 for drunkenness at Weymouth.

George Anderson, the man who made an assault on Officer Riley at the Wollaston station Saturday night, was fined $25 for the assault, and $5 for drunkenness.

John Kunelius was arraigned for assault with a knife on Ata Kunsela at Quincy. The stabbing was the outcome of a Saturday night row on Arthur street. The defendant was sentenced to six months in the house of correction.

George F McLaughlin was sent to the state farm for drunkenness at Quincy.

The continued case of Frank Swanson for breaking and entering the rooms of the Granite City Club and larceny therefrom, was heard and again continued until Nov. 28.

On the complaint for drunkenness he was sentenced to two months in the house of correction. Sentenced suspended until Dec. 20.

FIVE THOUSAND PASS EACH HOUR

People From All Walks of Life at Bier of Gaynor

A MOST SOLEMN PROCESSION

Total of Seventy-Five Thousand Look Upon Face of Late Mayor For Last Time—Children Contribute to Profusion of Floral Offerings In New York City Hall

New York, Sept. 22.—Waiting patiently in a downpour of rain for their turn, 75,000 persons trod through the flower filled rotunda of the city hall Sunday and past the body of William J. Gaynor, lying in state, with its guard of police and firemen. One of the touching features of the solemn procession was the number of children who carried little floral offerings to place on the coffin of the dead mayor.

The line was composed of men and women of every class. No one was permitted to linger at the side of the coffin, even though many pleaded for the privilege. About 5000 persons passed the late mayor's body each hour as it lay in state.

At times the waiting crowd stretched from the federal building up Broadway and in a fast moving line through the city hall. At no time was there any disorder or any sound to break the silence, which seemed to fall like a pall over everything in the vicinity of the city hall.

Floral pieces continued to pour into the already filled corridor, until it seemed to be a solid mass of flowers. The number of pieces grew to such a volume that the police had to bank them up the circular stairs on either side of the rotunda.

Eighteen policemen and eighteen firemen, all of them medal men, were selected for the guard of honor which stood watch over the body. Three firemen and three policemen in reliefs of half an hour stood rigidly at attention by the side of the coffin. Their bearing was impressive, none of them seeming to move a muscle.

The coffin was draped with the Stars and Stripes and the mayor's flag, while branches of palms of victory were crossed upon the cover. These branches were sent by the family. The rotunda and the adjacent lobby were hung with long streamers of laurel and against the grayish yellow of the marble walls of the interior were placed the numerous floral emblems sent by friends and admirers of the late mayor on both sides of the ocean.

Many well known men and women and associations were represented in floral tributes which were massed about the columns supporting the rotunda.

Roses, hydrangeas, purple orchids, asters, gladioli and all flowers now in season were massed against the pillars now swathed in sombre coverings as if devoted to showing the love of nature and of the things of the garden and the forest which was characteristic of the life of the late executive.

The decorations were designed for the purpose of symbolizing the strength and the simplicity of the man who had so impressed himself on the life of this city.

The public funeral services for Gaynor were held from Trinity church this morning. Services for the overflow crowd were held at St. Paul's chapel, a few blocks distant. A regiment of police preceded the catafalque to the church. In the procession also were 200 firemen and delegations from every city department. The specially constructed catafalque was drawn by sixteen black horses, led by eight policemen and eight firemen.

At noon the funeral procession moved from Trinity church to Brooklyn bridge and then to Greenwood cemetery, the place of interment.

ABSOLUTELY IMPARTIAL

Mexican Government Has No Candidate For Presidency

Mexico City, Sept. 22.—"Not only would it be an anomaly that the government should have a candidate, but it can be further said that the government has no predilection for, nor will it aid any candidate."

In these words Provisional President Huerta replied to the question as to whether he favored any candidate in the coming presidential elections.

The interrogation was prompted by the speculation which has been freely indulged in that Huerta intended to throw his support to this or that man for the presidency to succeed himself.

QUIMET'S GREAT TRIUMPH

Conquers World's Greatest Golfers In Championship Game

Boston, Sept. 22.—From a caddy a few years back to conquerer of Harry Vardon and Edward Ray of England, two of the world's greatest golfers, was the triumph of Francis Ouimet of the Woodland Golf club at the Country club in the play-off of the tie for the open championship of the United States Golf association. It was a victory for an amateur that is unprecedented in the history of competitive golf.

Ouimet's total for the eighteen holes was 72, Vardon's 77 and Ray's 78. The win of the American boy sets forth one of the most notable chapters in the narrative of international competition between the United States and England, and it is another setback for the Britons at their own game.

The crowning triumph of American skill in sports over British sportsmen will be accepted as even vastly more distressing by the public over the seas than were the tennis and polo defeats.

POLICE CHARGE RIOTERS

Over Two Score Injured In Battle In Streets of Dublin

Dublin, Sept. 22.—Dublin's streets were again the scene Sunday of a battle between the police and the strikers. Thirty-five civilians and seven policemen are in hospitals as the result of the engagements and many others were treated for minor injuries.

The number of men in Dublin either on strike or locked ou is about 20,000. They have many supporters and are in savage spirit. In the rioting yesterday the police charged and used their clubs freely, and the rioters retaliated with bottles and other missiles so fiercely that one of the mounted force was knocked from his horse and severely injured and several foot police had to be carried off on stretchers.

TENNESSEE SALOON TO BE WIPED OUT

New Law Terms Sale of Liquor a Public Nuisance

Nashville, Sept. 22.—The death knell of the open saloon in Tennessee was sounded when the senate passed the nuisance act, which will make operative the state-wide prohibition law, flagrantly violated since its passage in 1909.

The bill defines the sale of all intoxicating liquors to be a public nuisance, provides for a betterment of such, and fixes penalties.

The bill has not yet been brought up for passage in the lower house, but the majority of the vote in that body in favor of the measure is greater than that received in the senate. The measure becomes effective thirty days after its passage, so that Tennessee will be numbered with the dry states after Nov. 1.

NO OFFICIAL RECOGNITION

Women's Clubs Not In Sympathy Wtih the Pankhurst Methods

Niagara Falls, N. Y., Sept. 22.—As an organization, the Federation of Women's Clubs of America will give no official recognition to Mrs. Pankhurst, the militant suffragette, when she arrives in the States.

This assertion is made on the authority of Mrs. C. H. McMahon, auditor of the executive board of the federation, which is now in session here, and a representative voter of Utah.

"We do not believe in militant methods to gain the ballot," said Mrs. McMahon, "but we do believe in political equality, and we sincerely hope the day will come when all women in the United States will have the privilege of the ballot on an equal footing with the men."

MILES OUT FOR CONGRESS

Warrior a Candidate For Nomination to Succeed Wilder

Fitchburg, Mass., Sept. 22.—Major General Nelson A. Miles, U. S. A., retired, announced his candidacy for the Republican nomination for congress in the Third congressional district to succeed the late W. H. Wilder. He will oppose Calvin D. Paige. M. F. O'Connell is the Democratic candidate and is not being opposed.

Miles has just passed his 75th birthday, and has always been a spectacular figure in army life. He has only lately returned from the Balkan war with his son, who was there as an observer for the government.

Boy Steals and Gags Self

New York, Sept. 22.—Eddie Goff, 14 years old, office boy for Albert F. Hartman, a real estate man, took $14 which a tenant brought in while his employer was out to lunch, tied and gagged himself and said he had been robbed by two men. When detectives grilled him the boy broke down and confessed the money was in his shoes.

SUNDAY IN THE CHURCHES

"Given a free press; free schools and a free church we have little to fear from theoretical anarchism.

"His honor, our Mayor, did right when he ordered the chief not to allow the red flag with "No God and No Boss" to be carried through our streets. America stands for freedom, and personal liberty, but it is under the restraint of law.

"We live in a universe conditioned by law, and society can only exist under the restraint of law, where the freedom of the individual can only be secure as it is conditioned by the well being of all. We shall adjust laws to suit human progress, but we shall not burn our house to rid our political home of rats.

"Neither shall we contradict the experience of the race by surviving long when we legislate out of existence the ten commandments. Kipling tells us that they are not to be found beyond a certain longitude, but neither do we go beyond the longitude to find orderly progressive government, where life and property are secure.

"But it is not this form of anarchism we have most to fear, it is practical anarchism we need to watch and guard against, that excessive individualism that regards law as a nuisance if it stands in the way of personal pleasure, that thinks neither of responsibility to God or to society if only self interest intervene, that first and all the time thinks only of self interest.

"It is this form of anarchism we have to fear, since it is fostering a state of mind that will be as the tinder in the presence of the fiery propaganda of the man who without patriotism or love for God or man seeks only to destroy.

"For this anarchism the well-to-do is largely to blame since they have placed ammunition in the hands of the agitator and demagogue.

PROSPEROUS AMERICAN

"The foreigner is ready to obey law, but his anarchistic friend tells him, that law is for the rich to disregard, and through the use of specialists on insanity and skillful legal advice even bank wreckers can escape from the Federal prison, and murderers escape the just penalty of their deeds, while it is for the poor to obey, to be punished if disobeyed, and no great lawyer, or noted alienist rushes to their relief nor stands for their defence.

"Probably the most serious manifestation was the I. W. W. during the Lawrence strike. At the time I was in Lowell, I heard the leader counsel them to avoid conflict with the law, not because he respected it, but as a way to keep public sympathy, the advice was heard with sullen looks; but when he attacked the courts and the law as the friends of the rich and the foes of the poor, I saw the fire kindle in their eyes and hoarse cheers rent the air.

"The Mayor did right when he forbade the I. W. W. to carry their flag through the streets of Quincy. This city has no room for such men who scorn the flag on the plea that theirs represents Red Blood. Our flag has been bought not with violent language, but by the actual bloodshed of our race.

BUT OUR DANGER

is not from that class, but from those who make the class possible. Take the case that has now become familiar the police raid on a house, for which I have been told they had no warrant, and the arrest of three Syrians for playing dominoes on the Lord's day. We are told that since they were discovered the officers could do no less than arrest them, for they were violating law in the face of officials. To this statement all law abiding citizens will give assent.

"But when those same Syrians having paid their fines since no one interceded with the police for them, they walk out to see some of our best and respected people violating that same law, in the face of officials, and only stopped after it has been the unpleasant duty of a citizen to protest. What opinion can such men have of our justice in this land of boasted equality before the law,

"And is it to be wondered at, that when the agitator come and tells them that even in this land, law and religion are on the side of the privileged class, that they are tempted to believe him and follow him behind a banner with "No God and No Boss?"

"It is the educated American,

THE MAN OF PRIVILEGE,

that has fostered anarchism by claiming exemption from the law. But let me warn you, that whereas our restraints hold us back from violence, and our law breaking is just to suit our convenience, we must not think his lawlessness will stop to suit our comfort.

"A man has but to walk through that cosmopolitan group, to address which you would need to speak 45 languages and dialects, and see what reckless spirit and what bitterness pervaded them, without asking, what would happen if a greater leader than Ettor could come and by his power could crystalize this distrust of law, not among foreigners only but intelligent American workman, would another French revolution be impossible.

"Another factor in the case is the growing class consciousness. The men of education who should have led the people by their example of unselfish interest have been so immersed in their own interests that the leadership has fallen into other hands. This selfish individualism has fostered the class consciousness, and today men speak with scorn of "highbrows," asserting thereby a sense of separation between them and the working people. This lack of intelligent leadership has forced the people into the hands of the demagogue who by their teaching are fostering class hatred and animosity. The honest business man is suffering for the greed of the selfish, and we shall all have to suffer for the lawlessness of the respectable people who through influence were able to violate law and escape.

"The last factor which goes to the making of an anarchist is the

ATTITUDE TOWARD LAW.

This is manifested by flowers and cheers for a murderer; hate and jeers for the representative of law and order.

"I am speaking to my fellow citizens on this theme, that I may appeal to them that together we may cultivate a larger reverence for law; to the educated young man that he may by his example of unselfish devotion to the public weal appeal to the orderly element in our common life and once again assume leadership. I appeal to my fellow Christians that more of the sacrificial passion shall enter their lives that they shall be able to say with their Lord "For my bretherns sake," that education, wealth and social prestige shall not be held selfishly nor to claim some special privilege in the eyes of law, but as an opportunity that from your vantage ground you may lift our common life to higher standards of morality and social happiness. Ever remembering this, that you cannot take the 'not out of the Ten Commandments and put it in the Beatitudes' without creating anarchy and social confusion."

WOLLASTON BAPTIST.

A deep impression must have been made upon the minds of the audience at the Sunday morning service, by the sermon preached by the pastor from the subject: "The exultant cry of a triumphant man." His remarks, greatly condensed ran somewhat along these lines:

"I have fought the good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith. These are the words of the Apostle Paul as he looks back over the life so soon to close. He has no word of complaint to offer, no feeling of regret to vex him. His outlook for the future is equally bright—'Henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness, which the Lord, the righteous judge shall give to me in that day; and not to me only, but also to all them that love his appearing." We find that Paul's life is wholly consistent with his teaching; he writes to Timothy just previous to these words: "But flee youthful lusts and follow after righteousness." "Fight the good fight of faith," and his own words follow as proof, "I have fought the good fight." Paul's enthusiasm was strong to the end.

The three figures used in this verse are particularly fitted to the Christian. (1)Christian life is a fight, within and without; a struggle with evil thoughts, evil passions, a conflict with bad customs and practices. Nevertheless, it is a "good fight" for a good cause. (2) The Christian life is a race—a contest for an "uncorruptable crown." (3) The Christian life is a trust—a mutual exchange of gifts between Christ and his followers. We commit our lives and our hearts to Him; He entrusts us with Himself, time, talent, opportunity, and eternal life.

How can we account for Paul's success, his well-spent life, his hope for the future? These are three great reasons given by the Apostle himself, and should these three be kept before every man and woman, we too might exalt at the end as did Paul.

(1) Paul kept before him the great assize—"I charge thee in the sight of God, and of Christ Jesus, who shall judge the living and the dead." If every business-man, politician, physician, minister, working man, kept this in mind would there not be great changes?

(2) There is a crown for those who stand the test.—"Forgetting the things which are behind and stretching forward to the things which are before, I press on toward the goal unto the prize of the high calling of God."

(3) Paul had help from an unseen personality. He gives the credit where it is due. —"No one took my part.....but the Lord stood by me and strengthened me." The same help is ours if we only will accept it "Without me, ye can do nothing."

The packing room of the Rice & Hutchins shoe factory, at South Braintree, presented a scene of merriment Saturday, during the noon hour, when the foreman and packers presented Miss Elizabeth L. Connelly with a cut glass water pitcher, glasses and tray, in anticipation of her approaching marriage to Councilman Harry T. Boyd of West Quincy. Miss Connelly resigned her position Saturday. She has been employed at the Rice & Hutchins factory five years, and during that time has made hosts of friends who showered her with their good wishes for a happy future.

A party of Finns had a fight at Brewers corner Saturday night which ended in the stabbing of Oscar Koosta one of their number. Koosta received a cut half an inch deep between the ninth and the tenth ribs. He was treated at the office of Dr. Ahlstrom in the Casey building and later taken to his home. About midnight Officer Duane arrested John Cornelius of 52 Smith street on a charge of assault.

MOLECULES ARE INVISIBLE.

Yet Their Tracks Through Space Can Be Discerned.

It came to be evident about the middle of the last century that, in order to explain certain facts connected with the relative weights of gases, matter must not merely consist of atoms, but that these atoms must have the power of uniting in small groups. In forming a compound, indeed, this must be so. For instance, carbonic acid gas must consist of one atom of carbon, which, along with two atoms of oxygen, forms a small group of three atoms.

The novelty of the conception was in the notion that oxygen itself, in the state of gas, as it exists, for example, in the air, consists of small groups of atoms; in this case, two. To such small groups of atoms was given the name molecules. A molecule is that portion of a substance which can exist in the free state, as oxygen does in air. An atom generally exists in combination, but atoms may and sometimes do exist separately, in which case they also are termed molecules.

Now, can molecules be seen? Is their existence a mere assumption? The answer to that question is, No, they cannot be seen, but artificial molecules can be made which correspond so closely in their behavior to real molecules that the existence of real molecules is practically certain. Moreover, although no one has ever seen a molecule, still the track of a molecule moving through space has been seen, and, just as Robinson Crusoe was right in inferring the existence of man Friday from his footstep imprinted in the sand, so the real existence of a molecule may just as certainly be inferred from the track it leaves.—Sir William Ramsay in Harper's.

RUM SELLERS ESCAPE PRISON

Let Off With Fines In Maine Supreme Court

GREAT STAMPEDE TO SETTLE

County Treasury Fattened by About $15,000—Jail Sentences In Lower Court Not Affirmed, to Great Disappointment of Sheriff—Many Barrooms at Once Resume Business

Bangor, Me., Sept. 22.—The enfocement of the prohibitory liquor law in this county received a staggering setback when nearly 200 liquor dealers settled from one to twenty cases against them with fines of from $100 to $800 in the supreme court. When court adjourned the clerk was literally buried in greenbacks and checks, and as near as could be estimated about $15,000 has been turned into the county treasury.

There were no jail sentences except as alternative for nonpayment of the fines and costs. Many cases were continued to the February term, some were filed, or nol prossed, or placed on the docket or quashed for defective papers.

As soon as it was noised about that Justice Haley, presiding at this term, was not affirming jail sentences and that cash settlements could be effected, there was a general stampede of liquor dealers and their counsel to the courthouse, and there was a steady procession to the bar of the court from the opening until adjournment. The excuses were many and varied, and about all were accepted.

Sheriff O'Connell, who has been active in enforcement since he was appointed to succeed Sheriff Emerson, impeached, has been making continual raids and search and seizures. Many large seizures have been ordered returned to claimants for defects in the warrants, most of which are issued by the Bangor municipal court.

The sheriff secured many jail sentences in the lower court and has been depending largely on that action to put the most persistent liquor dealers out of business. Many of the largest dealers have no objection to paying a heavy fine, but fear jail sentences.

O'Connell declined to make any comment on the situation or about his future plans, although he intimated that he was much surprised and disappointed. Some of the respondents have been raided repeatedly, held in the lower court on many searches and seizures, illegal depositing and liquor nuisances and had jail sentences aggregating several years.

There are rumors that there will be a general reopening of the saloons, and several bars are already open which have been dark for a long time.

Those close to the sheriff say that since he was appointed to the place of a sheriff impeached for malfeasance in office, his only alternative is to keep up enforcement measures, and it is not probable that there will be a return to wide-open bars.

ONE DEAD, ONE DYING

Fleeing Trusties From Boys' Institution Leap From a Train

Boston, Sept. 22.—Tragedy brought to a close the escape and four-days' liberty of Edward Johnson and Joseph Craball, two boy trusties at the Lyman school, last night, when the couple leaped from a moving train to escape a brakeman.

Johnson is at the city hospital with a fractured skull and leg. Craball died before he reached the Massachusetts general hospital.

From their clothing it was ascertained that they had been inmates of the Lyman school. Communication with that institution disclosed the escape of the boys last Wednesday.

LEGAL STAFF OF ELEVEN

Boston Man to Aid Thaw In His Fight Against Extradition

Concord, N. H., Sept. 22.—With Joseph F. O'Connell of Boston added to his legal staff, which now comprises eleven men skilled in extradition proceedings, Harry K. Thaw spent a good part of Sunday in the hotel parlor here playing the piano.

Happy in the thought that his mother, sister and brother will be here today and confident of winning his freedom in the extradition proceedings before Governor Felker, he played ragtime, southern melodies, hymns and love songs on the piano.

Sales, $250,000 Tolls, $36

THIS is the most remarkable incident of its kind that we have heard of in the course of a demonstration of selling by telephone---sales totalling $250,000 at an expenditure of $36 for telephone tolls.

By permission we are enabled to say that the selling was done by MR. GEORGE R. KELLY of George R. Kelly & Co. of 104 Hanover St., Boston, New England selling agents of the American Window Glass Company of Pittsburgh.

One of our salesmen called upon Mr. Kelly to demonstrate our new toll service selling plans, only to find that already he was employing advanced methods along this line. Said he:

"We anticipated a rise in the price of window glass around January 1, and wanted to give our customers the benefit of current quotations.

"There wasn't time to make personal visits to the trade, letters wouldn't be satisfactory, so we made our calls by telephone.

"During the first ten days in December we made toll calls to widely separated points in New England, at a cost of about $36, and booked orders aggregating $250,000."

If any New England house can show greater results from selling by telephone, we would be glad to learn of them.

"Business men interested in progressive ideas for the extension of trade are invited to send for our booklet entitled "Modern Methods of Money-Making" and for samples of our "Telephone Passes."

In Greater Boston, call Fort Hill 7600 and ask the Contract Department for details.

ASKS FOLLOWERS TO RETAIN FAITH

Sulzer Tells Them He Will Ultimately Rout the Enemy

Albany, Sept. 22.—With none but his legal advisers gathered about him, William Sulzer reiterates his declaration that he has no intention of resigning the office of governor. Through his lawyers he sent to his followers a plea for them to retain their faith in him, giving assurance that he would decisively rout the enemy at the proper time.

The governor continues to deny himself to interviewers, and none but his lawyers are permitted to pass the portals of the "People's House."

Mrs. Sulzer received the more intimate friends of her husband, but even they were denied admission to the executive sanctum.

DROPPED OUT OF SIGHT

Another Woman Thought to Have Been Victim of Schmidt

New York, Sept. 22.—In letters found in the trunk of Rev. Hans Schmidt, confessed murderer of Anna Aumuller, the police have discovered letters indicating the possible murder by the priest of a woman he apparently brought to this country with him, a woman who either believed she was his wife or expected soon to become his wife.

The letters indicate that the woman was another victim of a mock marriage in which the priest himself performed the ceremony, as in the case of Anna Aumuller, the finding of whose dismembered body in the Hudson brought to light one of the most astounding crimes of a decade.

The letters show that the woman dropped out of sight just prior to 1912—at the time Schmidt met Anna Aumuller. The woman signed only her first name to the letters, which were written in German, and after the last letter written in 1911 apparently completely vanished.

CARGILL A SUICIDE

Was First Man In Bay State to Ask Alimony In Divorce Suit

Worcester, Mass., Sept. 22.—Joseph C. Cargill, aged 38, of Spencer, died at the Worcester city hospital from a self-inflicted bullet wound over the heart. Cargill shot himself at his home.

The death of Cargill removes from the superior court docket his divorce suit against Emma Cargill, and it ends the first case in the legal history of Massachusetts, it is said, in which a man asked for alimony from his wife.

Cargill brought his suit last July, alleging misconduct, and he secured an attachment for $2000 on property of his wife.

SLAVERY IN PHILIPPINES

Worcester's Charges Backed Up by Auditor For the Islands

Washington, Sept. 22.—Secretary Garrison had before him a Philippine slavery report by W. H. Phipps, auditor for the islands, practically backing up the startling charges of Dean Worcester.

It cites details of many cases of boys and girls sold into slavery at prices ranging from $60 to $100, and that heads of savage families sell their daughters and regard the practice as a right.

"I have no hesitancy in saying that I think the charges of Worcester that slavery exists in the Philippines are sustained," says Phipps.

The opposition to woman's' suffrage seems likely to get a great boom in this country as the result of the arrival of Mrs. Pankhurst.

—Parentitis is a disease not found in books. The thing it describes is in every family where a parent and grown-up children live together. It comes from the survival of the parental instinct long after there is any use for it, and from the inflammation caused by its unwelcome exercise. Children get weaned from their parents. It is advisable for their fathers and mothers to get weaned from them. The incessant and ubiquitous watchfulness over a generation old enough to take care of itself is unwise, ineffective, and harmful. It pulls up roots that must be let alone, if they are to take root. It strains the will to obey the fifth commandment to the breaking-point. It forces deception or concealment on any selfrespecting youth. It is sure to end in sorrow and bitterness. Every parent ought to be able to alter the words of the apostle, and say of his children, when they were children, I thought of them as children; but, when they became men and women, I put away childish thoughts.—Christian Register.

RUSH TO ALASKA AFTER BIG STRIKE

Glowing Reports of Rich Find on Shushama River.

NOT CORROBORATED YET.

Vice Consul Woodward of Vancouver, B. C., Sends News of Gold Miners' Exodus Northward to Scene of Bonanza Near Headwaters of White River—Tells of Routes.

The reports from the Yukon territory and Alaska of a new gold strike on the Shushama river, near the source of the White river, are causing excitement throughout the northwest country, writes United States Vice Consul G. C. Woodward from Vancouver, Canada. The strike, Mr. Woodward learns, is about thirty miles west of the international boundary between the Yukon territory and Alaska, between parallels 62 and 63.

"A large number of miners and prospectors," Mr. Woodward reports, "are leaving the British Columbia part of the Pacific coast, and if the present reports are corroborated there will no doubt be a gold rush from this vicinity, which, while not comparing with that of 1897-8, will be of some magnitude.

"It is stated that two discoverers took out 200 ounces of gold in four days and that dirt is found on other creeks running $27 to the pan, but too much dependence cannot be placed in these first reports, as there is no way of bearing out their authenticity until a number of men have reached the diggings and their reports are received.

Two Routes to Field.

"There are two routes that can be taken to the location of the strike, one by steamer to Cordova, Alaska, thence by rail to the head of the Copper river and Northwestern railway and then over the divide into the headwaters of the White river and down this river to a point opposite the strike, then across country to where the discovery was made. The other route is by steamer to Skagway, Alaska, from there to Whitehorse, Yukon territory, by rail, and then down the Yukon river by steamer to Dawson. While the White river enters the Yukon river about seventy miles above Dawson, no arrangements have as yet been made for the transfer of passengers and freight at this point, connections being made at Dawson with the steamers operating on the White river.

"This is done on account of Dawson being the outfitting point for miners in that section of the Yukon territory, but should travel in connection with this strike be of sufficient importance arrangements will be made later on for such transfer. The head of navigation on the White river is about ninety miles from the mouth, at the junction of the Donjek river, and from there it is necessary to use poling boats twenty-five miles up the White river. From this point the trail cuts seventy miles across country. While the route via Dawson is probably the longest, it is possible that the trip is not so difficult as via Cordova, as it is over the road that has been traveled since the early days of the gold excitement.

Steamer Rates Raised.

"While the rates on the steamers from Dawson to the head of navigation on the White river were at first $50 for each passenger, $50 per ton for freight and $50 a head for horses, they have now increased to nearly $75, and should the rush continue these rates will still increase. It is estimated that it will cost 50 cents to $1 per pound to take outfits to the scene of the strike.

"It should be taken into consideration by those contemplating making this trip that it is but natural that steamship companies and merchants in the north will report favorably in regard to this new find in order to secure the travel and business.

"Should the strike prove bona fide, it will be of great benefit to the holders of copper claims on the head of White river, as it will bring attention to this branch of the mining industry, and should it be the cause for the building of an extension of the Copper River and Northwestern railway, it will open up a section of country enormously rich in this mineral. Native copper was found on the headwaters of the White river years ago, and a large number of claims have been sufficiently represented to secure a title, both in the Yukon territory and Alaska. Should the rush continue, it will be necessary to establish a customs office at the boundary, as a good percentage of the supplies is purchased in Dawson or in Vancouver."

COULD FLY TO AMERICA.

New Zeppelin's Builders Say Trip Would Not Be Very Risky.

Dispatches from Berlin announce that Count Zeppelin's engineers at Friedrichshafen assert that the new marine dirigible, which will make its first ascent some time this month, will be the first airship really able without undue risk to cross the Atlantic to America.

It is 520 feet long and 52 feet in diameter. It will be driven by four motors, each of 205 horsepower. It is the largest Zeppelin yet built. The Zeppelin company intends to build a revolving shed at Friedrichshafen, as the present shed is too small.

MANY ACCIDENTS ON NEW ENGLAND COAST

Three Torpedo Boat Seamen Drown Off Bridgeport

Boston, Sept. 22.—Heavy fogs in the harbor and along the New England coast tied up shipping, and, with heavy seas and high winds, caused several death and many accidents.

Three seamen of the United States torpedo boat destroyer McCall were drowned off Bridgeport when the tug Seaboard ran down the McCall's cutter.

Max Zimmerman of Boston was drowned off Apple island in Boston harbor.

Three canoeists were blotted out by fog in the harbor just as aid was to be sent them. They are thought to have been lost.

Arthur P. Homer was picked up from a nine-foot tender after a battle with the waves and fog off Boston light, following the destruction of his motorboat, Remoh IV., by fire.

An auxiliary yacht burned off Hull late last night. Five men were rescued by the Hull lifesaving crew.

Eight big tugs and twenty schooners in Boston harbor are waiting to put to sea.

BODY STILL UNCLAIMED

Identity of Woman Who Killed Herself at Hub Is Unknown

Boston, Sept. 22.—Unless some person comes forward within a short space of time and establishes the identity of the body of the young woman who committed suicide at the Hotel Bellevue on July 13 by jumping from a ninth-story window to the concrete yard below, it will be buried in a pauper's grave.

Medical Examiner Magrath has had the body held at the morgue for the past nine weeks in hopes that the identity would be made.

The body is that of a young woman 25 years of age, 5 feet 2 inches in height, weighing 120 pounds, of dark complexion with a slight pencil line scar over her left eyebrow, and has had several teeth filled with gold.

CASE INVOLVED GIRLS

Prominent and Aged Wisconsin Politician Is Sent to Prison

Milwaukee, Sept. 22.—Francis J. Borchardt, 63 years old, a justice of the peace, well known in national guard and political circles throughout Wisconsin, was sentenced to nine months at the house of correction by Judge Page for contributing to the delinquency of girls.

Borchardt was a member of the state assembly two years from 1885, a captain of the Kosciusko guard fourteen years, a colonel on Governor Rusk's staff five years and a justice of the peace fourteen years. He was a candidate for district judge at the last election, opposing Page, who sentenced him.

Disaster at Spanish Bullfight

Madrid, Sept. 22.—Five persons are dead and nearly fifty others wounded as a result of a bullfight disaster in Ciudad Real. When a sudden storm arose the spectators rushed into the covered stand, which collapsed.

Bananas Stay on Free List

Washington, Sept. 22.—President Wilson secured a signal victory in the house and senate conference on the tariff bill when the conferees agreed to retain bananas on the free list.

PENNANT TO DARTWELL

Only Slight Lead Over Clara for Season's Yachting

Although the annual rendezvous of the Y. R. M. A. will not take place until next month, the winners in the several classes have been decided. In class D, the Cape Cat class in which most of the Quincy yachts sail, the cock-of-the-walk pennant goes to ex-Commodore Ira M. Whittemore's Dartwell. The Dartwell however was hard pushed by the Clara of ex-Commodore H. W. Robbins but she wins out by a margin of three points, the record being Dartwell, 74.7 and Clara 71.8. The standing of the boats in this class is as follows, which shows the number of starts, the total number of points, and the average:

Dartwell	18	1345.7	74.7
Clara	18	1292.3	71.8
Iris	18	1086.6	60.3
Mudjekeewis	14	760.9	54.3
Dolly III	10	685.2	48.9
Grayling	14	381.4	27.2

Saturday, what was probably the last race of the season, was sailed under the auspices of the Hingham club and this race settled the championships in some of the other classes, particularly in class A where it was a close contest between the Marie L, Meemer and Chewink II. These three boats were practically tied for the championship. The Meemer led the fleet around the course and finished first, but her lead was not sufficient to give her the race. She has to allow the Marie L. about 3 minutes and 40 seconds, and the Chewink 2 minutes and 12 seconds. The Meemer however wins the cock-of-the-walk pennant in this class. In class S the Maritza II finished first with the Waweenock second and Zoe third.

NO GAME SATURDAY.

The heavy drizzle, accompanied by occasional showers upset the sporting schedule Saturday and the post season base ball series between the Colonials and the All Stars on the Ward Four grounds, and the Atlantics and the Walnuts on the Ward Six grounds, will be played next Saturday.

ADVERTISE IN THE LEDGER.

CAN YOU DOUBT IT?

When the Proof Can Be So Easily Investigated.

When so many grateful citizens of Quincy testify to benefit derived from Doan's Kidney Pills, can you doubt the evidence? The proof is not far away—it is almost at your door. Read what a resident of Quincy says about Doan's Kidney Pills. Can you demand more convincing testimony?

William Farquharson, Jr., 25 Bennington St., Quincy, Mass., says: "I had severe pains in my back and my kidneys were weak. I didn't know what to take until someone recommended Doan's Kidney Pills. I used only part of a box and they completely relieved the pains."

The above statement must carry conviction to the mind of every reader. Don't simply ask for a kidney remedy—ask distinctly for Doan's Kidney Pills, the same that Mr. Farquharson had—the remedy backed by home testimony. 50c all stores. Foster-Milburn Co., Props., Buffalo, N. Y.

What They Heard

The Result of Idle Curiosity

By CLARISSA MACKIE

The Pendletons' telephone bell jingled sharply, and along the rural line five receivers were stealthily lifted to as many curious ears.

"That you, Bonnie?" came Jack Pendleton's voice.

"Yes," responded Mrs. Pendleton.

"I'm bringing a friend home to dinner. Will it be all right, dear?"

"Ye-e-s." Mrs. Pendleton's voice did sound doubtful. "There isn't a thing to eat in the house, but I can"—

"Never mind, then. We'll dine in town and come down afterward," said Jack in a disappointed tone.

"If you don't bring him home," protested Bonnie. "I'll never speak to you again, Jack Pendleton, and"—

"Hang up along the line there!" bellowed Jack, with sudden intuition that his performance was interesting his rural neighbors.

So five receivers were noiselessly restored to their hooks, and five good housekeepers, pink of face, but with excited eyes, went back to their prosaic duties.

The Pendletons concluded their conversation, and pretty Bonnie explained to her adoring husband that she had not planned anything to eat that day because, if he would only remember, he had invited her to dine in town with him and go to the theater afterward, and absentminded Jack ruefully acknowledged his guilt.

They were newcomers in Dayville and fresh from the big city, where one's neighbors' business is not of the slightest interest, and they were somewhat bewildered by the almost avid curiosity displayed by their new acquaintances in the little village.

So Bonnie worked busily all day long preparing an appetizing repast for her husband and his business friend, while the five housekeepers dismissed their tasks with deft hands and dressed for the Wednesday afternoon sewing society with a pleasant sense of importance in being the center of interest, for in Dayville the bearer of "news" invariably holds the middle of the stage.

By 3 o'clock the society meeting was in full swing, and the Pendletons' affairs were made the subject of discussion.

"I hear they make a terrible mess of getting along," said Mrs. Henry Beebe.

"Don't get along, eh?" wheezed Mrs. Bush skeptically.

"I don't wonder, her being the housekeeper she is," said Mrs. Charlie Sayles.

"And him such a poor provider. I expect he don't earn enough to keep soul and body together," was Ellen Spencer's significant remark.

"They're both pretty husky looking," put in Mrs. Bush.

But she was ignored by the news bringers.

"I've heard that he treats her dreadfully," simpered Miss Fanny Wicks, who had ideas of her own regarding the perfect married life.

"I heard they was going to separate," said Mittie Loomis.

After that tongues clacked more busily than the needles flashed.

The Pendletons would have been quite stunned with surprise if they had known how intimately their affairs were known and discussed by their neighbors.

"Talks to her like a dog," asserted Fanny Wicks.

"If his bed ain't made before he takes the train or if his dinner is a mite late," added Mrs. Charlie Sayles, with relish. "And, being the poor housekeeper she is, I guess it keeps him dinging at her all the time."

"No woman will stand that for long," said Mrs. Henry Beebe, who ruled her little husband with an iron hand minus the velvet glove.

"Just think of there being days when they don't have a bite to eat!" put in Ellen Spencer. "I wonder if it 'twould be an insult to give 'em a donation."

"If they're going to separate they won't thank anybody for giving 'em a party," remarked Mittie Loomis.

"That's so. But I wonder what we can do. I don't like to feel that there's anybody in our midst that's suffering for food when I have a-plenty," twittered Fanny.

"No more do I," said Mrs. Charlie Sayles thriftily. "I've got some canned fruit that's not going to keep. Land knows what got into it! I could leave it there unbeknownst to her."

"She might guess who 'twas that never had no luck with canned stuff," whispered Ellen Spencer to Mittie Loomis.

Old Mrs. Bush had said "Fiddlesticks!" three times and "Bosh!" twice, but no one took the slightest notice of her. Presently she folded up her work, popped it into her black sateen workbag and got up to go.

"Why, Aunt Louisa, you ain't never going now? Why, we're going to have refreshments," protested Mittie Loomis.

"I can't stay," said Mrs. Bush acidly. "I've got things to do that have to be did," and she marched off with an air of deeply offended dignity, and the half frightened pleading of the minister's meek little wife was of no avail.

"I wonder what she'll do when she gets a divorce," shuddered Fanny Wicks, with a sentimental sigh over the grave of dead romance.

"Marry again most likely."

"Why, Mrs. Sayles, you don't mean to say she's got her eye on anybody?"

"There was that tall, dark man that came by stage one morning when her husband was away. She kissed him. I saw her."

"It was her brother," explained the minister's wife.

"Mrs. Wright, how do you know?"

"She told me so."

"Oh, she told you so!"

"And I expect he leads a gay life in the city. Them brokers are here, there and nowhere all the time. Of course I mean Mr. Pendleton, not the other man."

"The other man. How dreadfully romantic!" sighed Fanny Wicks.

"I think we better have some refreshments now," said Mrs. Wright nervously, and for once in her colorless life she used rare diplomacy in selecting her helpers.

With Mittie Loomis, Fanny Wicks, Mrs. Beebe, Mrs. Sayles and Ellen Spencer all cutting cake and passing lemonade and plates, there was little chance for these informers to add to the stream of gossip they had started. Indeed, the stream flowed briskly along and was threatening to become a flood of scandal when the side door opened and Mrs. Bush trotted briskly in and sat down in her empty chair.

Her little black eyes sparkled maliciously, and she fanned herself with a black mittened hand as she talked.

"Thought I'd get here in time for a bite to eat. Mittie, is that poundcake? Well, jest give me the end piece; I like it best. And, yes, I'll take tea, Mrs. Wright. Let the young folks have lemonade."

Her middle aged companions unconsciously bridled at being classed among the younger generation, and so a feeling of good fellowship was established when Mrs. Bush dropped a bombshell in their midst.

"I saw Mrs. Pendleton at her front gate, and I told her what you all was saying about her," observed Mrs. Bush coolly.

There was a moment of breathless horror, and five pairs of eyes started with guilty fear. Mittie Loomis found her tongue first.

"Aunt Louisa, you never did!"

"I did. I wanted to find out if there was a word of truth in the bull thing or whether folks had been listening on the telephone again."

There were five feeble protests, and five pink faces were the cynosure of all eyes.

Mrs. Bush went on mercilessly:

"I told her, and she says, 'Mrs. Bush, I do believe those good gossips have been listening along the telephone line.' And then she up and told me all about it, and all I got to say is I don't see how any sensible, God fearing woman can deliberately misconstrue somebody else's innocent conversation and twist it into news that sets everybody by the ears. I know some things I ain't never told. I met Mrs. Pendleton's brother, and he showed me a picture of his wife and children; had it in his vest pocket. They're all coming up to spend two weeks pretty soon. So where's your romance about the other man, Fanny Wicks? Fiddledee!"

The silence was profound, while Mrs. Bush told the members of the sewing society all about Mrs. Pendleton's busy day preparing for the unexpected guest. She also related how she herself had poked an inquisitive nose into the Pendleton pantry and had seen a goodly store of eatables there, and she translated Mrs. Pendleton's remark to her husband as being the exaggeration of a good housekeeper when she expects company—nothing in the house to eat.

Then Mrs. Bush told another secret. Mrs. Pendleton had given her permission to tell them, and it was the sort of secret that all women are interested in. It brings tender smiles to their lips and a warm maternal light to the eyes, even to the eyes of such spinsters as Mittie Loomis and Fannie Wicks.

"You can all make it up to Mrs. Pendleton by fixing something for the little new baby that's expected," said Mrs. Bush, her sharp voice softening wonderfully under the influence of this magical topic. "Now, what can you do, Mittie?"

"A knitted carriage robe, blue and white," said Mittie eagerly. "It'll be a lot of work, but I don't mind."

"I shall crochet three pairs of little shoes," said Ellen Spencer. "I know a pretty new pattern."

"And you, Fanny Wicks?" asked Mrs. Bush sharply, for Fanny liked to write poetry in her spare moments and was not fond of work in any form.

"Bibs," said Fanny dreamily, "six little embroidered bibs. I saw some patterns in the fashion sheet this month. They were so cute I was wishing I knew some little one to make them for."

"I shall embroider a pillowslip," said Mrs. Charlie Sayles briskly, and one could almost see the beautifully worked pattern that would result from her labors.

"I will make a cap," said Mrs. Beebe, her mind busy with the details of this interesting needlework.

"Then, when everything's done, I guess we might have a kind of little party for Mrs. Pendleton and give 'em to her. I expect she will like that kind of a donation," said old Mrs. Bush, and she had forgotten to be snappish, and her black eyes beamed youthfully.

Well, it is a fact that now, when the Pendletons' telephone bell rings, all the receivers on that line remain on their respective hooks, but the five subscribers always look a bit anxious and say:

"I hope nothing is the matter with that blessed baby!"

PRIMARIES IN THE BAY STATE

Chief Interest In the Gardner-Benton Contest

PROGRESSIVE VOTE INTERESTS

Will Be First Showing of Strength of New Party In State—Contest For Democratic Nomination For Lieutenant Governor Full of Personalities—Light Vote Is Expected

Boston, Sept. 22.—A primary election will be held in every city and town in the state tomorrow. The indications point to a light vote, since there is but one contest in the three leading parties for the nomination of governor. Augustus P. Gardner is opposed for the Republican nomination by Everett C. Benton.

Neither Lieutenant Governor Walsh, Democrat, nor Charles S. Bird, Progressive, has any opposition in their respective parties.

Aside from the contests there is considerable interest attached to the number of Progressives who will attend the primaries to vote for Bird. The result will be the first showing of the enrolled voting strength of the new party in this state. An attempt is being made by the Progressives to make a strong showing.

Both Walsh and Bird are opposed to party enrollment in the primaries. They favor a change in the election laws giving the citizen the right to call for whatever ballot he wishes in the primary. Both candidates say that thousands of citizens do not attend the primaries simply because they do not wish to attach themselves to any of the three leading parties.

The only contest of sufficient interest to assure a fair sized Democratic vote is that for the Democratic nomination for lieutenant governor, between Richard H. Long of Framingham and Edward P. Barry of Boston.

Chairman Riley of the Democratic state committee sent out a final appeal to the Democrats of the state last night to vote for Long. He said in his letter that "Walsh and Long will be a winning ticket, but Walsh, Barry and Donahue would mean defeat before we started."

The fight between Long and Barry has been full of personalities and the race and religious issue has been interjected.

One of the interesting features of this contest will be the vote in Boston. It is expected by Riley that the Boston organization will work hard to nominate Long. Congressman Curley, however, has put his organization on record for Barry.

Timothy W. Coakley has put a little ginger into the Democratic contest for district attorney, but there is little doubt that District Attorney Pelletier will receive both nominations. Pelletier is unopposed for the Republican nomination.

There are two other contests on the state ticket for treasurer, one between Joseph L. P. St. Coeur and Frederick W. Mansfield for the Democratic nomination for treasurer, and another between Charles L. Burrill and Maurice Kane for the Republican nomination.

The legislative contests are not nearly so many as in other years. In many of the districts throughout the state Republican candidates are also trying to capture the Progressive nomination.

Senator McDevitt of Quincy, who was expelled from the senate this year, is out for a vindication, and is being opposed for the nomination by David W. Murray and James H. Shea.

Gardner will wind up his campaign in Essex today. He will make a tour of his home county, with Mrs. Gardner acting as his chauffeur. Benton will wind up in Boston, as will Walsh and the Democratic candidates for lieutenant governor.

MURDER MYSTERY CLEARED

Slayer of Anna Schumacher Confesses to Philadelphia Police

Philadelphia, Sept. 22.—Jacob Wolfsohn, 25, a garment maker out of work, confessed to the police the murder of Anna Schumacher in a cemetery at Rochester, N. Y., Aug. 9, 1909.

Wolfsohn, who was arrested for a local burglary, says that in 1909 he was walking through the Rochester cemetery when he met the Schumacher girl. He flirted with her, according to his confession, and when she repelled him, Wolfsohn attacked her while the girl was placing flowers on her father's grave. He then found a grave digger's spade, dragged the body to a lot adjacent to the cemetery and buried it.

Montreal, Sept. 22.—James Ross, builder of the Canadian Pacific railway west of Winnipeg and former manager of the Wisconsin railway, died here of heart disease. He was 65 years old.

Statesman Dies at Banquet

Milan, Sept. 22.—The Italian minister of posts and telegraphs, T. Calissano, died at a banquet, while delivering a speech. His death was due to heart disease.

Long Postmaster of Lewiston

Economy Hints

A penny saved is a penny earned.—Benjamin Franklin.

A CERTAIN young woman, who is fortunate enough to have much leisure time at her command and, in addition, is possessed of an exceedingly kind heart, has evolved a new way of consuming a portion of the first with the entire approval of the second of these. She was telling some friends about it recently. They had missed her from their circles and asked for an explanation.

"Well, girls," she said, "there really isn't much to explain. Some time ago I visited a friend in the hospital several times. I spent some time with her each day, and I noticed with surprise how many sufferers there were who had no one come to see them. They were probably persons in a strange city when taken ill or they had no relatives and their friends neglected them.

"I felt terribly sorry for them, lying there lonely and almost forsaken, especially at a time when they stood most in need of friendly attentions. Accordingly I asked the head nurse if I might come at the regular visiting time and visit one of the friendless patients each day, reading to them or chatting, just as they preferred. I explained that I did not want my visit to be regarded like that of a charity officer, but, rather, I wanted each patient to feel it was more peaceful than that; I wanted to visit one person each visiting day and devote the time to that person alone and not hustle through and see how many I could see in one visit. That, it has seemed to me, is always the trouble with general hospital visiting.

"The nurse agreed and permitted me to come on every visiting day and read or chat with those who were convalescing. Accordingly I have gone at least twice each week, and it has delighted me beyond words to see how pleased the patients were to receive me. Moreover, I must say that I felt myself as if I were doing a lot of good in the world. Perhaps I felt that I was doing more than I really was accomplishing, but the feeling is a very nice one, just the same."

HOW TO CARE FOR TIRE.

Timely Hints Which Are Likely to Prove Money Savers.

Remember that new tire carried on the side of the car, if not protected from the sunlight, will quickly oxidize, crack and become quite worthless.

A new tire should preferably be put into service a little while until the cover has been soiled. It will then not deteriorate near so quickly. It is better, however, to have a cover for extra tires.

Do not store them away in a warm place for any great length of time. Light or heat will cause the sulphur to come to the surface and make the cover minutely porous. After this oxidation takes place the nerve fiber of the rubber is destroyed, and naturally the durability is greatly impaired.

A dark, dry room at a temperature of 40 to 50 degrees is most favorable for retarding chemical action in the rubber and the "friction" stock on the fabric layers.

How to Read French Menus.

Many menu cards and cookbooks contain foreign words, and the following explanations will be helpful: Cafe, coffee; demitasse, after dinner cup; frappe, semi or half frozen; fricassee, stew; fromage, cheese; glace, frozen; cafe au lait, coffee with milk; neufchatel, a soft Swiss cheese; parmesan, an Italian cheese; timbale, pie crust baked in mold; croutons, bread toasted in squares and used for soup and in garnishing; bouillon, a clear broth, usually of beef; au gratin dishes baked, prepared with cheese; menu, bill of fare; puree, ingredients rubbed through sieve, usually the term given a thick strained soup; tutti fruitti, various kinds of chopped fruit; consomme, clear soup; jus, gravy or juice of meats.

Pillow Cover Costing Nothing.

Any girl who has an embroidered waist which is worn at the neck and sleeves can make a pretty pillow cover for her bedroom. First cut the front to fit the pillow, and then utilize the back of the waist for the other side of the pillow. The waist, of course, should be one that buttons in the back, so the same buttons and buttonholes may be used to fasten the back of the pillow. It takes almost no time to make, as practically the only sewing to be done is the sewing up of the seams.

How to Keep White of Egg Stiff.

It has happened to most cooks at some time or other that, after beating whites of eggs to a stiff froth, if they have to wait a little while they have fallen down again. To remedy this put a pinch of cream of tartar into the whites while whipping, and they will retain their stiffness as long as necessary.

How to Heat the Curling Iron.

In case of great necessity, when you do not possess an alcohol lamp, you may heat your curling iron by holding it under boiling hot water for a few seconds.

OFFICER ASSAULTED.

George Anderson of Quincy left the late train at Wollaston Saturday night to punish three "kidders," and when they scattered he sighted Officer Riley across the tracks and walked toward him. Without warning he delivered a heavy blow to the jaw and Officer Riley dropped to the street. Officer Riley quickly recovered and returned battle and when the train left the station Anderson was on the bottom of the heap. With the assistance of Officer Doran the man was sent to the station and a charge of drunkenness and assault on an officer lodged against him. The attacked and the attacker presented a sorry sight when the auto arrived. Both were covered with a generous coating of mud, but neither bore the marks of a fight.

SUNDAY OUTING.

The annual outing and clambake of Granite conclave, Order of Heptasophs, was held at Hanleys, Germantown on Sunday afternoon and was attended by about 75 members and friends. The bake was prepared by "Mike" Shea and was the equal of the best that he has given this summer. A series of athletic games were run off and the committee that directed the affair was Joseph J. Mullen, James Giles and Garrett Robertson

BIRTHDAY PARTY.

Miss Elsie Bergfors attained her 16th year Saturday, and a large number of relatives and friends tendered her a surprise party in the evening at her home on Granite street. Frederick Bergfors, her cousin, in behalf of those present, gave her a signet ring. Singing and games were enjoyed and refreshments were served. She is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John Bergfors.

HIGH SCHOOL FOOTBALL

Opening Game Will be Played Next Week

A week from Tuesday Quincy High will open its football season on Merrymount park with Weymouth as the opponents. The hard work of Coach Mansur, who has been assisted by Messrs. Fuller, French and Principal Collins of the school is showing results and the indications are that a scrappy line, capable of offensive and defensive playing will be developed.

Great stress is being laid on the offensive because the candidates for the backfield are much lighter than any trying for school teams around Boston and vicinity, and the coaches are seeking to make speed the dominant factor this season. The possibilities of their efforts being realized are growing every day and the constant sprouts the boys are put through daily have promoted confidence and snap in the backfield.

Many of last years players are already showing football ability and the encouragement showered on the boys from all angles is an incentive to good workouts. The candidates are faithfully reporting for practice, willingly undergoing the training assigned them and are doing all they can to place the school in a prominent football position. The pupils are anxiously awaiting the playing of the first game.

GUNS FIRED ON RIVADAVIA

Battleship Stood Up Well Under the Great Strain

The guns of the superdreadnought Rivadavia which have been proven to withstand their charge have been fired to try the strength of the structure. The tests were entirely satisfactory and the ship stood up in splendid shape under her first strain of heavy fire.

The boat left Nantasket roads Saturday for Provincetown, in heavy weather and was obliged to proceed slowly. Because of the heavy fog only one of the 12 inch guns could be fired. On the run up the coast on Sunday the weather cleared for a while and two of the 12 inch guns in turret. No 3 were fired as a broadside and then straight ahead. One of the 6 inch guns was fired and also proved to be satisfactory. The shock as expected, smashed considerable glassware that was aboard the boat.

The ship arrived back at the roads Sunday afternoon and in the evening her searchlight played up and down the harbor, throwing an attractive reflection in the dense fog.

HOW THEY LINE UP

years as a trustee of the Thomas Crane Public Library.

Ex-Representative Thomas is well known, especially in Ward One where he has always made his home and where he is perhaps best known. Although never having served in the City Council he served the city as City Solicitor during the administration of Mayor James Thompson.

He served the Fifth district in the legislature during the years 1909, 10 and 11, and like Mr. Langelier was a hard worker for the interests of Quincy. He has the reputation of being a vote getter and he can be depended upon to leave no stone unturned that will win him the nomination. He also has stated that should Mr. Langelier win out in the primaries that he will support him and do what he can for his election. Mr. Thomas is a lawyer by profession and is also largely interested in real estate at Nantasket.

The three Democratic aspirants for Senatorial nomination while not getting in the public eye to a remarkable extent are nevertheless working to bring about a victory. The only man who is openly making a fight and incidently a defense, is John J. McDevitt, the suspended Senator. In nooks and corners of the district his platform such as it is has been made known through himself and he confidently asserts with his old time confidence and egotism that he will sweep all before him. David W. Murray and James H. Shea of Milton will find it difficult to overcome his strength because of the hold he has on the younger voters of Ward Four that rally around his standard right or wrong. Admitting his errors of judgment they still maintain that he is sincere in his efforts. In other parts of the district we find that former supporters have turned against him and while they sympathize with his standing in the Senate a condition he brought on himself, their sympathy will probably not run away with their judgment. Mr. Shea is a stalwart Democrat from Milton and is a man of wide capabilities in a business way. He differs from Mr. Murray inasmuch as he lacks the fine training received as a member of the legislature. Mr. Murray, defeated in Hyde Park last year for representative has been active in county measures and is now engaged in the five cent car fight being waged in his district.

As there are only a few contests the vote may be light. Last year 1463 votes were cast by the Republicans and 679 by the Democrats.

The Republican vote for Governor was:

	Benton	Walker
Ward One	133	182
Ward Two	38	80
Ward Three	86	140
Ward Four	48	32
Ward Five	170	204
Ward Six	101	148
	576	786

The Democratic vote for Governor was:

	Foss	Pelletier
Ward One	38	31
Ward Two	57	29
Ward Three	48	16
Ward Four	183	150
Ward Five	17	9
Ward Six	27	29
	370	264

Minute "Movies" of the News Right Off the Reel

An Ohio Burbank has evolved an odorless onion.

One-fourth of the cost of a projected $500,000 Jewish university at Jerusalem has been pledged by Zionists.

Realism in art has the official O. K. of New York. Magistrate discharged with appropriate allocutions a "movie" actor arrested for jumping from Brooklyn bridge.

Pina cloth, half silk, half pineapple fiber, has been produced in the Philippines for the United States market. It is described as the shadow of a shadow for thinness and, as to diaphanity, fit to make cobwebs look like Irish frieze.

DEFINES ADULTERATION OF CANNED TOMATOES.

Attention Is Called to Decisions Given In Food Inspections.

On the ground that there seems to be a general misunderstanding in certain localities regarding what constitutes adulteration of canned tomatoes, the superintendent of the department of agriculture in Washington has issued a warning, at the same time calling attention to the department's food inspection decision on this subject.

The can used for any canned food product serves not only as a container, but also as an index of the quantity of food contained, it is declared. It should be as full of food as is practicable without injuring the quality or appearance of the contents.

Tomatoes are a food product which may be canned without the addition of any other substance; therefore the addition of water is deemed adulteration. Pulp has been discovered prepared from trimmings, cores and other waste material which was added to canned tomatoes. This pulp is not a normal ingredient of canned tomatoes and is therefore deemed adulteration.

Also, if in the canning of a lot of tomatoes more juice is added than normally would be present, the same is considered an adulteration in the opinion of the board of food and drug inspection.

A number of decisions have been handed down in favor of the United States in suits brought against companies that have shipped in interstate commerce canned tomatoes adulterated with pulp or an excessive amount of juice.

NEW WAY TO FIGHT FIRES.

Firemen's Association Told Water Will Not Be Used at All.

That the days of fighting fire with water are practically over was the announcement made at the convention of the National Firemen's association in Chicago by Simon Kellerman, Jr., of Edwardsville, Ill., statistician of the association.

"I expect that the use of water for the fighting of fires will be almost done away with within the next five years," he said. "At present in the large cities most of the small fires are put out with chemicals, and in time, I believe, guns for shooting powdered chemicals or chemical bombs, will be used for fighting all big blazes. The loss of property will be much smaller when more chemicals are used. At a fire which I lately witnessed the loss on the property, due to the fire, was about $5,000, while the loss due to the water poured on the flames was about $20,000. This is the greatest argument that can be found for the use of chemicals."

JUST ONE CASE IN 21 YEARS.

Illinois Justice Probably the Record Holder For Official Inactivity.

W. J. Caughey, justice of the peace in Henry county, Ill., probably holds the world's record for official inactivity. The state attorney recently complained that no reports were forthcoming from Justice Caughey concerning cases in his court, and an investigation resulted.

It developed that Justice Caughey had held his office twenty-one years and in all that time he had been called upon to try but one case, a disorderly, resulting from intoxication, and he then imposed a fine of a dollar. As no marriages came his way this comprises his entire official service for the twenty-one years.

Slit Skirts, Then Slit Ears.

Recent dispatches from the French capital say that some of the gilded youth of Paris who have become jealous of the success of the slit skirts worn by women have now decided that it is the ultra fashion for men to slit their ears so that they can wear small gold rings like those worn by gypsies. The jewelers of the Rue de la Paix have been equal to the occasion and have laid in a large stock of the rings.

DANCE AT SQUANTUM

Annexation Debate Is Postponed Until Next Week

Miss Mary Loughan gave a dance at her home on Bellevue avenue Saturday night for the benefit of the Squantum Women's club. The affair was a very enjoyable one and Miss Loughan proved a delightful hostess.

Music was furnished by the Postal Clerk's orchestra. About 20 couples attended. Among those present were:—Miss Mary Hodgkinson, Miss Louise Flanagan. Mrs. M. Moran, Mrs. L. Russell, Mrs. Hiram A. Morse, Mrs. T. F. Callahan, Miss Ethel Morse, Miss Mary Loughan, Miss Helen Loughan, Miss Nan Loughan, Miss Margaret Allen, Miss Anne Allen, Miss Mildred Hersey, Matthew Callahan, Frank Travers, John Jepson, Jr., Russell Rich, Harry Tobin, Miss Thelma Holt, Miss Josephine Hall of Auburndale, Miss May Gavin of Woburn, D. The regular meeting of the Squantum Improvement association for this week has been postponed for one week owing to the fact that it comes on the night of the State primaries and that it was impossible for speakers from the Quincy Board of Trade to attend the meeting if it was held this week. President Hamilton is to head a strong delegation which will attend the meeting on Tuesday night, Sept. 30, to speak in opposition to Squantum being annexed to Boston. The matter will be the special discussion of the meeting and speakers from Quincy and Boston have been secured to present both sides of the argument. Squantum residents hope to get much enlightenment upon the situation through this meeting and a large crowd will attend.

SOUTH STATION LEADS.

Saturday the figures in regard to the number of passengers handled by the three great railroad terminals of the country were revised somewhat, and the revision places the South Station, Boston, in the lead of the North Station by quite a good margin. When the figures of the number of passengers handled at the South Station were given out last week the number handled by the N. Y., N. H. & H. R. R. only were given. Since then the number of passengers handled by the Boston & Albany, or New York Central have been added and these place the South Station considerably in the lead The Boston & Albany figures show that 10,064,108 passengers are handled annually, which places the grand total of the South Station, Boston, at 38,411,507 which is 8,900,632 more than the North Station and 16,008,212 more than the Grand Central Station, New York.

IF FURNITURE COULD TALK.

If furniture could only talk there would be a sorry time for some housekeepers.

Why are there so many homes which make us feel as if we would like to make quick exit from them, as the conglomerated mixture of carpets, furniture and pictures give an actual pain to contemplate and we sit in silent amazement at such atrocious taste.

"It is easy enough," say some people, "to have artistic surroundings if you have the money to pay for them." In a certain sense this is true, but a full purse does not always guarantee good taste, which is in fact nothing more than having a well-developed sense of the suitability of things in connection with each other.

A piece of furniture in itself may be charming, but in the room in which you have to place it it can be a positive fright. To buy such a piece just because you have taken a fancy to it is very foolish, just as foolish as for a man to marry a woman for her good looks, with no regard to other qualities she may or may not possess. Not only must you live with that purchase, but so must everything else in the room, regardless of whether they harmonize or not.

The secret of good furnishing is not only the question, "do I like it?" but "Will it agree or harmonize with the rest of the furniture where it is to be placed?"

There is more Catarrh in this section of the country than all other diseases put together, and until the last few years was supposed to be incurable. For a great many years doctors pronounced it a local disease and prescribed local remedies, and by constantly failing to cure local treatment, pronounced it incurable. Science has proven catarrh to be a constitutional disease and therefore requires constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, Ohio, is the only constitutional cure on the market. It is taken internally in doses from 10 drops to a teaspoonful. It acts directly on the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. They offer one hundred dollars for any case it fails to cure. Send for circulars and testimonials.

QUINCY'S YOUNGEST OLD MAN

Preston P. Kittredge Now 90 Years of Age

An Interesting Interview

Preston Pollard Kittredge, the youngest old man south of Boston, passed his 90th birthday at his home, 425 Washington street on Monday. Assisting him in the observance was his wife, who is 84 years old. Both enjoy good health, and Mr. Kittredge's physical condition is best realized when it is known that he has not missed more than ten Saturday trips to Boston in 50 years. He is a vigorous old man, has an active mind and a wonderful grasp on current events.

Mr. Kittredge has been here 67 years, coming from Billerica, his native town in 1846. And as a keepsake of his coming he has a buggy in his barn which has withstood the strain of 12,000 miles of country roads and wore out seven sets of steel tires doing it.

As Mr. Kittredge, best expresses it, he went into the hog business and then went out of it, traveled about six months by cars and didn't see anything so he bought a horse and drove everywhere. On coming to Quincy his first dinner was eaten in the present home of Charles H. Johnson then the Hodges homestead.

It was only a short time after that he married, and the ceremony was performed in 1852 by Parson William Lunt of the First Parish Church. Mr. and Mrs. Kittredge are the parents of Henry P. Kittredge, the City Square news dealer; Edward Kittredge, who is in the farming business; and the late Mrs. Elizabeth Drake who died last spring.

Today, Mr. Kittredge, as the result of thrift and energy, considers himself a wealthy man. He has enjoyed life, he says. He worked 13 hours a day for 40 years and says he is sorry that he didn't work 20.

He tells the story of his first adventure in business with a gusto, and how a severe sickness cost him his business and left him but 70 cents and he reminds you that he has never been without 70 cents since then. He owned 20 acres of land in Quincy Point on which he did his farming.

It was here that he housed 1500 hogs on the average, all good stock, and did an active business. Mr. Kittredge recalls the fluctuating market up and down, but it is higher now than ever. The man who raises hogs today however, will never make money, because grain is too high.

Sheep is the money maker according to Mr. Kittredge, and given $100 and a farm in Maine he feels that he could be worth $6000 in six years. He maintains that as long as we live we need wool for clothes and mutton and lamb is always good eating. He spoke of the scarcity of cattle on a trip to New Hampshire a month ago. He says that barns are filled with hay but nothing to eat it.

Abandoned farms, suggested by the reporter brought a fund of information, and Mr. Kittredge said that more would be abandoned this year than ever. Many men come down here to battle with fortune and hardly save enough to return on a visit.

But the taxes go on, and we live in a heavily burdened city, in a county teeming with debt, which is in Massachusetts with its large state debt, and unless we hold our horses somehow it will be a disgrace to pass liabilities of such size down to our children.

And taxes naturally opened up politics, and for about 15 minutes national, state and city issues were discussed comprehensively. Republican, I suppose, brought the answer, "Well, sir, I was a Democrat twice, and joined the Know Nothing movement for a few weeks. They held their meetings in Keating's hall and had passwords, etc., and after missing a couple I forgot my password. I walked before the entrance to the meeting room trying to recall it, and after a half hours trodding up and down, I trodded down stairs and never went back. Oh, yes, I have been a Whig."

Two political parties are enough and the Progressives might just as well shut up shop. There never should be but two parties. A man can either be right or wrong. Mr. Kittredge is not going to the primaries today, and said that he would mark his approval or disapproval of the candidates on election day.

He never joined any secret societies but knows many of their members. His rule of life is summed up briefly: "In business a man cheated me but once, I never did business with him after that. I kept my accounts in good order, can tell today what Fannie, my mare cost to keep thirty years ago, and have always paid cash. I have tried to live honestly, and I believe I have done so, because I owe no one, and have many friends."

Mr. Kittredge enjoys himself every minute and heartily laughed at some of the anecdotes related in connection with his life story. His eyesight is strong for a man of his age and his teeth are in better condition than many a young man's today. He is frequently seen in City Square and delights in talking farming, a subject he technically understands, with many of his long time friends.

The City Council Committee on Licenses will meet this week to clean up the business which has been referred to them.

REDUCTION OF CITY DEBT

Nearly $100,000 Less Than Jan. 1

May Be Further Reduced

The net debt of Quincy Oct. 1, 1913, will be $2,100,645.00, which is a reduction of $95,251.46 since the first of January. The following debt statement of City Auditor Fairbanks, for Oct. 1, shows how the debt has been decreased:

	Jan. 1, 1913	Paid.	Issued	Debt
City debt	$711,496	$133,576	$53,625	$631,545
Park	22,000	2,000		20,000
Street Imp.	78,400	7,300		71,100
Water	709,500	52,500	50,000	707,000
Sewer	623,500	28,500	40,000	635,000
Refunding	150,0000	15,000		135,000
	$2,294,896	$238,876	$143,625	$2,100,645

It will be seen that the reduction is largely in the city debt, which of itself is $79,951.46 smaller. There has been no new debt this year for parks, street improvement special, or for refunding debt, so that payments on these three items have reduced the debt $24,300.00. The water debt is practically the same while the sewer debt is larger.

On Jan. 1, 1913, the maturing debt of 1913 amounted to $273,476, divided as follows:

City debt,	$162,676
Parks	2,000
Street improvement	7,300
Water	57,500
Sewer	29,000
Refunding	15,000
Total	$273,476

The difference between $273,476 and $238,876, shows that there is an opportunity to further reduce the debt $34,600 in 1913. Of course this will not be possible if any new loans are created for any purpose. There seems a determined effort on the part of the Mayor and City Council not to create any further new debt this year. A new rule of the City Council makes it impossible to borrow for steel loans after this date, and it is for streets that many of the loans are usually made. If there is a substantial decrease in the debt of the city, the high tax rate may be excused.

City Auditor Fairbanks also presents the following figures for Oct. 1, showing the debt limit, the margin having increased to $216,459 from $136,508 on Jan. 1 last:

VALUATION FIGURES.

1910, net valuation	$32,192,905
1911, net valuation	34,347,845
1912, net valuation	35,219,786
Total, three years,	$101,760,536
Average three years	33,920,174

DEBT LIMIT.

2 1-2 per cent of average	$848,004
Debt. Jan. 1, 1913	711,496
Margin Jan. 1, 1913	136,508
Bonds matured to Oct. 1, 1913	133,576
	$270,084
Bonds issued 1913	53,625
Borrowing margin Oct. 1, 1913	$216,459

The targets were 10 feet wide and were towed by the tender Tonopah. Both torpedoes were discharged while running at full speed. The report of the practice was furnished from official sources.

SPECIAL OF COUNCIL.

Mayor Stone is preparing a call for a special meeting of the City Council to be held next Monday evening. Aside from drawing jurors, the polling places for the State election will be designated, the state election called, and possibly the polling places for the municipal caucuses may be named at this time.

EDWARD S. HATHAWAY.

Edward S. Hathaway of 12 Walter street, Hyde Park, well known in banking circles of Boston and formerly treasurer of the town of Hyde Park, died Sunday at his home after an illness of five years. Mr. Hathaway was for 20 years paying teller of the Eagle National Bank, for a great many years cashier for the Massachusetts Loan and Trust Company, and for some time employed in the National Bank of Redemption. He was one of the oldest members of the Bank Officers' Association of this city, and up to the time of his death was vice-president of the Hyde Park Historical Society. Under Hyde Park town government he served as a member of the school committee, a library trustee and town treasurer.

In 1885 he published the Hyde Park Times, a weekly paper still in operation and at present known as the Gazette-Times.

Mr. Hathaway was born Nov. 20, 1843, in New Bedford, and Nov. 26, 1866, was married to Miss Henrietta Dutton at Hillsboro, N. H. He resided at 12 Walter street, Hyde Park for 43 years. He is survived by his widow, two sons, Charles E. Hathaway of Wollaston and Robert T. of West Roxbury, two grandchildren and a brother.

POLLS OPENED AT 12

State Primaries of All Parties

Very Slight Vote At 2 P. M.

The polls for the State primaries opened at 12 o'clock today, and the indications are that here in Quincy they will not be largely attended. There are some local contests that should bring out a good vote, but for all that interest seems to be lacking, except possibly in Wollaston. Here the Progressives are strong but there are many voters of this faith who have neglected to change their party preference with the result that if they vote today it must be the Republican or Democratic ballot, according as they are registered.

During the past few weeks of registration, a large part of the registration has been from Wollaston and Atlantic, and a majority of these have been progressive.

Wollaston and Atlantic however promise to give Langelier strong support in his candidacy for the nomination for Senator and it is doubtful if Thomas has a very strong following there. What Thomas loses there however he will gain in Wards One, Two and Three where he has put in a large amount of work, and no one wants to offer any prediction as to the result of this contest in Quincy.

It is reported that Weymouth will give Thomas a majority of 200 over .

Whatever man doubted that woman had courage has had his doubts by the recent developments in clothes.

Now comes a scientist who says that baldness is due to cutting the hair. He must have a grudge against barbers.

Spanking Mexico to punish Huerta is not a job to Uncle's liking, and he is wisely trying to find some way to avoid it.

Japan's act of friendliness in refusing officially to receive Gen. Felix Diaz did not inspire the domestic yellow perils to get out extras.

As importing meat from South America makes it necessary for the trust to buy up that continent, the time seems ripe for another advance in price of beef.

An Ohio man claims to have produced an ordorless onion. How then will your friends know what a good dinner you have had?

Mrs. Carrie Chapman Catt has started a school for suffrage workers in New York, but it is denied that accurate stone throwing is to be taught.

If the students are to make a worthy return for all the sacrifices of the fathers by which education was established, they must see to it that the football team is a winner.

There is a scarcity of applicants for the army aeroplane squad, but the automobile division will furnish plenty of opportunity for martyrs on the altar of patriotism.

That New York assembly was not quite sure of the procedure, but it knew what it "was told to do" to Gov. Sulzer.

The New Orleans Picayune asks why some women will begin a letter on the first page, then skip to the third, then back to the second, and then on to the fourth. A plausible theory is that they do it because is takes longer to read the letter.

HOW ONE BUILDER SEES IT.

A building contractor, noting the children setting out for their first week of school the other day, complained of the lack of practical education. He noted the general scarcity and high prices of labor in the building trades, while school work contains little to give young men a start in those directions. If the high school graduate can be said to be trained for anything, it is to be a clerk, bookkeeper, or office worker.

He remarked that the cities that put in manual training just trifle with the idea. With a very few hours a week at tools, money is wasted, and little accomplished.

There is a great need of highly skilled men in manual trades and factory processes. The average mason, carpenter, and plumber makes more money than the average book-keeper. The schools should be finding a group of men capable of this higher skill, and giving them a better start.

VISITING SCHOOL.

Formerly if a parent visited school, a tremor of awe and embarrassment swept around. The unfortunate offspring of the venturesome parent was pestered at recess, for his mother's unwillingness to let him out of her sight.

The parental visit to the school room is a little more common nowadays. It is admitted to be the correct thing to do. But as a whole the parents are more interested in inspecting the waists and shoes the children are buying than the interior furnishing with which their heads are being stocked.

Most parents can't seem to give the children much help on their books now. Or if they try it, the children say they are "mixed up" by old-time terms and processes.

Nevertheless, the parent ought to be more than a passive factor. Better look around at the schoolhouse, and see how the kidlets are doing. There may not be any more nouns and verbs like you were taught. But you should be able to form some idea of where they are failing. Then talk it over with the teacher.

Won Their Pardons.

From the time of the story of Damon and Pythias various reasons for temporary release from jail have been given. It is related that in the Napoleonic era a soldier confined in a military prison for a minor offense against the service during a brief time of peace was released in order that he might be present at the christening of his infant son, born during his imprisonment. But Napoleon, in order to test the intensity of the man's desire, made him agree to serve a year longer for the privilege of a three day furlough. The soldier gladly did it and when he returned found a pardon and a corporal's warrant for his infant son, to be valid when the son had "served with credit six months in the emperor's army of the future." Frederick the Great released an audacious captain under sentence of death so that the captain might "tell him a few beneficial things about himself." The things told face to face influenced the great king to pardon the blunt death defying soldier.—New York Sun.

Beecher Found Them.

Henry Ward Beecher used to visit his old friends once a year for many years, but in the latter part of his life he was not able to do this. In his very last year, however, he was able to spend a day in Indianapolis and went round the place. That evening he was received by the ministers, and the chairman in welcoming him said:

"Doubtless you find few of your old friends here in Indianapolis after so many years of absence, but we who are here welcome you just as warmly."

Mr. Beecher in reply said:

"Your chairman has said that I have found few of my old friends here in the city. It is true. I found only Mr. —, Mr. — and Mr. —" (naming four or five of the old men of the city). "But this afternoon we drove out to Cedar Hill" (the cemetery), "and I found them. They are all there, sleeping just as peacefully as they used to do under my sermons."

Speed of Animals.

According to the naturalists, no animal is known to have exceeded the speed attained by the famous race horse Sysonby. Instantaneous photographs show the full length of one complete stride of about twenty-six feet. In the stride of the fastest racers the hind quarters and limbs are raised considerably higher than the shoulders and from this relatively great height is brought downward and forward, widely separating from each other, as a sportsman says, "to avoid striking the fore legs." The hare which is hunted with fast dogs has not in reality the speed of the dog. The dog, on the other hand, does not attain the speed of the horse. The giraffe is said to run at the rate of fifteen yards per second under the most favorable conditions. The elephant, going at a rate of two yards a second, carries a weight approximating that carried by six horses.

Perpetual Silence.

A curious mourning custom obtains among central Australians, who, although representing perhaps the lowest and most degraded type of human beings, have managed to evolve a most complex system of rites and ceremonies which governs almost every action of their lives. When a husband dies the widow paints herself all over with white pigment and for the space of a year must not exhibit herself to a male member of the tribe on pain of death. For the rest of her life, unless she marries again, which is sometimes allowed, she must not speak, but communicate with the other women by means of a sign language, consisting of movements of the hands and fingers, which has been developed by these savages to a marvelous extent and by which their limited stock of ideas can be fully expressed.

Fancy Mice.

That the rearing of fancy mice can be made not merely an interesting hobby, but also a source of substantial profit, is illustrated by the experience of a Scarborough (England) man, hundreds of whose tiny pets find their way annually into the hands of the British admiralty. Tame mice are required principally for use in submarines. They are exceedingly prone to suffocation. The Scarborough fancier, Mr. Beanland, illustrated this by covering the palm of his hand with ordinary liquid paint and placing a tame mouse on it. The tiny creature was at once overcome by the smell of the paint and suffocated in an incredibly short time.

Byron's Habits.

While Byron was in Ravenna, Italy, he adopted strange habits. It was his custom to rise at 2 in the afternoon, breakfast and ride and dine at 6. Then he would sit and talk until 5 or 6 in the morning, or, if no company were there, he would write a bit of "Don Juan." But his life was like that of Aubrey Beardsley—upside down—the day was the night.

In Training.

"Have you been to sea in the last six or eight years?"

"Not exactly," replied the mariner, "but I'm not out of practice. Every evening I go to the club and spend hours in a rocking chair whose motion has given many men seasickness."—Washington Star.

Eugenics.

The self made man was speaking. He said: "My father was a raiser of hogs. There was a large family of us." And then his voice was drowned by the applause.—Life.

We can do what we ought to do, and when we say we cannot, why, we simply will not.

PRIMARY DAY IN BAY STATE

Size of Vote Exceedingly Difficult to Forecast

STRENGTH OF PROGRESSIVES

Promises to Draw Largely From Republicans, Though It Has Made Inroads Upon Democrats—Gardner-Benton Contest the Storm Centre on the Republican Side

Boston, Sept. 23.—Massachusetts voters will, in today's state-wide primaries, nominate candidates for state officers, including a governor, a lieutenant governor, a secretary of the commonwealth, a treasurer and receiver general, an auditor of the commonwealth and an attorney general; eight executive councillors, forty senators and 240 representatives, all to be voted for at the state election to be held on Nov. 4.

Anybody who has not filed nomination papers with the office of the secretary of the commonwealth and who may decide to ask for the suffrage of the people on Nov. 4, must run as an independent, on nomination papers. Certificates of nomination for office to be filled by all the voters of the state must be filed not later than 5 p. m. on Oct. 6, and the nomination papers themselves must be filed not later than the same hour on Oct. 13. The corresponding date for certificates and papers for all other offices to be filled at the state election is 5 p. m., Oct. 16.

The acute problem is the size of today's vote. Over it, the practical politicians of all parties are at sea. General Apathy has, so far as surface indications are concerned, been in command all along the line, except where there are sharp local contests for senators and representatives, which will have a tendency to bring the voters to the polls.

So mixed is the situation, because of the birth of the Progressive party, and other conditions, that comparison with the votes of former years has but little value.

The entrance of the Progressive party makes this especially true. In the first place, there is no contest for state offices on that party's ticket.

The Progressives have drawn more heavily from the Republicans than they have from the Democrats, although they have made no inconsiderable inroads upon the last-named party. Just how many of them will follow their leaders' advice and refrain from voting in today's primaries (their first opportunity to vote as "Progressives" in primaries, they having become a legal "political party" at last year's election) is problematical.

This tends to add to the difficulty of estimating the size of today's Republican vote for the gubernatorial nomination. Some usually shrewd Republican politicians fear that it may drop from 96,000 last year to anywhere between 60,000 and 75,000.

Inasmuch as there is no contest for first place on the Democratic ticket, that between Barry and Long for second place and the Mansfield-St. Coeur battle for state treasurer and the local fights must be relied on to bring out the Democratic vote.

The Gardner-Benton contest for the gubernatorial nomination is the storm-centre on the Republican side. The eyes of the politicians of all parties are fixed on it. Nine out of ten of them will say, if you ask them to predict the outcome: "It all depends on the size of the primaries. If there is a heavy vote Gardner will win. If it is a light vote, Benton's chances are better."

Most of the injured were mill employes. The crash occurred on a curve not far from the station. The steel cars buckled, but did not telescope.

A HAIR-RAISING FEAT

Pegoud Once More Tempts Death by Looping the Loop

Paris, Sept. 23.—Pegoud, the airman who recently performed the astonishing feat of flying upside down, went even further at Buc by "looping the loop"—that is, completing a perfect upright circle in the air.

With the same offhand manner that he showed in his former achievements, the airman climbed into his monoplane and quickly rose to a height of 2500 feet. Then he began a headlong fall toward the earth. He fell thus about 1000 feet.

Then, as before, he turned the machine on its back and planed away upside down, but this time instead of righting himself directly from this position, he allowed the impetus of the descent of 1000 feet to carry him on and up again toward the sky.

Still in an inverted position, on he went until for one moment the monoplane was upright in the air, standing on its tail. The momentum of the machine took him on in safety until, a fraction of a second later, he was right side up again on the top of the aerial circle.

GOES DOWN ON SHOALS

Fisherman Saves Twelve Lives as Five-Masted Vessel Is Wrecked

Edgartown, Mass., Sept. 23.—A five-masted schooner, Marcus L. Urann, bound for Boston from Norfolk, with 3042 tons of coal, struck the tail of the reef southeast of Martha's Vineyard and foundered in the shallow water, with a strong wind tossing it about.

Captain Jackson of the fishing boat Priscilla rescued the ten men and two women that were aboard the schooner. The boat used by Jackson was bought with money given him by the Carnegie Hero commission.

The quick rescue of the men and women aboard the doomed schooner was effected none too soon, for, when the fishing boat left the scene, the sea was washing over the schooner.

Captain Jackson saved fifteen from drowning when the Mertie B. Crowley struck the same reef three years ago.

This is the third vessel belonging to the Crowley company of Boston that has been wrecked on this reef in the past ten years.

GARRISON ORDERS PHILIPPINES PROBE

Charges of Slavery Will Be Investigated by Harrison

Washington, Sept. 23.—An investigation of the Philippine slavery charges filed with the war department by Dean Worcester, secretary of the interior of the Philippines, and Auditor Phipps, was ordered by Secretary of War Garrison.

Garrison instructed Governor General Harrison to inquire into the alleged conditions throughout the islands as soon as he reaches Manila.

The administration will get a formal opinion from the attorney general of the Philippines on the sufficiency of existing laws for punishment of slavery, and prosecutions of offenders are expected.

WHITE SLAVE TRAFFIC WAR

Boston Officials to Begin Energetic Campaign at Once

Boston, Sept. 23.—An active, determined and persistent campaign is to begin at once to prosecute all persons identified with the white slave traffic in Suffolk county. The campaigners will be the state state white slave commission, Police Commissioner O'Meara and District Attorney Pelletier.

That there is a concert of these powers to the end that white slavery in this community may be ended is the opinion of those close to the commission and the county prosecutor's office. It is the general impression that wholesale prosecutions of persons identified with the white slave traffic will be made.

SAYS HE WANTED TO DIE

Wolfsohn Thought Confession of Murder the Easiest Way

Philadelphia, Sept. 23.—Repudiating his statements made to the police, Jacob Wolfsohn denied he was guilty of the murder of Anna C. Schumacher in the cemetery at Rochester, N. Y., four years ago.

When closely questioned by District Attorney Barrett of Rochester, Wolfsohn declared he had confessed to the murder because he wanted to die and could not bring himself to commit suicide.

Barrett will endeavor to find Wolfsohn's former wife in New York city to learn whether he had ever made a confession of the crime to her.

ELOPERS ARE FORGIVEN

Miss Irene Williams Bride of Martin Anderson

Instead of going to a party in Braintree Saturday night, Miss Irene Williams, class of 1913, Woodward Institute and Martin Anderson of 112 Cranch street, eloped to Dorchester where they were married by Rev. Frank E. Broman. No thought was given to the absence from home of Miss Williams, as her parents supposed she was spending the night with a girl friend.

After retiring Sunday evening the bell summoned Mr. Williams to the door of his home where he learned the news from the newly weds. He called Mrs. Williams, and when both recovered from the surprise, promptly forgave the elopers. Mr. Anderson had called at his home before going to the home of his bride's parents and there received the kind wishes of his parents and members of the family.

Miss Williams is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Albert J. Williams of 90 Liberty street, and Mr. Anderson is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Andrew Y. Anderson of 112 Cranch street. He is treasurer of the Junior Order of Mozse and a prominent and active member in the Manet Social Club. His bride is a popular South Quincy young lady.

The elopement could properly be called a romance in Moose Circles, since the couple met each other at a Moose social. Mr. Williams is past dictator of the Quincy lodge and is governor of the Junior Order, while Mrs. Williams is worthy matron of the Women's circle and Miss Williams is an active member.

Mr. Anderson is a joiner by trade and is employed at the Fore River yards.

WOLLASTON UNITARIAN.

In spite of the rain a good congregation attended the Sunday morning service of worship and heard the kind of sermon that feeds the inner life from the text "Be still and know that I am God." Psalm 46:10.

Rev. Carl G. Horst emphasized the need of the quiet hour, of being still, in this busy, noisy, funny, bustling age and land of ours. Our age is given to palpitation, rather than meditation, to work rather than prayer. But activity can never sustain itself. In order to give out we must take in. A stream that does not have a constant fresh supply of water soon dries up. Knowledge comes through quietness.

The greatest knowledge we can attain is the knowledge of self. Our educators are waking up to the fact that we are teaching our young people everything excepting knowledge about themselves. This knowledge ought to be imparted at the mother's and the father's knee, but there are too many parents who seem to lack both time and inclination to give this information and so we must ask the public schools to take upon themselves the additional burden of teaching boys and girls all about themselves.

In society we may learn to be good-natured and amiable, but in the quiet hour alone can we attain thoughts and convictions, that are a veritable anchor to keep our ship of life from going to pieces on the rocks. In the quiet hour we become most conscious of God's presence in the world and in our own lives. We may learn about God in books, but Knowing God is a religious experience. Knowledge of God comes from heart repose rather than from any effort of the mind. The best things in life come to us, not so much by the paths of work or knowledge, as by the way of faith. We find the secret of life not by how much we know or do, but by how much we trust and love. When we realize God's presence in our lives, then comes to us that divine peace which passeth human understanding.

The sessions of the Kindergarten class and the Sunday school will be resumed Sunday, Oct. 5.

All engagements of the vestry for religious or social services must be made through Mr. Arthur Rolin, corner of Winthrop and Beale streets.

The latest arrival in our parish is a little daughter to gladden the home of Mr. and Mrs. Clayton Wyand (nee Kate Simmons) of South Central avenue.

The new cushions for the church auditorium greatly improve the general appearance of the sanctuary.

If we lose our quiet Sunday, then it will be only a question of time when our nation will go to destruction. The lack of reverence for things sacred is the great cause of lack of respect for law and authority.

SUBURBAN LIFE.

Now that the hot summer weather is over and the days are getting shorter and cooler, one's thoughts naturally turn to the inside of the house and what can be done to make it more comfortable. Suburban Life—The Country Side Magazine for October is full of just the things most folks are interested in at this season. The titles of the following articles about the interior of the house explain themselves: "The Library—Its Arrangement and Furnishings," "The Problem of the Modern Radiator," "Wall Coverings That Are Shown for This Season," "Some of the Best Things I've Seen in Other Women's Houses," "Hardwood Floors—Their Varying Cost and Right Finish" and "The Economy of Built-in Furniture." In this issue also Harold J. Howland, Contributing Editor, has another frank up-to-date talk on a question which is troubling not a few "What Shall We Do with the Turkey Trot?" The answer is very simple according to Mr. Howland's solution. "The Modern Stable and Its Furnishings," "A Countryside House of Stucco," "Bulbs to Plant in the Open and Indoors," "Fres water Pearl Fishing," "An Autumn Nosegay" and "The School Doctor" are all articles of especial interest to the man and woman of the countryside.

She Wooed Him

By F. A. MITCHEL

IN the Ukraine, Russia, the woman does all the courting When she falls in love with a man she goes to his house and informs him of the state of her feelings. If he reciprocates, all is well, and the formal marriage is duly arranged. If, however, he is unwilling, she remains there, hoping to coax him to a better mind. The poor fellow cannot treat her with the least discourtesy, nor has he the consolation of being able to turn her out, as her friends in such a case would feel bound to avenge the insult. His remedy, therefore, if determined not to marry her, is to leave his home and stay away as long as she is in it.

One day Peter Komienzoff, a bachelor, living in the Ukraine with his mother, while doing some work about his little place, heard a light step, looked up, and there before him stood Anna Avienieff, blushing and with her eyes cast down to the ground.

"What brings you to our cottage, Anna Avienieff?" asked Peter, knowing very well what brought her there.

"I have come, Peter, to make you a proposition."

"I am busy today, Anna, and have no time to listen to your proposition."

"I will wait until you are at leisure."

She went into the house, and, being met by Peter's mother, the old woman asked her what she wanted.

"To help you with your work. You are not so strong as you were formerly and need assistance."

"On the contrary, I am in better health than for many years. I don't need any one to help me."

Anna did not appear to mind a rebuff from the woman, though when Peter had shown that he was disposed to get rid of her she shivered a little. She began to sweep. The old woman, knowing the customs of the country and understanding that the girl had come to marry her son and that she must not be treated with discourtesy, permitted her to sweep on, while she herself attended to some baking for supper.

At supper time Peter came in. He spoke to Anna and at the table was careful to serve her from every dish. After supper he went to his room, where he spent some time, and when he came out he carried a leather bag.

"I am sorry, Anna, to have to leave you, but I must go away for awhile. My mother will be glad to have you with her during my absence. Goodby, mother. Be good to Anna."

Anna colored, but made no comment on this action, which she knew was intended to get rid of her. Peter put out his hand, saying goodby; but, pretending she did not see it, she turned and went into another room. Then Peter went away.

The customs of Ukraine may be different from other places, but the feminine constitution is the same everywhere. Anna Avienieff did not relish the rejection of her suit, but she made no complaint. She had one strong point in her favor in having possession of the premises, and possession is said to be nine points of the law. She stayed right where she was, and the next morning when Peter's mother arose to do her chores and get the breakfast she found them all done and the breakfast ready.

The old woman was wroth with the girl for usurping her work, but dared not tell her so, fearing that Anna's brothers would hold Peter accountable. Anna did most of the work during that day, and the old woman, having little to do, sat by the fireplace and dozed. This continued every day for a month, Peter's mother gradually sinking into an easy life.

On the morning of the thirty-first day after Peter's departure his mother awoke and did not hear the sound of preparation to which she had grown accustomed. Neither did Anna come into her room with a basin of water for her, as usual. The house was perfectly still. The old woman got up and looked in the kitchen. No one was there. The fire had gone out. She went to Anna's room and looked in. Anna was not there.

There was nothing for it but to get her own breakfast and do the usual cleaning. Besides, it was wash day, and the laundering must be done. During the day she sent for Peter, and when he came home for supper he found his mother tired out.

The next morning Peter got up early and did the chores. He did not know how to cook, so he was obliged to let his mother cook the breakfast. During the day the old woman tried to do the work, but she had become used to dozing before the fire. Besides, she missed the hum of the little working bee. The house was permitted to get dirty, and things that the old woman had before kept in repair were wearing out. Peter found that his mother so disliked to get up in the early morning that he learned to cook the breakfast himself. But he did not like doing so and liked the breakfasts he cooked still less.

One morning who should come up the walk but Anna. Peter, radiantly happy, went to meet her. Leading her in, his old mother put her arms around the girl's neck.

And then and there a marriage was arranged to take place soon, but not too soon for Peter.

WHEAT AND OTHER GRAINS IN NEW ENGLAND.

Every now and then some man somewhere in New England begins to do that which had been open to anybody to do any time these ten, twenty or even fifty years. And he is acclaimed a shrewd and brave man. He had done the obvious! It is thus that reputations are made. Smith is reported to have restored the big apple orchard his father planted 40 years ago. Smith had neglected that orchard for fifteen years, and had got along without the money it is now bringing him, every year. He knew all the time that the orchard was there, he knew it was not paying him enough to furnish the barrels to hold the inferior apples it grew; and he knew that there were processes that would make the trees bear good fruit, and make his bank account grow also. But this knowledge was stored in Smith's sub-conscious mind. What brought it to the surface, into his conscious mind; and what made him, all of a sudden, go and trim those trees, mend the holes in some of them, plow and fertilize the land, and spray them as they began to show swelling buds?

If we could know what made Smith do these things, when he had for years known that he could, and should, do them, we would know what it was that persuaded some other New England men to go about the business of raising wheat. They had known that wheat would grow well in New England. All had known that almost from the time of the Pilgrim Fathers. Yet of late we have all been buffaloed with the notion that wheat will only grow in the West, and when we learned, through the western papers, that out in Iowa, or Illinois, or Indiana, or Minnesota, or Wisconsin, or the Dakotas, some man had raised a crop of wheat averaging 30 or 40 bushels to the acre, we have raised our hands in wonder and amazement. Fifteen bushels is a fair average yield out there—we knew that, too. But 30 or 40 bushels—good Lord, what a place for raising crops that West is, to be sure! Wish we had gone out there when farms cost nothing but the living on them.

Up in Somerset county, Maine, there is a man who woke up, a couple of years ago, and wondered if he could not raise some wheat and turn it into money some better way than by selling it to grain dealers. He believed he could, and he planted six acres. He got a fine crop, and he sold it in the form of fresh eggs. His hens saved him the necessity of threshing and made it easier for him to market his new-laid eggs than it would have been to sell the wheat. Dollar wheat is a pretty good proposition, to sell threshed and bagged. But if it need not be threshed or bagged, nor hauled to market, why is it not a much better proposition? This is why it is so profitable to raise wheat in New England, and corn and other grains—that they need not be marketed in their crude or natural state, but may be condensed into pork, beef, poultry and eggs, and another profit made on them.

Winter and spring wheat grow luxuriously throughout New England. We can, and do, raise twice or three times the Western average per acre. A man in western Massachusetts raised 417 bushels of wheat on about 10 acres, and sold it right at home for $2.50 per bushel. It was good wheat, fit for seed, and that is why he got the top price. He got, as will be seen, $104 an acre for that crop. Suppose he got but $1.25 for his wheat, to be ground into flour of some kind, as he easily could—he would even then have got $52 an acre for the crop, which is pretty good, too. This man sold his straw for $150 which brought his gross return for the 10 acres up to about $1200. A Massachusetts man got 3,250 bushels of oats off of 65 acres, worth to sell $1,625. Not as profitable as the wheat, though giving a pretty good return for oat land, which is not, it is to be remembered, the same as Arlington truck-garden land.

These cereal crops are not difficult for the ordinary farmer to handle. They go in early, and all the work is done by machinery. They are harvested after the hay crop is in and before the corn, potatoes, or other vegetables come on. They often serve to prepare the land for grass ,or other crops. The man who got the big crop of valuable wheat put in grass seed with the wheat, so that he did not have to go over the field to seed it for grass, making an added saving which should be added to the wheat profit.

Buckwheat is a good crop for New England land. It should yield about 40 bushels to the acre and generally brings around 75 cents per bushel a return of $30 per acre, for the very ordinary land that that grain needs. It also enriches the land, and thereby adds to its profit. There is a better market for buckwheat every year, the demand being larger than the supply. Rye and barley are both good New England crops, and there are many records of good business done by farmers with them. They are staples, and the public taste in breadstuffs is all the time turning more and more toward them.

The business economy involved in raising grain in New England turns largely upon the question of disposition. If the grains are to be sold in the open market, it is probably true that the New England farmer would do better to consider other uses for his land, even if he can raise nearly the maximum crops. It is more a question of methods of handling the crops. If the farmer knew that he could haul all the wheat he might raise to a near-by market town, as they do in the West, there would be little but adaptability of land and the farmers' plans to consider. But the problem is not here as simple as that. There is not a grain elevator in every town. There are only a very few in the entire New England region, and those are for the purpose of handling the western product that has to be distributed tothe cities and towns. The farmer meets the same embarrassment when he thinks of wheat as a market crop as he does when he considers the raising of beef. He can grow wheat, and he can raise beef, but what can he do with either?

So the grain question in New England is one of disposition. And it is evident that the grain must be transformed into something that the market will more readily absorb. The man who fed his wheat to his hens solved the problem for himself but in a manner that offers no sure guide for others; at least not for many others. If we were to raise all the wheat all the hens we could keep could eat, we would not be raising such a great quantity. We can, to be sure, raise a hundred fold more hens than we do, with profit, and we should, but even then we would not be providing an outlet for a great wheat crop. But there is another source of consumption that bids fair to make a market for native-grown wheat and rye, as well as oats and buckwheat to a lesser extent.

People are demanding whole-wheat flour that has all of the kernel of the grain in it. The whole-wheat flour of the market is not whole-wheat flour at all. It is what our food specialists call "denatured" wheat; that is, the germ of the wheat berry is removed in the process of milling, in order to ensure that the flour will not mould or become wormy. But this germ contains certain chemicals which are, we are told, essential to us in the way of bone and tooth formation. That we do not get this chemical matter from the flour of commerce is a very serious matter, the experts tell us, and accounts for our poor teeth and many other ills that are collateral heirs of the flour that has been "denatured." It is evident that if we are to have this health-giving flour it must be manufactured near to the demand, and in relatively small quantities. The flour of commerce is so made that it will keep for unlimited periods, under good conditions, but at the expense of the bones and teeth of our children. So if we are to have just the right kind of wheat flour, it must be made in small mills located near to the consumers, and made continuously so that it may be delivered and eaten before the germs develop and spoil the flour, or attract the worms which will in their way spoil it.

Here is, it seems to me, the promise for the wheat and rye raisers of New England. It involves more than the farmers,but the call for pure food is becoming so strenuous, and so insistent, that we may be permitted to hope that the day when it will be produced in small mills all over New England is not so very far distant.—George French.

SLOW BUT SURE.

A Philadelphia clergyman is the father of a son whose habits of unpunctuality are a sore trial. Nevertheless, the youth's ready tongue is a source of secret delight to the parent.

Once the young man appeared at Sunday breakfast twenty minutes after the appointed time. With a sorrowful face the minister contemplated the transgressor and then his watch.

"Son," said he reproachfully, as he held the watch so that the youth might see its accusing face, "do you think this is right? Do you honestly think it is right?"

"Well, father," returned the young man, regretfully, "I wish it were about twenty minutes fast, but as you ask me to say honestly, I am afraid it's just about right."—Lippincott's.

NEW TUBERCULIN IS A REAL CURE

Piorkowski Turtle Culture Is Proved to Have Merit.

PHYSICIANS MAKE REPORT.

Drs. Beattie and Myers Give Convincing Evidence That Tuberculosis In Early Stages Yields to New Treatment, Which Takes From Six to Nine Months—No Toxic Effects.

In the current issue of the New York Medical Journal Drs. William J. Beattie and Edward E. Myers make a full report on the "Relative Value of Turtle Tuberculin In the Treatment of Tuberculosis."

Dr. Beattie on his arrival in this country a few months ago brought with him a quantity of tuberculin direct from Piorkowski, in Berlin. He thoroughly instructed Dr. Myers, a New York physician, in its use and left a quantity of the culture with him. Since that time the two have been working quietly, but separately, with the tuberculin, using extreme care to see that a premature report of what they were doing did not spoil their work.

Dr. Myers has now published the full statement of his results in conjunction with but entirely independent of the observations made by Dr. Beattie. Both physicians are certain that the Piorkowski culture has very definite and certain merit.

What Tuberculin Is.

According to the report, "turtle tuberculin is a clear, port wine reddish brown liquid, containing the products of the tubercle bacillus of a certain species of turtle."

Recent investigations with turtle tuberculin in Piorkowski's laboratory, made by Dr. Beattie, have shown that tubercle bacilli when grown in the blood serum of turtles (cold blooded animals) change quite distinctively its bacteriological characteristics, particularly in lessening its virulence and at the same time increasing its power to form antibodies in the blood of tuberculous patients.

The report says:

"Numerous experiments on animals and the treatment of a large number of cases have confirmed the absence of any toxin effects. Owing to the careful methods of preparation of this remedy there have hitherto been no instances of induration or abscess; there have only been slight infiltrations, which subsided very satisfactorily.

"The most striking clinical results have been the rapid subsidence of fever, night sweats, pain in the chest and other pains. Very soon there is an increase in weight, appetite returns, and the feeling of fatigue disappears."

Not all cases of tuberculosis are suited to this treatment. Advanced cases and moribund types of the disease seldom show much improvement. The more suitable cases are at the beginning of lung, gland, throat and joint varieties.

About twelve hours after the injection the patient experiences a feeling of lassitude and languor, the temperature rises from 99 degrees to 100 degrees Fahrenheit, the appetite diminishes, but at the end of twenty-four hours the patient feels as well as before the injection.

Improvement Often Rapid.

In gland cases improvement is noted about three weeks after the first injection. "The glands gradually become smaller, and where there is a discharging sinus the secretion progressively diminishes, the opening becomes smaller, and the sinus finally closes up, and the temperature gradually returns to normal. The patient gains in weight, his appetite improves, and a feeling of buoyancy replaces that of languor and lassitude," the report says.

Joint cases improve in about four weeks, and this is evidenced by increase in motion and decrease of swelling and pain. Patients with pulmonary tuberculosis require six weeks before the cough loosens, the pains begin to disappear and the appetite improves.

Continuing, the report says:

"The treatment is usually continued until all objective and subjective symptoms disappear, which is generally in from six to nine months. The duration of the course varies with the stage of the disease and the type of the case. Glandular and joint cases usually respond in six months.

"That the effects produced are due to the direct action of the tuberculin and not to any mental suggestion have been proved by the beneficial results obtained in children too young to be influenced by mental suggestion.

"To prove that turtle tuberculin is the one cause of the beneficial effects produced patients treated can be shown where pleasing results have been obtained in cases in which other methods of treatment have completely failed."

Probably Got Tired.

A peculiar ailment has struck the potato crop in the vicinity of Menominee, Wis. The vines, which appeared exceptionally healthy, suddenly wilted and died. A careful examination failed to show cause. The crop of potatoes is small, most of the hills containing but three or four potatoes, but all of them are well developed and of exceptionally fine quality.

GAME LAW CHANGES

Hunting Fee In Pine Tree State Raised to $25 For Non-Residents

Bangor, Me., Sept. 23.—Higher prices for licenses to non-resident hunters, lower fines for violation of the moose law and fewer days in which to hunt moose are some of the changes that have been made in the Maine game laws since last season.

The moose-hunting season formerly was from Oct. 15 to Dec. 1; now it is limited to the month of November. The deer season remains as before—Oct. 1 to and including Dec. 15. One bull moose, not less than one year old, may be killed in the month of November, and two deer may be killed within the time specified.

The penalty for the unlawful killing of moose is imprisonment for four months or a fine not less than $100 and costs, nor more than $200 and costs. The license fee for non-resident hunters has been increased from $15 to $25.

POTATO QUARANTINE REMAINS IN FORCE

Federal Board Will Not Modify Order as to Imports

Washington, Sept. 23.—To prevent the introduction into the United States of a dangerous potato disease known as potato wart, potato canker or black scab, the federal horticultural board has decided to continue indefinitely the quarantine against potato importations from the British Isles, Germany, Austria-Hungary, Newfoundland and the two French islands at the mouth of the St. Lawrence river, St. Pierre and Miquelon.

The London bureau of agriculture recently asked that this quarantine be raised or modified, but the horticultural board has ruled against a change in the regulations.

In the vicinity of Port Arthur, Ont., and Grand Marmis, Minn., the ground was blanketed with snow. The average temperature at Duluth was 35 degrees.

BACKED BY ASTRONOMY

Fire Will Destroy the Earth, as Prophesied In the Bible

Vienna, Sept. 23.—Astronomy backs up the Bible prophecy of the earth's destruction by fire, according to Professor Seelinger of Munich, who addressed the international congress of astronomers and naturalists here.

"Science can but confirm the prophecy of the Bible that the earth and humanity will ultimately be destroyed by fire," he said. "This is what will some day happen to our own particular world."

SOLITARY NAY BALLOT CAST

Su'zer's Second Defeat In High Court of Impeachment

COUNSEL'S MOT ON OVERRULED

Vote Taken In Secret Is 51 to 1 Against Dismissal of Proceedings and Governor Must Go to Trial—Executive Tells Friends He Is Confident of Being Vindicated

Albany, Sept. 23.—Governor Sulzer must go to trial. This was decided by the high court of impeachment last night, when, by a vote of 51 to 1, its members overruled the motion of the governor's counsel to dismiss the proceedings on the ground that he was unconstitutionally impeached by the assembly, because that body was in extra session when the impeachment was brought.

Senator Gottfried H. Wende of Buffalo, Democrat, an ardent supporter of the governor, cast the solitary nay. Four senators and Judge Gray were absent.

The governor's defeat was the second that has marked the battle waged by his attorneys to annihilate, as far as possible, the impeachment proceedings. Last week the court thwarted the efforts of his counsel to prevent four senators from sitting as members. Their remaining ammunition consists of arguments to prove that certain of the offenses charged against the governor were not impeachable.

The vote last night was taken in secret session after an afternoon of impassioned oratory by the opposing attorneys.

The vote was later announced in a brief public session and the record of the proceedings was immediately made public at the suggestion of the presiding judge. The record showed that a tentative rollcall on the motion was immediately taken and that the presiding judge delivered a long opinion on the points at issue when his name was called.

The practically unanimous vote of the court of impeachment against Sulzer seems to have taken the snap all out of the Sulzer side. There was a conference of the governor and his counsel at the executive mansion, alias "The People's House," last night. After it was all over they agreed they had nothing to say.

Sulzer emphatically had nothing to say. The governor had a few people at dinner with him earlier in the evening. To them he said this did not mean the end of the fight by any means—it was merely the beginning. He said he was just as confident as ever that he would be vindicated by the court.

WRITES TO PEARY

MacMillan Reports Eskimos at Etah Happy and Prosperous

Portland, Me., Sept. 23.—Rear Admiral Peary received a letter from his former lieutenant, Donald B. MacMillan, whose arrival at Etah on his expedition to explore Crocker Land was recently reported. It was dated at Etah, Aug. 25.

Among other things MacMillan wrote that "the Eskimos are all happy, well and apparently prosperous, having plenty of food and good clothing." The letter concluded as follows:

"It is getting late now and freezing nights, and we have walrus to kill. If the sound (Smith) breaks out, I shall try to run over supplies in the power boat to Cape Sabine. I expect to use fifteen dog teams in the spring."

The committee has so nearly completed the section that the concluding details will be worked out by a subcommittee of the conferees.

GOVERNOR FELKER

New Hampshire Executive Will Decide Fate of Thaw

The governor of New Hampshire is the man who will say whether or not Harry K. Thaw, slayer of Stanford White, shall return to Matteawan. Immediately on learning of Thaw's arrest in Colebrook, N. H., Acting Governor Glynn of New York began preparations to have Thaw extradited. One of the first reports from New Hampshire was that Governor Felker was inclined to recognize Governor Sulzer. The governor of New Hampshire has stated that his decision will be rendered on the advice of the attorney general of that state.

THAW AND MOTHER MEET

Jerome Is Expected to Ask For Postponement of Hearing

Concord, N. H., Sept 23.—Mrs. Mary C. Thaw, mother of Harry K. Thaw, arrived here last night from Pittsburg.

When Thaw saw her coming up the stairway he dashed from his room and, throwing his arms around her, showered her with kisses.

Thaw, happy over the defeat of William T. Jerome's plan to have him indicted on the conspiracy charge in New York, and confident that today's hearing will result in Governor Felker refusing extradition, was extremely elated.

What Jerome's plans are no one here knows. Many believe, and some of Thaw's lawyers hold the same opinion, that Thaw's "nemesis" will seek to have today's hearing postponed for a week or two.

He was assassinated, it was said, for fear he might reveal the orders which he received on the night of Feb. 22, when Madero was killed and Cardenas was in command of the soldiers conveying Madero from the national palace to the prison in Mexico City.

In Search of Fenby

He Led Them a Chase

By ADELAIDE BURNHAM

Sackett's cablegram had summoned Roy Bardwell to the little Central American republic, where were situated the 10,000 acres of mahogany forest belonging to the Bardwell syndicate of New York.

Roy found Cyrus Sackett at his desk in the consular office at Lontigua, and after the preliminary greetings were over the consul pushed a box of cigars across the table and lighted a cigarette for himself.

"You sent for me. I am here. I suppose there is something wrong," began Roy nervously as he scratched a match. "What's the matter?"

Sackett looked at the glowing end of his cigarette, while he answered the question by asking another.

"Known this Fenby chap very long?"

"Oh, a few months before he came down here. Why?"

"Ever do business with him before?"

"No, but he came highly recommended from your predecessor on this job. Seems he used to be secretary to old Kerfoot when he was in Lontigua some fifteen years ago. I have perfect confidence in him."

"Then maybe I'm mistaken in calling you down here, but his head man, the one in charge of the native help, came to me a short time ago and said Fenby had disappeared."

"Disappeared!" echoed Roy blankly. "Impossible, Sackett! Why, he had $10,000 of our money in his pockets. I sent him a draft on the 1st of the month. It was for running expenses in getting out the timber, his salary, etc."

"He has cashed the draft," said the consul.

Roy was pacing the floor now, his brows meeting in a black frown and his hands clinched in his pockets. Suddenly he turned and faced the consul.

"Tell me what to do, Sackett," he pleaded. "Why, we've got orders for timber enough to clear expenses and pay a handsome dividend, and I have promised delivery at the time specified by Fenby. The $10,000 I sent to him was a special issue of stock, and the stockholders are people in moderate circumstances. If I can't recover the money the whole thing will go to smash!"

"He hasn't had it long enough to spend much," said Sackett thoughtfully. "This morning I learned that he was last seen in Galveston. Oh, yes, they usually make for the States to spend money. I suggest that you go there and take up the trail. Get a good detective, and when you find your man nail him and see if you can't get some of the money back. Only my advice is to locate him as soon as possible, before he gambles it away. That's his failing—cards. Look for him where there is high play and you'll find him."

"I'll do it," said the boy, with sudden decision. "When can I get a boat?"

Sackett consulted a small book.

"A fruit steamer should be at the wharf now, clearing for New Orleans early tomorrow morning. I can get you passage on her if you wish."

* * * * * * *

Two days later Roy Bardwell was in Galveston in company with a New Orleans detective.

"Man named Fenby? Stammers? No, sir; never heard of him. Had a fellow here named Jacobs. He stammered some. Cards? Well, yes; he did play a mighty lot when he was here. Don't know where he went, but he did say he aimed to go to New York."

That was a sample of the information that Roy and Fox, the detective, gathered in their search for a clew to Fenby's present whereabouts. At last there came a day when a definite clew was obtained.

Fenby, or Jacobs, as he now called himself, if he was the late superintendent and manager of the Bardwell Lumber syndicate, was at the Hot Springs. So Roy and Dan Fox journeyed north to the famous health resort.

Two days' search of the city failed to result in finding the absconder.

Then Roy developed a touch of his old enemy, rheumatism, and he resorted to the baths in earnest.

"I will go on to Richmond," said Fox. "A man named Fenby has just cleaned $5,000 out of one of the gambling houses there, and I believe he's the man. You stay here, Mr. Bardwell; it is possible that he may come back again, for it is my belief that he has been here and left."

"I'd go in a minute if I didn't have a feeling that he'd be around here," said Roy. "I've got to get him, Fox, with the money if I can. There are a couple of hundred small stockholders in New England that must be protected. He's got the money, the cur!"

The third morning after Fox's departure Roy Bardwell went down to the bathhouses for his morning dip. His rheumatism was yielding to the treatment.

Pete, the black attendant, prepared Roy's bath, and the president of the Bardwell Lumber syndicate entered the compartment and prepared to endure the suffocating atmosphere prescribed for his ailment.

From outside came the sound of voices in conversation.

"B-b-ath ready, Pete?" asked a southern voice, mellow in its drawling accents.

"Yes, sah; jes' a minute, sah."

That was all. But it was quite enough for Roy Bardwell. Without pausing to use the towel, he hopped out of the steaming tub and into his bathrobe with nervous haste.

When he heard the stammerer enter the adjoining compartment and heard the splash of water Roy stepped outside where Pete was hanging the newcomer's clothing in the checking room.

"Why, sah, you done kotch yore deff!" gasped Pete as he beheld Roy's flushed face, moist with the steaming vapor. "Whuffor you comin' out dissaway. De doc say you have to stay in dere an hour and"—

Pete's mouth opened so wide with astonishment that speech was utterly impossible, for Roy was holding a twenty dollar bill agreeably close to that black, toil worn hand.

"Pete," he whispered softly, "I'm hunting for the man that stutters. He's committed a crime. In the pockets of his clothes—you have 'em there, my man—should be a weapon, pistol probably. He is a dangerous man and might muss up your floor here with my blood. Sure thing, Pete, if he sees me first! This twenty is yours if you hand over the pistol to me. How many are there? Two? By Jove, Fenby isn't taking any chances! Now, bring me my own clothing. Oh, don't you worry, Pete, the police will be here in a jiffy and you'll be protected."

The scared but opulent Pete assisted Roy into his clothes and led him to the nearest telephone booth. There he washed his hands of the whole transaction and went back to his duties in the checking room.

Roy had a few moments' conversation with the chief of detectives and then sat down to wait for the arrival of the officers with the warrant for Fenby's arrest.

It was two hours before they heard Fenby's preliminary cough and then his stuttering call for the attendant.

Pete waited on him and obediently carried in the pile of neatly arranged clothing.

Ten minutes afterward there stepped out of the compartment a tall, loosely built man with bright blue eyes staring from a sun tanned countenance. His eyes darted hither and thither and concentrated on Pete's frightened features.

"B-b-bring that g-g-gun back!" he commanded roughly.

"Wh-what gun, sah?" parried Pete, ashy white with terror.

"I'll show you, you black"— Fenby's form curved into snakelike lithesness as he slouched toward the black man. His right hand suddenly darted down and the men watching from their hiding place in one of the compartments saw that now in his hand there was a keen two bladed knife.

"Hand it over!" snarled Fenby savagely.

"B-but, sah"— protested Pete.

Just then Fenby leaped, but the police officer was too much for him. He darted out, his foot flashed forward against Fenby's advance and the absconder measured his length on the tiled floor. For an instant he lay there stunned, and before he recovered sufficiently to rise Bardwell and his men were upon him and the handcuffs were slipped over his wrists.

"B-b-bardwell, b-b-by Jove!" he said dazedly. "They t-told me you had gone b-back to N-new York."

"I'm on the job," said Roy grimly.

"W-well, what do you w-want of me?" asked Fenby, with sudden bravado.

"About $10,000," was Roy's cool reply.

Bardwell threw back his head and laughed. "I lost every p-penny last n-night," he asserted.

But the detectives were not so easily convinced. When Fenby was searched at headquarters it was found that he was possessed of $15,000 in cash.

A week later Roy Bardwell started north with $10,000 in his pockets and his copy of a contract signed by the new manager of the Bardwell Lumber syndicate in the Lontigua district. And the new manager was well known to Cyrus Sackett, a man to be trusted, but Bardwell did not tempt him with the possession of large sums of money.

As for Fenby, he served a term in prison for his offense and lived to attempt revenge upon Roy Bardwell's company. How he accomplished it and the result are part of another story.

GREEKS SEIZE MISSION SCHOOL

American Institution For the Instruction of Giris

ALBANIANS ARE PERSECUTED

Those Returning From America Must Join In Agitation For Incorporation of District In Greece—British Minister Protests to Greek Government In Behalf of Americans

Vienna, Sept. 23.—The Greek authorities at Koritsa, Albania, seized the American mission school there, where instruction is given to nearly 100 Albanian girls, according to a telegram received here from Avlona.

They have also arrested and persecuted a large number of Albanians who recently returned to Koritsa from America and other foreign countries, releasing them from detention only when the Albanians had promised to join in the agitation for the incorporation of the district in Greece.

The British consul at Monastir has entered a vigorous protest with the Greek government on behalf of the Americans. The whole affair forms part of the Greek terrorization of the Albanian population, with the object of compelling them to agree to the inclusion of the whole of southern Albania in the kingdom of Greece.

Last week Greek officials at Koritsa endeavored to take forcible possession of the American mission school building, but the housekeeper in charge refused to hand over the keys, whereupon the Greek soldiers beat her mercilessly and then carried her off to prison.

The mission is in charge of Phineas B. Kennedy, a native of New Jersey, who was educated at Princeton. In the educational work he is assisted by his wife, who also conducts the Ladies' Literary society, whose object is to give the elements of education to the women of Albania.

C. T. Erickson, who was formerly in charge at Koritsa, is now in Boston. He and his wife were expelled from Albania by the Servians at the beginning of the war. Later they returned only to be arrested by the Greeks and imprisoned at Salonica. Kennedy and his wife are in charge of the school during Erickson's absence.

In addition to the school at Koritsa the church maintains a mission school at Elbasan, Albania. The headquarters of the Congregational mission board are in Boston.

AUMULLER INQUEST TODAY

Detectives Have Further Evidence Against Schmidt and Muret

New York, Sept. 23.—The panel for the coroner's inquest into the death of Anna Aumuller, slain by Father Hans Schmidt, will be drawn today. Coroner Feinberg said he hoped to obtain a jury of bankers, merchants, manufacturers and professional men.

The detective bureau promises further disclosures regarding the career of Schmidt and Muret. Muret is held under a charge of having in his possession a dangerous weapon, while the police gather evidence to support the charge that he helped Schmidt make counterfeit money.

An alienist who examined Schmidt in his cell said that, while he was not prepared to pronounce the priest insane, Schmidt was exhausted, both mentally and physically.

LOCK UP FIRE STATIONS

Suffragettes Then Start Blaze Which Destroys Six Structures

York, Eng., Sept. 23.—A suffragette fire, marked by a cunning device hitherto untried by the women, burned a $125,000 hotel in the middle of the town of Withernsea, Yorkshire.

The fire was discovered in the municipal building, which was soon destroyed. Thence the fire spread to neighboring shops and houses and within three hours six structures had been burned.

The doors of the fire stations were found to be locked and the keys were missing.

Pshaw!

Each morning the papers
Are full of the capers
And vacuous vapors
Of Harry the Thaw.

When Harry's not chinning
Or legal points winning
We're in for an inning
Of Bernie the Shaw.

It's Thaw, Thaw, Thaw,
Or Shaw, Shaw, Shaw!
When Harry is quiet
Old Bern starts a riot,
And those who stand by it
Hee-haw, hee-haw!

PROOFS OF ATROCITIES BY GREEKS PUBLISHED.

Letters In Captured Mail Bag Avow Assassination and Arson.

In order to prove that Greek soldiers were responsible for a number of atrocities against the Bulgarians in the fighting last July between Bulgaria and her former allies, Greece, Servia and Montenegro, there has been made public in Sofia extracts from letters written by Greek soldiers and officers to friends at home. These letters were captured in a mail bag of the Nineteenth regiment of the Seventh Greek division by Bulgarian troops in the vicinity of Razlog. They have been given out by the Bulgarian telegraphic agency in pamphlet form. Each letter is printed in facsimile of the original Greek, followed by a translation in French, which gives the dates and the names signed to each communication.

The first letter in the pamphlet is dated July 11 and the last July 15. Extracts from some of these communications of Greek soldiers and officers follow:

"We have burned all the villages abandoned by the Bulgarians. They burned the Greek villages and we the Bulgarian villages. They massacre, we massacre, and the Mannlicher has operated against every member of this dishonest nation who has fallen into our hands. Out of 1,200 prisoners that we took at Nigrita only forty-one remained in prison, and everywhere we went we have left no root of this race."

Another letter from a sergeant says:

"We burned the two villages of Doutlli and Bantiza and put everything to the bayonet or the flame, making exception only of women, children and old people and churches. We did all this without pity and without grace."

A very brief extract is given from the letter Nico Theophilatos sent to Demetre Chr. Tsigaridi, at Mexiata, under date of July 11. Nico writes: "They gave me sixteen prisoners to take to division headquarters, and I turned in only two. The others were lost in the darkness, massacred by myself."

This last letter bears the seal of the Nineteenth regiment.

NEW GEM AMONG JEWELS.

Experts Declare the Heliodor Ranks With Ruby and Emerald.

A new gem, given the name of "heliodor" and found in German South Africa has taken its place among the jewels, says the Popular Mechanics Magazine. The German kaiser recently presented one of the new stones to the kaiserin. This discovery of the new stone was made by the governor and director of the German Colonial society while he was traveling in German South Africa. In the sand near the railway between Swakopmund and Windkuk he found a large crystal, rough and unpromising in appearance. He carried it with him to Germany and had it cut and polished in a diamond cutting factory. The result was a surprisingly clear, pale aquamarine of great brilliance.

The German colonial office immediately took possession of the ground upon which the crystal was found, and a great number of the crystals are now making their appearance upon the German market. Experts agree that the new gem is entitled to rank with the ruby and emerald.

Heliodor is a golden yellow stone in the daylight and turns green at night under artificial light.

"LUCKY" BALDWIN'S MONEY.

Estate Closed Up and Lands Found Worth $36,000,000.

So far as the courts are concerned finis has now been written upon the history of the estate of "Lucky" Baldwin, the famous turfman, according to dispatches from Los Angeles.

The huge land holdings which were debt burdened when Baldwin died five years ago now have a value of more than $36,000,000, and the court awarded to the executors, Henry A. Unruh and Bradner W. Lee, fees of $180,000 each. Unruh and Lee fixed the fees themselves. If they had not, the court said, each would have received $250,000.

The heirs are Baldwin's two daughters, Mrs. Clara Baldwin Stocker and Mrs. Anita Baldwin McClaughrey. They share the estate, which has been held nearly intact despite the onslaughts of numerous litigants and claimants.

A Wise Prairie Chick.

A young prairie chicken came to the home of Robert Gray, near Sheldon, N. D., and established a residence with the tame chickens. It comes with the bunch to be fed every morning and stays with the rest of the poultry all day. Mr. Gray thinks the bird had a hint that the opening of the hunting season was approaching.

—Automobile stealing in New York and Philadelphia is said to have become a regular "profession." Numbers are changed and the machines so made over that even dealers can't recognize them. What kind of people buy them from the thieves and what prices they pay are not yet known to many people however.

MUST MARRY BEFORE OCT. 1

To Accept a Position at Baltimore Md.

Dr. Alfred W. Brown, of 603 Washington street, has been appointed medical supervisor of the public athletic parks and gymnasiums of Baltimore, Md., but cannot take his position Oct. 1 unless he gets married in the meantime. The prospects of his taking office on that day is practically assured however since Miss Caroline Maude Merrill of Amesbury has agreed to wed him.

Dr. Brown learned of the conditions governing his appointment and Monday applied to Judge Avery for a special permit so the ceremony could be performed Friday. Judge Avery referred him to the judge of the court in the Amesbury district, and it is presumed that the request has been granted.

If all goes well they will be married Friday by the father of his prospective bride, Rev. Fred G. Merrill, pastor of the Amesbury Congregational Church, formerly of the North Weymouth Congregational Church.

Miss Merrill is 23, and is well known in church and society circles. She met Dr. Brown at a church social a few years ago. He is a graduate of Adams Academy, 1905 and of Harvard Medical school. He has been connected with the Chelsea Y. M. C. A. for several years.

THE RICHMOND GOES OUT

Today She Is Having Trials in the Bay

Captain "Joe" Kemp took the Richmond, the largest oil tank steamer afloat, through the Fore River bridge Monday afternoon to Nantasket roads where her tanks were filled with water and preparations made for the six hours full speed endurance trip in Massachusetts bay.

She went down under her own steam and relatives and friends of those aboard thronged the Fore River bridge as she passed through.

Richmond left the roads about 11 o'clock this morning on her endurance run after which she will be taken to New York by Captain Bridgett who represents the owners.

FROM SHEER HABIT.

Miss Muffitt had recently joined the "Band of Sisters for Befriending Burglars," and was being shown over a prison for the first time.

One prisoner, evidently a man of education, interested her more than the others. He rose and bowed to her when she entered his cell, apologizing for the poorness of his apartment.

Miss Muffitt could not help wondering how this refined man came within the clutches of the law. In fact, as she was leaving his cell, she said.

"May I ask why you are in this distressing place?"

"Madame," he replied, "I am here for robbery at a seaside hotel!"

"How very interesting!" said Miss Muffitt. "Were you—er—the proprietor?" (Answers.)

LOST CHILD FOUND.

The lost child call followed by one round from Box 124 at 11.49 this noon was to summon help to search for Agnes the 3 year old daughter of George Sheahan of 70 Adams street. Shortly after the call sounded the little girl was seen coming down Adams street toward home. The girl had been absent for three hours and the family had become alarmed. It appears however she had followed a dog across Presidents bridge to Upland road where she was playing. Becoming hungry she started home and met the searchers looking for her.

There is more Catarrh in this section of the country than all other diseases put together, and until the last few years was supposed to be incurable. For a great many years doctors pronounced it a local disease and prescribed local remedies, and by constantly failing to cure local treatment pronounced it incurable. Science has proven catarrh to be a constitutional disease and therefore requires constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, Ohio, is the only constitutional cure on the market. It is taken internally in doses from 10 drops to a teaspoonful. It acts directly on the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. They offer one hundred dollars for any case it fails to cure. Send for circulars and testimonials.

MISSIONARIES FOR INDIA

Party of 26 Sailed From Boston on the Arabic

Missionary work in India has new interest in Quincy since the departure of Miss Margery Melcher of Bigelow street for that field Sept. 13.

Among the 100 cabin passengers sailing today on the White Star liner Arabic for Queenstown and Liverpool will be 26 missionaries, going to India. Mr. and Mrs. Raymond P. Currier of Malden will be among the youngest of the little band of fearless men and women. Mr. Currier is the president of the Christian Endeavor Society of the First Baptist Church, Malden, and, with his bride of a few months, is going to Rangoon, Burma, to be an instructor of English in the Rangoon Baptist College.

At the weekly whist held at the home of Mrs. Mary Jones, River street souvenirs were taken by Mrs. Susan Hewson, Mrs. Kate A. Blaisdell and Mrs. Laura Holt. The next party will be held at the home of Mrs. Ella Hayden, River street next Monday.

BUGGY STRUCK BY ELECTRIC

Accident to Fred M. Edwards on Washington Street

Good fortune came to the rescue of Fred M. Edwards, coachman for the Hardwicks, who was thrown out of a buggy which was struck by an electric car as he was driving on to the Hardwick grounds Monday afternoon. He escaped with a few slight scratches and bruises.

The two rears of the buggy were demolished and the horse was thrown to one side and landed in the shrubbery lining the drive. The car ran along for some distance before it was brought to a stop.

The tracks at the point where the accident occurred are close to the sidewalk and just miss skirting the edge of the Hardwick property. Both rails were wet and covered with mud and the brakes were applied too late to prevent the car from slipping by the drive.

The horse attached to the buggy is a handsome bay and is owned by Charles Henry Hardwick. Mr. Edwards was able to report for duty this morning.

RIVADAVIA EXPECTED BACK.

The Rivadavia will return to the Fore River dock on the first high tide, for adjustments to her boilers, which furnished so much steam that the turbine buckets curled. Then she will go to sea for a few endurance runs which have not been completed.

The officials of the company are pleased with the results of the trials to date, and say that the engines while capable of developing 54,000 horse power have been run only to 40,000 with splendid results.

POLLS OPEN AT 12

Langelier, but how the other towns in the district will go is problematical.

Lester P. Winchenbaugh of Hyde Park, the Progressive candidate for the Senatorial nomination, was at Wollaston last week, as the guest at a Progressive meeting, and feels confident that he can win out this year.

Outside of Wollaston the Progressives are not very strong in Quincy, and it is doubtful if they make much of a showing at the caucuses.

Some of the Democratic committee are kicking over what they call an error in the warrant for the caucuses and the ballot. The Democratic ballot calls for the election of a ward committee of twenty, while the warrant calls for but nine. According to the City Clerk the difference is due to the failure of the committee to notify im that the number had been changed.

When the city committee voted to increase the ward committees to twenty members each, Secretary Sullivan visited the office of the Secretary of State and notified him, but did not notify the City Clerk so that the latter had no way of knowing. City Clerk Crane however says that will make no difference in the election.

Another omission noticed in the ballot is the failure to state how many members of the ward committee the Republicans shall vote for. In all other offices, it states, vote for one or whatever the number may be, but for ward committee no such directions are given. The blame for this error is due to the Secretary of State who prepares and furnishes the ballots and not the City Clerk. However no serious results are anticipated in either of these matters.

With one exception the Republican ballot is complete in every ward of the city. Only one candidate has been nominated for associate county commissioners, although two are to be elected.

On the Democratic ballot no state delegates are named for Ward Four, and in Ward Six no state delegates or ward committee are named. In all of the other wards while twenty are to be elected as ward committee none have a complete list. Ward One has 16 names; Ward Two, 9; Ward Three 13; Ward Four, 9; Ward Five, 5; and Ward Six, none.

The Progressive ballot is far from being complete in any ward, No candidate is seeking the nomination for Councillor or Associate County Commissioner on any of the ballots, and in the Fifth district no candidate is named for Representative.

In Ward One, no ward committee is named, and for the state delegation the name of Oscar F. Fisk, appears for Oscar F. Frisk. In Ward Two no delegates are named for the state convention or for ward committee. In Ward Three there are no candidates for state committee or ward committee The same in this respect is also true in Wards Four, Five and Six.

As already noticed the contests on the Republican ticket are for Governor Treasurer, Senator and Registrar of Probate. On the Democratic tickets there are contests for Lieutenant Governor, Treasurer, Senator, District Attorney, and for member of the state committee.

The Progressives have no contests of any kind in Quincy.

The polls will close at 9 P. M., and counting will not begin until that hour so the returns will be late.

THE RETURNS TONIGHT

City Clerk Crane to Keep the Crowd Back

City Clerk Emery L. Crane does not intend to be bothered while tabulating caucus returns tonight. Usually on such nights people seeking information crowd about the City Clerks chair and by their loud talk and questions bother him a great deal in his work. This year he plans to have the office roped off, and if necessary to have an officer stationed in the office to keep the crowd back. No one will be allowed inside the inclosure except the newspaper men, who in the past have also been bothered.

In order that citizens however may learn the result of the caucuses Mr. Crane plans to have a bulletin board placed where everybody can readily consult it.

MAYOR STONE'S POSITION

No Announcement Yet of His Intentions

He further stated that there was plenty of time in which to announce what his intentions were after the primaries were over and out of the way. Up to the present time but one candidate for Mayoralty honors has been officially announced, that of Charles H. Johnson.

BENTON IN QUINCY GARDNER IN STATE

Barry the Choice of Democrats for Lieutenant Governor

Bird Received 66 Votes for Governor Out of 68

BENTON	753
GARDNER	715
BARRY	252
LONG	198
BIRD	66

The above figures show Quincy's party preferences at the State primaries.

Among the Republicans, Benton led Gardner for Governor by 38 votes. Among the Democrats, Barry led Long by 54 votes, while Bird received 66 of the 68 votes cast by the Progressives.

Benton led in four of the six wards One, Three, Four and Six—while Gardner led in Wards Two and Five.

One of the surprises on the Republican ticket was the large plurality for Cook for register of probate, practically two to one. Many expected McCoole would be nominated, but he has probably lost in the county.

Good majorities were given by Republicans to Burrell for State Treasurer and Langelier for senator.

Although Barry led the Democrats for lieutenant governor, he carried but two wards—Four and Six.

There was no Democratic contest for governor, but nearly one-fifth of the vote was blank, Walsh receiving 422 out of 515.

Mansfield led St. Coeur for State treasurer 297 to 101.

For Senator McDevitt carried the city by 239 plurality. He led in Wards One, Three, Four and Five. Murray captured Wards Two and Six.

In the four cornered fight for district attorney O'Neill led the field with good second.

Several local contests among the Republicans and Democrats resulted in bringing out quite a large vote at the State primaries in Quincy ,the total vote being 2,198. Ward One led the van with the largest vote, while Ward Two cast the smallest vote. In Wards One and Three, ex-Representative Thomas, who was seeking the nomination for Senator, had several automobiles on duty which accounts in a measure for the large vote.

In Ward Five and Ward Six the voting was light up to 6 o'clock. At that hour the friends of ex-Representative Langelier, who was also seeking the nomination for Senator rallied to his support. Several of his friends used their automobiles, and there was a hustle to get out the voters with the result that the total vote in these two wards was considerably increased.

In Ward Four the friends of Candidate McDevitt were out in force and in spite of all that has been said about his episode in the Senate last year, at West Quincy, nothing could be heard but McDevitt. That his home ward stood by him well is shown by the figures, which are tabulated in another column.

In view of all the hurrah made by the Progressives last year that party did not make a very good showing in the caucus. This was of course largely due to the fact that many of the Progressives are still enrolled as Republicans and if they voted Tuesday they would have to vote the Republican ticket or none at all. The total Progressive vote of the city was but 68, of which number 45 were cast in Ward Five.

One Progressive voter in Ward Five who became enrolled Tuesday for the first time in Quincy, got mixed up considerable when he came to vote and this was the only ripple of excitement in Ward Five. This voter called for a Progressive ballot, which he took and entered a booth to mark. He came from the booth a few minutes later, and said that he wanted to vote for Langelier, and some other good Republicans and asked the warden if he might go outside the rail and consult the sample ballot to see how the name should be written.

This he was allowed to do, although the authority is questioned somewhat. Upon receiving an affirmative answer to the request he laid his partly marked ballot on the table and went outside the railing and consulted the sample ballots after which he was allowed to again enter the enclosure and complete the marking of his ballot. There was one Progressive ballot that was counted as a blank in Ward Five, and this doubtless was the ballot.

In Ward One, Henry J. Matthews, attempted to vote a Progressive ballot and found that he was recorded as a Republican. He declared that he had changed his party designation and refusing the proffered Republican ballot he went to the City Clerk's office to have the matter straightened out.

There it was found that true enough he had changed his party designation and that the ninety days elapsed Tuesday. Under the law a party who wishes to change his party designation must do so ninety days previous to the caucus in which he takes part. For this reason the ninety days in Mr. Matthews' case had not expired when the caucus books were made up so that he was still recorded as a Republican. As the time had then expired, however, the City Clerk gave him a letter to the warden and he went away happy to cast his first vote in a caucus as a Progressive.

There were quite a number of vacancies on the official Progressive ballot which however may be filed by nomination papers before the election. For instance no candidate was mentioned for Councillor from the Second district but the name of Frederick H. Bishop of Wollaston was written on the ballot by the Wollaston Progressives and he received 45 votes in that ward.

For state delegates and for Ward Committees, Ward One was the only ward in which the Progressives had a state delegation printed on the ballot.

Ex-Representative Piper received three votes for the nomination for Representative from the Fifth district and therefore gets the Progressive nomination.

On the Democratic ballot, there were a number of contests and the vote of each ward for offices where there was a contest will be found elsewhere.

No name appeared on the ballot for Associate County Commissioner but the name of Leo P. Noonan was written on the ballot 19 times.

The Republican ballot was complete with one exception. There were no local contests outside of that for Senator. Ex-Representative Piper had a walkover for the nomination for Representative from the Fifth district, and ex-Representative Edward J. Sandberg had a similar walk-over for the nomination for Representative from the Sixth district.

Aside from the State contest and the local contest for the Senatorial nomination there were no contests.

In the Fifth Representative district ex-Representative Walter E. Piper got the Republican nomination without opposition. He also received the Progressive nomination. In the Sixth district Councilman Edward J. Sandberg also had a walkover for his nomination for Representative as he had no opponent.

Among the Democrats Representative Michael T. Sullivan was re-nominated for Representative without opposition and in the sixth district Cornelius M. Duggan, the well-known poet, received the Democratic nomination also without opposition.

McDEVITT DEFEATED FOR RENOMINATION

Murray of Hyde Park Wins the Democratic Nomination

Langelier Defeats Thomas In Every City and Town

Great interest centered in the Senatorial contests at the primaries, both Democratic and Republican.

On the Democratic ticket McDevitt went out of Quincy with a plurality of 239, and he also led in Braintree and Holbrook. Shea led in his home town of Milton. The other four towns however gave pluralities to David W. Murray of Hyde Park and his total of 770 was 179 better than McDevitt who was second man. Murray lacked only a few votes of a majority, having 770 to 793 as the combined vote of his rivals.

The Democratic vote of the district was:

	McDevitt	Murray	Shea
Quincy	343	104	52
Braintree	27	17	9
Weymouth	28	43	19
Milton	12	8	27
Canton	21	30	11
Holbrook	25	23	9
Randolph	96	130	55
Hyde Park	39	415	20
	591	770	202

LANGELIER WINS.

Every city and town in the Senatorial district gave Louis F. R. Langelier of Quincy a majority. In Quincy he led William R. Thomas by 252, in Milton by 173, in Hyde Park by 96, in Canton by 83, in Holbrook by 39, in Weymouth by 32, in Braintree by 28, and in Randolph by 24.

The Republican vote in the Senatorial district was:

	Langelier	Thomas
Quincy	909	657
Braintree	69	41

Milton	206	73
Canton	97	14
Holbrook	54	15

A morning paper reports that James H. Maddern, aged 69 years, a Civil war veteran employed by the Metropolitan Park Commission, was run down and severely injured at Nantasket on Tuesday by a Quincy furniture wagon driven by Joseph Duchaney of Dorchester. Duchaney was arrested and locked up charged with reckless driving and drunkenness. Robert Cameron of Quincy who was also on the team was locked up for drunkenness. The owner of the team put in an appearance later and took the team back to Quincy.

SLEEPING CAR TRAVEL.

It has commonly been said, in spite of all the danger of American travel, that travel by night at least attains the limit of comfort possible in confined space.

However, they don't seem to think so in California, in which state the railroad commission has just appointed a hearing, when the question of defects in sleeping and chair car service will come up. Among the complaints which the board is to consider are these: How much the company figures on passengers' tips in paying porters, why upper berths are pulled down when not occupied, thus making the lower berth stuffy, why a passenger cannot get his berth made when he wants it. These complaints are quite general all over the country.

Years ago, travellers seemed dazzled by the heavy luxury of sleeping cars. The glittering crystals in the lamps, shiny ornamental iron work, ornate painting, thick plush, heavy velvets this kind of thing conveyed an appearance of luxury, and a feeling of well being.

But thick hangings and seat coverings shelter disease. Now people want a simpler style, sanitary and well ventilated. The blankets are too often heavy and clammy things, without which you are too cold, and with which you are too warm.

Just why the porter should be paid chiefly by the passengers, while the company pays conductor and brakeman, is a mystery. People who are ailing or have special needs may call for some unusual service, though the porter is hired to render just such assistance.

The ordinary traveller does not depend on the porter at all. He feels the cowardly victim of graft if he gives the fee, and unfair and unfriendly if he refuse it. Travellers all over the country will be anxious to learn if California can improve these conditions.

Details of the Balloting

Boston, Sept. 24.—Congressman Augustus P. Gardner is the choice of the Republican party for the nomination for governor. He was nominated over Everett C. Benton by a decisive majority.

AUGUSTUS P. GARDNER

Edward P. Barry of Boston was nominated as the Democratic candidate for lieutenant governor, defeating Richard H. Long of South Framingham.

These are the important results of yesterday's primaries.

The vote cast was the lightest in years.

The nomination of Gardner came as a surprise. He went into the fight weeks after Benton had announced his candidacy and started an active campaign in the state. It was early evident, nowever, that Gardner was the winner when the results in the towns begun to roll in.

The Benton forces got a bad jolt in Boston, where their candidate led Gardner by only 157.

From a political standpoint the result of the contest for the lieutenant governorship is most interesting. The defeat of Long by Barry was a smashing defeat for the Democratic state organization. Chairman Riley had announced that Long was the choice of Lieutenant Governor Walsh, Mayor Fitzgerald, Secretary of State Donahue and other Democratic leaders. He predicted that the nomination of Barry would mean the defeat of the Democratic candidate for governor.

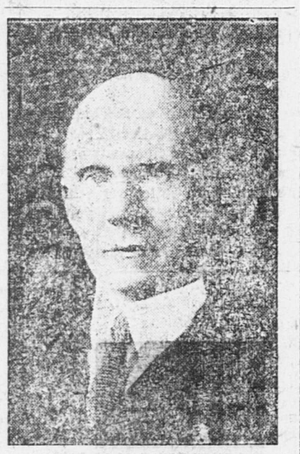

In Boston the Democratic organization, led by Chairman Maynard, failed to carry the city for Long. Congressman Curley was on the line for Barry.

DAVID I. WALSH

Lieutenant Governor Walsh received a big vote in the primaries and was nominated as the Democratic candidate for governor. Charles S. Bird was nominated as the Progressive canidate for governor. Neither Bird nor Walsh had any opposition.

Frederick W. Mansfield was nominated over Joseph L. P. St. Coeur for state treasurer on the Democratic end, and the returns also indicate the nomination of Charles L. Burrill over Maurice Kane for the Republican nomination for treasurer.

CHARLES S. BIRD

In Boston, Barry won over Candidate Long with a majority of 4209. The final count showed that Benton carried Boston by only 157 votes.

In the contest for district attorney of Suffolk county District Attorney Pelletier defeated Timothy W. Coakley two to one. Pelletier received 21,547 votes against 10,640 for Coakley.

BARNES LOSES HIS FIGHT

New York Republicans Favor Changing Delegate Basis

New York, Sept. 24.—The platform committee of the Republican state convention declared in favor of changing the party rules so that each state may determine its own methods of choosing delegates to the national convention so that states which give the big Republican pluralities shall have proportionately large power in selecting candidates for president.

For this purpose the New York Republicans call for a special national convention at an early date. The proposition and its subsidiary question developed the biggest fight of the state convention.

National Committeeman Barnes lost, but he said he was satisfied after the resolution had been amended so as to recommend the retention of the congressional district as the basis of representation.

PANGOLINS OF AFRICA.

Curious Anteaters That Train With the Owls and Bats.

It is perhaps just as well to know what a pangolin is, although one is not likely to meet it outside of Africa or the London zoological gardens. The latter establishment has one of these rare mammals and is very proud of it. This specimen is of the particularly rare variety with the rather inelegant given name of "white bellied." The pangolin is a sort of anteater, whose body is covered with scales. Although it is a mammal, a stranger asked to make an offhand diagnosis would certainly call it a lizard.

The white bellied pangolin trains with the owl and bats and sleeps during the daytime. When sleeping it is rolled up into an object about the size of a large croquet ball, and in this position, owing to its plating of pointed scales, is about as easy to attack or handle as a hedgehog. The sharp pointed scales give it somewhat the appearance of an "animated fir cone." Its natural food appears to be white ants, but in captivity it thrives on chopped raw meat and eggs. It is arboreal and a wonderful climber with its clawed feet and prehensile tail.

It seems to have no value to the human race except as a curiosity, although perhaps the natives in Africa eat it as they do most everything else that by any stretch of the imagination can be called edible—worms, ants, lizards, snakes, etc., ad nauseam.—New York Post.

ENGLAND'S CURIOUS WELL.

Its Water Never at the Same Level For Two Consecutive Minutes.

Two miles out from Settle, on the main road between that town and Ingleton, Yorkshire, England, there is to be found one of the most curious of natural phenomena in the shape of the famous ebbing and flowing well of Giggleswick.

A small, unpretentious little structure, scarcely to be distinguished from the ordinary trough of water to be seen on many of our country roads, it is yet one of the most quaint and fascinating spectacles one could hope to see. As the name implies, the well has the nature of a tide. It ebbs and flows continually, though by no means with regularity.

Sometimes the privileged traveler will see the oblong stone basin filled with clear water; then, even as he gazes into its pellucid depths, the water gradually sinks until the trough is half empty, or it may be more. There is barely time to wonder at this strange thing ere, with a rush and a whirl, the trough is again full. The ebb and flow continue with more or less marked effect, and the water is never at the same level for two consecutive minutes. Sometimes the outflow has scarcely begun before the basin again fills, but at other times the trough is almost emptied.—Wide World Magazine.

When Women Knew Not Golf.

A correspondent sends the Glasgow Herald some anecdotes of that period, not so long ago, when women knew nothing of golf. One lady, making sympathetic conversation at dinner, said to a keen golfer: "I often see you in your red coat. Do you need many dogs to play golf?" A younger lady said she knew exactly how the game was played. "They get what they call a caddier to hunt about in the grass till they find a round stone, and then they hit it into a rabbit hole." A third lady, who had evidently enjoyed a nearer view of the game, said: "It is played by two men. One is a gentleman and the other is a common man. The common man sticks a ball on a lump of dirt, and the gentleman knocks it off!"—Westminster Gazette.

An Indignant Artist.

Haydon, the painter, was much disgusted when he visited London in 1846 at the time when two of his finest pictures were being shown at the Egyptian hall, and the public thronged into another room where General Tom Thumb was on view. "They rush by thousands to see Tom Thumb," wrote the disappointed painter in his diary. "Their eyes are open, but their sense is shut. It is an insanity, a rabies, a madness, a furor, a dream!" Another entry later on runs: "Tom Thumb had 12,000 people last week. R. R. Haydon 133½ (the half a little girl). Exquisite taste of the English people!"

Browning's Pauline.

The first edition of Browning's "Pauline" was sold at auction for $2,400, yet not only did Browning receive nothing for it originally, but he would have withdrawn it from print if it had been possible. Yet so highly did Rossetti think of this despised masterpiece that, not being able to find a copy elsewhere, he went to the British museum library and spent several laborious days copying it word for word.

SERIOUS AUTO ACCIDENT

Head-On Collision Opposite Merrymount Park

Dr. Orren B. Sanders of 358 Commonwealth avenue, Boston, is on the dangerous list at the Quincy City Hospital with a fractured skull as the result of a head-on collision between his auto and a Ford machine of the Citizen's Gas Light Co., driven by James O'Donnell of 174 Glendale road.

Mr. O'Donnell who was thrown nearly out of the machine by the impact received heavy bruises and a slightly strained back but is at the office of the company as usual.

The accident occurred at Hancock street and Standish avenue, opposite Merrymount Park, at 4.50 Tuesday afternoon, while Dr. Sanders was on his way from Boston to his summer home in Egypt. His chauffeur, Daniel Tillman, colored, was operating, and escaped with only a shaking up. Dr. Sanders was riding in the rear seat.

The doctor's machine was running on the Quincy bound track and Mr. O'Donnell was running on the tracks toward Neponset. Two wagons, which Mr. O'Donnell attempted to pass hid the view from both operators, and the crash almost instantly occurred when the nose of O'Donnell's machine jutted over the Quincy bound rail and both machines collided head-on.

Tillman had time to apply his emergency brake and brace himself for the crash but Dr. Sanders, was thrown and landed on his head. O'Donnell was thrown forward on the wheel and then to the side.

John Byron telephoned for the police ambulance, but it was out on a call, and Dr. Sanders, unconscious from his fall, was picked up and given first aid by Dr. McKnight, of Boston, who was passing on an electric car, and then placed in the machine of Edward Carlson of Squantum and rushed to the hospital.

At the hospital an examination by Dr. William J. McCausland revealed a fractured skull at the base of the brain, and his name was placed on the dangerous list. Dr. John F. Welch was called into consultation.

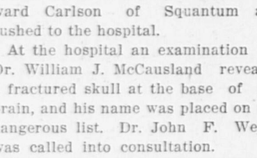

The machine of the Gas Company was completely wrecked in front. The collision damaged its headlights forward axle, burst the glass wind shield and when it struck the curbing after being forced across the street at a right angle the wheels collapsed.

The heavier machine of the doctor had a punctured radiator, broken head lights, a twisted fender and a sprung axle, but was run off under its own power.

O'Donnell was assisted to the auto of William B. Nichols of the Gas Company and was taken to his home. The indications were that he had received severe injuries to the lower abdomen and a probable spinal injury. Nothing serious is apparent however although he is still under observation.

Tillman told the police that he was using the Quincy bound rail and had no warning that the other machine which was coming in the opposite direction was to cross his path until the sharp turn was made. He claims that no horn was blown and the minute the machine of the Gas company loomed up he said he put on his emergency brakes and slid with locked wheels a short distance before the crash came.

SERIOUS FALL OF LINEMAN

Was at Top of 25 Foot Pole on Water Street

Jeremiah McCarthy, a lineman of the New England Tel. and Tel. Co., struck a feed wire while at work on the top of a ladder at Liberty and Water streets this noon and fas hurled to the street, 25 feet below. He received a fracture of the right leg and is at the Quincy City Hospital. His left hand was slightly burned.

McCarthy was setting a washer, when his shoe moistened from the mud, slipped on the rung of the ladder. To save himself he threw his hand to one side and it came in contact with the feed wire which carries 2500 volts. He landed on his feet and collapsed after his leg snapped. Fellow employees went to his assistance and he was removed to the hospital in the police ambulance.

LADIES NIGHT ORANGE LODGE

Addresses and Songs Followed by Dancing

Quincy Loyal Orange lodge observed ladies night in Electa and Protection halls Tuesday evening with a very large attendance. An entertainment and speaking preceded dancing which was enjoyed until midnight. Refreshments were served.

The special guests of the evening were State Grand Master Robert Rogers of Cambridge and Rev. A. M. Thompson of Quincy. Both delivered stirring addresses on the organization, its aims and purposes, and received liberal applause.

The entertainment consisted of songs by Thomas Davidson and William Leavery, readings by Miss Sadie McKinnon and selections by the Misses Marion and Annie Wright, accompanied by Mrs. J. Skinner. Music for dancing was by Miss Anna Anderson.

The committee in charge was Andrew Stewart who presided, Thomas Davidson, David Wright and David Johnson.

A BRIGHT IDEA.

The head of a certain Pittsburg manufacturing concern is an old gentleman who built up his business from nothing by his own dogged and persistent toil, and who has never felt that he could spare the time for a vacation.

Not long ago, however, says Harper's Weekly, he decided that he was getting along in years, and that he was entitled to a rest. Calling his son into the library he said:

"Tom, I've worked pretty hard for quite a while now and have done pretty well, so I have about decided to retire and turn the business over to you. What do you say?"

The young man pondered the situation gravely. Then a bright idea seemed to strike him.

"Say, pop," he suggested, "how would it do for you to work a few years longer and then the two of us retire together?"

ONE THING THEN ANOTHER.

A youngster handed the following note from his mother to the teacher one morning:

"Dere Teecher—You keep tellin' my boy to brethe with his diafram. Maybe rich children has got diaframs, but how about when there father only makes $1.50 a day and has got five children to keep? First it's one thing then it's another, and now it's diaframs That's the worst yet."

There is more Catarrh in this section of the country than all other diseases put together, and until the last few years was supposed to be incurable. For a great many years doctors pronounced it a local disease and prescribed local remedies, and by constantly failing to cure local treatment pronounced it incurable. Science has proven catarrh to be a constitutional disease and therefore requires constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, Ohio, is the only constitutional cure on the market. It is taken internally in doses from 10 drops to a teaspoonful. It acts directly on the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. They offer one hundred dollars for any case it fails to cure. Send for circulars and testimonials.

CIGAR BOXES.

There Is a Tremendous Trade In These Cedar Wood Receptacles.

Cigar boxes are a negligible quantity to the average smoker who stands before a tastily dressed showcase and buys a "five cent straight" or a "three for a quarter." Few of even the most inveterate smokers ever stop to think of the number of these boxes used in the United States during a year, or from where they come.

Thirty millions is the total number of boxes supplied to cigar manufacturers in the United States. Many millions more enter the country filled with foreign rolled cigars from Cuba, Porto Rico and the Philippines. Manufacturers declare that the boxes made from Spanish cedar, a wood which is rarely seen outside of Cuba, is the best for packing the seductive weed.

Various woods have been tried, but wherever used connoisseurs have protested that even the finest of cigars were spoiled by putting them in boxes made from other wood than Spanish cedar. This wood always retains the flavor of a good cigar, and some assert that it greatly improves the flavor. The reason given is that the Spanish cedar grows only in that soil which produces the finest quality of what is known as Havana tobacco.—Washington Star.

NO NEED TO NAME HER.

The Relative Who Never Abandons One Afflicted With Insanity.

"It's a funny thing about a lunatic's relatives," said the superintendent of an insane asylum. "There are reliable statistics about the way a lunatic's relatives stand by him.

"The relative who stands by a lunatic least, who stops visiting him in the asylum first of all, is a brother. The next relative to drop off is a wife. That sounds hard, but it's true. Don't count on your wife if you are going to become a lunatic. Next husbands drop off. A little truer than wives husbands are, but only a little. Next fathers abandon the lunatic, next sisters.

"One relative never abandons him. Till she dies, or he dies, she comes regularly on visiting day, bringing underwear and ties, cakes and tobacco—provided, of course, that the lunatic's a male. If it's a female this relative is equally faithful. And even though as sometimes happens, the poor, mad creature hates her, curses her, tries to strike her when she visits him, she still remains faithful. When her visits cease they cease for only one reason—death.

"Nor do I need to tell you which relative this one is."—New York Tribune.

Origin of King's Counsel.

King's counsel has the great Bacon as the founder of the order. He had no inclination to be made a "serjeant" and persuaded Queen Elizabeth to appoint him "queen's counsel extraordinary." James I. granted to Bacon a patent, confirming this status as "one of our counsel learned in the law," as K. C.'s are still officially designated. An annual salary of £40 was originally attached to the position and was received by all "silks" down to 1831, when parliament abolished the salary, together with the allowance for stationery and bags. The receipt of a salary by K. C.'s meant that they had accepted an office of profit under the crown and those who were members of parliament had to seek re-election.—London Tatler.

As Koreans Shop.

Shopping in Korea is a very grave and solemn task and occupies the master of the house the greater part of the day. In the market here he purchases his provisions, cooking utensils, linen suits, hats, sandals, tobacco, and the native drink, a liquor obtained from fermented rice. Only one article of the same kind is purchased from a single store. It would be an offense against Korean etiquette to buy a dozen at a time, as this would deplete the stock too quickly and give the shopkeeper the trouble and work of restocking before he was ready. It will therefore be seen that wholesale orders are not welcomed in this odd country; "little and often" appears to be the Golden Rule in buying.—Wide World Magazine.

Out For a Dicker.

The old fashioned farmer, who liked nothing more than to dicker, bobs up now and then to rub elbows with the moderns. In a department store recently one of the old fashioned kind approached the clerk and inquired:

"How much are you asking for rubber boots today?"

Then, when he was told the price, he looked wise and queried:

"And how much are you gettin'?"—New York Globe.

A Concession.

"My wife refused to recite the usual speeches in the marriage ceremony," said the worried looking man.

"That showed originality."

"Yes. But it hasn't prevented her from allowing the lawyer to use the customary phraseology in applying for alimony."—Washington Star.

Regular.

"Is your father a regular attendant at church?"

"Yes. He goes once a year, whether he thinks he needs it or not."—Chicago Record-Herald.

Well Trained.

"How long have you been married?"

"So long that I can't remember when I had a will of my own."—Detroit Free Press.

There is nothing at all in life except what we put there.—Mme. Swetchine.

ARTICLES LOST IN WRECK.

Nearly $50,000 Worth Have Been Recovered A Few Alleged To Be Missing.

The recent railroad accident at North Haven imposed a heavy task upon those charged with the responsibility for the recovery and return of the personal property lost as a result of the accident. How great was the task involved in this case may be gathered from the fact that the special agents and claim department of the New Haven road now estimates that up to the present there has been recovered and returned to the proper persons personal property amounting in value to between $40,000 and $50,000.

The number of articles scattered and lost at the time of the accident ran up into the thousands, but such was the diligence of the coroner, police and railroad agents in collecting personal belongings that only twenty articles or groups of articles are now alleged to be missing, according to the railroad authorities. As a result of the systematic work of the special agent's force comparatively few out of the thousands of articles recovered now remain unclaimed and these consist mostly of clothing and articles of relatively small value.

All articles which could be identified at once were restored as soon as possible to the owners or their authorized representatives. The remainder was held for personal inspection and identification. The jewelry was put in a safe and the other articles displayed about the room. A force of ten men in the special agent's department was busy for over two weeks on this matter.

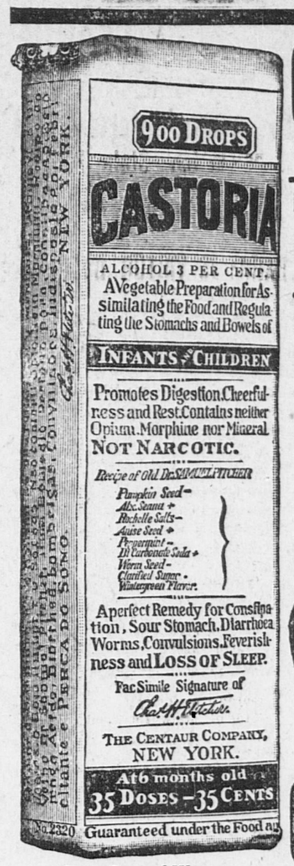

NOW HAS PNEUMONIA.

The Italian patient who was removed to the State Hospital at Tewksbury after the rare disease of Noma made its appearance, at the Quincy City Hospital has developed pneumonia and is in a critical condition.

The infection from the disease which affects the face in a cancerous way was breathed into the lungs and the pneumonia shortly developed. His condition is serious and but slight hopes are held out for his recovery.

The case was the first of its kind in Quincy and one of the very few in Massachusetts. It accompanied a compound fracture of the leg and appeared as the man was about to be discharged.

THE BISHOP'S CHOICE.

A celebrated Anglican divine, the late bishop of Rochester who had been ailing for some time, decided to consult Sir Frederick Trevers, the noted surgeon.

After a careful examination Sir Federick pronounced his verdict and added: "Your lordship must go to Algiers or some winter resort on the Riviera."

"Impossible," replied the bishop; "quite impossible. I have too much work to get through."

"Well," said the doctor, "you must make your choice. It is either Algiers or heaven."

"Dear me," exclaimed the bishop, with a sigh; "then I suppose it must be Algiers."

Toll Uses in Sales Campaigns

SUCH testimonials as the following from J. E. SOPER COMPANY, wholesalers of grain and feed at 206 Chamber of Commerce, Boston, furnish unimpeachable testimony of the value of the telephone, especially the toll lines, in sales campaigns.

We quote a paragraph of a letter to the Company from this concern:

"We find that the telephone takes the place, in a large degree, of men on the road, and that our business is done in a much more satisfactory way by having a man sell our goods from the office, as he then knows everything a salesman should know concerning the quality, location and other features of the goods, whereas a man on the road does not always have his information and is frequently induced to guess it, which does not work at all."

We would not suggest this rule in every case. The advantages of face-to-face salesmanship and the magnetism of a personality, coupled with the importance of showing many lines of goods, are not to be depreciated. On standard lines, however, once the salesman's personality is established, the telephone is an efficient auxiliary and especially helpful to the salesman in making advance appointment.

TRAVELING MEN interested in little stories of the advantages of the telephone as a business auxiliary, are invited to send for "Modern Methods of Money-Making." In Metropolitan Boston call the Contract Department, Fort Hill 7600.

CLAN McGREGOR LEAGUE

The O'Neils, McLeans and Michaels Win

Clan McGregor opened its bowling season at the Coliseum alleys Tuesday evening with three matches. Several of the men were in good shape but did not reach the 300 mark which will often be passed this season. High single of 106 but the best total of 289 was made by Peter Dackers. A large gallery was present at the match and the first ball was rolled down by Chief Angus Martin amidst great applause. The interest is already at fever heat and the fine assortment of prizes offered is an attractive inducement to the bowlers. The next match will occur Tuesday night. The teams roll under the captains' names. The scores:

The O'Neils beat the McKenzies 4 to 0 with Peter Dackers high with 106 for singles and 289 for total.

LOVER BARRED AT PRINCESS' FUNERAL

Prince Says Bridge Between Them Could Not Be Gulfed

London, Sept. 24.—The correspondent of The Daily Mail at Heidelberg says he was personally requested by Prince William of Saxe-Weimar to publish the following statement concerning his daughter, Princess Sophia, whose suicide has been attributed to the fact that she was not allowed to marry Hans von Bleichroeder:

"Baron von Bleichroeder, like all acquaintances of the house of Saxe-Wiemar, had a farewell view of the departed, but he was expressly forbidden to take part in the funeral or attend the cremation.

"As for the stories in regard to a marriage between Princess Sophia and von Bleichroeder, there only needs to be repeated the oft-spoken statement of her father, that all the money in the world would never have sufficed to bridge over the gulf between a princess of Saxe-Weimar and Baron von Bleichroeder."

GOVERNMENT FOR IRELAND

Prospects For Home Rule Compromise Said to Be Brighter

London, Sept. 24.—The prospects of the attempt to bring a compromise on the Irish home rule question have sensibly improved, according to The Pall Mall Gazette, which says it is able to state that important communications have passed between the British cabinet ministers and the opposition leaders.

Sir Edward Carson, leader of the Irish Unionist party, has started the second week of his Ulster campaign by delivering speeches which have led the Liberal newspapers to ask whether he should not be prosecuted or be deprived of his membership in the privy council.

The Servian troops lost one captain and a considerable number of men. They have since been reinforced.

JEROME DEALS CRUSHING BLOW

Partially Shatters Case of Thaw's Great Legal Battery

SAYS FUGITIVE IS INDICTED

Kept Secret Until He Could Secure Evidence Against Instigator of Plot —Words Have Bombastic Effect at Hearing Granted by Governor Felker —Thaw Tactics Are Scored

Concord, N. H., Sept. 24.—"From the very hour that Stanford White lay dead on the roof garden in the city of New York, his life taken by either a murderer or a lunatic—from that time to this minute—it has been said repeatedly that in the end the Thaw money would defeat the ends of justice.

"So far it has not entirely accomplished it, but wherever this case has gone and wherever it has rested, it has left a trail of ignominy, disgrace, filth and scandal behind it that has been absolutely appalling.

"The state of New York will not permit its justice to be defeated by the corrupt use of money, and that is why New York wants a man back whom it regards as a homicidal lunatic when influenced by his insane delusions and his vicious degeneracy at other times, a man criminal in his lucid intervals and dangerous in his insane ones."

So spoke William T. Jerome, special deputy general of the state of New York, to Governor Felker of New Hampshire, although he looked directly and defiantly at Harry K. Thaw as he said it, hurling the words at him with bombardic effect and creating one of the most dramatic scenes ever witnessed in the Granite State.

It was during the hearing by Governor Felker on the request of the New York authorities that he extradite Thaw on the charge of conspiring with others to effect his escape from Matteawan.

Charges of bad faith had been hurled at Jerome by Thaw's legal advisers; allegations had been made that they were resorting to subterfuge in a desire to return him to Matteawan, and the argument was made that as no indictment had been found against Thaw, the present warrant against him was not on an extraditable charge.

Jerome, however, burst a bomb under Thaw's legal status by declaring:

"An indictment was found by the grand jury, but before it was filed a request was preferred by the attorney general that the grand jury suspend further investigation until I could return from New Hampshire to present to them evidence concerning the instigator of this plot, a man more important than anyone yet named in the proceedings."

Again, in replying to the challenge by Thaw's counsel: "Why does he not pursue the chauffeur, Roger Thompson?" Jerome startled the great assemblage in the senate chamber at the state house by declaring: "We are looking after Roger Thompson; we expect Thompson will come back to the United States and turn state's evidence and tell all he knows of this thing. I have had a long personal conference with Thompson."

Throughout the long argument ex-Governor Stone of Pennsylvania, George F. Morris and William M. Chase had denounced the action of Jerome as a "subterfuge." To this Jerome replied:

"I had supposed that the last thing the state of New York would have to do would be to stand at the bar of a sister state upon a charge of bad faith. Mr. Stone designates our application as a subterfuge. Morris goes even further, insinuating dishonesty. It is not easy to rest patiently, without making a fitting reply and I think sober judgment will make Mr. Morris regret the use of such language."

Tears sprang into the eyes of Thaw's mother, and Thaw bit his nails nervously as Jerome hurled his stinging words at them. Assistant Attorney General Kennedy sat beside Jerome calmly twirling his thumbs.

Jerome's words cut so deep that the replies by Thaw's three lawyers seemed weak, feeble and useless. They had no "come back" and it seemed to be the consensus of opinion among the crowd that all was over for Thaw but the actual signing of the extradition papers by Governor Felker.

The governor allowed Thaw's counsel until Monday to supplement their briefs, but that only delays the end so far as he is concerned for a few days.

It is not the end of the fight for Thaw, however, for he still has his habeas corpus writ to argue in the United States courts next week, and if this also is decided against him he can appeal to the United States supreme court, a two years' proceeding.

Thaw Deportation Upheld

Montreal, Sept. 24.—The court of appeals upheld Charles Doherty, minister of justice, in having seized Harry K. Thaw at Coaticook and deported him. Doherty, the court held, was entitled to ignore the writ of habeas corpus obtained by Thaw's counsel to prevent Thaw's deportation. In its decision the court announced that the writ had been irregularly served, and granted the application of the government authorities to have it quashed.

WANTED FOR MANY CRIMES

Several Murders Laid at Door of Slayer of Merchant

Indianapolis, Sept. 24.—Convinced that the young man who murdered and robbed Joseph Schlansky, a clothing merchant, in a hotel here is the same person who has committed similar crimes in several eastern and middle western cities, the local police department has asked officers in every large city east of the Mississippi river to watch for the slayer. They believe the murderer is Joseph Ellis, about 21 years old, of Richmond, Va.

In each town where the man operated his scheme was the same. He would register at a hotel under an assumed name, call on either one of the smaller clothing merchants or a second-hand leader and explain that he had some samples he must get out of his possession at once, and ask the dealer to go to his room.

Once in the man's room, the procedure nearly always was the same. The victim either was struck down or forced at the point of a revolver to submit to being bound and gagged. Then his valuables were stolen and the robber, leaving the merchant to be discovered by hotel employes, departed.

$400,000 MILITANT FIRE

Torch Applied to Building Formerly Used as a Convent

Liverpool, Sept. 24.—Militant suffragettes set fire to Seafield House at Seaforth, four miles to the northwest of Liverpool, and caused damage estimated at $400,000. The members of the "arson squad" left a quantity of suffrage literature strewn about the lawns.

The building, which was formerly used as a convent, was undergoing reconstruction at a cost of $130,000 and was to be turned into a home for imbeciles. The entire institution is valued at nearly $1,000,000.

Cards addressed to the government bearing the typed message: "Mene, Mene, Tekel, Upharsin," the writing on the wall seen by King Belshazzar, were scattered about the grounds by the suffragettes.

SULZER RETIRES UNTIL TRIAL ENDS

Step Taken Because Proceedings Are to Continue

Albany, Sept. 24.—Attorneys for Governor Sulzer are prepared to exhaust the last of their legal ammunition to prevent the story of his alleged misuse of campaign contributions from being told on the witness stand.

Judge Herrick, chief counsel for Governor Sulzer, announced that in view of the fact that the court of impeachment refused to dismiss the proceedings, the governor would renounce his claim to the right to exercise the functions of governor pending the termination of the trial.

FREES ALLEGED SLAVER

Interpretation of Mann Act Is Changed by Kansas Judge

Wichita, Kan., Sept. 24.—Lee Baker, a barber, was acquitted of white slavery charges in the federal court here after Judge Pollock had instructed the jury that it must be shown that Baker took Cora Stover to Texas for commercial purposes before the jury could convict him of violating the Mann law.

Baker entered a plea of guilty. Pollock asked if the plea was based on the interpretation of the Mann law in the Diggs case in California. Baker's attorney answered that it was.

Pollock then said the Mann act applied only to commercial features of the interstate transportation of women and suggested the plea be changed to not guilty.

Keshiono's Garden

"It Must Be Fate."

By CLARISSA MACKIE

The curio seller who sits at the crossing of the Two Roads in Tokyo grinned amiably up into Terry Preston's sunburned face.

"If the honorable lord desires to see delightful flowers it would be much recommended that he pay call visit upon the garden of Keshiono."

"Where is this wonderful garden?" inquired Terry, to whom all parts of Tokyo were alike, to whom all the world was flat and stale and uninteresting now that Dulcie Morse had jilted him and married Oscar Converse.

The man pointed along the upper road.

"If the honorable lord will follow that road until he comes to a red gate in the bamboo hedge he will find beyond the gate a path that will lead him straight to the garden. Many have found happiness there," he added, with a sly glance at Terry's moody face.

"Happiness?" jeered Terry. "Pray, tell me how happiness may be found in a garden."

"Happiness," mused the curio dealer, fanning himself gently, "consists in being with those we love—in the case of a lover, with the particular beloved one. The story goes that many centuries ago a beautiful maiden named Keshiono lost her lover through a quarrel, and to console herself she made this beautiful flower garden. The gods pitied her and sent her lover wandering into the garden, and when he saw Keshiono flitting among the iris beds he fell on his knees and begged forgiveness. They were married and lived long and happily in a house which has long crumbled to ruin. When they died they were changed into two beautiful plum trees that guard the inner gate. Ever since then the garden has been noted for bringing happiness to disconsolate lovers. One has only to wander there."

Terry grinned in spite of himself at the man's fluency. "You have told the story many times?" he questioned as he moved away.

"And have witnessed the desired to be end," came back the answer promptly, and he deftly caught the coin that came spinning toward him from Terry's hand.

A laughing red haired youth came swiftly from the upper road and paused by the curio seller's booth.

"You're a cheerful liar!" he declared.

"The garden is only for the disconsolate lover," chided the curio dealer sedately as he pocketed his accuser's liberal tip. "The honorable lord is too insanely cheerful to be in need of the pity of the gods."

"Thanks. I suppose that's a compliment," grinned the other as he went on to catch a trolley car. "But you get us coming or going, eh, Togo?"

"Excuse. Name is not Togo, but is Yunisho. Good day, honorable sir. Get them coming or going. That sounds funny English," he mused.

Terry Preston sauntered along the upper road under the arching trees. The shaded footpath rambled beside a high hedge of bamboos, whose green feathery tops rustled pleasantly in the light breeze.

Now a well defined path wandered idly between green hedges until he reached a second gate that swung wide open. On either side of this gate was a beautiful plum tree, fresh in its May bloom of pink and white. These trees represented the beautiful Keshiono and her loving husband.

Terry involuntarily removed his straw hat as he passed under the trees, and he blushed a little at the surrender to sentiment that the little act implied.

"Bosh!" he muttered.

Beyond the gate he found the garden, a charming mixture of old and new. There were ancient corners where dark cryptomerias made a dim green shade. Here one came upon stone lanterns green with years and perhaps a summer house crushed in the deathlike grip of a giant wistaria vine that might be a century old, so hoary was its trunk.

Birds sang in the trees, and the waterfalls tinkled musically. It was very beautiful and deliciously still.

Terry found an old stone seat half hidden in a group of lovely oleanders in the older part of the garden. Surely this spot must have been the garden of Keshiono as it was in the old days.

Women's voices broke the quiet.

"Dear Aunt Ophelia," said the girl's sweet tones, "is it not perfectly wonderful?"

"It is. It is hardly to be believed, May," responded the older woman eagerly. "But look; see if that is not the colonel yonder! See, he is looking at the goldfish in the pool! Mark the sad droop to his shoulders in spite of his military training. Ah, but I do regret my cruelty to him!" she sighed.

Terry got up. He was feeling very uncomfortable now, but before he could make his presence known the girl had spoken quickly, decisively:

"Now, Aunt Ophelia, you know this is the garden of reunited lovers, and who knows what may happen? You look sweet, dear; indeed, you do! Now just walk along this path and you are sure to meet the colonel, and you have my blessing. He's a perfect dear." She laughed as her aunt moved majestically away in the direction of the stout, white clad gentleman gazing into a fish pool in a distant part of the grounds.

The girl came laughing out of the sunlight and flung herself in a corner of the stone seat, which sat in deep shadow.

She uttered a startled cry as she saw Terry Preston standing there, sunburned and embarrassed, in his gray tweed clothes, with his straw hat in his hand.

"Ah, I didn't know any one was here," she cried breathlessly.

"I was about to go," murmured Terry, with a reluctant glance at the stone seat.

"Pray do not let me drive you away. I shall go on presently." The girl settled herself in the corner, tipped her sunshade over her face to obscure it and opened a guidebook.

Terry hesitated a moment and then sat down, his cigarette still between his fingers. He glanced at the girl and saw only the white dress with the red book held open by pretty white fingers. He noted that she wore on her right hand a turquoise ring, and on her left, as she turned the pages, he saw a small ring on her little finger.

The rest of her charming person was quite concealed by the white linen parasol.

Presently there came a sneeze from under the parasol.

"I beg your pardon; I hope my smoking has not annoyed you. Really I forgot to ask you if you minded," apologized the discomfited Terry.

The parasol went over her shoulders, and he looked into a pair of beautiful gray eyes, black lashed and drooping at the outer corners. Such a rose tinted skin, such a dainty nose, such a kissable mouth with dimpled corners, such a firm white chin, such seashell ears peeping out from the midst of black hair!

Truly she was marvelously beautiful. She didn't look as though she would throw a fellow over because she had found a richer man. She lacked that little hard look in the eyes that marred Dulcie Morse's perfect beauty, and somehow she had Dulcie "beat a mile," in Terry's self expressed opinion.

Treason, pure treason, all this.

"I don't object to the smoke at all," said the girl pleasantly, then craning her pretty neck as she looked toward the spot where her aunt had disappeared.

"I wonder"— she was beginning when Terry interrupted her.

"They are coming now," he said—"your aunt and the colonel."

"Together?" she asked excitedly.

"Yes," and Terry craned his neck, eager to report to his fair companion any items of interest.

"Do they appear to be engaged"—she was beginning when again he broke in:

"Why, yes, you might think so. He's got his arm around her."

"His arm around Ophelia?" The girl arose and laughed tenderly. "You have surprised me, sir. I was going to ask if they were engaged in amicable conversation, but from what you say I am sure they must be! Perhaps I better explain that my aunt had a very unhappy love affair in her youth, and it just happened that we were directed to this garden of Keshiono. You have heard the story of how many lovers have found happiness here?" She looked at him with clear, beautiful eyes, in which there was no trace of coquetry.

"I have been told that story," said Terry, blushing deeply.

"If ever I was in trouble of that sort I should come here," observed the girl dreamily. Terry saw her eyes were fixed on the approaching couple, the handsome military man and the blooming middle aged woman, and he felt a swift pang of jealousy, the first dart of the little god.

"I hope you may never have to come," he said awkwardly. And then he added as the reunited lovers were almost upon them, "I hope you don't mind if I stay and congratulate them, for, you see, Colonel Preston is my uncle, and we are traveling together, and some day we may be cousins-in-law! I am Terry Preston."

The girl gave him her hand, and at that instant the colonel and Aunt Ophelia came upon them, and both started with surprise.

"Terry, you rascal!" cried the colonel, slapping his nephew on one broad shoulder.

"May—why, my dear, you don't mean to say—why, I didn't know there was anybody!" faltered Aunt Ophelia, her sweet eyes still dim with stirring of old emotions.

May blushed beautifully, and Terry went scarlet, but their eyes had met in one swift flash of mutual understanding, and each one knew that the garden of Keshiono had worked a magic spell upon them both that must never be broken.

So the curio dealer at the crossing of the Two Roads was not surprised when four people passed him, coming from the garden of Keshiono. There was an elderly couple with shining, happy eyes, and the man tossed him a wad of paper money.

There was a young couple, the man smiling tenderly down at the girl, whose eyes were half veiled to hide the awakening of love in their beautiful depths. Terry flung him a golden coin, and they all passed out of sight.

The curio dealer smiled contentedly and folded his slim, brown hands over the money.

"I get them coming, and I get them going, and they come back happy! There must be something in that garden, after all!"

SIX SPECIFIC CAUSES FOUND

Utilities Commission Reports on North Haven Wreck

LOSS OF TWENTY-ONE LIVES

Due to Bunching of Trains, Reckless Driving In Fog and Inadequate Signal System—Both Company and Men at Fault—Elliott Confers With McChord of Commerce Board

Hartford, Sept. 24.—Lack of an adequate signal system, the bunching of six trains within a ten-mile stretch of track and reckless driving by the engineers in a fog are given as causes for the collision between the Bar Harbor and the White Mountain expresses on the New York, New Haven and Hartford railroad at North Haven, Sept. 2, resulting in twenty-one deaths, by the public utilities commission, in its report on the accident.

Six specific causes are assigned, as follows:

Lack of an adequate signal system; had signal No. 23 been connected with a distance signal, the engineers of the Bar Harbor second section and the White Mountain express first section would have been warned of its position when half a mile or more distant.

Bunching of six passenger trains, during a fog (with the signal system then in use), in the ten-mile section between Wallingford and the Air Line junction.

Reckless running in a fog on the part of Engineer Wands (of the Bar Harbor express), who passed block signal No. 23 when it indicated stop, and the consequent clearing of signal No. 25 for the first section of train No. 95, following.

Failure of Flagman Murray of the Bar Harbor express to go back a sufficient distance to offer any protection whatever to his train.

The indifference of Conductor Adams (of the Bar Harbor), who did not show sufficient interest in the safety of his train, knowing that a train was following, to see that his flagman was doing his duty, and for stopping his train and calling in the flagman, who otherwise would have been left to flag the White Mountain express.

Engineer Miller's reckless running (of the White Mountain) in a fog and his failure to control his train and be prepared to stop before passing signal No. 23.

Engineer Miller, Flagman Murray and Conductor Adams are at present under bonds awaiting trial as a result of the finding of Coroner Mix, fixing criminal responsibility for the wreck upon them.

Elliott Concerned

Washington, Sept. 24.—Howard Elliott, president of the New York, New Haven and Hartford railroad, conferred here with the interstate commerce commission about conditions upon his lines. He was particularly concerned about the forthcoming report of the commission on the North Haven rear-end collision.

Elliott was given no inkling of the character of the report prepared by Commissioner McChord, after an exhaustive personal investigation. He was assured, however, that published forecasts of the findings of the commission were unauthorized, misleading and essentially inaccurate.

It is known, however, that it will contain not only a severe arraignment of operating conditions upon the New Haven, but of men. Responsibility for the accident is placed definitely, "man-fault" being an important factor.

Probabilities are strong that the commission, in its forthcoming annual report, will recommend to the congress the enactment of legislation that will reduce materially the chances of serious railway disasters.

WORK TO BE RESUMED

Southern New England Railroad Will Be Built by Grand Trunk

Montreal, Sept. 24.—Fulfilling the promise that work on the Southern New England railway, which is to connect the Grand Trunk with the seacoast at Providence, would be resumed as soon as finances permitted, it was announced by President Chamberlin of the Grand Trunk that contractors had been ordered to the spot where the construction was stopped about ten months ago and that from now on work would be pushed through to completion.

Dynamite Checks Village Fire

St. Albans, Vt., Sept. 24.—The village hotel, general store and postoffice, a residence and several barns and sheds were destroyed by a fire of unknown origin at East Berkshire. Dynamite was used to check the spread of the flames. The loss is $25,000.

Boston Stock Brokers Fail

Boston, Sept. 24.—Michael A. O'Neil and Neal Divver, doing business as T. H. Perkins & Co., stock brokers, Boston, filed a petition in bankruptcy, showing liabilities of $157,508, and assets of $106,639.

New Bug Bothers New Jersey

Trenton, Sept. 24.—New Jersey, the "Skeeter" state, is being pestered by a new bug—the saw tooth grain beetle. It eats everything, from choice fruit to paper bags and humans.

SWEET POTATO HARVEST.

How to Care Successfully For The Valuable Crop.

The sweet potato harvest begins about the middle of August. The main crop should not be dug until just before frost. In localities where frosts do not occur until late the sweet potatoes ripen and the vines show a slight tinge of yellow when ready for handling.

The soil should be comparatively dry at the time of harvesting. Bright, drying weather is essential to the proper handling of the crops. While sunlight does not easily injure the sweet potato, at the same time it must not be unduly exposed to hot suns. Neither should they lie exposed upon the surface of the ground during the night. During the handling in the field it should be the purpose to remove all soil and surface moisture from the potatoes.

Warmth and a dry atmosphere are needed while in storage. The home supply may be placed in crates and stored in a loft over the kitchen part of the dwelling, but should never be stored in bags or barrels without ventilation.

Sweet potatoes should not be handled oftener than is strictly necessary, the essentials to good keeping being a reasonable degree of warmth, a dry atmosphere and careful handling.

The storage house should be ventilated during the winter months, the outside air admitted only when quite dry and when its temperature is lower than that of the air in the storage house. If warm, moist air is admitted considerable moisture will be deposited upon the potatoes, thus injuring their keeping qualities.

Under proper storage conditions sweet potatoes will shrink from 6 to 10 per cent, but the loss in weight will be greater if the temperature of the house is carried too high. If the potatoes are not matured when dug from the field the loss from shrinkage may be as much as 15 per cent, and immature stock should be marketed early in the winter.

HOW TO TEST DIAMONDS.

Several Ways to Distinguish Genuine From Imitation Stones.

How to tell real from false diamonds is briefly explained by a contributor to a Vienna journal, the Washington Post observes. In the first place, he says, real brilliants may be recognized by their great hardness and high refractive index, which are not found together in any imitation stone. The diamond stays brilliant because it is hard, while other stones and imitations become scratched and dulled by friction.

For an experienced eye it is not difficult to decide from the appearance of the facets whether a stone is genuine or not, for those of real diamonds are seldom so regular as those of fine imitations. With the latter the greatest care is taken in grinding to smooth and polish not only the facets, but also the whole form into such a shape as to avoid differences in the reflection, refraction and scattering of the rays.

In the grinding and polishing of real brilliants, on the other hand, effort is made to keep the original size as nearly as possible, and some little irregularities in the facets and angles are preferred to any diminution in weight. In the imitations the superfluity of cheap material, which may be wasted without making any difference, enables a perfect counterfeit to be made.

If a person looks through a diamond, as through a bit of glass, at a black dot on a sheet of white paper one single point will be seen clearly. If several points appear or a blur is seen it is an imitation.

The white sapphire, the white topaz and rock crystal are commonly sold as diamonds, but more often imitations are made of glass. To recognize these glass imitations treatment with acids is also recommended, which removes the polish on the facets, while it does not affect the diamond, ruby, sapphire or emerald. However, an imitation made of glass yields to the hardness test, so that a chemical test is superfluous.

How to Make Smooth Gravies.

First have the liquor to be thickened ready to boil; then take a spoonful of flour and with a little milk or water work free from lumps; then thin so that it will pour easily. With a stirring spoon in one hand stir the boiling liquid vigorously; with the other hand pour in the batter.

The secret of having it free from lumps is to have the liquid hot enough to cook the batter at once and to keep stirring it until it is well cooked. Never try to stir raw flour into hot liquor nor to make smooth gravies in luke warm stock.

How to Remove Spots on China.

The beauty of old china is often destroyed by brown spots which appear on the surface. An effective way to remove these is to bury the dish in the earth, covering it completely. The darker spots require more time to remove them than the lighter ones. This method will not harm the most delicate china.

How to Prevent New Shoes From Hurting.

To prevent new shoes from hurting lay a cloth moistened in hot water across the place where the pressure is most felt, changing the cloth as soon as it becomes cool. This will make the leather shape itself to the foot.

How to Oust the Fly.

Set an open bottle of oil of wintergreen on the window sill; the flies will not come in. A bunch of asparagus grass has great attraction for flies. If placed in a room the flies light upon it and gradually become stupefied

SQUANTUM CANDIDATE

Hope to Have a Man in the Next City Council

A political rally to endorse a candidate from Squantum for the Quincy City Council will be held Friday night at the home of James H. Foster, Park avenue, Squantum. Invitations have been sent out to all eligible voters to take part in the caucus and a large attendance is expected.

Two candidates are now in the field for the place:—ex-Councilman John R. Nelson vice president of the Squantum Improvement association and ex-president C. E. Carlson of the Squantum Improvement association. A lively fight between the two candidates is expected.

The meeting was called by the following committee:—Frank Anderson, member of the Ward 6 committee, Charles Watts, Warren Fifield, Roger Mason, Anthony Zottoli and James H. Hagan. It is expected that the candidate endorsed at this meeting of voters will receive the unanimous support of all Squantum voters in the city primaries in an effort to secure representation from this section of Quincy in the City Council. For several years the entire representation from Ward Six has come from Atlantic, and Squantum voters believe that if they can unite upon a candidate that they will receive enough support in Atlantic, Norfolk Downs and Montclair to elect their representative in the city election.

—The general convention of the Protestant Episcopal church, which meets in New York on October 8, will be the occasion of a determined effort on the part of the larger dioceses in the country to change the plan of representation in the house of deputies. The change will be advocated on the ground that the present plan of representation is unjust, inequitable, undemocratic and un-American.

UNKNOWN AT HOSPITAL

Jumped from Moving Train at Midnight

A foreigner, evidently a Finn, jumped from a moving train at Quincy Adams Tuesday night and was picked up shortly before midnight in an unconscious condition. He is at the Quincy City Hospital with a bad case of concussion of the brain. It is thought that he jumped from the 11.38 train just after it left the station.

He was unconscious when picked up and is practically the same today. He recovered on the way to the hospital and is thought to have said his name was Mattson. He lapsed into unconsciousness before further information could be secured.

SECRET CONFERENCE.

The special committee of the Board of Trade, who were appointed to confer with the Houghs Neck residents and the residents of Squantum relative to the proposed plans of these two communities to petition the legislature for separation from Quincy, will go to Houghs Neck tonight to hear the residents of that section. The committee has already held two meetings but what evidence was submitted or what transpired is being kept secret. Outsiders, especially newspaper men, are rigidly excluded from these hearings and the committee have absolutely refused to give out anything that has been said or done.

Tonight's hearing at Houghs Neck will be carried on along the same lines; the main idea of the hearing being to hear just what Houghs Neck really wants.

HARVEST FESTIVAL.

A harvest festival will be held at the Salvation Army hall, 150 Granite street, Thursday, Friday and Saturday, evenings. Special songs and recitations will be given. Coffee and cake will be served. Fruit and vegetables will be sold. Admission free every night.

BENTON IN QUINCY

In the sixth district the Progressives nominated Horace W. Richmond for Representative.

The official returns were late in being received at City Hall and it was well along toward daylight before the last ward was officially heard from.

Unofficial returns were however received from time to time during the evening and as fast as received by the City Clerk were bulletined on the wall in the main corridor at City Hall.

The attendance of spectators at City Hall was small, and it was not found necessary for the City Clerk to rope off his office to keep out the general public. By midnight all of the crowd had gone except the City Clerk and newspaper men, who kept up the all night vigil. Shortly after midnight, City Clerk Crane provided a lunch of hot coffee, doughnuts and apple pie which was greatly appreciated by the newspaper men.

The total vote of each ward of the city and the time the official returns were received at City Hall is shown by the following table:

WEDDING AT ST. MARY'S

Miss Catherine Mannix Bride of Daniel E. O'Brien

Miss Catherine Berry Mannix, daughter of Mrs. Alice B. and the late Thomas F. Mannix, and Daniel Emmet O'Brien of Salem, were married at St. Mary's church this morning by Rev. Fr. Henry T. Grady, pastor, who ceelbrated the mass preceding the ceremony.

Miss Helen Burke, a cousin of the bride, was the bridesmaid and John O'Brien, a brother of the groom, was best man. The double ring service was used in the ceremony.

The bride wore a diamond necklace and was handsomely gowned in white crepe meteor, with train, trimmed with rose point lace, and wore a veil caught up with lilies of the valley. She carried a large shower bouquet of lilies of the valley. Her attendant was becomingly dressed in pink chiffon, wore a large picture hat to match, and carried a large bouquet of Killarney roses.

The bride was given away by her mother, who was dressed in crepe de chine with train and wore a grey hat trimmed with coral plumes.

The soloist was Miss Alice Celeste Foley, who sang Ave Maria, O Salutaris and Jesus, Jesus, Pray for Me. Miss Rina Bizzozero was the organist and rendered the Lohengrin wedding march as the bridal party proceeded down the main aisle and met the groom's party which entered from the chapel.

The altar was prettily decorated with a profusion of yellow chrysanthemums.

Following the ceremony the bridal party autoed to the home of the bride's mother on Rogers street where a wedding breakfast was served to the immediate relatives and friends. They left for a honeymoon to Maine and on their return will reside at Manchester-by-the-Sea.

The bride is one of the most attractive young ladies of the city. She is a graduate of Woodward Institute, class of 1906, is an accomplished musician, and possesses unusual artistic ability. She has been prominent in affairs of St. Mary's church where she has been a regular attendant. Mr. O'Brien is an attorney with offices at Salem. He is a graduate of Harvard Law school and is one of the most popular residents of that city.

The bride wore a diamond necklace and her gift to the bridesmaid was a pearl necklace. The gift of the groom to the best man was a diamond stick pin.

Five tables were in play at the weekly whist held by Mrs. Sarah Williams. Prizes were awarded to Mrs. Mary O'Neil with 65, Mrs. J. E. Poland, Mrs. Emma Marnock, Mrs. Jennie Welsh, Mrs. Thomas Newcomb, and Miss Marie E. Poland.

A party of Scotsmen had been having a little celebration in a Canadian township, and unsteady were the steps on the homegoing in the morning.

One fell by the wayside, and called for help from another wayfarer. The would-be good Samaritan tried to steady himself as he looked down upon the fallen one, and then settled matters by saying: "I canna help ye up, but I'll lie doon aside ye."

Dr. Sanders Did Not Recover Consciousness From Accident

Dr. Orren B. Sanders of 358 Commonwealth avenue, Boston, who was thrown from his automobile on Hancock street, Tuesday afternoon in a head-on collision with the car of the Citizen's Gas Light Co., died at the City Hospital at 4.47 this morning as a result of the accident. Dr. Sanders struck on his head, causing a fracture of the skull. He remained unconscious from the time of the accident.

Dr. Sanders was born in Epsom, N. H., in 1855. He was educated at the Boston Latin school, Amherst college and the Brown University school of Medicine. For three years he was physician to the out-patient department of the Homeopathic Dispensary at Boston, but of late years has been in private practice. He made his summer home in Egypt, and it was there he was bound when the accident took place.

Dr. Fred E. Jones, assisted by Dr. William J. McCausland performed an autopsy on the body of Dr. Sanders at the Hall undertaking rooms this morning and the remains were afterward taken to Waterman's undertaking rooms, Boston.

The physicians declined to give out the result of the autopsy, but it is understood that the cause of death was an intercranial hemorrhage, following a fractured skull. An inquest will be held within a few days before Judge Avery to determine whether or not the collision was unavoidable.

CHAMPION OF THE PEOPLE

Record of Ex-Mayor Bryant Has Made Many Friends

It has been said that one must go away from home to learn what the people think of us, and it is from this source we learn of the high regard in which Councilman and ex-Mayor Charles M. Bryant is held in the labor world. A recent issue of the magazine known as "The Union Label," is found the following very complimentary notice of one of Quincy's foremost citizens under the caption "Champion of the People's rights."

"In each issue of this magazine it has been the custom to write up some public benefactor, a man of the people, whom organized labor can heartily endorse. For this issue we chose a man who did things, and backed up his good deeds in the interest of the public with his time and money.

"Among the distinguished men in Massachusetts, none possess a larger number of business and personal friends than the Hon. Charles M. Bryant, ex-Mayor of Quincy. Of a genial personality, his magnetic qualities and broad common sense have proved of inestimable value in a business way and as a public official. As mayor of the thriving city of Quincy, he has made a record that has gained many friends as has been exemplified in the handsome vote he received each time that he was prevailed upon to run for public office, which covers a period of many years.

"Hon. Charles M. Bryant served as a member of the City Council for thirteen years, viz.: 1891, 1892, 1895, 1896, 1897, 1898, 1899, 1900, 1908, 1909, 1910, 1911, 1913, and for six terms was elected president of that body.

"Without solicitation he was elected president of the Council the present year, but resigned, owing to the many pressing business duties involved upon him, coupled with the conviction that he should relinquish the office in order that some other man should have an opportunity to serve in that capacity.

"Mr. Bryant also served as Mayor of Quincy for 1901, 1902 and 1903, when he served the city by conducting a creditable business administration and also made an enviable record as champion of the rights of the people that perhaps will never be equalled.

"Hon. Charles M. Bryant does not pose as a philanthropist, but has shown a broad, liberal, progressive spirit in a practical and substantial, yet most unostentatious manner. He has been one of the foremost contributors to funds for the betterment and improvement of Quincy's people and has donated among other things to its public institutions. Acts along this line including substantial checks for coal for the poor, the Quincy Hospital and the Thanksgiving dinners for the poor and needy.

"The most notable of Mr. Bryant's battles in the interest of the people was the time of the coal strike in 1902-3, when the price of coal in Quincy, soared to the prohibitive price of $19.00 per ton, Mr. Bryant, then Mayor of Quincy, bought coal and sold it to the people for $8.00 per ton. His activities in aid of the people at this time was nationwide, made doubly so by the enmity he created among the coal dealers.

"Many other instances could be cited showing the humanitarian spirit that prompted Mr. Bryant, but the above will suffice to show the calibre of the man.

"Mr. Bryant is treasurer of the A. Storrs-Bement Paper Company, one of the oldest and best known paper ware houses in Boston. As a member of this firm he shows the same rugged business-like executive qualifications that have done much to bring the A. Storrs-Bement paper Company to the proud position it occupies in the business world, and has attracted clients from home and abroad who have been its customers for years, and who appreciate, not alone the high quality of its goods, but also have a confidence in its dealings that truly places it as a business firm whose "word is its bond" and which always commands the respect of the business world."

WILL TELL OF HIS TRAVELS

Rev. Mr. Lillback to Report to His People Tonight

Rev. J. E. Lillback, of West Quincy is back from a trip through New Hampshire, Massachusetts, New Jersey, and New York and at a concert tonight, at the Finnish Congregational church, of which he is pastor, will give a report of his travels.

Among the places visited was Brooklyn, N. Y., where he recently accepted a call to the pastorate of the Finnish Congregational church with which is connected the mission stations of Staten Island, Nyack, Immigrants Home of New York, Jersey City, Richmond, Anglewood and Bergenfield in New Jersey.

At present there are 15,000 Finnish people in his knew field and Rev. Mr. Lillback has wide opportunities to continue the work so ably accomplished here.

Rev. Andrew Groop of Worcester has been called to the pastorate of the local church, and will send a definite answer this week. He was the first Finnish Congregational minister ordained in New England and his first sermons were preached here. He was instrumental in the organization of the local church and many members of the congregation hope to learn of his acceptance, since they consider him to be a worthy successor of their departing pastor.

During the balance of his stay, Rev. Mr. Lillback will visit at Fitchburg, Maynard, Gardner and Worcester.

All told, Rev. Mr. Lillback travelled and preached for six weeks. He is enjoying good health and says that he met with unusual success. His lecture on Finnish church government was delivered in many places and always received a warm welcome. He plans to assume his new pastorate, Nov. 2, but if arrangements can be made he will leave Quincy Oct. 1.

DELEGATES TO CONVENTION

Granite Cutters May Send James Reid to Seattle

A very largely attended meeting of the Quincy branches of the Granite Cutters Union was held Tuesday night to vote for a delegate to the convention of the A. F. of L. to be held at Seattle, Wash., early in December.

The granite cutters of the United States are entitled to three delegates to the convention. Of this number Secretary-Treasurer James Duncan is a member ex-officio.

The method of electing the remaining two members is by the referendum vote. Ten candidates are nominated and then the Granite Cutters unions throughout the country vote for two delegates and the two candidates receiving the largest votes are elected.

At the meeting of the Quincy branches the vote was unanimous for James Reid, the corresponding secretary of Quincy branch. It will not be definitely known for some time what the result of the vote throughout the country is but if Mr. Reid receives any support in New England outside of Quincy he is sure to be selected as one of the delegates.

REV. FR. GRADY IS TRANSFERED

Pastor of St. Mary's Will Go To St. Benedict's Church, Somerville

Will Be Succeeded by Rev. Fr. Thomas R. McCoy

Rev. Fr. Henry T. Grady, the beloved pastor of St. Mary's church, since 1908, has been appointed pastor of St. Benedict's church, Somerville, according to an announcement made this morning by Cardinal O'Connell.

Rev. Fr. Thomas R. McCoy, rector of the Cathedral at Boston has been appointed as his successor. He is a graduate of Boston College, 1895, and after his ordination was assigned to the Cathedral parish where he has since labored.

The news of the transfer of Father Grady will be received with genuine regret in St. Mary's parish, where he has labored so earnestly since coming to Quincy from St. Rose parish at Chelsea. He has been a factor in the community since his arrival and his progressive ideas for the development of West Quincy are widely known.

This summer he journeyed through Europe and a few weeks ago returned in good health. The evening of his arrival was a banner one for the parishioners who turned out en masse at a reception tendered him in St. Joseph's hall.

Last Sunday Father Grady announced that he had presented the parish with a chalice but made no mention of his probable transfer.

WHO WAS ELECTED

Many Ties and Vacancies at the Caucuses

A Wollaston Progressive requests that the names of the Progressive Ward Committee for that ward elected at the primaries on Tuesday be published. The official returns of the caucus officers however do not show that a single vote was cast for ward committee, the votes for these offices being blank.

For state delegates, ten family names were written in, of which number some received one vote and some two votes each. The official returns from this ward show that Gurney, Cline, Hinkley, McDonald, Parker, Dill and Gallagher received two votes each and Freeman, Pinkham and Leslie one each. Even if the names were complete there would be a tie as only five are to be elected.

The tango will keep on being fashionable until the dancing masters shape it up so that it is graceful.

This is a convenient time for summer hotels to burn up, but unfortunately the firemen often get around too soon.

Mushrooms don't taste very well unless there is felt to be a chance that they may turn out toadstools.

Apples are going to be high this winter, which gives the landlady a good excuse for supplying prunes regularly.

People with a relish for real wild west doings head straight for New York City nowadays.

Over in Europe they are strengthening the armies by adding a lot of dead aviators.

As Mr. Edison was more tired at the end of his outing than at its beginning, he appears to be filled with the true American vacation spirit.

There is a widespread feeling that the political bosses should steal money a little faster, so that they can increase their gifts to charity.

It is felt that Col. Goethals' great achievement should be suitably recognized, and no doubt some one will soon be giving him an ornamental sideboard that is too big to go in the front door.

Mayor Gaynor's habit of walking seven miles to and from his office every day would never be popular, as the health gained that way would not cost money.

It is proposed to revive spelling matches in the schools, but they would not be popular unless the words were in the Lation or other foreign languages.

You may not have money enough after vacation to provide a square meal daily, but there is some satisfaction in thinking of all the things you didn't want on the hotel bill of fare.

RECIPROCITY IN TRADE.

"Trade goes by favor" is an old saying. If a man makes no effort to throw business advantages in the way of his neighbors, he cannot expect that they will be much interested in his prosperity.

Yet a great many people , who are dependent on the industries of this town for their success, will buy in some other city, merely because they think they are going to save a margin of a few cents. The chances are that if they gave their alleged bargains the same careful examination they would apply to them in a home store , they would never pay down good money for them. But that is another story.

When you buy goods away from home, you cut yourselves loose from the business interests of your own town. You declare that you have nothing to gain by the friendship of your neighbors or the prosperity of your own community.

On the purely sentimental side, one has little admiration for this lack of town spirit. There is an element of disloyalty in refusing to help build up the community which provides you your home and the comforts and conveniences of civilization.

But laying aside all questions of sentiment, why not consider the advantages of making business friends at home? Every time you buy goods in a home store, you create a personal relation that may be very profitable This is particularly the case where you have anything to sell at home. The man who gets your patronage becomes personally interested in you. If you are in business here, the spirit of reciprocity prompts him to patronize your establishment.

Even if you work for salary or wages, the relations you create in the home stores, by patronizing the home dealer, may be exceedingly valuable in some future exigency. The man to whom you have given your trade becomes your friend, and if he can find some way to throw favors in your direction, he is glad to do it.

HE GOT HIS PRICE.

In Fact He Had to Have It and For a Very Good Reason.

Tody Hamilton had an experience with an editor of a weekly paper in Michigan when he was general press representative with the Barnum & Bailey show that gave him a new view of finance.

The big show was billed to appear at Owosso, Mich., and the contract agent with the No. 1 advertising car had failed to come to terms with the editor of a weekly at a little junction point twenty miles distant. Hamilton went to the little town, sought out the editor and prepared copy for a double column advertisement.

"I'll give you $10 and twenty tickets for two weeks' service in your paper, two columns, mostly cuts," said Hamilton to the editor.

"Oh, no, you won't! You'll give me $63 or the advertisement won't go," replied the editor coolly.

"Sixty-three dollars! Great Scott!" roared Hamilton. "That's more than your infernal paper is worth. I never give more than $10 and twenty tickets for our stuff in any country weekly. Man, you're crazy, stark mad!"

All efforts at persuasion failed. The editor remained obdurate. It was $63 or nothing. Finally in despair Hamilton exclaimed:

"Why do you make it $63? You might as well make it $163. It's just as unreasonable."

"I'll tell you, friend," replied the editor calmly. "I have a note coming due shortly for just that amount, and you have got to pay it."

Hamilton did, for he needed the advertising in that particular weekly, and the editor knew it.—New York Sun.

PLAGIARISM.

Only a Crime When One Filches From the Commonplace.

Plagiarize all you please, provided you steal from the right sources, for the secret of individuality is familiarity with the masters. The great geniuses were meant to be objects of plagiarism. To be plain, the more you absorb of a first class mind the more your own originality is fed. Plagiarism is only a crime when it is a theft of commonplaces from mediocre sources.

Let the young musician soak full of Beethoven, Wagner, Mozart and Mendelssohn. That is the surest way for him to find himself. To absorb comic opera music is the way to smother, lose and kill himself.

Let the young preacher preach Bushnell, Robertson and Brooks. So doing, he will come to preaching himself.

As for writers, there is truth in the advice given by a great man that the best way to acquire a good style is to read Addison and exercise oneself in endeavoring to rewrite him.

You cannot plagiarize the Bible, nor Shakespeare, nor Homer, nor Dante, nor Milton. These have ceased to be men; they are humanity. You can plagiarize Shaw, or Brete Harte, or the last "best seller."

To isolate oneself from the masters is not the road to originality; it is the road to vulgarity.

"Few English authors," says Hammerton, "studied past literature more willingly than Shelley and Tennyson, and none are more original."—Frank Crane in Woman's World.

Prehistoric Man In Belgium.

Prehistoric man has been traced in several periods in Belgium, and M. Putot, a Belgian geogogist, has made a novel attempt to estimate the population at different stages. In the lower Aurignacian period five of Belgium's numerous caves seem to have been inhabited, their capacity being fifty to sixty persons. In the Magdalenean period the population was probably sixty. Retreat of the ice permitted leaving the shelters at the close of this period, and the settlers on the banks of the lakes may soon have numbered 100 or 150. The coming of the Cervides forests perhaps developed a population of 1,000, which may have increased to 4,000 or 5,000 at the beginning of the polished stone age.—New York Press.

Whist.

Whist undoubtedly is derived from the old game of trumps, which has a purely English lineage. There is no record of the origin of this game nor of its development into ruff and honors, which was the parent of whist. The earliest reference to it is believed to be in a sermon of Latimer about the year 1529. The name probably is derived from the "hist" or "silence" which close attention to play demands of the players.

SURPRISES IN GAYNOR'S WILL

No Provision For Widow Except House In Brooklyn

SONS ARE WELL PROVIDED FOR

Rufus and Joseph Each Get Two-Sevenths of Estate Estimated at $2,000,000 — One-Seventh Each For Youngest Daughters, While Married Ones Receive but $1000

New York, Sept. 25.—The will of the late Mayor William J. Gaynor was read to his family by Michael Furst, the lawyer to whose custody Gaynor had intrusted it shortly before he decided to take the trip across the ocean in the course of which he died.

Neither Furst nor any member of the family would reveal anything of the contents of the will, but its main provisions were learned.

One of the considerations now most actively agitating counsel for the family is whether the mayor made any later will. If he did neither Furst nor any immediate member of the family is aware of its existence.

Should the document read to the family prove to be the last will and testament of Gaynor, its contents will be a surprise to many of the mayor's friends. According to its terms, the entire estate of Gaynor, the value of which may reach $2,000,000 or more, is divided into seven parts, of which Rufus W. and Norman J. Gaynor, the two sons, will receive each two-sevenths, and the Misses Ruth, Marion and Helen Gaynor, the three youngest daughters, each one-seventh.

No monetary or other provision is made for Mrs. Gaynor, the widow, under the terms of the will, except that the town house at 20 Eighth avenue, Brooklyn, is bequeathed to her. Whether Gaynor had made adequate provisions for her in his lifetime could not be learned.

There is no bequest to the two remaining daughters, Mrs. Harry Vingut and Mrs. William S. Webb, Jr., except a remembrance of $1000 each. This feature of the will, and the apparent failure to provide for Mrs. Gaynor's support, should this prove to be the mayor's last will and testament, will undoubtedly excite much comment.

Rufus W. Gaynor, who inherits two-sevenths of the estate, is the oldest son. He is 24. In 1908, when a sophomore at Amherst, he married Maria Oddo, whom he had met on an excursion to Boston. But in 1910 the marriage was annulled because of her pre-existing marriage to Salvatore Guiffi, a Somerville, Mass., barber.

Norman J. Gaynor, the second son, was graduated from Colgate university last June. He is 21.

Ruth Gaynor is 9 years old. She distinguished herself as a rider at the last show given by the Brooklyn Riding and Driving club.

Helen Gaynor, eldest of the unmarried daughters, is 19, and Marion Gaynor, who has also attained fame as an equestrienne, is 14 years old.

The married daughters, Edith and Gertrude, are the eldest children. Edith was married to Vingut in a runaway match in June, 1910, and Gertrude became the bride of Webb in the following year.

DEATH OF PATRICK FORD

Publisher Had For Years Advocated Freedom of Ireland

New York, Sept. 25.—Patrick Ford, for more than forty years publisher of the Irish World, died at his home in Brooklyn at the age of 78 years.

During almost his entire life he advocated the freedom of Ireland and was one of the foremost men of Irish birth in this country. He not only fought for the freedom of his native land through the columns of his paper and on the platform, but he raised large sums of money with which to carry on the fight.

Born in Galway, Ire., April 12, 1835, he was brought to America at the age of 7 years. His youth was spent in Boston. In 1863 he was married in Boston to Odere McDonald.

He began his business career as a printer's devil in the office of William Lloyd Garrison, the famous anti-slavery advocate. When 20 years old he began to write for newspapers, and from that time on his pen was used for the freedom of Ireland.

ANOTHER WAR MAY START IN BALKANS

Greece has begun active military preparations for another war. The Turks are said to be preparing to take the field with the Albanians.

It is reported from Berat, which is thirty miles from Avlona, that Essad Pasha has proclaimed Albanian autonomy under the suzerainty of the sultan, and has ordered Ismail Kemal Bey, president of the provisional government, to leave Avlona.

SETBACK FOR SULZER

Albany, Sept. 25.—Final decision on the defense's objections to including the "money" articles of impeachment in the consideration of the Sulzer case will not be given until all testimony has been taken. Presiding Judge Cullen advised that the merits of the objections of counsel for the governor to the articles be not decided at this time.

This ruling insured immediate proceeding of the trial, as the court of impeachment at once agreed to the recommendations of the chief judge and by a vote of forty-nine to seven sustained the suggestion of the chair.

This means that the trial will not be sidetracked by any technical pleading and reserves the chief question of law to be decided at the close of the trial as a part of the general question: "Is the respondent guilty or not guilty?"

MIX-UP ON MAIL BOX

Atlantic Man Calls Out the Fire Department

Another person tried to mail a letter in a fire alarm box Wednesday afternoon this time it being a man, but with the usual result. It was at Box 66 that he tried to mail the letter, and the next instant the fire alarm bells and whistles all over the city were sounding the alarm at 5.04.

Chief Litchfield was on the boulevard coming from Atlantic when the alarm sounded but was unable to count the box correctly and thinking it to be in the thirties he started for South Quincy. He had nearly reached City Square when informed of the correct number. The recall sounded however before he reached the box.

The Central station apparatus started back for quarters and had just reached City Square when Box 75 sounded at 5.22. As the auto passed through City Square officer Murray gave the driver the box number and the apparatus started for the scene. This was for a fire in a bed at the house of Mrs. Devaney on Quincy avenue. The fire was caused by a boarder smoking a cigarette in bed and the fire did but little damage outside of the mattress.

At 2.33 Wednesday afternoon the Central station auto responded to a telephone alarm for a fire in a boys play house on Bedford street. The fire had been started by the boys while at play. The building which was about six feet square was destroyed.

MOODY—DERBY.

Miss Maud Sanderson Derby, and Harold I. Moody, were married at Dorchester Wednesday by Rev. Benjamin F. McDaniel. The bride is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Frank F. Derby of 99 Bromfield street, Norfolk Downs.

Several months ago when her parents objected to her approaching marriage Miss Derby became the guest of her sister, Mrs. J. Whittaker, 12 Lawrence street, Dorchester, and news of the ceremony was broken to the mother of the girl this morning when a Daily Ledger reporter called at the home. Mrs. Derby said she considered it a sad affair.

Miss Derby is a graduate of the Burdett Business College, and has been the stenographer at the law offices of Swain, Carpenter and Nay. The groom conducts the Moody Pharmacy at Norfolk street, Dorchester.

EVENING SCHOOLS.

In view of the opening of the evening school system week after next, it will be of interest to record the growth of that department of the School Committee's work during the past four years.

In 1908, there were only 325 persons enrolled in evening classes, and the aggregate number of nights attendance was 3640.

In 1909, the enrolment rose to 356 with an aggregate attendance of 4956.

In 1910, the enrolment was 577, and the aggregate nights attendance was 8659.

In 1911, the enrolment reached 690, with an aggregate nights attendance of 9523.

Last year, the enrolment totaled 916, while the aggregate attendance rose to 14410. In four years time therefore, the evening school attendance of the city has quadrupled, and this increase has been shown in every department—grade classes, commercial classes and schools for the non-English speaking people.

In this last department, the School Committee is looking for a healthy increase this year, and will use one or two more rooms in both the Adams and the Willard buildings for that purpose. The employment of teachers in each building last year who knew the language of the dominant nationality in attendance had much to do with an increased enrolment and attendance, and the School Committee will undoubtedly go farther in this policy this year, as it results in a wider interest and enables the school to do more in the way of broader instruction.

It is planned this year, in addition to the instruction in the rudiments of English which constitutes the bulk of the evening school work, to give brief talks once a week through the interpreters on the government of the city state and nation; the history and laws of the country; the desirability, profit and requisites of naturalization, and some of the fundamental facts of hygiene and sanitation.

In view of the scattered but frequent disturbances that arise among people who do not know our laws and customs, and yet are with us permanently, it is desired that the fact be brought home to them that the law is at once the servant and the master of the people of the country, and that all persons stand equal before the law. The recent enforcement of the Sunday amusement law in the city enables this latter statement to be given to these people without danger of arousing cynical mirth.

Instruction of the type proposed will be new to our evening schools and where properly and intelligently given, ought to arouse thought among the hearers which ultimately would lead to intelligent action. The experiment will be watched with much interest and hope by all who look for civic betterment.

TEACHERS' ASSOCIATION.

The Quincy Teachers' Association holds the first meeting of the year tonight, which is in the form of a get-together meeting. Purely social, the purpose will be to allow the new teachers to meet and get in touch with those who have been here longer and to promote good fellowship and the good of all. The enactment of the state pension and retirement law for teachers, which law will go into operation next July has been welcomed with great satisfaction by the association, all of whose members would come under the provisions of this law except the teachers in Woodward Institute. The ultimate effects of this law will be far reaching as the best teachers will be drawn into and remain in public school work rather than private, and it will enable the state of Massachusetts to keep within its borders many good teachers who might otherwise drift away.

HALF-TIME SCHOOLS.

The half-time industrial school is now in operation on its second week, and the number of boys thus far registered is above 60. The new employment law hit the plans of the school a hard blow, as many boys were planning to enter the school who must now wait until they are 16. New boys were taken on in place of those who were barred from employment. The way this law is working out makes it imperative that the committee, as soon as possible, devise some form of school which will take care of the boys from 14 to 16, who cannot get work and must go to school but who are dissatisfied with the school of an academic type.

LIGHTING OF SCHOOLROOMS.

Public school children's eyes are often seriously damaged by poorly lighted schoolrooms. This fact should be remembered in building schoolhouses. Modern school architects and hygienists have worked out some definite plans to conserve eyesight, which should not be forgotten. For instance, in northern countries, where sunlight is less prevalent than in Southern countries, and where fog, clouds and smoke are common schoolrooms should have one-fourth as much window-glass as there is floor space. In Southern countries, where the atmosphere is clear, one-sixth window-glass space is sufficient.

The bottom of the windows should be four feet above the floor. Windows should be as numerous as is consistent with safe construction. They should be as far back in the room as possible, and to the left of the pupils. The windows should be contained between iron or steel mullions, and their edges should be rounded, to permit the ingress of light and its useful distribution, and to prevent shadows falling on the desks. As the best light comes from above, the windows should extend to the ceilings. If hills or tall buildings are close to the school prismatic or ribbed glass should be used in the upper portions of the windows, but not in the lower portions, as too much glare is produced.

Sliding or slat blinds should not be used. They are expensive and inefficient. Use double shades, so large that chinks of light cannot enter. They should be fastened in the center of the window and should roll up or down, so that light can be admitted from either above or below. The curtains should be light green in color. Blackboards absorb much light, and should be covered by light curtains on dark days and when not in use.

ST. MARY'S GUILD.

The St. Mary's Guild which suspended meetings during the summer will meet Friday evening at St. Mary's church to consider plans for the coming season. Committees will be appointed to arrange a social program and many new members will be admitted to membership. The guild, organized for charitable work, will close an active year next month with the election of officers.

PUBLIC LIBRARY NOTES.

The Thomas Crane public library now has on exhibition in the art gallery a most attractive collection of tinted photographs. These pictures, many of which are reproductions of famous paintings, are by Wallace Nutting, a modern artist who has already become famous by his paintings. The collection includes landscapes, interiors and exteriors of old-fashioned houses and groups which are colored in the most harmonious tints. Dainty Colonial maids in delicate blue and pink gowns are pictured in most appropriate settings such as; white Colonial doorways, wainscoted rooms and attractive open fireplaces.

Fire places and brick ovens of the sixteenth century coaches and quilted gowns of the seventeenth century, while even ladies in the hoop skirts and fashionable bonnets of the eighteenth century are shown gossiping, shopping and many times accompanied by Colonial gentlemen in bright red coats with powdered queues Life and beauty are the sentiments expressed by the artist through all the pictures and the landscapes are symbolic of spring with their green verdure and dainty pink apple blossoms . This collection may be easily appreciated not only by art connoisseurs by by the general public.

A DISTINCTIVE NUMBER.

Always of unvarying interest, the Saturday, Oct. 4, edition of the Boston Evening Transcript will be read by thousands of persons with gratification and benefit because of the many specially written articles on a variety of interesting subjects which will be printed in it.

One particularly good illustrated article is on "Homes at Small Cost:" About houses of seven and eight rooms for $4000; a similar group for $10,000, etc.

Anyone who has real estate, house or farm anywhere in New England to dispose of will find it advantageous to advertise in the Oct. 4 Boston Transcript, as this issue will have an exceedingly wide distribution and advertisers will receive satisfying results.

Many people who are not regular readers always look in the Transcript when they wish to buy or hire a house or farm, apartment, board or room, for they know that the largest lists of the better offerings are always printed there, as well as "want" advertisements of specially capable business assistants and good servants.

—It is repeatedly stated in the foreign press that Japan is aiding and abetting the revolution in southern China. Japan's Foreign Office asserts that Japan is observing strict neutrality. Japan's greatest need is for peace and order in southern China. Seventy per cent of her trade in China is with southern China and a large part of Japan's industries depend upon the Chinese market. It may be that there are individual Japanese in China who would like to see the Japanese Government intervene, but Jananese consuls in China gave warning to all Japanese subjects under their jurisdiction not to involve themselves in the Chinese struggle, and that those who disobey these instructions cannot expect any protection from their government.—Japan Society Bulletin.

ILLUMINATION OF MRS. HUNTER.

Mrs. Jabez Hunter was a notable housekeeper. So far back as domestic tradition ran she had come of a line of notable housekeepers—women who waged unremitting war not on dirt alone but upon all that nondescript variety of material which they were accustomed to comprehend under the generic term of "litter."

Her carpets were guiltless of a suspicion of dust, her floors scrubbed to the last degree of whiteness and her furniture ranged at exactly symmetrical angles with her spotless walls. Her brass and silver emulated the brightness of the rising sun, and even kettles and pans, transformed to mirrors, reflected the keen-eyed countenance of their mistress.

But Mrs. Hunter's energies were by no means exhausted upon inanimate objects. Each Hunter baby by turn had taken its first independent journey, into the world with its snowy cambrics protected by a blue calico "creeper," which was replaced on the child's arrival at school age by a checked gingham apron of proportions ample to envelop its small person and protect its clothes from soil. In vain five-year-old Tom had protested against the objectionable overgarment.

"The boys call me 'sissy,' muvver!" he declared with tears, but Mrs. Hunter's only answer was, "My little boy must learn not to be ashamed of anything that mother thinks best for him to wear."

One had only to scan the row of slippers ranged along the wall of the rear entry, from the number nines of Mr. Hunter himself to the small red moroccos of the youngest child to understand that the sacredness of the Hunter interior, like that of a Hindu temple demanded the removal of ordinary foot-wear upon entrance.

Mrs. Hunter was by no means unloving. She would have been ready at any moment, had the mergency arisen, to give her life cheerfully for her husband or children. None the less there was no room to her scheme of living for the small indulgences which might disturb the rigidity of her domestic code. To tolerate anything which might in any manner "make dirt" was to her a moral impossibility.

If her children's innocent desires or secretly cherished tastes conflicted with the housewifely regime, so much the worse for them, since the system admitted of no compromise.

It would be difficult to do justice to Mrs. Hunter's feelings when, after an unaccountably restless night, she found herself one morning unable to rise from her bed. Could it be possible that she was going to be ill? And if so, what would become of the housekeeping? As well might a watch be expected to keep time with its mainspring broken.

She had been accustomed to apply to all "hired help" the single adjective "shiftless." Was it in the hands of such as these that her spotless kitchen and closets the preparation of the family meals, the care of the children's wardrobe, the supervision of washing and cleaning days, were to be intrusted? She groaned aloud, vainly struggling with the pain and faintness which attended every effort to move. As the day advanced her suffering increased, and by the time the doctor arrived she was in a burning fever.

This proved the beginning of a long and dangerous illness, when through many days of weakness and delirium those who watched at her bedside alternated between hope and despair. At last the crisis passed, and with slow and feeble flow, the tides of life turned once more shoreward. For a time after recovering consciousness she was too weak for any connected thought. All the cords of interest and authority which she had been used to gather in so strong a grasp had slipped unnoticed from her nerveless hands, and she felt no impulse to take them up again.

One night she awoke from a more than usually refreshing sleep with a new sense of clearness in her brain. She made no movement, and the two neighbor women who were sharing the care of her supposed her still unconscious. The sound of their low whispering came to her ear with singular distinctness.

"If Jane Hunter hadn't taken a turn for the better, there'd have been a different deal in this house, I can tell you. Of course they'd 'a' missed her terribly at first. 'Twou'd have taken a good while to get used to having things move along easier like. Jane's been a good woman—none better, and mighty capable , dear knows! But she's held altogether too tight a rein. To be sure her children have gone on well enough so far, but I wouldn't want to bank on 'em for the next five or ten years. When home is too spic and span for anybody to have a good time in, young folks are bound to go somewhere else for it."

"You're right there, Mary. I made up my mind a good while ago that I'd let my folks do while I'm alive some of the things they'd be certain to do after I was dead!"

For a moment Mrs. Hunter's heart almost stopped beating. Could it be possible that her death would have been in the nature of an unconscious relief to those whom she loved better than her own soul? She throbbed with almost passionate indignation. But slowly the excitement subsided and with pitiless persistency her memory began to retrace long-forgotten incidents.

Once more she seeemed to be climbing the stairs to the room of Jack, her elder boy. She saw herself pausing in the doorway in surprised displeasure at sight of a great oak branch trained against the wall and holding a number of bird's nests of various sorts and sizes. A few fallen twigs and straws lay upon the spotless matting underneath.

"Jack!"

She saw the apprehensive look on the boy's face as he glanced up from his book of natural history.

"What do you mean by filling the house with litter?"

"Oh, mother! I'm making a collection. See, here's a hang-bird's nest—I've looked for an empty one ever so long. And this—"

"Jack, if you want a collection of nests, you can keep it in the barn loft. The house is no place for it."

"But mother—"

"Don't argue, Jack, dear, I simply can't have such messing. Take them out directly."

How plainly now she saw the hurt expression of the boy's eyes as he silently obeyed her.

Another picture: This time it was Tom standing in the kitchen doorway with a beautiful collie puppy in his arms.

"Can't I have him, mother? Henry Jarvis will give him to me if you are willing. See, what a little beauty he is!"

The young face was flushed with eagerness—the two pairs of eyes, the boy's and the dog's' seemed to plead in unison.

"I'm sorry, Tom, but you should have remembered what mother has told you before. I can't have a dog tracking up the floors and scratching on all the door-panels. You will have to take him back."

"Oh, mother, please!"

"Tom, I am surprised. Don't you know that when mother has said no you are forbidden to tease?"

The boy turned away with a half sob. His arm tightened around the silken body of the little creature, whose small red tongue licked his hand as if in silent sympathy.

"Mother." Now it was Susie's voice she heard. "Dick and Jessie are coming over to supper and their cousin Mary Gray." She flushed and hesitated.

"Yes, daughter. What is it?"

"Mother, could we have a fire in the parlor? Jessie's mother always lets her."

"Susie, I have told you often enough that a clean, pleasant kitchen is good enough for children to visit in. I can't have you racing over the parlor carpet."

"But, mother," Mr Hunter gently protested, "don't you think they might just this once? I'll buy another carpet when that one's gone."

"Jabez, I wonder that you can counsel wastefulness."

Oh, fool and blind that she had been! It was such easy little things as these that they would have been doing—if she had died!

It was hard to wait for the morning. At last it came, and with the first gray streaks of the dawn Mrs. Hunter heard the careful steps of her husband at the door and his whispered question:

"How is she?"

"Better—better!" she answered for herself in a voice clear though faint. "Oh, Jabez, come here! Tell me that you—you and the children would have cared if I had never got better!"

"Jane—dear—" faltered her husband, horror-stricken. She saw the terror in his face.

"No, no! Don't be frightened! I know what I'm saying. I'm not feverish, but—I've seen things! Jabez, listen! I want the parlor opened—every day, mind! And Tom is to have a dog, and Jack shall bring all out-of-doors into his room if he likes! Oh! this shall be a different place and I another sort of mother, if God lets me get well!"

Mr. Hunter laid his big hand on his wife's forehead with awkward tenderness. Her own pale fingers closed about it and the eyes of the father and mother met in a new understanding and compact, which was to transform a house to a home, and shape to loving ends the lives of those who dwelt within it.—Mary A. P. Stansbury.

QUINCY HIGH LINE-UP

Some Changes Made Which Should Strengthen Team

In preparation for the Quincy-Newton game at Newton on Friday afternoon several changes have been made in the lineup of the Quincy High team which may be to the advantage of the team. Mullen has been taken off the backs and Donnelly has been placed at full. Crosscup, who reported this week shows great promise, and is being worked out for the backfield.

"Swede" Jepson a new man, in the squad has been exhibiting good quality and the general appearances indicate that the backfield will develop the speed necessary to establish the school in the front ranks in interscholastic football.

The faithful practice and hard work of the coaches is showing results, particularly in tackling, a feat which was entirely strange to many of the candidates. Circling the field in pairs has brought several men into fine condition and the prospects of a banner showing in the first game are not remote.

INDOOR ATHLETIC MEET.

On Tuesday evening Miss Marguerite Louise Holbrooks class of the Wollaston Methodist Sunday school was entertained at the home of J. A. Sedgwick the superintendent. The entertainment took the form of an indoor athletic meet and the different events were entered into with enthusiasm by the young ladies who represented six of our leading colleges. Some of the sports were: A peanut hunt, hammer throw, standing broad grin, thirty inch dash, putting the shot and relay race.

Prizes appropriate for the games were awarded to the winners of each college. The young ladies present were Miss Marguerite Louise Holbrook, Lucy Palmer, Marian Clifford, Hilda Bailey, Genie Keith, Ethel Brown and Evelyn Hirtle.

PECULIAR ACCIDENT.

A peculiar and what might have been a fatal accident happened Sunday night to a baby girl of Upland road. The humidity of the air loosened the binding on a passe partout picture and the glass dropped striking the crib and breaking, a peice striking the back of the baby's head and piercing the skull. The mother found the baby's head covered with blood, and was much concerned for a while, but it is thought no serious results will follow. If the child had been lying face up it might have been more serious. It should warn other mothers to look to their passe partout pictures or any other wall ornament near the baby's bed.

NEW OFFICERS.

At the meeting of the S. Agnes Parker sewing circle of Paul J. Revere Relief Corps at the rooms of Mrs. Emma Marnock, Adams building, Wednesday evening the following officers were elected:

Vice President,—Mrs. Marion Baker

The next meeting will be held at the home of Mrs. Mary E. Powers, Bigelow street, Wednesday afternoon, Oct. 1, at 2 o'clock.

SPECIAL OF COUNCIL.

Mayor Stone sent out calls this morning for a special meeting of the City Council for next Monday evening. There are but two items in the call, so that the meeting will doubtless be a short one. The two matters are to draw jurors and to designate polling places for election of Nov. 4.

MINIMUM WAGE IN OREGON

Women Clerks to Get at Least $9.25 For Fifty Hours' Work

Portland, Ore., Sept. 25.—The industrial welfare commission of Oregon has adopted a ruling which will become a law Nov. 23, fixing a minimum wage of $9.25 a week for adult women clerks who are not apprentices; defining eight hours and twenty minutes as the maximum day's work and fifty hours as the maximum for a week, and making 6 p. m. the latest hour at which any woman may be employed on any day of the year in a mercantile establishment.

The order automatically eliminates Saturday-night shopping and Christmas holiday night shopping in such establishments. Some department store proprietors protested vigorously, but in vain.

Mayor of Charleston Files Charges Against Whaley

Washington, Sept. 25.—Charging that Representative Richard S. Whaley of South Carolina spent $60,000 in buying votes to be elected to the house and only accounted for $4500 in alleged perjured campaign expense accounts, a petition demanding Whaley's expulsion from the house was filed with Speaker Clark by Mayor Grace of Charleston.

"Whaley's campaign was one of unprecedented vote-selling," said Grace in his sworn statement.

"A bold, bald lie," was the way Whaley characterized the Grace charges.

DENTIST KILLED IN CRASH

Brother Who Was Driving Auto Threatens to Kill Himself

New Bedford, Mass., Sept. 25.—Eugene Burke, a dentist of Brockton, was killed, and his brother, William Burke, L. B. Crowell and Edward Ganley, all of Brockton, were seriously injured in an automobile accident on the Myricks road between here and Taunton last night.

The car skidded, struck a tree and was smashed. Dr. Burke sustained a fracture of the skull and died without regaining consciousness.

James Bartley of New Bedford picked the injured men up in his car and brought them to New Bedford. On the way, William Burke, who drove the ill-fated machine, became despondent and threatened to commit suicide.

BODIES FOUND IN DITCH

Farmer and Stepson Murdered and Mutilated by Robbers

Matawan, N. J., Sept. 25.—The bodies of Angelo Cantaloupe, a farmer, and Victor Lansuesula, his young stepson, were found in a roadside ditch near the farm, terribly mutilated.

They had been set upon and murdered while returning to the farm after disposing of produce here. Robbery, apparently, was the motive.

The elder man's jugular vein had been severed, and he had been stabbed repeatedly in the back and head. The boy's back had been gashed in four places.

Where Farmers Are All Rich

Mineola, L. I., Sept. 25.—When the Mineola county fair was opened a list of exhibitors showed that all farmers competing for prizes were millionaires.

ABRUPT ENDING OF THORP SUIT

MYSTERIOUS LETTER IN COURT

Hurried Consultation Follows Its Introduction by Counsel For Plaintiff and Agreement Is Reached Without Further Testimony—Cambridge Man Had Asked For About $125,000

Alfred, Me., Sept. 25.—Just as Charles K. Cobb was on the point of reading a letter to be offered as evidence in the Olea Bull Vaughan will suit he was called from the stand into a consultation, in the courthouse library, with the attorneys for both sides and Sherman L. Whipple of Boston.

Half an hour later the quartet returned to the courtroom and made the announcement, much to the surprise of the spectators, that the case would go no farther. An agreement was made by which Joseph G. Thorp of Cambridge Mass., the plaintiff, is to recover $98,090 and interest, amounting to $6090.

No intimation has been given as to the contents of the mysterious letter, the appearance of which seemed to bring matters to a head so quickly, not even as to who wrote it or to whom it was addressed.

Mrs. Olea Bull Vaughan, who was a daughter of Ole Bull, the distinguished Norwegian violinist, agreed, as administratrix of the estate of her mother, to pay Thorp $50,000, plus $40,000, and certain furniture, jewels and pictures.

Thorp brought action against Ralph S. Bartlet of Boston and Mrs. Amelia Shapleigh of Lebanon, Me., executors of Mrs. Vaughan's will, to recover this money and property, and asked $25 000 damages because the agreement was not kept.

The end of the case was as spectacular as t was abrupt. Charles F. Cobb of Boston, who was an attorney for the executors of the will of Mrs Vaughan, took the stand and was asked by B. F. Cleaves, representing Thorp, to read a letter which he held in his hand.

Before Cobb could start to read, Attorney Whitehouse, for the executors, beckoned Cleaves to his side. The two lawyers talked for a moment, and Cobb was called from the stand. Then came the conference in the lobby, after which it was announced the case was ended.

The agreement by which the case was settled is in effect a compromise. for Thorp asked for about $125,000. Judge Hanson approved the agreement in the presence of the jury.

WORK IS HELD UP

Grand Trunk Not Going Ahead on Southern New England Road

Providence, Sept. 25.—Belief that work on the Southern New England railway, the line that was to connect the Grand Trunk railway with the sea by way of Providence, would be resumed speedily, was dispelled in a telegram from President Chamberlin of the Grand Trunk. The message read:

"Regret to say that Southern New England has not yet made financial arrangements which would warrant its resuming work in Rhode Island."

This message was in answer to a request for confirmation of an announcement made at Montreal that the contractors had been ordered to proceed with construction operations.

Thaw No Longer a "Drawing Card" In New Hampshire Capital

Concord, N. H., Sept. 25.—Local interest in the fortunes of Harry K. Thaw appear to have subsided greatly since the hearing before Governor Felker on the petition of the New York authorities for the extradition of the Matteawan fugitive.

The crowd that has loitered about Thaw's hotel in the hope of catching a glimpse of the prisoner is absent and the guests at the hotel bestow very little attention upon him. Thaw is under the joint custody of federal and state officers.

COTHAM SOCIETY SHOCKED

Mrs. Mackay Charged With Alienating Blake's Affections

New York, Sept. 25.—The news that Mrs. Catherine K. Blake, wife of Dr. Joseph A. Blake, had served a summons and complaint on Mrs. Clarence Mackay for $1,000,000 for the alienation of the affections of Blake, caused a general shock among the wealthiest and most exclusive New York society people.

The friendship between the wife of the principal owner of one of the two great telegraph systems of this country and many cable lines and Blake has for more than a year been the subject of gossip in the homes among whom the Mackays and the Blakes had their friends. Public discussion now is only caused by the determination of Mrs. Blake to have an open adjustment of the grievance which she feels she h against her husband and Mrs. Mackay.

Clarence Mackay with his three children, ranging in age from 14 to 6 years, went abroad in the middle of June, sailing secretly under an assumed name from this port. They are now in Scotland.

Opposition In United States Will Not Deter Purposes

Paris, Sept. 25.—News cablegrams telling of adverse criticism directed against Mrs. Emmeline Pankhurst by her sisters in the United States will not deter her from making her proposed trip across the Atlantic to make speeches. Christobel Pankhurst, speaking for her mother, said:

"If suffrage organizations in the Unted States refuse to invite my mother to speak under their auspices, she will deliver independent addresses. My mother is too courageous to be discouraged by the remarks of a few women who are half-hearted to the great cause.

"So far as I know there are no American laws to prevent my mother from talking wherever she wants to and she will do that in spite of any opposition."

"DRY" STUDENTS EXPELLED

Total Abstainers Not Wanted In Old German University

Greifswald, Ger., Sept. 25.—The expulsion on account of their total abstinence principles of a number of students from Greifswald university, one of the oldest in Germany, founded in 1456, has caused a sensation here.

The students, numbering about 1000, were called together to attend a typical "beer evening" in celebration of the jubilee of Emperor William's reign, at which the rector presided.

Several abstainers protested and were thereupon reprimanded by the officials, who declared their protest an "incitement to action against academic customs."

The Diamond Block

A Case of Too Strong a "Detective Instinct"

By CLARISSA MACKIE

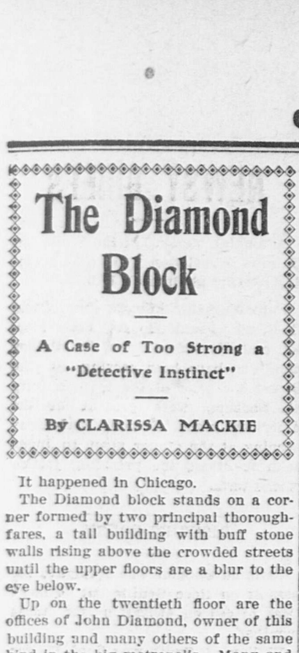

It happened in Chicago.

The Diamond block stands on a corner formed by two principal thoroughfares, a tall building with buff stone walls rising above the crowded streets until the upper floors are a blur to the eye below.

Up on the twentieth floor are the offices of John Diamond, owner of this building and many others of the same kind in the big metropolis. Many and varied are the interests of this rich man and the transaction of his affairs requires the reservation of the entire twentieth floor for his offices.

All day long dozens of clerks pore over ledgers, typewriters and adding machines.

Mr. Diamond was seldom seen about the building. Most of his business was transacted through competent executives, of whom Henry Robinson was the chief. The Diamonds lived in a magnificent house on the lake front and went in for society. Helen Diamond, the beautiful daughter of the multimillionaire, had drifted through the offices once or twice to see her father, and her coming and going had blazed a trail of fire in the heart of George Brown, the newest clerk on the force.

"WHAT DOES THIS MEAN?" HE DEMANDED.

It was a singular fact that Mr. Diamond's rare visits to his offices were invariably on the eve of his departure for Colorado and Arizona, where he had extensive mining interests.

It was immediately after one of these periodical visits of John Diamond that young George Brown, the new accountant, did a bit of detective work that brought him to the personal notice of the great John Diamond himself.

Young Brown was a slim, dapper youth, who did not hate himself in the least and who was not in love with work of any sort. He read detective stories and knew positively that he was one of the chosen few. He possessed the "detective instinct." He believed himself quite fascinating enough to win his employer's daughter, Helen Diamond, flattering himself that he was capable of becoming general manager of the whole business and so would be an acceptable son-in-law.

One morning young Brown entered the elevator and was sped up aloft with other workers. The car stopped at the eighteenth floor to let off passengers and again at the nineteenth to drop Trowbridge, who worked in the Dover insurance offices. Up it shot to the twentieth floor, where Brown got off with a puzzled frown marring his ingenuous brow.

The empty car dropped down and as it went he watched it intently. Then he walked to another elevator and rode down to the ground floor, counting each floor as he passed. When he again mounted to the twentieth floor there was a strange light in his eyes and excitement tingling every nerve of his sensitive frame.

He was on the verge of a mystery, the solving of which would place him in the limelight of publicity and bring down upon his talented head the eternal approval and friendship of John Diamond.

Over his ledger Brown pondered the facts as he had stumbled upon them. Between the nineteenth and twentieth floors of the Diamond block there was an expanse of white wall quite unaccounted for—why, that blank wall was the height of any of the other floors in the building and yet there appeared no door to mar its surface. The elevators were of special construction, with walls of solid metal plates and a grilled door, and the passing of this fifteen feet of unaccounted for space might be quite unnoticed unless one was sharp eyed and sharp eared, like young Brown. Why should there be such a waste of space in this great building, where every foot of room was valuable?

That was the mystery, and George Brown resolved to solve it.

At noon, as he waited for the elevator, he saw the roof of the ascending car stop just below his floor level, and he distinctly heard Mr. Robinson's voice. When the elevator reached the twentieth floor it was empty.

"I thought Mr. Robinson was on the car," said Brown curiously.

The middle aged operator shook his head negatively.

Henry Robinson, the manager of the Diamond interests, was a martinet in discipline. George Brown despised him accordingly and knew with unerring certainty that he could fill Robinson's job with one hand tied behind him.

Brown argued thus: Henry Robinson had supervised the building of the Diamond block—what more natural than he should connive to have one of the floors sealed to public knowledge, yea, even the knowledge of his guileless employer, and use it to his own advantage? What sort of work was carried on secretly there? George Brown had it all figured out to a nicety; counterfeiting, of course.

Robinson, the counterfeiter! What a morsel for the amateur detective to roll under his tongue.

But George Brown wanted to be very sure that he was right before springing his information upon the unsuspecting John Diamond. Just at this time Mr. Diamond was in the west.

So George Brown entered the tall building across the street and surveyed the Diamond block from the outside and studied the Diamond block from an upper floor whose windows were on a level with the windows of the mysterious unnumbered floor of the Diamond block.

Counting carefully he found the nineteenth floor, gold lettered windows of the Dover Insurance company quite distinct—then another set of windows unlettered, closely curtained, then above them the wire screened windows of the Diamond offices, known as the twentieth floor.

At last he decided to consult a detective.

So one evening at 6 o'clock the elevator carried up five passengers—George Brown, Allen, the detective, and two policemen in plain clothes and a reporter from the Daily Dishup, for Brown did not want his triumph to pass unnoticed.

When they had risen several stories Allen placed his hand on the arm of the elevator man and showed a revolver.

"You are my prisoner," he said coolly. "Now, my man, no fuss. Just stop at that unnumbered floor between the nineteenth and twentieth."

White of face and with muttered protests the man brought the car to a standstill before that mysterious, unnumbered space that had attracted the attention of keen young Brown. Instead of opening the usual door, the man turned and slid back a door in the rear of the elevator, disclosing a corresponding doorway in the wall.

That was the entrance to the unnumbered floor.

George Brown was a-tremble with exultation.

The five entered the door and found themselves at once in a narrow passageway, softly lighted and thickly carpeted. As they passed from one luxuriously furnished room to another Brown pictured the downfall of the guilty manager when his secret should be disclosed to Diamond.

Handsome library, luxurious smoking room, billiard room and then the murmur of voices from an adjoining room brought the five to a standstill before a closed door.

Then with one movement the five pushed into a small, lighted study, where sat Robinson, the manager, in intimate conversation with—John Diamond himself!

The millionaire sprang to his feet and stared angrily at the invaders.

"What does this mean?" he demanded.

The detective, Allen, was quite unwilling to share the honor alone. He grasped George Brown by his coat collar and pushed him to the front. In picturesque words he explained the situation.

"And this young pinhead"—he ended in a gasp of rage as he shook George Brown as a terrier shakes a rat.

Mr. Diamond was smiling austerely.

"Gentlemen," he said at last, "this private suit of rooms is the only refuge of a man weary of the noise and clatter of the world and the hollow thing called 'society.' Here I can hide for weeks at a time, absorbed in my books and in my experimental work in the laboratory yonder. Now that you have spied me out I can no longer remain unless I have your word of honor that my secret shall remain unpublished."

Freely they gave the promise, all save George Brown, who was too crushed for utterance. He merely nodded his head in a broken hearted way and was glad that he knew of another job that he might have for the asking, a job where there was so much work to be done that there was no time for the development of the detective instinct.

But the reporter of the Daily Dishup yielded to temptation one day and published the whole story, and to the end of it he appended the announcement of the engagement of Miss Helen Diamond to Henry Robinson, general manager of the Diamond interests.

And George Brown, sticking manfully to his new job, smiled bitterly when he read the announcement and took to his breast the one crumb of consolation it afforded him.

He had been right in his argument that a millionaire's daughter sometimes marries her father's general manager.

CENSURE FOR DIRECTORATE

In Commerce Commission's Report on Railroad Wreck

ARE "MAGICIANS" IN FINANCE

Suggestion That More Consideration Be Paid to Safety on New Haven Road—Discipline Weak and Ineffective—Disobedience of Rules Caused Wallingford Wreck

Washington, Sept. 25.—Censuring the directorate of the New York, New Haven and Hartford railroad for the Wallingford wreck on Sept. 2, in which twenty-one persons lost their lives, the interstate commerce commission issued a full report of the investigation of the accident.

The report holds that the directorate "should feel themselves called upon to turn from the consideration of the financial questions in which the road is involved and give their consideration to the questions of safety."

The commission calls attention to the large number of wrecks which have taken place on the New Haven and virtually places responsibility for these accidents and the resultant loss of life upon the directorate of the road, whom it refers to as "magicians in the art of finance and wizards in the construction, operation and consolidation of great systems of railroads."

The report further calls attention to the fact that "no intelligent system was devised by which to ascertain when the rules were disobeyed."

It is also charged that rules were violated many times and that only small portions of these violations were reported to the officials of the company.

"Discipline was weak and ineffective," reads the report, "certainly a fault of the management. Rules were inefficient and the fault of the higher officials. Rules were inadequately enforced, the blame for which must be charged to the officials.

"This government has the power, if this railroad will not itself exercise its own authority, to compel the safeguarding of traffic over this line."

The direct and proximate cause of this disaster, says the report, was the failure of those members of these train crews to obey rules to exercise the degree of care under the circumstances which was commensurate with grave responsibility resting upon them at that time.

"Man failure in this case," says Commissioner McChord, who prepared the report after an exhaustive personal investigation of the accident, "began high up in official authority, and it was not an unnatural sequence that it reached down to those in positions lower in official rank, but still weighted with great responsibility.

"Reference to the management of this railroad has no application to the new president. Presumably he was selected because of his fitness as a railroad manager. It is to be hoped that he may be permitted to devote himself primarily to the problems of safety of operation which plus railroad management is now under the highest compulsion of duty and humanity properly to solve."

"OTHER EXPENSES"

Cost the New Haven Road the Snug Little Sum of $337,469

Boston, Sept. 25.—The confession of the New Haven railroad that it spent $337,469.71 from Dec. 1, 1912 to June 30 of this year, in payments to newspaper men, publicists, newspapers and magazines and to lawyers for work not covered by their usual legal fees, is the chief topic of discussion at the state house and on State street.

Frederick J. Macleod, chairman of the public service commission, took official cognizance of the inference drawn from a payment to him of $700, and at the $67,000,000 bond hearing stated that the money was paid him as a member of the Springfield riverfront commission, created by the legislature, which stated in its act that the members of the commission should be paid by the railroads involved in the dispute which the commission settled.

The commission wants to know how the road spent $337,469.71 casually listed on the financial statement as "other expenses."

LAMAR UNDER $3000 BOND

"Wolf of Wall Street" Must Appear Before Grand Jury

Washington, Sept. 25.—David Lamar, "the Wolf of Wall Street," was held for the action of the New York grand jury by Judge Taylor, United States commissioner, on a charge of impersonating congressmen to financiers in Wall street.

Lamar was released on $3000 bond. Lamar's attorneys said they would start habeas corpus proceedings in a few days.

Dive Over Cliff to Death

Des Moines, Sept. 25.—Leroy R. Tillotson and Harry Whitten, newspaper stereotypers, were killed when they drove over a fifty-foot cliff. They were riding in a buggy.

A Monster Mushroom

London, Sept. 25.—An 8½-pound mushroom, 47½ inches in circumference, grown in Dorsetshire, broke the British mushroom record.

Winged Creatures of Borneo.

In Borneo winged creatures are encountered where one would least expect them. Flying fish the size of herrings are found in all the waters, and there is the flying fox, the well known fruit eating bat, which the Malays call "kruang." They may be seen almost any evening winging their steady flight often at a great elevation well out of range of a shotgun. The flying squirrels as evening twilight comes are also seen. They glide down from one lofty tree to the base of another, up which they scramble to the level they started from. Wide expansions of skin between the fore and hind limbs act in parachute fashion and sustain them in their glide. They are of some size, but are quite harmless. The flying lizard is seen in the heat of the day in the jungle gliding down with a flash in much the same manner as the squirrel. But he is much smaller and it requires a quick eye to detect him. The natives kill him with a clay ball shot from their blowpipes.—North Borneo Herald.

Spiders That Hunt Fish.

There are certain large sea spiders two feet from toe to toe, called Collosendels gigas, that live in the water and feed entirely upon mollusks and worms.

The carnivorous wolf spider, an amphibious inhabitant of the tropical regions of South America, is said to prefer a fish diet, though it is not averse to eating mice, young birds and even snakes, resembling in this respect the theraphosidae, or bird catching spiders, of India and Queensland, some of which equal a rat in size.

The colisendels is the most formidable specimen of the spider family, measuring six inches around the body and possessing twelve long, hairy legs, with which it grips its finny prey. It attacks fish several times larger than itself and after biting them through the back and stinging them to death gluts itself by sucking the juices from the bodies of its victims.

Enterprise.

A well known business establishment recently sent out a circular to the trade with which it has dealings announcing the death of the head of the firm. To the astonishment of the firm, there was received from a printing house the following reply to the circular:

"Gentlemen—It is with deep regret that we learn by your circular of recent date of the great loss sustained by your firm, and we respectfully beg to express our heartfelt sympathy.

"In this connection we observe that your circular is printed by Messrs. Blank & Co. We feel confident that had you placed this order with us we could have quoted you cheaper and better terms than any other firm; consequently in the deplorable event of a future bereavement we trust that you will afford us an opportunity to make you an offer in this regard."—Exchange.

How Caterpillars Build.

Many clever caterpillars which dwell habitually in company build a common nest for the common benefit. Of these is the famous American tent caterpillar. The tents are really nests of silk spun among leaves and twigs. In them the caterpillars dwell when young, and to them they resort for shelter in rainy weather even when larger grown. Allied species which pass through the winter in the caterpillar state construct winter sleeping quarters which the bookish folk call hibernaculums. These are often conspicuous among the branches during the cold months of the year. If torn open they reveal a surprising thickness of spun silk, forming a dense nonconductive wall. At the center of the mass lie from thirty to fifty tightly packed caterpillars waiting for the return of the warm weather, when they will resume their feeding.

Why They Quarreled.

"I hear that you quarreled with Harry," said one young woman to another. "Is it so?"

"Yes, I did," replied the other girl. "He is a horrid thing. He asked me how old I was, and I told him twenty-one, and he wouldn't believe me!"

"Indeed!" said the first. "Well, you should have referred him to Bob Yates. He could swear you told him the very same thing four years ago."—Detroit Free Press.

Where He Got It.

Teacher—Now, Willie, where did you get that chewing gum? I want the truth. Willie—You don't want the truth, teacher, and I'd rather not tell a lie. Teacher—How dare you say I don't want the truth! Tell me at once where you got that chewing gum. Willie—Under your desk.—Exchange.

Illustrative Dances.

"Well, doesn't it seem possible that some of these popular dances tend to illustrate the movements of persons dodging a flock of motorcars?"—Washington Star.

How to Treat a Wire Cut.

A man's future is his own. He makes it himself every day as he goes along through life.

WEDDING SUPERSTITIONS.

Curious Customs That Used to Be Observed In England.

Superstition never clustered round any episode of life more than that of the wedding day, especially in olden times.

Then it was customary for the bride to present her future husband with a bunch of rosemary tied up with ribbons on his first appearance on the wedding morning. This was supposed to secure his love and loyalty and to make her happy forever.

In Yorkshire the old superstition still abounds that nothing more unlucky could happen than for a newly made bride to leave the church by a different door from that by which she entered.

Another quaint custom, for which there is no known origin, is that practised in some of the midland and northern counties of England. This is to ring a merry peal of the church bells at the first reading of the banns of an intending matrimonial couple. It is called the "spur peal," which in old Anglo-Saxon means simply "ask."

Of course it is well known that it is the height of luck for a bride to be to dream of fairies the night before the actual ceremony. So much was this idea believed in that many girls would peruse fairy tales before going to sleep.—London Telegraph.

NO NAME FOR A POET.

Miller Was Open to Conviction and Shed the Heavy Burden.

"Cincinnatus Heine" was the name that the parents of Joaquin Miller bestowed on him at his christening. How the poet came to adopt the name "Joaquin," under which he is universally known, was told by Mr. Charles Phillips, editor of the San Francisco Monitor. Miss Ina Coolbrith, of whom he speaks, is the California poetess who has been called the "Sappho of the west."

In 1870, when he came down from Oregon and published his first little book of poems, entitled "Joaquin et al.," he told Miss Coolbrith of his determination to go to London and win fame.

"How in the world," she asked him, "do you expect to climb Parnassus with such a name as you have? Miller is bad enough, but Cincinnatus Heine is impossible!"

"But what can I do?" Miller asked. "It's my name, isn't it?"

"Why don't you take some name that will identify you with California?" Miss Coolbrith rejoined. "Take the name of your first book; call yourself Joaquin."

"By George, I'll do it!" said Miller. And from that day he signed himself "Joaquin Miller."

Not a Soloist.

The late Theodore Thomas was rehearsing the Chicago orchestra on the stage of the Auditorium theater. He was disturbed by the whistling of Albert Burridge, the well known scene painter, who was at work in the loft above the stage. A few minutes later Mr. Thomas' librarian appeared on the "bridge" where Mr. Burridge, merrily whistling, was at work.

"Mr. Thomas' compliments," said the librarian, "and he requests me to state that if Mr. Burridge wishes to whistle he will be glad to discontinue his rehearsal."

To which Mr. Burridge replied suavely, "Mr. Burridge's compliments to Mr. Thomas, and please inform Mr Thomas that if Mr. Burridge cannot whistle with the orchestra he won't whistle at all."

Rocking Chair Signs.

An observant Atchison woman says she can tell from the way a woman rocks on her front porch what condition the house behind her is in. If she sways back and forth with a floppy, comfortable motion, plumping both feet down in a relaxed sort of way, then everything about the house is absolutely clean and neat. But if she rocks in little nervous jerks, tapping her feet down at short and irregular intervals, it signifies that there are unmade beds behind her and stacks of unwashed dishes and dusty floors.—Atchison Globe.

They All Wear Twos.

Manager of Shoe Store—I've tried my best to attract the women to this place and they simply won't come. Salesman—No wonder! Your sign queers the trade. Manager (beatedly)—What's wrong with the sign? Salesman—It reads, "The Big Shoe Store."—Lippincott's.

Sandwich Man Is Old.

The walking advertisement known as a "sandwich man" is by no means a modern idea. In 1346 a procession of men dressed to represent straw covered wine bottles used to parade the streets of Florence, Italy, being hired by the wine merchants there.

Temporarily Handicapped.

Mr. Doughleigh—I met that French nobleman, Count de Brie, today. Dotty Doughleigh—Really. Is he a brilliant conversationalist? Mr. Doughleigh—Well, no, not at present. He has rheumatism in his shoulders.—Judge.

Placing the Blame.

PROGRESSIVE SUPPER

Pleasant Evening for Wollaston Methodist Choir

The choir of the Wollaston Methodist church was entertained in a novel manner on Wednesday evening.

Mysterious invitations bade the guests to be at the home of Mrs. H. B. L. Dimmock, 78 Lincoln avenue, at 6.30.

When assembled they were served with fruit cocktail, bouillon and wafers. During this course delightful music was dispensed by Miss Violet L. Smith at the piano, and Master Theodore W. Smith on the 'cello.

The company was then instructed to seek the same number in Winthrop avenue which proved to be the home of Mrs. George Taylor. After a course consisting of chicken salad, rolls and coffee, the guests were sent on their way to find the sign of the Black Cat.

This led them to the home of Mrs. E. H. Ewertz, where the final course of ice cream, cake and fruit punch was served.

The remainder of the evening was spent in musical games. The pastor Rev. G. M. Bailey gave a short address, and a reading was given by Mrs. J. A. Sedgwick entitled "Learning the anthem."

The party then joined in a number of songs and departed for their homes voting the progressive supper a most enjoyable affair.

CONFERENCE OF OVERSEERS

Discuss the New Laws Relative to Mothers and Children

The new law relative to the employment of minors, known as the child labor law, and the law relative to dependent mothers, is giving the Overseers of the Poor of the state considerable food for reflection, for at the least calculation the operation of these laws means a large increase to the expense of the Poor departments of the cities and towns of the commonwealth.

In every city and town there have been in the past many children, under the age of 16 years, who have aided the families materially in the amounts they have been able to earn. Now however this source of revenue is cut off from the families and the children, in many cases, are roving about the streets and the cities are being called upon for additional aid.

The matter of dependent mothers is another bone of contention for the departments. The law is a somewhat complicated one and up to the present time no one seems to be able to fathom just what it means. Wednesday a meeting of all of the Overseers of the Poor of the State was held at the office of the State Board of Charity and many of the matters were thrashed out.

One of the questions that was discussed was, if under the law cities and towns were obliged to render aid to mothers, who had husbands, who now do more or less work. That is, there are some mothers who go to work as well as the husbands, and what they wanted to know was if under the law these mothers could now remain at home, and the city be called upon to render aid. On this question the State Board ruled that mothers must continue to work as before.

Another question that was thrashed out was in a case where the husband was sent to jail or to a hospital for any period of time, if under the law the Poor departments were obliged to render aid, and it was generally admitted that they would be called upon to do so.

In regard to mothers who were widows, going out working there was a question if under the new law these mothers could remain at home and demand aid from the city. It was pointed out that cities now had many cases where widows were being helped, and if they could remain at home and demand support it meant half as much again support as they were now receiving.

The questions asked in many cases were posers, even for the State Board, and it was admitted that the only way to get a correct interpretation of the meaning of the law was to put it up to the Attorney General. However what ever the interpretation of the Attorney General it means a large increase in the amount of money that will be needed in the future by the Poor departments, but just how much more is uncertain.

Another matter which was brought out was that in certain cases of aid rendered the state reimburses cities and towns, but experience of the past with the Poor departments has been that the state in many cases disallow what local poor departments believe to be just claims.

Whatever the outcome or the ruling of the Attorney General, one thing is certain that the Poor departments of the state have got to be continually on their guard or the expenses will be greatly increased.

SPARED BY FROSTS.

Although the season is getting a little late for dahlias many people continue to visit the residence of George F. Elcock on Copeland street to enjoy his exceptionally fine display. Mr. Elcock has over a hundred varieties and has always been very generous in giving blossoms to visitors. It is one of his hobbies to raise dahlias and he has never turned his efforts to profit. The demands however have become so great that another year he may try and realize a little profit from his garden.

STILL UNKNOWN.

The Finn who was picked up unconscious at the Quincy Adams station about midnight Tuesday is still on the dangerous list at the Quincy City Hospital. He has not recovered sufficiently enough to disclose his identity. Nothing was in his pockets that would aid in identifying him except a ticket to Braintree. The name Mattson was stitched on his shirt, and it is believed his home is in South Braintree. Passengers on the train say his first name is Tom but that they were unacquainted with him.

EASTER ISLAND.

A Deserted Land and Its Mysterious Crude Stone Statues.

Huge and grotesque stone images stand and lie over the fertile surface of a deserted island far south in the Pacific. It is a place that Poe might have sung into existence or Rider Haggard created for the scene of some fantastic romance. Even its name—Easter island—seems more literary than geographical. Easter island, 2,000 miles from South America and 1,400 miles east of Pitcairn island, has on all the forty-five square miles of its area less than 200 people. But it has other inhabitants, great masses of rock, 600 in number, each carved into the semblance of a human figure, the origin of which is a mystery. These statues weigh on an average from ten to twelve tons each, some of them reaching a weight of forty tones. A few of them stand on strong platforms 400 feet long, and many similar platforms stand untenanted.

At the quarry, which is a crater (for Easter island is of volcanic origin), a number of these images lie half formed as the vanished sculptors left them.

There is another crater where the crowns of the figures were made from rock of a different sort. Here, too, are found unfinished specimens.—Churchman.

THE NORTHERN LIGHTS.

It's a Mistake, Says a Scientist, to Say They Emit Sounds.

German scientists are greatly interested in a discussion regarding new phenomena revealed by the aurora borealis, according to recent Norwegian and German observers. People living in the northern part of Norway maintained that they often hear sounds accompanying the northern lights. These sounds are described by some as similar to the crackling of flames.

Accordingly German and Norwegian scientists started out to investigate the phenomena, and one of them, Olav Aabakken, has spent a long time at the Hallde observatory in Finmarken. Aabakken thinks that it is very unlikely that any sound is to be heard from the northern lights. He maintains that the human senses are not to be relied on, especially regarding the phenomena of sight.

Aabakken says that the idea of sound connected with the northern lights may result from the fact that these lights look like flames, and as people are accustomed to associate the crackling sound with flames the rather uncritical observer of the blazing movements of the aurora borealis is apt to think that he really hears the sound of those flames.—New York Press.

His Good Eye.

A man who had lost the sight of both eyes trained his hearing until he could tell by the sound of his footsteps on the sidewalks as he made his way about town whether he was in the middle of the walk or at one side, whether he was walking past a brick or a frame house or a fence or open ground. He knew in what part of the town he was not only by his memory or sense of general direction, but by the difference in the "tones" of his footsteps, and he walked about freely, seldom running into anything or anybody. Some one in his presence once called in question his total blindness.

"Which eye do you think I can see with?" he asked the skeptic.

"The left one, of course," was the reply. "I can see that the right one is blind."

In reply the blind man merely opened his penknife and tapped the left eye with the little blade.

It was a glass eye.

Freaks of Nature.

Monument park, near Colorado Springs, Colo., contains some queer freaks of nature. Among the most singular is a group of light grayish-yellow sandstone pillars twenty or more feet high capped with a thin layer of dark colored rock which resemble the tops of giant mushrooms which have shriveled and partially dried up. The dark colored capping being of a much harder (ironstone) rock than the pillars has to some extent protected the latter from disintegration. Especially at nightfall is the traveler impressed with the weird effect of these gigantic and grotesque forms, which in the uncertain light assume the attitudes of huge human or animal shapes.—Argonaut.

A Life Saver.

"No," said the timid man, "I don't want any flying machines today. I'm afraid of them."

"Why, sir," said the persuasive salesman, "a flying machine might save your life."

"How?"

"You might be out riding in one when an earthquake takes place."—Washington Star.

All His Fault.

"Better lap up that spilt milk," said the first cat. "If the missus sees that mess you'll catch fits."

"Not me," said the second feline. "The woman I live with blames everything what happens on her husband."—Pittsburgh Post.

Much Harder.

"It is hard for one to have to live in the past," announced the melancholy man who had retired from business.

"Yes, but often it is harder to live down the past."—Buffalo Express.

Jesters must be content to taste their broth.—Latin Proverb.

ASKS PIPER TO RESIGN

Rival Objects to His Having Two Nominations

Michael T. Sullivan, the Democratic candidate for Representative, has mailed the following letter to Walter E. Piper, his rival, who was nominated by both the Republicans and the Progressives. It is self explanatory: Mr. Walter E. Piper, ex-Representative:

Dear Sir:—According to the caucus returns in the newspapers of today, you have received the nomination for Representative, Fifth Norfolk District, of both the Republican and the Progressive parties.

As I have received the nomination of the Democratic party for the same office, it is apparent that we must once more engage in a friendly contest.

The saying, "A man cannot serve two masters," is true in politics as in other walks of life; therefore in justice to yourself as well as to the Republican and the Progressive parties I desire to ask which nomination you will accept.

As I presume that you will withdraw one of the nominations, I take the liberty to notify you that in order to do so it will be necessary to notify the Secretary of State of your intention before 5 o'clock P. M. Sept. 26.

With best personal regards, I remain, very respectfully yours,

MICHAEL T. SULLIVAN.

Quincy, Sept. 24, 1913.

McDEVITT AS INDEPENDENT

May Make It Interesting in Senatorial Election

It is now certain that there will be three or more candidates for Senator from the First Norfolk district at the election in November. The regular caucus nominees for Senator are: David W. Murray, Boston, Democrat; Louis F. R. Langelier, Quincy, Republican; and L. P. Winchenbaugh, Boston, Progressive. As far as known no one has taken out papers for an independent nomination although rumor has it that John J. McDevitt, who was defeated for the Democratic nomination by David W. Murray will run independent.

CROSS COUNTRY RACE.

The Junior employed boys of the Y. M. C. A. elected Allan Connor, of South Walnut street, captain of their athletic team at a meeting on Wednesday evening and plans were completed for the cross country race against the Weymouth Harriers on Columbus day morning. Captain Connors is looking over 20 candidates and next week will choose his runners. The start will be at the Merrymount oval and the course will be: Hancock street to Quincy avenue, to Newcomb square, to Washington street, and return to the oval. Beyond doubt Captain Connor is the best runner in the class and will pick a winning combination.

AFTER SMELT SEINERS.

Chief Burrell and a squad of officers were summoned to Squantum this noon to try and intercept and arrest some men who were in a boat off Thompsons island seining for smelts.

PAULINE REVERE TO HANG LIGHTS

The hanging of two signal lanterns in the belfry of Christ Church, Boston by Miss Pauline Revere, a descendant of the revolutionary hero, is one of the most interesting parts of the special program of historical exercises to be given at the church during the coming bankers' convention on the evening of Oct. 8.

The program includes an address on "Christ Church Before the Revolution," and the reading of "Paul Revere's Ride," by the Rev. George Hodges, D. D., dean of the Episcopal Theological school in Cambridge. A prelude will be played by George R. Loud, church organist, an anthem sung by the church choirs and special numbers given by Louis E. Eichler, violinist, and F. C. Pearce, 'cellist.

Christ Church will be open on the afternoon and evening of Oct. 8 and in expectation of a large crowd the committee has decided to limit the number of tickets for the evening exercises. The bells in the tower will be on exhibition and bell ringers will show visitors how they are rung.

NOMINATED BY CLOSE VOTE

The vote of the several Democratic candidates for District Attorney for the southeastern district gives the nomination to William J. Good of Randolph. The vote was as follows:

William J. Good, Randolph	947
John P. Vahey, Plymouth	865
Thomas H. Buttimer, Hingham	794
Eugene F. O'Neill, Brockton	776

CLASS INITIATIONS.

John Adams Aerie of Eagles held their meeting in Electa hall Wednesday evening and had an early adjournment. Several important items were considered, one being the acceptance of the transfer from Milford aerie of Fred Beard, a native of West Quincy. The degree team has been invited to conduct the initiatory ceremonies at two class initiations to be held at New Bedford in the following months.

NEWSY BRIEFS

A regular meeting of the Wollaston Citizens Association will be held Friday evening at Brasee's hall.

Felix Favorite, Edward Finn, Chas. C. Foster, Frank Hobart, Peter Morton and Clarence Rogers, the Quincy men who have been serving at the September term of the traverse jury at Dedham, were present at the American house, Boston, Wednesday evening at the dinner given to Judge John A Aiken, the presiding justice of the term.

DISTRICT COURT.

Caroline Quogini was arraigned for assault on Rose Gentile at Quincy. Case placed on probation for three months.

William H. Smith was fined $15 for drunkenness at Quincy.

Judas Smith of Holbrook was brought in on a default warrant and paid the balance of a fine amounting to $7.50 and $4.39 on account of costs.

Edward Earle of Weymouth was brought in on a default warrant and committed.

William Desmond, Edward Hirt, Marcus L. Tirrell, Lester Liley and Lewis Callahan were arrigned for trespass and the larceny of fruit at Weymouth. Cases continued until Friday.

—Boston is feeling elated because her tax rate is less than the average of Massachusetts cities. But perhaps that is not such a cause of self-congratulation. Are not most of the tax rates of cities and towns in the state too high? Like individuals, are not our towns afflicted with the cost of high living? The state, also, has need of practicing economy, as well as the cities and towns. Most of them have been spending money too freely, for what may be termed luxuries, and while economy in the abstract has been much preached, it has been but little practiced. The tax payers are wondering if it is not advisable to call a halt on some of the expenditures.—Old Colony Memorial.

Corn roasts are popular in the rural districts, and the more the corn is scorched and smoked, the better it tastes.

There is more Catarrh in this section of the country than all other diseases put together, and until the last few years was supposed to be incurable. For a great many years doctors pronounced it a local disease and prescribed local remedies, and by constantly failing to cure local treatment, pronounced it incurable. Science has proven catarrh to be a constitutional disease and therefore requires constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, Ohio, is the only constitutional cure on the market. It is taken internally in doses from 10 drops to a teaspoonful. It acts directly on the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. They offer one hundred dollars for any case it fails to cure. Send for circulars and testimonials.

Vol. 28 No. 224 QUINCY MASS. FRIDAY EVENING, SEPTEMBER 26, 1913 PRICE TWO CENTS

WILL SAY GOODBYE AT SUNDAY SERVICES

Transfer of Rev. Henry T. Grady to Take Effect Immediately

Activities of Rev. T. R. McCoy the New Pastor

Friends, young and old, from all parts of St. Mary's parish besieged the parish house Thursday afternoon, after the story of the transfer of Rev. Fr. Henry T. Grady appeared in the Daily Ledger, to extend their best wishes to their pastor who rounded out five years unexcelled service last July. The change itself was unknown to Father Grady until nine o'clock Thursday morning when he was acquainted with the fact by Cardinal O'Connell.

It takes place officially next Monday although it is possible that Father Grady will be delayed until Tuesday or Wednesday in leaving the parish. At all the masses on Sunday the "Goodbye" sermon will be delivered to his 2200 parishioners.

Rev. Fr. Thomas R. McCoy, appointed to succeed Father Grady will arrive Monday or Tuesday from the Cathedral where he has been senior assistant and diocesan director of the Holy Name Society. It is not known whether he will relinquish his directorate when he assumes the pastorate at West Quincy.

He was appointed to the post several years ago by Cardinal O'Connell, and has been the directing genius behind the great parade of the Holy Name Societies, the greatest parade ever held in connection with young Catholic manhood's manifestation of faith.

He is a native of Marblehead and graduated from Boston College. He studied for the priesthood at St. John's seminary at Brighton and was ordained in 1898. He was assigned to Wakefield and remained there five months, going thence to the Cathedral where he has been since.

He has been senior curate for the past five years, and on several occasions was the acting rector. His appointment to St. Mary's church was pleasing news to many in the diocese who know him and his sterling qualities.

A glance over the accomplishments of Father Grady shows the basement of the new St. Mary's church and the adjoining cemetery free from debt and a rearranged parish house and grounds. The church which went into disuse when the new basement was completed, has been changed over to what is known as St. Joseph's hall.

During the pastorate of Father Grady the Ave Maria council, Knights of Columbus, was instituted and the St. Mary's Guild was organized for charitable and sanctuary purposes.

From the civic standpoint, Father Grady has been a force in the community, and was relentless in his agitation for the extension of the street railway over Granite avenue so that West Quincy would have a real outlet. The passage of the appropriation for the new Granite avenue bridge was greatly assisted because of his attitude. One of the last buildings to meet his view on his departure will be the station, something he has often tried to have changed to meet the requirements of the ward. Many of his recommendations to the West Quincy Improvement Society became effective the minute they became known.

Father Grady this morning said that he regretted leaving West Quincy, and would always cherish the loving kindness and loyalty of its people. He said he owed a debt of gratitude to his parishioners and to his friends in other parts of the city who have given him their moral support in many pressing topics.

Today the string of people continued all bidding goodbye, and probably will continue until he leaves.

HOLLIS—LOFTUS.

News of the marriage of Frank E. Hollis, one of Braintree's best known young men, and Miss Mary C. Loftus, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John Loftus of Lawrence eight months ago, became known Wednesday and since then they have been receiving the congratulations of their friends on having escaped the formalities of a wedding.

The ceremony was performed May 29 by Rev. David Lewis Yale, and Mr. and Mrs. Hollis have been living apart since that time, the young woman in Middleboro and her husband in Hartford, Conn.

The bride is popular in Lawrence where she resided with her parents, at 171 High street. The couple met in that city in 1910 and shortly after became engaged. The ceremony was planned for November.

Mr. Hollis is a salesman in the gas industry in Hartford and is well known in greater Boston because of his connection with athletics, having managed and played with several base ball teams of note. He also did newspaper writing for several seasons, covering sports and at the present time he is secretary for the Connecticut State league. He was one of the first ball players to go to Bermuda when the game was in its infancy there. Mrs. Hollis is now in Middleboro but will join her husband within a few days.

WHIST PARTY.

The whist party of the educational committee of the Quincy Women's Riverside club on Thursday evening was a social and financial success. It was held at the residence of Thompson B. Crane, the committee being Mrs. Eugene R. Stone, Mrs. Gilbert W. Arnold, Mrs. Thompson B. Crane and Mrs. George F. Spooner. Souvenirs were awarded to those making the largest scores.

CITY ELECTION NEAR

Old Enrollment at City Caucuses Abolished

State List to Stand

Information was given out at the City Clerk's office this morning that primary nomination papers for the city primaries to be held Nov. 11, will be ready for delivery on Monday next, and that they may be obtained on applying to the City Clerk, and that they must be filed with the Registrar of Voters on or before Saturday, Oct. 25, at 5 o'clock, for certification, in accordance with Section III of Chapter 853 of the Acts of 1913.

Most important however of all is the statement that—"All party enrollments at city or town primaries prior to the passage of this act are hereby cancelled."

The enrollment used at the State primaries therefore will be in force at the city primaries.

Heretofore under the Luce law there have been two enrollments, one made for the state and the other for the city. In the future there will be but one.

That is under the old Luce law with the two enrollments, parties who attended the state primaries in September and voted the Democratic ballot could attend the city primaries in November and vote the Republican ballot, if they are enrolled as such in the city primary lists.

It is a well known fact that the first year the party enrollment went into effect there was a novel contest on in Quincy, during which a great many Democrats, in certain wards voted the Republican ballot, and thus became enrolled as Republicans. This fact prohibited them from voting other than the Republican ballot at City caucuses unless they, as provided by law, changed their party enrollment ninety days before the caucus. The result has been that the Democratic vote at many of the city caucuses has been very light. Now however the backsliding Democrats and Republicans can go back to their own fold at the coming city caucuses, provided they were enrolled as such at the recent state primaries, and there will be no more packing caucuses as has been done.

The weather for the past few days, is a good indication that the Brockton Fair is approaching. Somehow the management of this great fair have a happy faculty of selecting dates when it is good weather for their fairs.

Fitzgerald of Boston, Congressman J. Hamptoa Moore, president of the Atlantic Deeper Waterways Association, and Congressman John Humphrey Small, member of the National Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

FIRST GAME OF SEASON

Roslindale A. A. Team Will Play the Quincy A. A.

The football season of the Quincy A. A. opens Saturday afternoon on the new Merrymount oval, one of the finest playgrounds in the state because its natural slope offffers a fine opportunity to see a game at all its angles. The local aggregation will meet the Roslindale eleven which they defeated last season 6 to 0 in one of the best contests ever seen here. Captain Mathew Cummings has been directing the practice of his warriars and although the team is about made up several candidates say they will be at the Quincy A. A. rooms tonight to ask for an opportunity to play.

For the first time for several years relentless warfare has been made upon people owning dogs who have not paid necessary fee to let their pets live The result is that now there are very few unlicensed dogs and what there are are fast being rounded up by the police who are hot on ther trail.

DR. JONES HOUSE WAS A LANDMARK

Warren S. Parker Tells of How It Was Built and Its History

Quotes from the Old Records of Town of Braintree

The history surrounding the old house in "the Hollow," known to many as the "Dr. Jones House" is but one of many interesting chapters of Quincy's development. In that section was born the town of Braintree, although Braintree allowed this section to separate in 1792 as the town of Quincy. Strangely enough what was then a centre is again becoming a centre.

The razing of the building is in connection with the tearing down of other buildings in the immediate vicinity to make room for the block of 14 stores about to be erected by Col. Henry L. Kincaide, the "live wire" of the city. Its demolition is being watched by many of the older residents who at one time or another knew men that conducted their business behind its walls.

For years it was surrounded by property of all descriptions, nearly all of which dissappeared with the commercial advancement of the city, until today its last breath is being taken in almost unfamiliar surroundings, a mighty monument of the hidden past, unable to tell its tale.

Warren S. Parker, inspector of buildings whose compilation of historic data of the city is unequalled and considered absolutely authentic has contributed the following:

Workmen commenced this week to demolish one of the ancient dwellings of the old town of Braintree and Quincy which was built previous to the year, 1680, probably the preceding year. We refer to the house known to the present generation as the "Dr. Jones house" situated on Hancock street in the old locality known for many years past as "the Hollow." The size of the original house was 18 by 40 feet, with possibly a leanto ell at the rear, in which was located the kitchen.

The main house on the first story was divided into two rooms with a large chimney in the centre, with fireplaces and oven. This was removed when the house was remodeled in the early seventies. There were probably three or more chambers on the second floor.

The external walls were lined with cured seaweed between the boarding and the lathing (some of which was removed this week) for protection from the cold. Houses built at a la-

Just Why She Said It:

I do not know, but that fine lady really did say it---

"This Store is Just Perfect"

—only she was mistaken. Nobody knows so much about it as the writer, who surely knows how much better the store is than it used to be; and even more, he knows how much better it will be because of the diligent study and earnest effort to every day improve something.

To be just as good as other stores in other cities is not rising up to the ideal and endeavor many of our workers have set for this store.

"What is your idea of a good store"---a kindly critic may ask. The answer is---

In spite of the gunmen, it is perfectly safe on New York streets in the day time, but no one is out then.

It seems necessary to give the railroads their five per cent raise in freight rates, as it costs a lot to have all these accidents.

It is said that the college girls are dressed quite modestly, but if so they have given up all hopes of a stage career.

FORETELLING WEATHER.

As scientific methods of work grow general, many traditional and primitive arts, roughly successful in their own way, disappear. Reflection along this line was prompted today on reading a dispatch sent out from Central Park, New York. The menagerie keepers, it appears, predict a cold winter, because the squirrels are building nests a month earlier than usual.

Can weather be predicted by observing the ways of animals? All the old people thought so. Stockmen say cattle are restless some hours before a man can see signs of storm. Chickens oil their feathers before rain. If an owl hoots in a hollow, it means a cold storm. If he cries on the hill, it portends warmer weather. If hornets build low, winter will be cold. And so on.

Scientific research seems to be against the bulk of this lore. Prof. Lindlmayer of the University of Prague's zoology department recently studied the familiar sign by which the low flight of swallows is supposed to indicate storm. He concluded that the swallows' flight was not directly due to atmospheric conditions, but that they followed the insects. Often he found these insects high up before storm, the swallows following them.

The old-timers watched weather indications sharply. But the one time when a sign was verified was remembered, while the dozen times it failed were forgotten. They were remarkably accurate in their deductions from cloud movements. To the people of solitary spaces, sky and clouds were a theater of contending forces that gave them diversion. Slight changes were seen and corresponding results noted.

Peasant immigrants from Europe are still keen judges of weather. If you want to know if you can safely venture a picnic, you can do about as well to ask Polish Rosey as to trust the learned weather bureau forecasts!

END OF BRONCO BUSTER.

It has commonly been predicted that the Western cow puncher would be an extinct and historic figure by the year 1920. Plainsmen say that by that time there will not be a single cattle ranch in the United States containing 1000 acres, unless present tendencies change.

Hence a peculiar interest attaches to the remnant of the cowboy type that still persists. It is pleasant to note that at Pendleton, Ore., bronco busting and cow punching championship contests have been run off within a few days. For a few years these events will be one of the most interesting features of Western life.

Afterward, bronco busting will exist as a circus stunt. The paid work of the travelling acrobat will have little likeness to the frolicsome daring and gay hardihood of the real cow-boy.

A bronco busting contest displays human skill, daring and endurance at a very high point. Many of these wicked little beasts will turn a complete somersault, with the rider sticking to the saddle. The cow-boy never seems to mind if a horse falls on him. Even if he gets a broken leg, he will climb into the pitching saddle again. Many a competition has been won by a crippled rider bearing about the agony of a fractured limb.

When a cattle range is cut up into hog pastures or garden plots, there is an economic gain. The change is necessary to feed the people. The "nester" or "wooly" as the plainsmen call the small stock farmer, establishes churches and schools and settled civilization.

The physical courage and quick resourcefulness of the cow-boy in moments of danger are not acquired by those who pursue the more stolid and sober arts of the fenced farm. Civilization gains on the whole, but some heroic traits fade away.

FLIMSY GOLD LEAF.

It Would Take 150,000 Sheets to Make a Pile an Inch High.

Gold beating is one of the oldest trades in Birmingham. The work is done entirely by hand. The leaf is hammered out in small home workshops from twenty-four carat gold, but is first sent to the rolling mills, whence it is returned in long, thin ribbons one and a quarter inches wide and a thousandth part of an inch in thickness. Then it is ready for the beater. The ribbon is generally cut off into small 11-4 inch squares, weighing about six grains.

The thin square is placed in the center of a vegetable parchment pad, consisting of 100 sheets on top and the same number beneath. This is beaten with a fourteen pound hammer, and the gold, when considerably reduced in thickness, is placed between leaves of goldbeater's skin—skin prepared from a thin but tough membrane found in the large intestine of the ox.

Eight hundred pieces of the hammered leaf are arranged over each other between leaves of the skin, the whole being placed between parchment bands and beaten for a couple of hours with a seven pound hammer. Then the 800 pieces are cut up into 3,200 pieces and again beaten. When the work is done the leaf is 150,000 part of an inch in thickness and almost as light as air.—London Ideas.

A DARING BASE RUNNER.

Hugh S. Fullerton, the baseball writer for the American Magazine, tells a story about Mike Kelly, the famous player of Boston and Chicago, a generation ago, as follows:

"I believe the most desperate and brilliant bit of base running I ever witnessed and the climax of taking chances was by Kelly. The score was a tie late in the game. Runners were on second and third bases, one out, and the opposing infield was drawn in to cut off the runner from the plate.

"Kelly was the man on second. As the ball was pitched Kelly was on a run at top speed toward third. The ball was hit sharply to the shortstop, who scooped it perfectly and threw home. The runner going from third slid desperately toward the plate, where the catcher was waiting. Kelly had rounded third base at top speed and was coming up the path behind the other runner, screeching 'Look out for Kel!' at the top of his voice.

"As the runner from third slid behind the plate, trying to get past the catcher, he was tagged out, but before the catcher could touch him and dive back to protect the plate Kelly slid in front of the rubber, dodged under the catcher and scored the winning run."

Stormy Cape Horn.

The waters of Cape Horn have never been unvisited by storms for more than a week or two at a stretch within the memory of man. Standing on the outposts of the world, Cape Horn is the meeting place of ocean currents of very different temperature, from the icy cold waters of the Antarctic drift to the warmth of the Brazilian and Peruvian return currents. The prevailing winds are from the northwest and west, and these, coming from the warm regions of the Pacific, condense into fogs, which the sailors call "Cape Horn blankets" and which are the forerunners of storms. The extremely low level to which the glaciers of Tierra del Fuego descend, the perpetual congelation of the subsoil, the meeting of conflicting winds at very different temperatures, are all direct or indirect causes combining to make this the most constantly stormy region of the world.

She Had Money.

"And why," she asked, "do you think the world is better now that it was twenty-five years ago?"

"Because you were not in it then," he replied.

"Ah, I am afraid you wish to flatter me. I am nearly twenty-eight."

"Is it possible? Well, in a way I'm glad of it."

"Why?"

"You see, I'm thirty-seven, and I don't believe that any man ought to be more than eight or nine years older than his wife."

"Oh, Horace! How romantic you are! I wonder if any other man ever adopted such a lovely way to let a girl know that he cared for her."—Chicago Record-Herald.

Stung!

The amateur gardener saw an ad. in a farm paper. The ad. read as follows:

"How to remove weeds without labor. Ten minutes does the trick. Send $2 for recipe."

The amateur gardener sent the $2. Two days later he received the recipe. It read as follows:

"Marry a widow."—Cincinnati Enquirer.

Ought to Work.

"I'm afraid these boiled eggs ain't very fresh."

"Write the name 'Genevieve' on one of them," suggested the head waiter. "Mr. Wopsey is romantic, and that will distract his attention if the eggs are not so good."—Louisville Courier-Journal.

Hereditary.

"That office boy is never here when he is wanted."

"That's not altogether his fault."

"What do you mean?"

"It's hereditary. His father was a policeman."—Houston Post.

NOT SEEKING DIVORCE

Mrs. Blake Charges Husband Was "Pursued" by Mrs. Mackay

New York, Sept. 26.—A report that Mrs. Joseph A. Blake, wife of the former superintendent of the Presbyterian hospital, and a noted surgeon, had begun an action against Mrs. Clarence H. Mackay to recover $1,000,000 for the alleged alienation of her husband's affections, was confirmed by George G. Battle, who is counsel for the complainant.

Mrs. Blake will seek a separation, but not a divorce, as she has no intention of releasng her husband.

On the authority of a mutual friend of both families, it was asserted that the complaint in the suit brought by Mrs. Blake was a most unusual document, in that it made no charges of wrongdoing either on the part of Blake or Mrs. Mackay.

Instead it alleges that the talented mistress of the Mackay millions has followed Blake about everywhere and has pursued him with attention until he has been forced to neglect his wife and faces the ruin of his career.

NEW DEFENDER ORDERED

Herreschoff to Build Racing Craft For Clark and Pynchon

Bristol, R. I., Sept. 26.—Commodore Clark of the Philadelphia Corinthian Yacht club and George M. Pynchon of New York are a syndicate to financially back the building of a Herreschoff designed craft to be a candidate for defending the America's cup against Sir Thomas Lipton's challenger in 1914, and an order came from those two yachtsmen to the Herreschoffs.

The order was the second one taken by the Herreschoffs this fall. The sloop will be seventy-five feet on the water line and of metal construction. Herreschoff is to furnish speed lines equal to those in the Vanderbilt syndicate boat.

The active management of the second syndcate craft will be in charge of Pynchon, and the latter is to select a crew. He will probably engage Captain Powell, formerly skipper of the sloop Istalena.

THREE-MASTER HITS SUBMERGED WRECK

Nothing Saved as She Goes Down With All Sails Set

Chatham, Mass., Sept. 26.—The three-masted schooner Nellie F. Sawyer, of Portland, Me., New York city to Calais, Me., hit a submerged rock three-quarters of a mile north of Pollock Rip lightship and sank within ten minutes.

The crew of four saved themselves by taking to a rowboat. So rapidly did the vessel sink that they barely escaped the suction.

When the schooner hit the obstruction, she was traveling along at a good clip, with all sails set. Not a thing was saved from the vessel.

The crew rowed to the Pollock Rip lightship and the Monomoy Point lifesaving crew brought them to Chatham.

REPORT HITS MANSFIELD

He May Lose His Position as Postmaster of Boston

Washington, Sept. 26.—The condition of the Boston postoffice, as stated in a report made to Postmaster General Burleson by a postal inspector specially assigned to the investigation, was laid before Democrats of the Massachusetts delegation by First Assistant Postmaster General Roper. The report has not been made public and may not be at present.

While none of the congressmen would discuss the report, further than to say that it dealt in detail with the administration and physical condition of the Boston office, it can be said that the document disclosed sufficient grounds for changing postmasters should the administration care to use it as an excuse for displacing Postmaster Mansfield before his term expires.

FIVE HUNDRED OUT

Strike at Slater Mills May Involve Four Thousand Hands

Webster, Mass., Sept. 26.—Five hundred weavers in the employ of the S. Slater & Sons, Inc., cotton mills struck last night for the abolition of the fines system and the establishment of a new wage scale of prices and the substitution of a one-loom price list for the present two-loom price list.

Unless the strike is adjusted within the next few days a general strike of the weavers in all the Slater mills will be called. This would involve about 4000 hands.

RACE SEGREGATION LAW

Whites and Blacks Must Live In Separate Blocks In Baltimore

Baltimore, Sept. 26.—A race segregation ordinance was passed by the city council last night and was signed by Mayor Preston. The measure has the following title:

"An ordinance to prevent conflict and ill-feeling between the white and colored races in Baltimore city, and to preserve the public peace and promote the general welfare by making reasonable provisions requiring the use of separate blocks for residences by white and colored people respectively."

BABY BURIED IN A STARCH BOX

Concealed For Years In Wall of Millionaire's Home

IS DISCOVERED BY WRECKERS

Recalls Story of Colonel Snell's Life, Which Was Told at Three Trials Before Will Was Broken by His Only Son, Who Had Been Disinherited

Bloomington, Ills., Sept. 26.—The mansion at Clinton, Ills., erected forty years ago by Colonel Thomas Snell, yielded another sensation when the skeleton of a child in a home-made coffin was found skillfully concealed within a wall.

Wreckers tearing down the residence made the discovery, which adds another chapter to the stormy history of Colonel Snell, who died about seven years ago and for whose fortune a famous fight was made in the courts of Illinois.

The body of the child had been buried in a starch box with a sliding cover, which easily opened, exposing the bones. The town supervisor took charge of the body, burying it in the public cemetery.

"We have no idea as to how long the body has been in the wall," said O. F. Burr, Clinton's chief of police.

"There was little flesh remaining, and the box must have been concealed many years ago. Colonel Snell himself built the mansion and lived in it up to the time of his death. The house has been occupied since that time by one family, though vacant practically a year."

The story of Snell's life was told in the courts in three trials, when Richard Snell broke his father's will on the ground that the old man was of unsound mind. It was brought out that the lure of gold led at least one husband to consent to his wife's affections to the banker.

Letter were offered to prove that Mrs. Mabel Snell-McNamara, grandniece, profited more by the will than anyone else; that Snell had practically disinherited his only son, and that during the life of the elder Snell Mrs. McNamara had received annual money tributes amounting to many thousands of dollars and had accompanied him on many trips.

ROW IN KAISER'S FAMILY

Prince Threatened to Betake Himself to Austria With Bride

Berlin, Sept. 26.—A word-splitting wrangle over the formalities in connection with the enthronement of Prince Ernest August of Cumberland and Princess Victoria Luise as Duke and Duchess of Brunswick almost led to a split in the German imperial family and the withdrawal of the young prince and princess from Germany, according to information from Hanoverian circles.

Prussian officials, it is said, insisted on a more explicit renunciation by the prince of his claims to the throne of Hanover, whereupon the prince declared that he would take off his Prussian uniform and retire to Gmunden, Austria, with his bride, who apparently was willing to obey the marriage injunction and follow the fortunes of her husband.

Imperial Chancellor von Bethmann-Hollweg thereupon yielded the point, and a new solution of the difficulty is being sought.

BANKERS ARRESTED

Charges Against President and Cashier of Memphis Institution

Memphis, Sept. 26.—D. O. Wheeler, president, and J. B. Sloan, Jr., cashier, of the Exchange Bank and Trust company of this city, were arrested, charged with misappropriating $4977 of the bank's funds, and application was made for a receiver for the institution.

Wheeler and Sloan, who surrendered, were released under $1000 bonds. They assert the alleged liability is a civil one and that the criminal proceedings are unwarranted.

DEADLOCK ON TARIFF

Cottons and Woolens a Stumbling Block In Way of Conferees

Washington, Sept. 26.—After finishing all but about a half-dozen points of difference between the senate and house the tariff bill conferees ran into another deadlock and adjourned last night with the conference report still incomplete.

Three questions are still at issue, the tariff rates on cotton yarns and cotton cloths, and on lead and zinc ores, and the dates when free raw wool and changes in the woolen goods tariff should become effective.

SUED FOR $1,525,000

Pierce Invokes Statute of Limitations to Avoid Settling

St. Louis, Sept. 26.—Henry C Pierce, in an answer filed to the suit of the National Bank of Commerce to compel him to pay the bank $1,525,000 in connection with a Tennessee Central railway deal, invoked the statute of limitations.

Pierce, in his answer, claims the action on which the suit is based took place more than five years ago and therefore the suit is barred. He made a general denial of all the allegations in the suit.

LATIN AMERICAN TRADE.

Exports from the United States to Latin-America in the fiscal year 1913 amounted to a million dollars for every business day in the year and show an increase of nearly 200 per cent since 1900. In the term "Latin-America" are included South America (except the Guianas,) Central American Republics, Mexico, Cuba, Haiti, and Santo Domingo. The value of exports from the United States to these countries in the fiscal year 1913 was $321,000,000 against $108,000,000 in 1900, an increase of 197 per cent, while the exports to other parts of the world were increasing but 67 per cent.

The most rapid gains in the exports to Latin-American countries during the period under consideration occurred in the trade with Argentina and Brazil. The value of merchandise exported to Argentina in 1900 was $11,500,000, and in 1913, over $52,250,000; to Brazil, in 1900, $11,500,000 and in 1913, over $42,000,000. Cuba showed a marked gain, though not so large a percentage of gain as shown in the trade with Brazil.

An examination of the official figures of the countries in question, just completed by the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce, Department of Commerce, shows that 23 per cent of their imports, in the latest year for which their official statistics are available, were drawn from the United States. The Latin-American countries in which imports from the United States formed a distinctly larger percentage of the total imports in 1912 than in 1905 are Brazil, Chile, Peru, Bolivia, and Cuba. Imports into the United States from Latin-America show also large gains during the period since 1900, the total in 1913 having been $441,000,000, against $162,000,000 in 1900.

Manufactures form the bulk of the exports to the countries in question, and crude foodstuffs and manufacturers materials the bulk of the imports from them. Cotton goods, flour, manufactures of iron and steel, mineral oils, automobiles, railway cars, furniture, lumber, agricultural implements, leather and leather goods, are the principal articles exported to the area in question; while sugar, coffee, cacao, tobacco, india rubber, wool, nitrate of soda, copper, hides, and sisal are the principal articles imported therefrom.

DOINGS ON THE STAGE IN BOSTON AND VICINITY

SHUBERT THEATRE.

"The Purple Road" is at the Shubert Theatre, Boston, after a brief but highly successful run in New York at the close of the past season. One does not wonder at its success, for its picturesque character and bright tuneful score make unmistakably for popularity. The scenes and story supposedly represent an episode in the life of Napoleon, which prove a most acceptable vehicle for musical romantic comedy, the second week beginning Monday, Sept. 29. There are many little side episodes that lend strength and piquancy to an admirable little story, which is in dialogue well within its era, though amusing at every point. Mr. Rheinhardt, who is responsible also for "The Spring Maid" has created a most pleasing score, tuneful, rhythmic with clever and dainty instrumentation that delights the ear at all times. The dancing specialties are numerous and well contrasted and prove a strong factor in the success of the production.

The cast is one of length and of much strength in every way. Miss Valli Valli was the Wanda, and she sang well, looked the part and danced most cleverly. The cast includes: Harrison Brockbank, Elita Proctor Otis, Eva Fallon, Edward Martindale, Harriet Burt, Norma Winslow, Ernest Stoddard, Raymond Crane and Ann Walker.

MAJESTIC THEATRE.

The noted comedy drama "The Five Frankforters" the story of the rise of the House of Rothschild, which comes to the Majestic Sept. 2[illegible] after notable runs in London, Berlin Vienna and New York, is one of the really exquisitely clean and beautiful plays of the age. And in this day of the purient and decadent play the critics have welcomed its refreshing charms. The superb original New York cast is headed by that grande dame of the American and German stage, Mme. Mathilde Cottrelly, who has for over thirty years proven her versatility in scores of productions—musical, dramatic and farcical, but it remained for her to win her real laurels in the quaint and absorbing comedy "The Five Frankforters."

At the opening of the play, the period being 1822 the founder of the historic house is dead, but his wise and charming old widow, Frau Gudula, and his sons (the money kings of Europe and the friends of royalty) survive. Solomon of Vienna has called to a family conference at the mother's home in Frankfort, Carl of Italy, Nathan of England, Jacob of Paris and Anslem of Frankfort. He brings with him his beautiful daughter Carlotte, whom he proposes to marry to the Duke of Taunus and thus elevate his family (who have recently all been created barons) but the wise and lovely old mother and grandmother sternly opposes any such bargaining in love and in the end wins happiness for the youthful sweethearts.

KEITH'S THEATRE.

A. Seymour Brown the famous song writer, and composer of "Oh, You Beautiful Doll," "You're a Great Big Blue Eyed Baby," "Moving Day in Jungle Town," "King Chanticleer," and scores of other popular song successes, will make his appearance at Keith's theatre next week in a new and elaborate musical comedy written by himself and entitled "The Bachelor Dinner." The songs and music are the best ever written by Mr. Brown and include "When Love Come Knocking at Your Heart," "Tingling Tango Tune," "Adam and Eve Had a Wonderful Time," and "I don't Want To." This brilliant feature will be surrounded by a great vaudeville bill including Gold Berg, the famous cartoonist and creator of "I'm the Guy" Chuck Reisner and Henrietta Gores in their nonsensical skit, "It's Only a Show"; Ward Brothers, the two English Johnnies; Jule Kelets, the singing comedienne; the Pathe Weekly with the world's news in pictures, and many others yet to be announced.

CASTLE SQUARE THEATRE.

"A Butterfly on the Wheel" is one of the most stirring dramas of modern times. It was played for a whole season in London, and it had a long run in New York, and since then its fame has spread all over the world. A mixture of drama and comedy, it is a succession of alternately amusing and romantic scenes that are woven into a strong and convincing plot that keeps the audience steadily. Its central figures are a man and his wife and their mutual friend, and it involves the wife in difficulties that hold the interest of the audience to the very end. In the Castle Square production, William P. Carleton will appear in the role of the friend, while Mr. Craig will act the husband and Miss Doris Olsson the wife. The entire company will be well cast, and especial care will be taken to make the famous trial scene realistically effective from a pictorial and dramatic standpoint. Although large audiences may be anticipated "A Butterfly on the Wheel" will be seen at the Castle Square only for one week, beginning next Monday. Plays to follow at the Castle Square are "A Temperance Town," "Madame Sherry" and "We the People."

PLYMOUTH THEATRE.

George Arliss returns to the Plymouth Theatre, on next Monday, for an engagement of four weeks only, in Louis N. Parker's play "Disraeli." The remarkable success achieved by both star and play last season, when it ran at the Plymouth for nineteen consecutive weeks is still fresh in the minds of thousands of playgoers who witnessed the star's masterful characterization of the Great English statesman. No play produced in years is possessed of the charm of "Disraeli," which is destined to live for a long time to come. It is an extraordinary vehicle for Mr. Arliss' minute and vivid characterization of Disraeli in outer aspect, speech, mind and spirit playing through the diversified relations of private and public life. Disraeli is one of the most picturesque figures in modern English history and in Mr. Parker's brilliant comedy he shows the great stateman's efforts to secure control of the Suez canal for England, the intrigues that developed with the undertaking and through all a delightful love story. The same scale of prices will prevail, while the usual Thursday and Saturday matinees will be given.

SQUANTUM POLITICAL CLUB.

Carl E. Carlson, former president of the Squantum Improvement association, was formerly indorsed as Squantum's representative for the Quincy City Council at a meeting at the Vacation House Thursday night. The candidate has the support of the newly organized Squantum Political club which is to devote its interest to getting all the voters of the district registered to work for the election for Mr. Carlson.

The officers of the new organization are: President, Joseph E. Allen; vice president, Frank W. Anderson; secretary, Anthony Zottoli.

The meeting was called to order by Mr. Allen. He explained that a political organization was a necessity in this section of Quincy. He said that politics had been barred from the Squantum Improvement association so that a separate organization was deemed advisable. He explained that the objects of the new club were in no way to conflict with the work of the Squantum Improvement association but that they were to be purely of a social and political nature.

Following the election of officers Mr. Carlson asked the endorsement of the club in his candidacy for the Quincy City Council. He said he had received the endorsement of the Atlantic Improvement association and had worked for the nomination for the past two months. He was followed by John R. Nelson who spoke at some length.

James Hagan spoke in favor of the formation and objects of the club and said there was need for just such an organization in Squantum. He said he could not see that such a club would conflict in any way with the Squantum Improvement association.

It was then voted that a ballot be taken upon the endorsement of Mr. Carlson and Mr. Nelson the opposing candidates, resulting as follows—blanks 2; Carlson, 23; Nelson 15.

John Holmes, James Hagan and Frank W. Anderson were made a committee on registration. The meeting adjourned without date.

☞Prof. Neville will be heard again Saturday night at Music hall in a great feature photo-play entitled "Ashes of Three." Also a song review will be given.

DR. JONES' HOUSE

ter period were lined with brick for the same purpose.

The large girders in the center of the ceilings in the rooms of the first story were wrought with a large quarter round on either corner, practically the entire beam showing below the ceiling. The post girders and all large timbers were hewn with a broad-axe and the studding braces and smaller pieces were probably sawed out with the old time whip saw. About the year 1800 the rear part was built and later in the early seventies the front wall was replaced with the new.

The original house being what is now the main or front part, the roof being constructed so as to form a very sharp angle at the ridge. This style was very common in those days.

The frame is one of the old type, very heavy posts and girders of oak which today is as hard and firm as when first constructed, they being mortised and tennoned, pinned together in a very substantial manner; the outside studding extending from sill to plate, the second floor resting on a ledger plank spiked to studs. The nails used were hand wrought and the general condition of the old skeleton is sound.

Upon consulting the "Public Towne Records" of Braintree we find, March 3, 1678-9:—

"At a Publike Towne meeting it was voted, one the affirmative, that Mr. Benjamin Thompson, Schoolmaster, shall have this year for his salary the rent of the towne land made up thirty pounds and that the towne give him a piece of land to set a house on upon the Common to be set out by Joseph Crosby and Christopher Web, not exceeding an acre and half or thereabouts, and in case he leave the towne the land to return to the towne, they paying for his building and fencing as it is then worth, but if he dye in the towne servis as schoolmaster the land to be his heirs forever."

Again by vote of the towne, 27 Oct. 1679, "It was voted one the affirmative that the acre and half of land formerly granted by the town conditionally to me, Benjamin Thompson for the time of his abode, shall be to him and his heirs forever absolute."

As far as I have been able to learn, Mr. Thompson received no deed of this land from the town, but the fact is that on Sept. 19, 1680, Mr. Thompson in consideration of twenty pounds "current coyne of New England" paid by John Hull, Esq., of Boston, did mortgage his house and land in Braintree, the land containing two acres be it more or less, bounded northerly with the land of Samuel Thompson, westerly with a road, southerly with the common spot of land adjoining to the meeting house, easterly with the land of Col. Richard Brackett, (See Suffolk Deed 12-69), this being a true description of the property in question at the time, excepting the area which is allowable as all deeds written at that time were more or less inaccurate in this respect. This mortgage was discharged by Samuel Sewell and recorded 5 March, 1685-6.

On July 18, 1700, Mr. Thomas Bass conveys to Benjamin Thompson this same property, the description being identical with the description given by Mr. Thompson in 1680, (See Suffolk Deed 19-423), but the records do not show any transfer from the Thompson to Bass during the twenty years.

On 14 Nov. 1701, Mr. Thompson and wife Prudence convey to Benjamin Webb one and an half acre of land with a dwelling house thereon lying in the "Heart of Braintree" bounded east on the land of James Brackett, west on the country road, northerly on Town brook and southerly with towns land adjoining to the old school house. (See Suffolk Deed 20-489.)

Mr. Thompson continued in the service of the town as schoolmaster until 1699. He was recalled in May, 1704 and served until 1710. He also kept the town records from 1690 to 1710. He was the son of Rev. William Thompson, minister at Braintree, born in Braintree, 14, July 1642, and graduated at Harvard College in 1662. He taught school in Charlestown, Boston and Braintree, and finally in Roxbury where he died April 13, 1714. A learned school master and physician and the renowned poet of New England he was buried in the old burial ground at the corner of Washington and Eustis streets, Roxbury. His name is kept alive by what is usually quoted as "Our Forefather's Song," a bit of verse with a rather lively swing to it, picturing the privations of the earlier times when,—

"The dainty Indian maize
Was eat with clamshells out of trays
Under Thatched huts without the cry of rent
And the best sauce to every dish content."—Mem. Hist. Boston.

The original acre and an half of land remained intact and was added to by Mr. Webb and his descendants, they purchasing the remainder of the "Common Spot" so called.

In March 1819 Mr. Jonathan Webb conveyed to John Newcomb, Jr., one half acre of land and the westerly portion of the house, being two large rooms, one bedroom and back kitchen below with chambers above. Also a store adjoining said house.

Again in April the same year, Mr. Anthony Baxter, purchased the tanyard together with the northerly portion of the house, this being called the "new part of the house."

Mr. Lloyd G. Horton conducted the bakery business in the rear part of the house for a number of years until 1839, when he built his new bakery on what is now the northerly corner of Hancock street and Russell Park. After his removal Mr. Thomas Newcomb continued in the bakery business until 1841, when Mr. Clift Rogers hired the building for a currying shop and continued until 1842, when Moses Pettingill hired the shop for a cabinet business which he conducted here for a number of years.

In 1853 Mr. George J. Jones purchased the estate and established a livery business and conducted a harness shop in the ell part of the house. He continued in this business until his death which occurred in 1901, since which date the house and shop have been rented to various tenants.

SPECIAL PERMIT.

The trip of Chief Burrell and Sergt. Larkin in the police auto to Squantum on Thursday to arrest two men who were supposed to be seining for smelts off Thompsons island, proved to be a useless trip. With some difficulty the police managed to get the two men ashore, and were about to place them under arrest when one of them flashed a special permit to seine fish for the aquarium at Franklin park. It appeared that the two men were engaged in getting certain specimens of fish for the aquarium, and there was nothing for the police to do but let them go.

A big surprise awaits the children at Music hall at the Saturday matinee as every child will receive a gift.

Fat and Fashionable.

According to the Moorish idea of beauty, the chief charm of a beautiful woman is that she can only waddle, not walk. The fatter she is the more beautiful she is considered. If she can attain two or three hundred pounds of flesh she is the envy of all her sex.

The Moorish shape—if shape it can be called—approaches the perfection of feminine beauty when it resembles, or rather exceeds, the circumference of a barrel.

What a paradise for the fat woman! There she can eat and drink and feast to her heart's content, denying herself nothing, living an easy, indolent, luxurious life, with no horror of accumulating fat, but rather rejoicing in it. There the ambition of a woman is to acquire bulk. Physical culture she would regard as an enemy to beauty, and to take Turkish baths and diet herself would be considered the height of folly. She wants to be beautiful, and to be beautiful she must be fat.—St. Louis Globe Democrat.

Why Their Clothes Didn't Fit.

The late Admiral Robley D. Evans during his visit to Japan was received by Mutsuhito and his empress at a court ceremony. In speaking of the Japanese court he said:

"Hand kissing was not the thing. Instead, I received a handshake from a very shapely and beautiful hand. I found the empress a woman of great refinement and perfect ease of manner, so delicate in appearance and so small in stature as to remind you of some fine piece of Dresden china. She was attired in a Paris gown of heliotrope brocade, the bad fit of which I accounted for just as I accounted for the baggy trousers of the emperor. After I had been a year in Japan I was satisfied it was owing to the fact that a tailor would not permit himself to touch the persons of their majesties, but just looked at them and guessed what the measurements should be."

Long Lived Spaniards.

Though the average age of Spaniards is among the lowest in Europe—thirty two years and four months, against fifty years in Sweden and Norway—yet Spain remains the land of hundred-year-old people.

South of the Sierra Morena there are fifty to sixty a hundred years old in every million inhabitants. In Malaga and other parts of Andalusia 100 hundred-year-olds are reckoned in every million inhabitants. And when a Spaniard once attains that age he usually hangs on to life for ten to fifteen years longer.

One of the famous long lived men of Spain was Dr. Manuel Barca, who lies buried in the Church of San Sebastian at Seville, having 121 years to his credit, according to the church record. He left 300 descendants.—Boston Post.

The Palmetto State.

The origin of the state arms of South Carolina is thus given in the histories: "On June 28, 1776, a force of less than 100 Carolinians, under command of Moultrie, protected by the rude fortification of Sullivan's island, in Charleston harbor, made of the trunks of the palmetto, repulsed the attack of a British fleet under command of Sir Peter Parker, and when the state of South Carolina was organized the state seal, which was first used in May, 1777, was made to commemorate this victory. A palm tree growing erect on the seashore represents the strength of the fort, while at its base an oak tree, torn from the ground and deprived of its branches, recalls the British fleet built of oak timber, overcome by the palmetto."

Crocodile In a Tree.

An African hunter once found a large crocodile hanging in the fork of a tree about ten feet from the ground. As the place was fully half a mile from any water it was difficult to account for the crocodile's strange position. When questioned about the subject the natives explained that it was put there by an elephant. It seems that when the elephants wade into the Lake Ngami to bathe the crocodiles are in the habit of worrying them and biting their legs. Sometimes when an elephant is annoyed beyond endurance it picks up its tormentor in its trunk, places it among the branches of a tree and leaves it there.—London Graphic.

DARE-DEVIL FLYING BY AVIATOR PEGOUD

He Thrills British Thousands by His Topsy Turvy Stunts

London, Sept. 26.—Aviator Pegoud thrilled a crowd of thousands at the Hendon aerodrome by flying head downwards, turning somersaults in his machine and making figure eights hundreds of feet above the earth.

Pegoud's remarkable maneuvers began when he had reached a height of 1200 feet from the ground, where he tilted his aeroplane so that it was at right angles to the earth. He then pirouetted on the tip of one wing and did several dives with the nose of his machine downward for 100 feet before he regained his equilibrium.

The aviator then rose to a height of 3000 feet. With a sudden sweep downward he threw the aeroplane on to its back, flew in this manner for some seconds, righted his machine and repeated the performance before reaching the ground, where he was given an ovation by an enormous strong.

PARENTS BACK PUPILS

Strike In Syracuse High Schools Is Rapidly Spreading

Syracuse, N. Y., Sept. 26.—The third day of the strike of pupils of three Syracuse high schools was marked by a mass meeting at which leading citizens, parents and pupils united in denouncing new hours of study.

Speakers attacked the new hours—9 a. m. to 2:30 p. m.—as "outrageous and unhealthful."

The board of education insists the new schedule should be given a fair trial. Meanwhile, the number on strike is increasing. All the pupils who have quit their classes, numbering more than 1000, have been indefinitely suspended.

THE URANN FLOATED

First Vessel Ever Freed From Grip of Skiff Island Shoal

Edgartown, Mass., Sept. 26.—Skiff island shoal, graveyard of many a good ship, gave up a stranded vessel for the first time on record, when the five-masted schooner Marcus L. Urann was floated to safety.

The Urann's freedom was affected by the revenue cutter Acushnet and the wrecking tug Tasco. The Tasco had lightered much of the cargo of coal which the Urann was carrying and the schooner, with her bow already afloat, slid off the shoal in response to the tugging of the two steamers.

HUERTA NOT A CANDIDATE

Likely to Support Mexican Catholic Party Nominees

GAMBOA RECEIVES NOMINATION

Military Commander Named For Vice President — Neither Prominently Identified With Any Political Party and Both Thought to Be Acceptable to the United States

Mexico City, Sept. 26.—General Huerta has been eliminated from the electoral contest for president in Mexico, according to prominent members of the Catholic party, which nominated Frederico Gamboa, Mexican foreign minister, as its candidate. The selection, it is said, was made with the approval of Huerta and therefore means the elimination of Huerta as a presidential possibility.

The Catholic party, while supporting the present administration morally and financially, it is explained, realized the futility of endeavoring to continue Huerta in office in face of opposition on the part of the United States and the consequent inability of the government to borrow money. This attitude was plainly indicated to Huerta, who was brought to realize its consistency, and finally sanctioned the proposed nominations and gave assurances of his support of the ticket. He said that he would not be the candidate of any other party or faction.

The efforts of the Catholic party, it is said, have been directed at the selection of men who would be acceptable to the United States. The choice fell upon Gamboa for the reason that he has not been prominently identified with any political party, while it is believed that he will have the confidence of Liberals as well as Catholics, and upon General Rascon for vice president, who is regarded as a desirable running mate for similar reasons.

Rascon has always been an army man and has mixed little in politics. He was a friend of Porfirio Diaz, and was Madero's choice for war minister in De la Barra's cabinet. Since then he has received proof of confidence on the part of the present administration.

The nominations are of unusual importance, because the Catholic party is the only real political party having a far-reaching organization. Its ramifications extend practically to every village and hamlet in the republic.

Gamboa, in accepting the candidacy, expressed the hope that in the event of his election Mexicans who are now pacific would remain so and those in arms would lay them down. He tendered his resignation as minister of foreign affairs at once.

Gamboa was a disciple of Ignacio Mariscal, once foreign minister and at one time minister to the United States. He was sub-secretary of foreign affairs under Mariscal. Later he became minister to The Netherlands and has recognized ability as a diplomat. He is a writer of some note and is 50 years of age.

General Bascon was minister of war under Provisional President de la Barra. He served as military commander of the federal district for a short time and later as governor of Yucatan. He is now military commander of the district of Oaxaca. He is 65 years of age and has a long military record.

Washington Is Pleased

Washington, Sept. 26.—President Wilson took the position that the policy of moral suasion adopted by the United States toward Mexico had accomplished its two cardinal purposes—to obtain assurances that there would be a constitutional election and that Provisional President Huerta would not be a candidate to succeed himself.

BRITISH STRIKES END

Claims of Dock Laborers and Coal Miners Receive Consideration

London, Sept. 26.—All the strikes in Great Britain were settled when the directors of the Manchester ship canal agreed to consider the claims of their dock laborers for better wages and the coal miners at Pont-y-Pridd, South Wales, returned to work which they left on Sept. 17 owing to the employment of a non-unionist.

The only labor trouble in the United Kingdom for the moment is, therefore, the transport workers' strike in Dublin, and this is believed to be in a fair way of settlement.

"SEPTEMBER MORN" CHASE

Unclothed Man Wanted to "Purge Himself of His Sins"

New York, Sept. 26.—"September Morn running loose, as sure as I live," declared Patrolman O'Neill, as he saw Joe Shannon sprinting down the Bowery, wrapped only in speed and a smile.

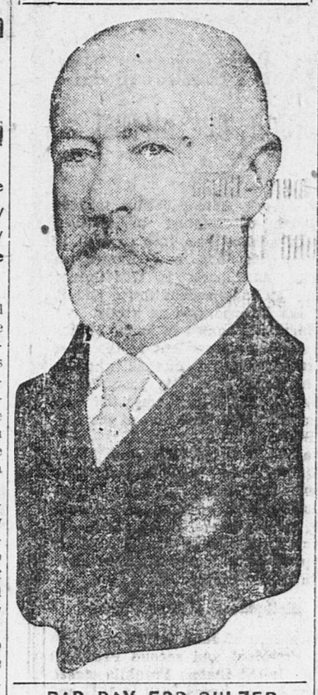

O'Neill, after a race of three blocks, brought his man down. Other policemen arriving on the scene formed a hollow square and marched him solemnly to the station. There he said he was making speed for Central park, to "purge himself of his sins."

Lineman Dies From Fall

Cambridge, Mass., Sept. 26.—Arthur Haverland, aged 36, a lineman, fell twenty-five feet from a pole and died two hours later. The fall broke his back and fractured his skull.

JACOB H. SCHIFF

He Was Asked to Allow Return of $2500 Check

BAD DAY FOR SULZER

Way Paved For Introduction of Damaging Evidence

Albany, Sept. 26.—Important developements marked the impeachment trial of Governor Sulzer:

Jacob H. Schiff, a New York broker, testified that he was recently asked by Samuel I. Frankenstein, a former law partner of Sulzer, if he would accept the return of the alleged $2500 campaign contribution which the banker said he gave to Sulzer without restriction as to its use. Schiff said he had replied negatively.

The high court, by a unanimous vote, decided to admit all testimony pertaining to campaign contributions made to Sulzer, even though they were not specified in the articles of impeachment.

This ruling paved the way for the introduction of evidence intended to show Sulzer had solicited and received large contributions from brewing interests. Sulzer asked, according to the testimony, that these contributions be given in cash instead of checks.

MILLIONS PLEDGED FOR WAR IN ULSTER

Families of Killed and Wounded Will Be Provided For Belfast, Sept. 26.—Sir Edward Carson, with a contribution of $50,000, heads a $5,000,000 subscription list to indemnify the families of killed wounded Ulster volunteers, if Irish home rule becomes an actuality.

The "provisional government" formed in secret conference may take over the government of Ulster even before home rule is enacted, said some of those who attended the council. If that step is taken, the government of Ulster will be in the hands of a "parliament" known as the Ulster volunteer committee, composed of eighty-five men, including Lord Charles Beresford, Lord Claude Hamilton, Sir Robert Kennedy and men of equal prominence.

There are few Nationalists who doubt that "Ulster will fight."

DECLARED INCOMPETENT

Committee of Three to Handle Estate of Banker Windmuller

New York, Sept. 26.—Louis Windmuller, the aged banker and philanthropist, who is suffering from senile paresis, was adjudged by a jury in the supreme court at Long Island City to be incompetent to manage his affairs, and a committee of three persons was appointed to take charge of his estate.

The committee consists of his son, Adolph C. E. Windmuller; his son-in-law, Julius Heyman, and his private secretary, Paul Haginaw. They were placed under $50,000 bond each.

RESERVOIR BREAKS

Twenty Thousand Chicopee People Temporarily Inconvenienced

Chicopee, Mass., Sept. 26.—About 20,000 persons were deprived of all fire protection and were inconvenienced for want of water for general purposes when a dam at the Cooley Brook reservoir collapsed.

The water submerged hundreds of acres of land and swept small buildings, trees, fences and almost everything of a movable nature before it. The damage is estimated at $20,000.

Dr. Burleson Arrives

A Very Natural Mistake

By CLARISSA MACKIE

Dr. Allen came into the living room, drawing on his driving gloves. He was an elderly man, hard driven by an extensive country practice, which he was about to share with an assistant from the city.

"I am called over to Ridgewood, Molly," he said to his plump little wife. "There's to be a consultation on the Travers case. Brown has telephoned for me. I may not return until late this evening."

"Oh, dear!" sighed Mrs. Allen. "That is awkward—just when you are expecting Dr. Burleson. But he may not come today."

"I'm expecting a telegram any moment. He said he would wire just before he left. You have a room for him, dear?"

"Oh, yes, the chimney room. It's so cozy on these October evenings."

Della Allen looked up from her sewing with a mischievous smile crinkling her lips.

"Mother is spoiling him, dad, dear. She has hung new curtains in the chimney room, and she has picked out all the prettiest worked slippers and necktie holders and shaving paper balls that your lady invalids shower on you at Christmas and has adorned his room with them. Now, mother, you know you have!"

"THEY TELL ME YOU ARE FROM ALLEN'S."

Father and daughter laughed tenderly at the embarrassment of the dear little woman, who murmured something about "refined young men far away from their homes."

"Here comes Peter with the carriage," announced Della from the window, and she flew to tuck his medicine case into the buggy and receive his farewell kiss.

It was an hour later that the expected telegram arrived.

Della smoothed out the message and read scornfully:

Meet me at 3:12 train. Save best room for me. BURLESON.

"Why—why, what a singular message!" faltered Mrs. Allen, all her exalted ideas of the new assistant crumbling to dust.

Della laughed. "Well, mother, of course I will meet him. He must be rather amusing, to say the least. We won't worry father about Dr. Burleson's eccentricities. He will be disappointed."

Della Allen, very straight and slim in her scarlet coat and gray skirt, with scarlet feather in her gray hat, drove Dandy to the railroad station to meet the 3:12 train. As the rubber tired runabout wheeled around to a standstill at the platform the train rushed in with a roar of escaping steam and a thunder of wheels on the rails.

Then a high pitched, rather disagreeable voice sounded at Della's elbow.

"They tell me you are from Allen's," said the voice sharply.

"Dr. Burleson?" she asked crisply.

"Yes."

Della turned the carriage, and Dr. Burleson tossed a heavy suit case in the back and climbed to a seat beside her.

They drove in silence for some time.

"How's the old man?" he asked after awhile.

Della stiffened.

"You mean my father, of course," she said coldly. "He is very well, thank you. He was called to Ridgewood this morning. Otherwise he would have met you himself."

"Every cloud has a silver lining," he said with a laugh that was extremely unpleasant to Della Allen.

Della thought of the dainty chimney room, and she wondered what her mother would think of the guest for whom she had made such thoughtful preparations.

Dandy turned in at the open gateway and stopped before the door of the wing where her father's office was situated.

Mrs. Allen came into the porch, cordially smiling.

"Here is Dr. Burleson, mother," said Della dryly as the new assistant went up the steps with his suit case in hand. "I am very glad to see you," said Mrs. Allen, holding out her hand.

The physician gripped it in a large red paw.

"Pleased to meet you," he said rather awkwardly, and Della stared as he added in a businesslike tone: "I hope you saved a decent room for me. I wired Allen to that effect."

"I trust you will find it entirely comfortable," said Mrs. Allen haughtily, and she called Peter from the flower beds to conduct the doctor to his room.

Alone, the two women stared at each other.

"Mother, he will never do!" whispered Della.

"He is impossible," said Mrs. Allen with flashing eyes.

Della drove Dandy around to the barn and then returned to the house to find black Peter in earnest conversation with her mother. The old servitor was rubbing his woolly head in perplexity.

"Sho, Miss Molly, he am de contraptedest I eber seen," grumbled Peter. "Ses he, 'Bring me ice water, boy, an' is dey a drink in de house or am dis a temp'rance hotel?' an' when I tells him it ain't a saloon he asks, 'What kinda ranch am dis anyway?'"

Mrs. Allen's face was pale and red by turns.

"Is there anything else that Dr. Burleson wishes?" she asked.

"Yas'm, Miss Molly. Ses he, 'Take all dese yere dinglebats outer dis yere room,' an', yas'm, he flang all dese t'ings at my haid." Peter brought his hand from behind his back and displayed an orange colored shaving ball, a beribboned necktie holder, a fancy pincushion and a pair of worsted slippers.

"The man is intoxicated," said Della from the doorway, and just then Dr. Burleson's heavy step was heard in the hall. In a moment he appeared, looking at his watch.

"It's after 4, and I had a light lunch," he said briskly. "Just have cook fix up a steak for me. Some onions with it would go well. And a piece of apple pie, the kind mother used to make, eh? I'll go out to the stables and take a look at the horse." He nodded toward them, clapped his green hat on his head and left the house, sauntering slowly toward the barn.

Peter followed him, grumbling.

Mrs. Allen looked at Della and was about to speak when there came a ring at the doorbell.

Della answered it, looking singularly handsome, for her cheeks were flushed with anger and her eyes shining like stars.

On the doorstep stood a tall, slightly built young man, with eyeglasses astride his handsome nose. He was immaculately attired, and beside him on the porch were a leather suit case and a traveling bag.

"Dr. Allen?" he inquired, baring his head.

"I am sorry, but my father is away. He may not return until late this evening," returned Della. "Is there anything?"—

"I am Dr. Burleson," explained the newcomer calmly.

"Dr. Burleson!" shrieked Della. "Why—why, pardon me, but we have been entertaining Dr. Burleson. Oh, there must be some mistake. Do come in and see mother."

So Della hustled the astonished young man into the living room and introduced him to her mother.

"I knew there was some awful mistake," said Mrs. Allen quietly as she shook hands with him.

The new Dr. Burleson displayed a letter from Dr. Allen, which fully identified him as the new assistant. Still, there was the man at the barn whom Peter reported as making a careful examination of Dandy and who was behaving in a very rude manner.

"Suppose I go out and interview this gentleman," suggested Dr. Burleson.

When Dr. Burleson returned from the barn it was with a smiling request for the first Dr. Burleson's baggage.

"He asks me to apologize for a mistake," said the young doctor.

"Now, do tell us all about it," said Mrs. Allen after the new assistant had returned for the second time, having escorted Dr. Burleson to the top of the hill and directed him to his proper destination.

Dr. Burleson laughed pleasantly.

"It appears that your visitor has a right to his professional title, but he happens to be a veterinary surgeon. He was called here to treat an animal belonging to Hosea Allen, proprietor of some big boarding house. Perhaps you know of the place?"

"Oh, yes—over near the bay," responded Mrs. Allen.

"He had never been here before and was surprised to find the boarding house conducted on such a small scale. It seems he wired Hosea Allen to have a room reserved for him, and at the station I believed he asked if there was a conveyance for Allen's, and they evidently pointed out your daughter."

"But your telegram?"

"My telegram? Oh, I never sent any, after all."

So the new assistant had a very informal introduction into his wife's family. Oh, yes, he fell in love with Della and married her, much to the delight of Dr. Allen and his wife. And Mrs. Allen often shudders and says:

"Just suppose the other Dr. Burleson had been the right one, Della!"

But Della only laughs and answers:

"Then you couldn't indulge in dingbats, mother, dear!"

CONGRESS ACTS ON NEW HAVEN

Bill to Extend Power of Commerce Commission

M'CHORD TO DRAFT MEASURE

Board to Be Given Jurisdiction Over Operation of Trains and Exercise Discretion Regarding Compulsory Use of Steel Cars to Safeguard Public In Railroad Travel

Washington, Sept. 26.—Congress responded to the suggestions of the interstate commerce commission's report on the New Haven railroad wreck at Wallingford, that greater plenary power be given the commission to enforce safety regulations.

A sub-committee of the house interstate commerce committee announced a series of hearings on a contemplated measure granting the commission sweeping power to regulate the operation of interstate trains, limit their speed, specify proper safety devices and require use of steel cars.

The commission has also been asked to frame a somewhat similar measure. Commissioner McChord, who wrote the Wallingford wreck report, is preparing it.

Representative Stevens of New Hampshire, chairman of the subcommittee, said that one of these bills, probably the commission's, would be introduced within a week.

"Our plan is to hold hearings for the next few months and have a measure ready to report to the house for immediate consideration at the beginning of the regular session," he said.

"For the first time the commission has now suggested it be given jurisdiction over operation of trains. We are now co-operating with Commissioner McChord in drawing a bill placing the whole question of compulsory use of steel cars within the commission's discretion. I believe the commission is best qualified to judge of the necessity for steel car equipment on various roads.

"The time has come for a radical step—granting the commission authority to establish rules for train operation."

"For five or six years we have been hoping the railroads would themselves take action without new legislation," said Chairman Adamson of the interstate commerce committee.

"At the present time the committee believes it may be proper to give the commission power to tell railroads when and where they must install safety appliances, block signals, steel cars and make improvements in their roadbed. If railroads run trains too close together the commission might properly be authorized to stop that."

BOYCOTTS QUEENSTOWN

Cunard Company's Action Indorsed by White Star Line

Queenstown, Sept. 26.—The White Star liner Olympic followed the example of the big Cunard steamships and shunned Queenstown harbor, where she has been heretofore accustomed to anchor.

It is therefore assumed that the White Star company has concurred in the Cunard company's boycott of the port.

Two hundred passengers and 1500 sacks of mail were sent out in tenders to be transferred to the Olympic, and much discomfort and delay were occasioned by a heavy swell which interfered with the progress of the superannuated tenders.

MAY VAN ALEN A BRIDE

Heiress to Millions Kept Her Wedding Plans a Close Secret

London, Sept. 26.—Miss May VanAlen, the daughter of J. J. VanAlen of New York and Newport, heiress to millions, was married to Griswold Thompson in the presence of only ten persons at St. George's, Hanover square.

The utmost secrecy was preserved. A special license was obtained four days ago. No festivities preceded or followed the event. After the ceremony the couple left for a motoring tour of England.

IMPRISONMENT AND FINE

Provided In Bill Which Aims to Prevent the Sale of Veal

Washington, Sept. 26.—A campaign to sweep veal from the American dinner table was launched by Representative Adamson of Georgia.

He introduced a bill making it a misdemeanor to kill calves under two years of age and offer the meat in interstate commerce. Penalties prescribed are imprisonment for six months and a fine of $100.

Y. M. C. A. Opens New Boston Home

Boston, Sept. 26—Fully 20,000 people attended the opening of the new building of the Y. M. C. A., 316 Huntington avenue, last night. The structure is considered one of the best equipped of its kind in the world.

New York, Sept. 26.—Excited after testifying in a damage suit for $10,000 brought against him by a painter, Max E. Bernheimer rushed across the courtroom and dropped dead.

AMERICAN ROADS CONGRESS TO MEET IN DETROIT SEPT. 29

Thirty States Have Named Delegates to Attend Big Gathering.

To Discuss All Phases of National and State Roads Problems.

THIRTY governors have already named their delegates to the third annual American road congress, which will open in Detroit on Sept. 29, and it is expected that a number of the governors will be present at the congress in person.

Governor McCreary of Kentucky, which state has recently established a state highway department, expects to attend the meeting, and it now seems assured that the heads of every state highway department from Maine to California will personally take part in the big meeting. As a result of this unusual interest the demand for exhibit space by manufacturers has been unprecedented. All available space has been already reserved by nearly 100 manufacturers, including every kind of roadmaking machinery, engineering instruments, concrete machinery, bridges, culverts, concrete, wood block, asphalt, tar and oil preparations.

Progress Is Expected.

Important progress is expected to be made along three great lines affecting the good roads movement. The congress will endeavor to agree upon a policy of national aid, which, with the united support of the good roads workers throughout the country, will be submitted to the congress of the United States. Steps will be taken at the session on state road legislation, to be held under the auspices of the American Bar association, for the formation, through official action by the several states, of an interstate commission to codify and simplify existing state road laws. At present most of the states are laboring under a weight of antiquated and contradictory road laws, and it is plain that the commission will recommend simple, clear cut and uniform road laws as a substitute for legislation. Maintenance of roads will be discussed from every standpoint during the sessions held by the American Highway association, the parent organization in the congress, and the engineers will endeavor to determine among themselves the steps which should be taken in the several states to insure adequate maintenance.

Big Exhibit Planned.

Nearly a hundred exhibitors have taken space for the great exhibition which is to be held in conjunction with the third annual American road congress. This exhibition will be the most important ever held in the history of roadmaking in America and is in line with the movement to make the American road congress an annual training school for road and street officials and to enable these gentlemen to increase their efficiency through the exhibition of material and equipment and also through lectures given by leading specialists. Every known road material will be shown, and the government exhibits will illustrate the exact methods of constructing every recognized type of road. The exhibit will in reality be a gathering place for all men who are actually directing the building, maintenance and administration of streets and highways. These gentlemen will become personally acquainted and will gain greatly through the exhibit and the discussions which are certain to arise over the various machinery and materials to be shown. Devices for road building, the methods of road building and materials will be freely discussed, and knowledge will be obtained at this exhibition in a short space of time that could not be secured otherwise.

Program of Events.

The tentative program for the congress has been announced. At 9 a. m. Monday, Sept. 29, the registration books for members and delegates will be opened at the secretary's office, in the Wayne gardens, where the badges, programs, cards, etc., will be distributed. The first meeting of the congress will be held at 10 a. m., Sept. 29, and will be called to order by Logan Waller Page, president of the congress. The second session will be held at 2:30 p. m. of the same day. A reception or garden party will be held late in the afternoon of the first day in honor of the distinguished guests of the congress. This will be followed during the week by a series of banquets and entertainments by the board of commerce and various commercial clubs.

Tuesday's program will be given under the auspices of the American Automobile association, starting at 10 o'clock. Representative Frank E. Doremus will preside. George C. Diehl, chairman of the good roads board of the American Automobile association, will introduce the presiding officers. National aid and national highways will be discussed by many prominent speakers. The Lincoln Highway association will occupy a portion of the program. At the afternoon session of Tuesday state legislation and road management will be taken up under the auspices of the American Bar association. The manufacturers represented in the session will arrange for special entertainments for the evening.

Wednesday will be devoted to construction and maintenance and will be under the auspices of the American Highway association. The afternoon session will be known as the "road users' session," under the auspices of the American Automobile association, and on the afternoon of Thursday there will be held a finance session. The American Bankers' association has charge of this. Friday will be Michigan day, and Chairman P. T. Colgrove, president of the Michigan State Good Roads association, will preside. Saturday the congress will close.

Road Legislation Topic.

National roads legislation will be a topic second to none discussed at the American road congress. This subject is one which has greatly concerned the A. A. A. national good roads board and hence it is logical that the national legislation session should be under the auspices of the American Automobile association, which co-operates with the American Highway association in this most important of good roads gatherings. The American Highway association includes in its membership the general good roads associations in all parts of the country, while the American Automobile association contains 500 state and local motor clubs, though both the A. H. A. and the A. A. A. also include thousands of individual members. Since the National Association of Road Materials and Machinery Manufacturers conducts its annual exhibition as a part of the American road congress the country wide importance of the gathering places it in advance of all highway conventions.

Legislators to Speak.

"National roads legislation day," which will be held Tuesday, will have speakers of national repute and men who have given much time and thought to this phase of the great subject. Three members of the joint committee of congress on federal aid have already been invited, and since these three have put forward definite propositions concerning national roads legislation their addresses are certain to be listened to with unusual interest. Chairman Jonathan P. Bourne of Oregon, Vice Chairman Dorsey W. Shackleford of Missouri and Senator Claude Swanson of Virginia are the three joint committee members who have definite plans to present. Since Representative Shackleford is the chairman of the new committee on public roads of the house of representatives it is expected he will propose something new, as he has recently made a statement which would indicate that further thought has presented advanced phases to him.

PASTOR PLANS ODD CLINIC.

Will Open Church Study to All Who Contemplate Suicide.

The Rev. Zedd Hetzel Copp, pastor of the Cohocksink Presbyterian church of Philadelphia, has announced to his congregation that on Oct. 1 he will formally throw open his study at the church to all who are so hopeless that suicide seems infinitely preferable to life.

"Mental clinics" is how he characterizes these conferences, from which he hopes large numbers of despondent men and women will go forth cured of the obsession that life holds nothing worth while for them.

"Hopelessness," he said, "almost always is the direct cause of suicide. The causes of the hopelessness are many. The principal one is worry. Brooding over troubles, real or imaginary, produces a state of mental vision from which beauty and joy and hope are shut out. Consequently hopelessness lays its damp hand upon the mind and then the victim sees only one way out of his difficulties—self destruction. I think that all suicides have been temporarily insane."

UPHOLDS COMMERCE ORDER.

Commerce Court Rules Against Railroad In Rate Case Appeal.

Following a principle laid down by the supreme court in the case of Procter & Gamble against the United States, the United States commerce court, in Washington, rendered an opinion that it had no authority to set aside a negative order of the interstate commerce commission. Judge Garland rendered the opinion, and Presiding Judge Knapp and Judge Mack concurred.

The case arose through the action of the Louisville and Nashville railroad in charging a lower rate for a long haul, in certain instances, than for a shorter haul. The company contended that as a result of steamboat competition it was obliged to reduce its rates for the longer haul. The interstate commerce commission refused to permit the railroad to charge the lower rates, and the company appealed to the commerce court. In dismissing the petition the court said:

"We are clearly of the opinion that under the ruling in the Procter & Gamble case we have no jurisdiction in the case at bar."

It was announced at City Hall this morning, that the tax bills for 1913, for which many property owners have been anxiously waiting, to see how deep they have got to dig down into their pockets, will be placed in the mail tonight to be delivered by the carriers Saturday morning. Naturally with a higher rate, the amounts will be larger, but the assessed valuation is an unknown quantity

INTERESTING TRESPASS CASE

Man Buys Apples But Cannot Enter Premises

One of the cases which occupied the attention of the District court until late Thursday was that of Louis Smith of Quincy, who was arraigned on a complaint charging him with trespassing on the property of Mrs. Marjorie B. Bluitt of Holbrook. Smith was represented by Arthur Thomas, while Louis A. Flye looked after the interests of Mrs. Bluitt.

At the start attorney Thomas said that he would admit that his client had entered the property, that no trespass signs were posted on the property and furthermore that his client had been warned to keep off of the property.

It appears that some time ago Smith made a bargain with Mrs. Bluitt to purchase the apples on the property for $6 and that at the time he had paid her the sum of $3 to bind the bargain.

The apples were not picked at that time, but a few days ago when Smith went to harvest his crop, he was confronted by the trespass signs and was informed by Mrs. Bluitt that she had exercised the woman's prerogative and had changed her mind. Smith however said he had not changed his mind, and that he had completed a binding act in the bargain by making the payment of $3.

Mr. Thomas argued that Smith had a perfect right to enter on the property to obtain his property in spite of the trespass sign. Judge Avery said he was inclined to agree that Smith was right in his conclusions that the sign did not apply to him, if as claimed he had bought the apples.

Mr. Flye said that the sign was posted as a warning to Smith to keep out and was posted after Mrs. Bluitt had changed her mind about selling the apples, and that he was taking the law into his own hands when he violated that sign.

It was suggested that Smith should have picked the apples at the time the bargain was made, but Mr. Thomas argued that having purchased the apples his client was not obliged to pick his fruit until he saw fit.

Judge Avery said that he recalled a case where a man had been arrested for disregarding a trespass sign on a farm, where he was walking across to collect a bill of the owner, and that at the hearing the court had ruled that the trespass sign could not be construed to apply to his case, as he was seeking money that was lawfully due him.

Cases were also brought up where a man had made a purchase of standing grass, and where firewood had been purchased before the trees had been cut down, and the court suggested that the case be continued one day that counsel might look up cases bearing on similar nature, and it was continued.

When the case was called this morning both counsel cited cases to bear out their side of the question. Judge Avery however said that while the sale had been made the license to go on the property to pick the fruit could be revoked. The court cited a case where the standing wood on a piece of property had been sold and later the land on which the wood stood was sold to another party who forbade the owner of the wood from entering on the premises and cutting the wood. The court further said that the complainant had a right to sell the fruit and she also had a right to cancel the license of Smith to enter the premises and take the property. The court therefore found Smith guilty of trespass and imposed a normal fine of $1. An appeal was taken.

It seems that the orchard contained somewhere about twenty barrels of apples and the woman, not realizing their worth sold the lot on the trees for $6. Smith started in to pick the apples but after picking several barrels found them too green and delayed picking until last week when he was forbidden to enter on the premises.

It also appears that the woman had in the meantime been informed of the worth of the fruit and finding that she could obtain more money than Smith had paid her, decided to sell them to some one else. Smith claims that there are now about fifteen barrels left on the trees and it is admitted that he has a bill of a sale for the apples and they belong to him although he has been refused the right to enter on the premises and get his property. If the apples had been picked and were in barrels he could go and take them but as they are still on the trees he cannot enter.

As the woman is reported to have admitted having sold some of the apples, Smith intends to apply to the court for a warrant against the woman for larceny of his fruit. The woman has another months' lease of the premises and it is doubtful if any of the fruit is picked until she gets out.

NEWS ITEMS FROM MILTON

Scenes were enacted at the Winthrop-Milton game Tuesday which were never before equalled in Milton, and the rumpus continued until the Winthrops who had been the aggressors, were obliged to flee the field in a body. In the chase which ensued to the station several of the visitors were given a sound pummelling and the lesson was forcibly brought home that gentlemanly conduct is welcomed in Milton and that rough-house tactics are resented. The melee commenced when a visitor slugged Sid Hazleton, the Milton coach, and in an instant both teams were at it for blood. Winthrop for a time had the best of the argument since they stole the start but the results of the gym training soon became evident and the Winthrop left the field in defeat.

John Mullen of East Milton, a member of the Metropolitan Park Commission moth department is entered in the Brockton marathon. He is a member of the North Dorchester A. A.

Miss Elizabeth Frye of Bryant avenue is on a short trip to New Hampshire where she will remain with relatives.

Mrs. Anna A. Peet of Edge Hill road is in New York.

William Graham of State street, has been removed to the Cunningham Convalescent home ill with typhoid fever.

Albert Woods arrived home from the Carney Hospital, Boston Thursday after undergoing a long and severe seige of typhoid fever. He is now in good condition.

TEACHERS' ASSOCIATION.

The first meeting of the Quincy Teachers' Association was held Thursday evening the the gymnasium at the High school, and aside from being largely attended was a most enjoyable affair in every way.

Although there was a reception committee composed of one teacher from each school building, under the chairmanship of Austin W. Greene of the Gridley Bryant school, an entire absence of formality was noticeable, making the evening all the more enjoyable.

The meeting Thursday evening was the first of four to be held throughout the coming school year, the principal object of the meetings being sociability, and to enable the teaching force of the schools to become better acquainted with each other. There was an attendance of about 150 out of a possible 190 teachers.

There was no set program for the evening and after first greetings, dancing occupied the attention for the evening, music being furnished by Wilson's orchestra. Light refreshments were served during the evening by the committee.

HOUGHS NECK WANTS.

The committees of the Houghs Neck Associates have announced to President John L. Hamilton and members of the Board of Trade their reasons why they want separation from Quincy. The facts were stated at the conference at Houghs Neck Wednesday evening. Included in their brief is a larger school building, better street lights, a new road to Rock Island, collection of garbage, better fire protection, better car service, double tracks and repairs of accepted streets The brief submitted plainly states that unless the shortcomings of that section, as enumerated, are speedily cared for separation cannot be forestalled.

SATURDAY BASE BALL.

The annual game for the championship of Ward Four between the Colonials and the All Stars will be played Saturday on the playground. The heavy rain of last week interfered with the previous arrangements. Sid Duggan will catch for the Colonials and Bradley of the Orients will do the box work. "Dick" Williams is carded as the pitcher for the All Stars. The game will be full of sensations because it has aroused such interest that fully 1000 are expected to attend.

DISTRICT COURT.

The continued case of Louis J. Smith of Quincy for trespass at Holbrook was called. He was found guilty and fined $1. Appealed.

Walter McCoy of Milton, John Sullivan, Daniel Kenney and Patrick Delaney of Weymouth were each fined $10 for drunkenness.

FATHER OF PHRENOLOGY.

Dr. Gall at One Time Had the Whole of Europe In a Furore.

The first public notice of the "Father of Phrenology" appeared in Weiland's "Dutch Mercury" on Aug. 14, 1798.

Gall was a practicing physician of Vienna, and early in his career he became a firm believer in the idea that the talents and disposition of men are dependent upon the functions of the brain and, furthermore, that they may be inferred with perfect exactitude and precision from the external appearances of the skull.

Gall was an able man. He set forth his theory in a graphic, unctuous manner, and in a very brief period he had all Europe at the top notch of excitement. The idea spread like wildfire, and in all grades of society people were discussing "the greatest of all discoveries." The new theory had to meet the customary opposition from the custodians of truth and the preservers of morality, but the opposition only increased the popularity of the theory, and Gall's celebrity increased by leaps and bounds. His lectures were interdicted, and he was threatened with the direst penalties unless he ceased his "immoral and atheistical" teachings, but he kept on with his propaganda, visiting all the large towns of Germany and the continent, and by 1805 all of Europe was interested in the Vienna doctor.

In 1828, the year of Gall's death, phrenology was in vogue everywhere. But after a great and glorious floodtide of popularity it began to wane, and today it is but seldom heard of.—New York American.

BANISH THE RATS.

They Are Not Only Disease Carriers, but Thieves as Well.

Almost unbelievable are some of the things done by the rat—the squealing, filthy, gluttunous all pervading, all destroying brown rat. Rats often gnaw the hoofs of horses until the blood comes. They have been known to attack fat hogs and eat holes in their bodies, causing death. They will fight human beings if cornered. They often steal valuable articles to use in building nests.

The following were found in a single nest: Three bedroom towels, two serviettes, five dust cloths, two pairs of linen knickerbockers, six linen pocket handkerchiefs and one silk handkerchief. This same rat, which was a model of industry and thrift, had carried away and stored near its nest a pound and a half of sugar, a pudding, a stalk of celery, a beet, carrots, turnips and potatoes.

In the last dozen years over 5,000,000 human beings have died of plague in India alone. The India plague commission, after careful inquiry, found that bubonic plague in man is entirely dependent on the disease in the rat!

Marvelous in its destructiveness is the common house mouse, closely related to the rat, and, like it, imported from Europe. The field mouse, too, is highly destructive, the most destructive to agriculture of all the rodents.—Farm and Fireside.

Missed the Bird and Lost.

The Glasgow News records a singular incident during a lawn tennis tie.

The two players, who may be termed A and B, were very evenly matched. The game was long, and sometimes one and sometimes the other narrowly led. At length when A was within a stroke of defeat he returned a ball softly, and it looked as if his fate was sealed. So it would have been, but just at that moment a bird flew across the court in a line parallel with the ball.

As all good tennis players can well understand, B mistook the bird for the ball and "smashed" at it vigorously. It swiftly rose and he missed it by a feather's breadth, and ere he could recover his balance the ball had dropped on his court.

This stroke proved the turning point in the tie, as A thereafter played up strongly and ran out winner.

The Sheep In the Grass.

Lord Palmerston once inspected "Summer In the Lowlands," a picture by Sir John Watson Gordon. "Look here," said Lord Palmerston to the artist, "why should the grass in that field be so long when there are so many sheep in the field?"

"My lord," replied the artist, "those sheep were only turned into the field last night!"

Lord Palmerston bought the picture at a high price.

Penny Gone! No Warts.

"I bought two warts from Vincent for a penny," he wailed, "and Vincent hasn't given me the warts and won't give my penny back."—Indianapolis News.

Round and Square.

"The mode of expression plays a very important part in diplomatic negotiations."

"Yes, but there is not much use of trying to make a well rounded sentence take the place of a square deal."—Washington Star.

Entertaining.

One of the most entertaining sights in life is to see two people who know it all attempting to instruct each other.—Puck.

A moral, sensible, well bred man will not insult me. No other can.—Cowper.

MRS. FINLEY ASKS FOR DIVORCE

Dora New Finley of Boston has filed at Dedham a divorce libel against her husband, Albert W. Finley of Quincy. She wants separation on the grounds of cruel and abusive treatment, and asks for the care and custody of James B. and Patrice, minor children. The Finleys were married at Philadelphia, June 9, 1889, and since have lived in Boston and Quincy.

MARINE SOCIAL CLUB.

The annual meeting of the Marine Social club of West Quincy was held Thursday evening and these officers elected:

President, B. J. Griffin.
Vice President, J. J. Callahan.
Grand Trustee, James A. Sweeney.
Recording Secretary, William J. Hebert.
Treasurer, George F. Hebert.

Important business was transacted and arrangements made for a series of socials to be held during the coming winter months.

QUINCY POINT CASE.

The second case of infantile paralysis that has developed in Quincy Point was reported to the Quincy Board of Health this morning. The family affected resides on Cherry street. As in the other cases a prompt investigation is being made by the board who, up to now have been unable to determine the way by which the disease is transmitted.

The political meeting called for at the home of James H. Foster has been indefinitely postponed owing to the formation of a political club—to handle the same matter.

This Is Your Town And It Is What You Make It

By HOLLAND.

WHAT makes a town? People and business. You are one of the people. What you buy helps make the business. The more you buy the better the business; the more business the better the town.

You want the town to grow and improve, don't you? Then you should help it to grow by increasing its business as much as you can. Every time you send elsewhere for goods you give your town a blow. Enough of these blows will ultimately kill the town.

The mail order houses do nothing for your town except try to kill it. Are you helping them? You are if you send your money to them for goods that you could buy at home. If you are more interested in the growth of Chicago or New York than you are in the prosperity of your own town, your own neighbors, then continue to send to mail order houses for goods. If you want your own town to thrive

SPEND YOUR MONEY WHERE YOU MAKE IT.

City Solicitor McAnarney left this morning for Portland, Me., on a brief business trip. He will return the latter part of the week.

Councilman Gilliatt of Ward Five is moving from Beach street to a house he has recently purchased on Elm avenue.

Now is the weather for smelts and every tide sees a large number of local anglers trying their luck. As yet however no very large catches have been reported. It needs a cool day for the smelts to run.

Sophie Nelson, wife of John Nelson of 5 Clark avenue, died at her home this morning in her 66th year. She was one of the oldest Swedish residents in West Quincy and had a host of friends.

The three days harvest festival at the Salvation Army hall opened Thursday evening with a large attendance. A social program was rendered by visitors from Boston and Dorchester. Fruit and vegetables were sold in large uantities and coffee and cakes were served.

Many members of the congregation of Swedish M. E. church and friends attended a basket social at the church Thursday evening. Good returns were secured from the sale of baskets and refreshments were served. The pastor, Rev. Axel Eman Hillman actively assisted the committee in preparing for the event.

The amusement committee of the George L. Gill Club held another of their enjoyable matinee whist parties in Odd Fellows hall Thursday with a large attendance. The high scorers were Mrs. Mary Thomas, Mrs. Lois Davidson, Mrs. Kate Prout, Mrs. Annie Morrison and Mrs. Sarah Williams.

PRATT'S BREAD—not made by guess-work, but by a scientific formula. Leading grocers sell it.

There is more Catarrh in this section of the country than all other diseases put together, and until the last few years was supposed to be incurable. For a great many years doctors pronounced it a local disease and prescribed local remedies, and by constantly failing to cure local treatment, pronounced it incurable. Science has proven catarrh to be a constitutional disease and therefore requires constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, Ohio, is the only constitutional cure on the market. It is taken internally in doses from 10 drops to a teaspoonful. It acts directly on the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. They offer one hundred dollars for any case it fails to cure. Send for circulars and testimonials.

MAYOR PROUD OF REDUCTION OF DEBT

Explains the Increase of Tax Rate Which He Says is Only Temporary

Shows Items in Which Increase Was Necessary

In the letters received by taxpayers this morning, containing their tax bill for 1913, were two other documents. One of these was in relation to the protection of trees from the gypsy and brown tail moths. The other matter, by far the most important, was a personal letter to the tax payers, in which Mayor Stone explains the high tax rate. If the Mayor is successful in reducing the gross debt of the city as now seems probable he will accomplish more than any administration of late years. The letter in full is printed below and is worthy of careful reading.

TO THE TAXPAYERS OF QUINCY:

Quincy, like every live city, is fast becoming more thickly settled and populous.

This growth causes an annual increase in the demands for an extension of the public service in all its branches; schools, streets, sidewalks, lights, parks, water, sewer, police and fire protections, etc.

To meet the reasonable requirements of the city's development, calls for an annual increase in the current expenses of the city. In keeping with our local progress comes the internal expansion in the affairs of State, Metropolitan District, and County each carrying with it an enlarged annual tax and assessment.

This increase in current expenses and in the State, Metropolitan and County Tax and assessments must be met.

If the city were free from debt and the public service in every department abreast of the needs of the hour, the money the city receives from the normal increase each year in its valuation might offset these demands. But with the city, notwithstanding its assets, handicapped by a large debt, and with pressing need for public improvements, the increase in valuation does not suffice.

There may be ways known to those who are skilled in municipal finance by which, under such circumstances, a high tax rate may be temporarily avoided, but to my mind such methods are unbusinesslike, in the long run wasteful of the public money,

ASSOCIATED CHARITIES

Good Work of the Year Reviewed in Annual Report

The Associated Charities have published their first annual report printed by the George W. Prescott Publishing Company, and it is very attractively arranged. The introduction was written by the president of the society, Thomas Fenno, and an interesting, "Foreword" was contributed by Mrs. Alice Haynes Marsh. The report of the secretary, Miss Jenny M. Purchase, is printed in full and gives an excellent idea of the size and scope of the work done in the twelve months preceding April 1, 1913. Rupert F. Claflin adds a word of appreciation in conclusion.

The list of contributors is given in full, and it is surprisingly small; only 165 individuals and societies have so far contributed to the sppport of this society. An earnest effort is now being made to increase the number. It has been proved that there is a work for such a society in Quincy. Prominent business men have spoken of the saving of money to the community, but aside from this the society insures prompt and adequate aid for the needy and protection from fraud for the charitably inclined.

The treasurer's report shows a balance in the treasury Sept. 6 of $387,00, and the financial committee are now soliciting pledges for the coming year. It may not be possible to reach all personally as the committee hope to do, but it is expected that those interested to give will send contributions to the treasurer, Rupert F. Claflin, or to the secretary, Miss Jenny M. Purchase 148 Goffe street, Quincy, as soon as possible. A copy of the report will be mailed to anyone on request.

CANDIDATE FOR MAYOR

Former Assessor Johnson First to Take Out Papers

Charles H. Johnson anounced this morning that he should take out nomination papers Monday morning as Republican candidate for Mayor, at the city primaries. The announcement has been anticipated for several weeks. Mr. Johnson has served as councilman and assessor, being at one time chairman of the Board of Assessors. Several years ago he was a candidate for the mayoralty nomination.

EX-MAYOR IN THE FIELD

Rumor Says William T. Shea Will Take Out Papers

There was a persistent rumor about City Square this morning that ex-Mayor William T. Shea would be a candidate for the Democratic nomination for Mayor at the coming city primaries. The Daily Ledger was unable to reach ex-Mayor Shea this noon, a call at his home finding him out and no one present who was authorized to speak for him.

There have been persistent rumors every year since he completed his fourth term in 1911, that he again might enter the field for Mayor, but he has persisted in keeping his intentions to himself up to the present time.

During the years when he served the city as Mayor in 1908, 09, 10, and 11 his battle cry was non-partisan and it is more than probable if he enters the field this year it will be under the same banner.

SOUTH QUINCY CASE.

A case of infantile paralysis has developed on Quincy street, South Quincy, and is the first that has appeared in that section. At the present time there are 11 cases on the records of the department. The first four were reported from Atlantic and since then the disease has appeared in several parts of the city. The possibility of the removal of junk and rags as being the cause of the spread is being considered.

NEW RATES FOR INSURANCE

Cost is Less Where Houses Have Non-Combustible Roofs

A new table of insurance rates approved by the New England Insurance Exchange to apply to Quincy and Milton has recently gone into effect and several increases are noticeable. The rates do not apply to summer property, but to dwellings situated within 500 feet from a hydrant and occupied all the year round. The rate is slightly less where non-combustible roofs are attached. The former rate of 25 cents per hundred, applied to everything, excluding boarding houses which are still listed at 40 cents.

The rates on single and two apartment houses is 23 1-3 with non-combustible roofs and 25 cents with combustible roofs. On three apartment frame houses with non-combustible roofs 28 1-3 is the rate against 30 cents for combustible roofs. Four apartment frame houses with non combustible roofs are listed at 38 1-3, and 40 cents for combustible roofs. Barns written with dwellings and having combustible roofs are rated at 26 2-3 cents, and 25 cents for non-combustible roofs. When written without the dwelling a rate of 60 cents for non-combustible and 68 1-3 for combustible roofs appears.

The same method of rating on time insurance is in vogue, two rates for three years and three rates for five years.

C. E. Goddard, secretary of the New England Insurance Exchange, said this morning that Quincy has not been effected by any material increase, and that the slight change is due to the grading of fire protection, in every city and town and classifying them on a grade of 200 points. Cities or towns graded at 180 or better are rated less than the second class between 100 and 180, which includes Milton and Quincy, and the third class which includes Braintree. The only place in Massachusetts graded in the first class is Brookline. Milton, in points, exceeds Quincy by a few. Mr. Goddard called particular attention to decrease where non-combustible roofs are attached.

THE GRANITE EXHIBIT

Successful Financially as Well as Artistically

The New England Memorial Convention Bureau held their final meeting in Boston on Wednesday, and it was a very gratifying one. The president, John L. Miller of Quincy, made his report, showing he had collected $4800, giving the names and amounts of each contributor, showing also that he had sold $1450 of advertising space in the program.

The treasurer, James Joss, made his report, which balanced with the president's to a cent. He reported enough money on hand to pay all bills, with a substantial surplus, so they voted to return $250 to the Quincy Association, and $100 to Westerly that was contributed as a guarantee fund.

So closes the largest, best and most artistic exhibition of monumental goods ever shown in this country. The president says he was determined to make a success of it, and the two weeks before the opening he devoted his whole time, and when it was over he was worn out, yet every one appeared so happy at the results that he was glad he did it. He has received dozens of letters from all parts of the country congratulating him on the success, and the splendid entertainment that was provided for the delegates.

Some of the most active members of the Qiuncy Tennis club must be surprised that they are rated as among the wealthy of the city. Just how playing tennis adds to ones wealth or places then as being wealthy is a puzzle for them to solve.

LOW VALUATION AT WOLLASTON

Citizens' Association Appoint Committee to Make Inquiry

One result of the publication of the Assessors valuation list of 1912 is the attitude of the Wollaston Citizen's Association which voted Friday evening to appoint a committee to inquire into the low assessments of certain properties in Ward Five.

Among other things recommended is a new ward room, and the erection of an association sign near the Wollaston station. The subway committee, through Chairman H. C. Lowe, reported progress.

Deep regret was expressed that W. E. Robertson, vice president of the association, had turned farmer and would make his home in East Weymouth.

William Stanford, the president, T. C. DuPlessis, the vice president, and A. J. Scorer, the treasurer, were appointed to secure a hall for the next meeting.

UNCONSCIOUS—UNKNOWN.

The Finn who was picked up unconscious near Quincy Adams at midnight Tuesday is still on the dangerous list at the Quincy City Hospital. Nothing positive regarding his idenification has been secured. The name Mattson, stitched to his clothing is the only clue. The general impression of passengers on the train from which he jumped is that he is a Braintree resident.

VIOLATION OF LIQUOR LAW

Charged Against Five Men Who Sold Wine by Carload

A. Fontano G. Catto, B. Tamburrini, F. DiBona and Luigi DiBona have been summoned into court for Monday on a complaint charging them with unlawfully soliciting orders for liquor. Inspector Goodhue alleges that the parties have been going among the Italian families at South and West Quincy soliciting orders for wine. In most of the cases a part payment was made at the time the order was taken, the balance being paid when the wine was delivered.

Last Mcnday a car load of wine arrived at South Quincy from Ohio, consigned to these parties. In the car were about 120 barrels of wine, or 3,780 gallons, which was to be distributed among the families from whom orders are alleged to have been secured by the parties named in the complaint.

ASH COLLECTON.

Many inquiries are being constantly received at the Board of Health office relative to the collection of ashes. It seems that many people have placed their ash barrels out expecting that they would be collected this week. The Board of Health however advertised early in the spring that but one collection a month would be made during the summer months. The regular collection therefore does not commence until Monday, Oct. 6, after which weekly collections will be made.

While the killing of the Baltimore orioles costs the South $35,000,000 annually in the spread of the boll weevil, they make very handsome hat trimmings, so that every one is satisfied.

Women are to wear suspenders, but it remains to be seen whether they can train the men to sew on the buttons.

While much of the work done by the census bureau has little practical value, the bureau is generally considered useful, as is provides work for some very worthy people.

From the flood of comment about women's clothes, it is evident that women's petticoats are a subject that is supremely interesting to many of our leading masculine intellects.

Several gentlemen have been heard to remark recently that they were glad to know that the men's clubs of their respective churches would next month begin their meetings for the season. The men's club fills a long felt want in the social life of men because it provides a pleasant means for the interchange of thought and offers desired relaxation after a hard business day. Talented speakers, good food and the atmosphere of good fellowship are a strong inducement to men who would otherwise not leave their homes for an evening out. More than all this and of much more importance to the social welfare, is the fact that these clubs while not religious organizations in any special sense are nevertheless of great value to their church in many ways. In a call for finances, the members are ever ready to contribute, take great interest in solving knotty parish problems, back up the pastor in some of his pet schemes and in other ways too numerous to mention perform their own peculiar but indispensable work. The men's club has come to stay. It is no longer an experiment but an institution. Quincy has a number of such organizations. May they all live long and prosper.

LIFE INSURANCE.

In spite of the thorough job of house cleaning supposed to have been done some years ago, life insurance seems still to be regarded with some suspicion by the average man. At least this opinion was expressed at the National Life Underwriters convention just held at Atlantic City. The companies were blamed for not undertaking a widespread campaign to promote public confidence.

Confidence or no confidence, it takes incessant pushing to build up a life insurance patronage. The agent must join clubs and societies to make acquaintances and insure the members. He must follow up every marriage and every funeral. What better wedding present than an insurance policy? What better argument than the death of an uninsured man? Some of the chief fathers of life insurance used to assail strangers on the street and talk insurance to them.

The life insurance man may be a nuisance whom you oddge around a corner to avoid. Nevertheless, the widows and orphans see him in a wholly different light.

The great trouble is that getting insured is gruesome work. It promotes lugubrious thought of the mystery of earth's final partings. The stethoscope makes your heart beat a little faster, and you get fussy about that little wheeze in your lungs.

But when the family man, for such sentiments, neglects this obvious duty toward his dependent loved ones, he plays an unmanly part. It would be poor compensation to your family in their poverty to know that loss of home comforts was due to the tactlessness of the agent or even to the failure of the company to return liberal settlements.

The companies of course need to clean up all crocked ways, if such still exist. But there is a natural though illogical reluctance to put money into an investment in which the investor can only win by losing his life. The companies need to drill the force of their good arguments into the public mind by persistent advertising, which will win attention where the agent is driven out by a curt and irritated negative.

WHO GOT NEW HAVEN MONEY?

Foss Orders Public Service Commission to Find Out

CALLS FOR SWEEPING INQUIRY

Considers Expenditure of $337,000 While Legislature Was In Session "Ominous"—Wants Those Who Voted For Trolley Merger Investigated —Forerunner of Political Convulsion

Boston, Sept. 27.—Governor Foss, in the most sensational document of his administration, demands that the public service commission investigate the conduct of the members of the Massachusetts legislature who voted for the big New Haven bills.

The document is in the form of a letter to Chairman Macleod of the commission, and is taken as a flat declaration that the governor intends to enter the campaign as an independent candidate upon the New Haven issue.

Not only does the governor demand an investigation of the legislature. He wants the commission to find out why the New Haven is paying ex-President Mellen $30,000 for acting in an advisory capacity to the railroad.

He wants the details of how the $337,000 for "special expenses" was actually expended, and what was the nature of legal service rendered by certain partisan leaders. He calls "ominous" the expenditure of this amount of money during the six months that the legislature was in session.

He declares the public service commission has power to conduct the investigation and advises the commission in any case of doubt to call upon the office of the attorney general for assistance.

In asking for this sweeping inquiry the governor contemplates a scrutiny of the motives of the 163 members of the legislature who voted for the western trolley merger over the veto of the governor, and the 170 members of the legislature who voted to give the New Haven railroad the right to issue $67,000,000 in bonds.

Mr. Foss figures that it cost the New Haven road $337,000 for special services in the legislature last year, and announces that it is his purpose to turn up the reasons for this expenditure in detail.

This bond issue is now being considered by the commission, which is giving hearings to determine whether or not the issue shall be permitted.

The governor's demand for the investigation thus opens up not only the inside facts as to how the two big railroad bills were passed, but the propriety of the commission now in passing upon the bond issue.

The action of the governor in demanding a sweeping investigation created a profound impression among the men who have been active in railroad matters. It was regarded generally as the forerunner of the biggest political convulsion the state has witnessed in a generation.

Asked if his letter to Macleod was preliminary to his independent candidacy, the governor said: "Well, you can read between the lines."

Macleod, when asked what the commission would do about the letter, said it would be taken up by the board today and a plan of action immediately formed. He thought the commission had sufficient power to undertake any investigation that might be necessary to the purposes of public supervision.

NO SECOND DEGREE PLEA

Schmidt Prefers Electric Chair to Life Term In Prison

New York, Sept. 27.—"I will not consider entering a plea of guilty of murder in the second degree if they declare me sane," said Hans Schmidt, slayer of Anna Aumuller. "If they declare me sane, I would not think of consenting to imprisonment for life. I want death in the electric chair."

District Attorney Whitman and his two alienists are convinced that Schmidt is sane and should be punished. The district attorney is preparing for trial on the promise that the report of the alienists will be satisfactory to the state.

SULZER'S PLEAS TO WITNESSES

Did Not Want Truth Told at Impeachment Trial

PECK TOLD TO "FORGET IT"

Had Asked Governor Concerning Possible Evidence—Morgenthau Urged to Treat $1000 Contribution as Personal Affair—Sulzer Got Busy When Trial Was Assured

Albany, Sept. 27.—The direct charge that Governor Sulzer asked him to commit perjury was made by Duncan W. Peck, state superintendent of public works, when testifying at the Sulzer impeachment trial. Peck said he gave Sulzer $500 immediately after he was nominated for governor. Last July he was subpoenaed before the Frawley committee to testify.

"I went to the governor in the executive chamber," he said, "and showed him the letter and asked him what I would do.

"He told me, 'Forget it.' I asked him what I could do if they had me under oath, as they probably would. He replied: 'Oh, do as I shall; forget it.'"

This was in effect a request to deny the gift of $500.

The prosecution sprung another sensation on Sulzer's attorneys when it recalled Henry W. Morgenthau to the stand. Morgenthau, who had recently been appointed ambassador to Turkey, gave $1000 to Sulzer for his campaign fund, he said, "through an impulse of unusual generosity."

Morgenthau was asked point-blank whether Sulzer had discussed this matter since he became governor. The witness said he had. Asked when, Morgenthau said:

"Almost immediately after I returned from Europe a few weeks ago. I was called on the long distance telephone by Sulzer. He invited me to come to Albany to see him. I told him it was out of the question at that time. Then he asked me whether I was going to testify at his impeachment trial. I told him I had been subpoenaed.

"When I made that reply Sulzer said to me: 'I hope you will be easy with me.' I told him that I would have to recite the facts exactly as they were. He then asked me whether I could not treat the affair between us as personal, but I told him I could not do so."

The revelation that the governor had been in personal communication with witnesses since the trial was decided on seemed to stun the Sulzer lawyers. They conferred a moment and finally asked him whether he was certain that the conversation he related was exactly as it had taken place. He replied that this was the substance and was quickly excused.

The prosecution also developed that Sulzer campaign contributions had been solicited on the floor of the cotton exchange. J. T. Gwathmay, a cotton broker, said he personally sent his check for $100 to Sulzer and stipulated that the money was to be used "for campaign purposes only."

Felker Gives Thaw Lawyers Until Oct. 6 to File Briefs

Concord, N. H., Sept. 27.—Counsel for Harry K. Thaw received assurance from Governor Felker that he would grant their request for an extension to Oct. 6 for filing briefs in the extradition proceedings.

One of the attorneys said their work was being carried on as rapidly as possible, but that since the hearing before Felker last Tuesday additional precedents bearing on the situation had been discovered. These will be incorporated, he said, in the documents to be placed in the governor's hands.

Washington, Sept. 27.—The tariff bill is completed except for the provision taxing trades in cotton futures. After more than two weeks of work behind closed doors, the eight Democrats representing senate and house, as members of the conference committee, settled the last of their other differences and reached the decision that they could not agree on the cotton futures tax.

It is believed the report will be presented to the house Monday afternoon by Representative Underwood.

HOUGHTON SAMUEL WARD.

Houghton youngest child of Rev. Merrill C. Ward, formerly pastor of the Universalist church of Quincy, and acting pastor at present, died at Jamaica Plain, Thursday, Sept 18.

The family spent the summer at Maplecroft farm at Buxton, Maine and all were in excellent health. The morning of Sept. 12 Houghton showed mild symptoms of indigestion, but not appearing to be ill the family came from Maine to their new home 2 Greenough avenue, Boston, where Mr. Ward Sept. 14, began the pastorate of St. Paul's Universalist church at Jamaica Plain. A doctor called each day and there were no unfavorable symptoms until Thursday when a trained nurse was called but at 6.15 P. M. the little one passed where there shall be no more death.

Prayer with the family was offered the next afternoon by Rev. George L. Perin and that night the family returned by boat to Maine and Saturday afternoon a private funeral was held at the home in Buxton, attended by Rev. Fenwick L. Leavitt of Portland, and Howard Stevens also of Portland sang "Come unto me," "Thy will be done," and "Abide in me." The little form was laid at rest in the Harmon—Ward lot of the South Buxton cemetery.

Houghton was born in the Universalist Parsonage at Norway, Me., Dec. 21, 1910. He was a beautiful and winsome child, full of health and promise.

The people at Jamaica Plain proved devoted friends of the new pastor in those few hard days in the new unsettled home, and flowers and sympathy came from many friends. Mrs. Ward and family returned to Jamaica Plain Thursday of this week, Mrs. Ward's mother, Mrs. John H. Harmon accompanied them for a few days visit.

COLONIAL THEATRE.

George M. Cohan, probably the most conspicuous figure the American stage has harbored in the last decade will play his farewell engagement at the Colonial theatre, Boston, commencing Monday night, Sept. 29th, presenting at that time, and for four weeks following, his great big wholesome play "Broadway Jones" which was so successful in New York and Chicago last season. In both cities it was commended as a play that appealed for its laugh compelling qualities and for the cleanliness of its theme. These attributes have always been a noticeable feature of plays from George M. Cohan's pen and perhaps they are the real reason for the phenominal success that has come to this young man who at the age of 35 is able to retire from a profession that his unusual and unique personality has enriched and adorned. Mr. Cohan's company on this farewell tour is the same that has surrounded him since the inception of the piece more than a year ago. It includes, besides his mother and father, Helen F. and Jerry J. Cohan, George Parsons, Clarence Heritage, M. J. Sullivan, John Fenton, Jack Klendon, Daniel Burns, Maude Gilbert, Mary Murphy and Ada Gilman.

The danger of the crossing is evident, particularly in the fall when an average of 1000 automobiles a day pass under the gates. Officer Travers, who in addition to doing regular patrol duty is assigned to protect the public, saves, it is estimated on an average, one life a day because it is through his efforts that traffic is directed and sometimes stopped in the nick of time. His fine work and the freedom of the spot from accidents is the talk of the town. The fight for the elimination of the crossing may commence at any time.

Sales, $250,000
Tolls, $36

THIS is the most remarkable incident of its kind that we have heard of in the course of a demonstration of selling by telephone---sales totalling $250,000 at an expenditure of $36 for telephone tolls.

By permission we are enabled to say that the selling was done by MR. GEORGE R. KELLY of George R. Kelly & Co. of 104 Hanover St., Boston, New England selling agents of the American Window Glass Company of Pittsburgh.

One of our salesmen called upon Mr. Kelly to demonstrate our new toll service selling plans, only to find that already he was employing advanced methods along this line. Said he:

"We anticipated a rise in the price of window glass around January 1, and wanted to give our customers the benefit of current quotations.

"There wasn't time to make personal visits to the trade, letters wouldn't be satisfactory, so we made our calls by telephone.

"During the first ten days in December we made toll calls to widely separated points in New England, at a cost of about $36, and booked orders aggregating $250,000."

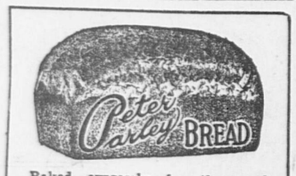

If any New England house can show greater results from selling by telephone, we would be glad to learn of them.

"Business men interested in progressive ideas for the extension of trade are invited to send for our booklet entitled "Modern Methods of Money-Making," and for samples of our "Telephone Passes."

In Greater Boston, call Fort Hill 7600 and ask the Contract Department for details.

QUINCY HIGH LOSES

But Makes Fine Showing Against Newton

The Score Was 19 to 0

Although the Quincy High school football team was defeated yesterday afternoon at Claflin field, Newtonville, by the crack Newton team, the coaches and players are more than pleased by the fine showing made. The score, 19 to 0, does not tell the story of the real strength of Quincy, for every point that was scored by the winners was made as a result of the Quincy boys errors.

The Newton team was pounds heavier to a man and this was especially so of the back field, where the comparison made our players look like grammar school boys. Despite the weight of the Newton team, only once was it possible for a first down to be made by a play through the line. Too much credit cannot be given to the entire line, and from all indications Quincy is going to have one of the best in this section of the state before the season is over.

The greatest weakness of the team was fumbling, for as above stated all of Newtons points were made as a result of Quincy errors. Connelly was the chief offender in this respect, for the game was only two plays old when on a skin tackle play he dropped the ball after being tackled. Newton tried three plays through the line, but was unsuccessful in each case, and Jacobs dropped back for a drop kick. As the ball was recovered on Quincy's 15 yard line it was not much of a task to boot the ball over the cross-bar.

Quincy chose to have Newton kick off again and Murphy made the catch running the ball back about 5 yards before being downed. After a few tries at the rushing game, Larkin punted, and Newton took a try again at Quincy's line but with the same poor success as before. Hyatt kicked a dandy which was handled in good style by the Quincy back, but he was unable to gain, being downed in his tracks.

On the second play through the line Donnelly again fumbled and Newton again recovered. This was on the nine yard line and after a fine tackle by White, in which the Newton runner was thrown for a loss of 5 yards, a series of short end runs were tried and Hyatt was forced over the line for the touchdown. Hyatt kicked the goal and the score was 10 to 0. The half ended with the ball in the middle of the field.

Several changes were made at the beginning of the second half, Berman taking Foyes place in the line, Jepson changing with Donnelly, and "Wet" Brown taking Murphy's place in the back field. Quincy again chose to have Newton kick, and Page caught the ball after another long kick by Hyatt. After a couple of line plays which were not very successful, Larkin punted, and Newton made a fine gain aided by good interference. A forward pass was then tried, but it was blocked and the ball called back. A line play was then tried but failed owing to a good tackle by Hamlin. Hyatt punted to Page who was on Quincy's 5 yard line. Page did not attempt to take the ball on the fly but waited for it to bounce and as a result the Newton tacklers were upon him just as he reached for the ball. Page juggled it a minute and then stepped over the line the Newton men immediately fell on him and a safety was scored as a result. This made the score 12 to 0.

Newtons final score came as a result of three or four short end rushes after Quincy had been penalized 15 yards for holding. Page had just made a fine run of about 20 yards around Newtons right end, aided by the best interference of the game, and on the next play Quincy was set back. Again there was off-side play by a Quincy man and once more a few yards were taken from the hard earned gain. Larkin punted and in three or four plays Hyatt went over for the final score. He also kicked the goal. This made the score 19 to 0

For Newton, Hyatt was the whole thing. With this man out of the game Newton would have but a mediocre team, for he figured in about every play that was made and try as they might the local boys were unable to stop him. Brady also played well as long as he was in the game.

For Quincy, there are many good things to be said, especially of the line men. The back field is the problem at present although one find was discovered in yesterdays game. "Old Hoss" Jepson finally showed signs of life, and in all probability he will make a valuable man for the team. Whites tackling was very good as also was Hamlins.

Quincy lost the best chances she had to score by the many fumbles made while men were going through the line and also by the large number of penalities inflicted. A total of 65 yards were taken from Quincys rushing efforts. Both of these failings ought easily to be overcome and in the next game, on Tuesday when Weymouth comes to town, there surely will be something doing at the new field. One very gratifying feature of the battle was the fact that about a dozen rooters made the trip. These Quincy noise-makers were in much evidence throughout the game.

UNIFORM SUNDAY LAWS

Sunday laws relative to sports are considered editorially by the Herald today, the purport being that the Legislature should revise this laws. But there are laws enough. As long as the laws are enforced by local police departments there is sure to be different degrees of activities, some cities and towns overlooking what is permitted in other cities and towns. But it is up to each city to enforce the Sunday laws, as well as the liquor laws, impartially, regardless of what is done in other cities. The Police department should have the backing of public sentiment. Let us ever keep in mind the words of the pastor of the Wollaston Unitarian church—"If we lose our quiet Sunday, then it will be only a question of time when our nation will go to destruction. The lack of reverence for things sacred is the great cause of lack of respect for law and authority."

It was the Ministers Association of Quincy that protested against Sunday tennis, and appointed a committee to see the chief of police. When it comes to the enforcement of the Sunday laws, the views of the clergymen should be respected.

The editorial of the Herald is printed in full:

"The Wellesley and Wollaston Country clubs' cases bring up the curious divergence of the law's enforcement in different parts of the commonwealth.

"In Wellesley the selectmen recently denied a petition to allow Sunday use of the town tennis courts. The petitioners pointed out that they were entitled to the same privileges as the club members and demanded like immunity from prosecution. This was also refused. One of the townsmen then brought a formal complaint against the clubs' Sunday activities and demanded enforcement of the law. The selectmen avoided the issue by saying that the complainant did not live near the country club. If he wished to obtain any action, they told him, he should go to court. Here the matter rests.

"A different result obtained in Quincy. Sunday golf and tennis had been played at the clubs. Three weeks ago the raid, arrest and fining of a group of Syrians for playing dominoes on the Sabbath led to a pulpit attack by the Rev. B. A. Willmott on the discrimination which permitted Sunday sports at the golf and tennis clubs, but forbade equally harmless pursuits of poor and ignorant foreigners.

"The police, stirred into activity, took the names of sixteen tennis players at the Quincy club the following Sunday. Threat of prosecution of the charges and of similar action against the golf players at the Wollaston club led to an agreement between the club and police. And Sunday golf and tennis have been discontinued in Quincy.

The matter of uniform enforcement is quite apart from the ethics of Sunday tennis and golf. Except in the city of Boston, and isolated spots like the Wollaston and Quincy grounds, these games are played generally throughout the state. The same day's newspaper that recorded the Quincy raid reported results of practice games in other clubs. The Legislature should hasten to clarify the situation by an enactment under which all can be treated alike, and not alone all golf and tennis clubs, but all similar out-of-door sports. The question is far-reaching, and not in all points easy of solution, but on that account our lawmakers should not shirk the responsibility of making a decision."

DOHERTY DROPS DEAD IN HOME

Engineer of Death Train In Stamford Crash

WAS ABSOLVED BY CORONER

Left New Haven Road After Wreck In Which Six Persons Were Killed, but Had Grieved Continually Ever Since—Doubtless Hastened Death From Heart Disease

New Haven, Sept. 27.—Charles J. Doherty, engineer of the New Haven's Springfield express at the time of the wreck at Stamford, Conn., June 12, dropped dead from heart failure at his home here.

Six persons were killed and twenty injured in the wreck. In the coroner's report Doherty was absolved from any blame.

Doherty, who was 39 years old, had grieved continually over the wreck, and his relatives say this contributed to his death. He leaves a wife and two small children.

A few days after the disaster Doherty talked with to newspaper men about the wreck. "The New Haven will have no problem, as far as I am concerned. I'm through," he said.

"I haven't a penny in the world. The road has closed its account with me with an $8 pay envelope, and I wouldn't run an engine again if they put a $100 bill in my hand every time I got near a cab.

"Last night I slept three, maybe four hours. It was the first sleep I had had in eight nights; since the wreck I hadn't been able to sleep longer at a time than that," snapping his fingers in illustration.

"Every time I shut my eyes I see the poor, gray-haired woman that was the first person I saw when I got down from my cab at the wreck. I didn't understand what had happened until I saw her, and now I see her all the time. She brought me my first horror, and it's she that keeps the horror alive."

Doherty's reference was to Mrs. Seeley of Boston, whose body was taken from the wreckage.

"Many a time," Doherty went on, "I've wished that I had been carried clear on into the wreck and killed. I'd like to be through with life, the way it is now; somehow I feel as if I had lived long enough.

"But I haven't got a penny, as I say, and I have got a wife and two children. I'll find something to do that isn't railroading, and I'll settle down to it and forget, as soon as I can, that there is such a thing as railroading."

Doherty broke down and wept when called to testify during the coroner's investigation. He declared the brakes on his engine failed to work, and numerous tests were made of the brakes after the collision. On the final test the engine, one of the big moguls recently purchased by the New Haven, failed to respond to the brakes and slid beyond the point where it should have stopped just as it did with Doherty.

Doherty was the engineer of the second section of the Springfield express. The first section had stopped at Stamford when Doherty's engine crashed into it.

STABS HOLE IN BOAT

Swordfish Makes Crew of Fisherman Keep Busy at Pumps

Portland, Me., Sept. 27.—The ramming of the hull by a giant swordfish, which left five inches of its sword imbedded in the hard oak planking, was found to be the cause of a leak of 100 strokes an hour in the fishing schooner Angie B. Watson.

When the fish was caught off the eastern end of Cape Breton, the crew noticed that the end of its sword was broken off, but no significance was attached to that and the cause of the leak was not known until the schooner's hull was examined upon her arrival here.

Wedding Bells For Ananias

The Story of His "Deep Trouble"

By EDITH L. WINSTON

It was several months after Ananias Sline went to board with the Widow Rowell that I journeyed down to Quince Harbor to spend golden October days in the cozy home of Captain Barnabas Fish and his good wife Maria, nee Weeks.

"And how is your friend Ananias Sline?" I asked the jovial captain as we sat around the supper table the night of my arrival.

"Ananias? Miss Telham, ma'am," said the captain gravely. "Ananias Sline is in deep trouble."

"Now, Barnabas Fish," protested Maria, but a smile crinkled around her merry eyes.

"Trouble?" I echoed. "Not trouble at the bank?" for Ananias occupied the dignified and responsible position of porter and man of all work in the First bank of Quince Harbor.

"Dear me, no—matrimonial trouble!" responded the captain.

"I did not know that Ananias was married," said I.

"He isn't, but the knot's to be tied—when, Maria?"

"Hettie says next Wednesday."

"Aye," chuckled the captain, "Hettie Rowell says the knot's to be tied next Wednesday in the First Methodist church, but Ananias, he says, never!"

"So it's the Widow Rowell who has captured the affections of Ananias Sline?" I mused.

"She's captured him, all right, but he's swearing he'll cast off and steer a course for China. I've been through three tantrums with him this week.

"AH-H-H!" SCREECHED THE WIDOW ROWELL.

and he says he'd rather be a corpse—a dead corpse—than a bridegroom. He came to me in great distress six weeks ago, and says he: 'Cap'n, I'm going to slip my cable, and you're the only one that'll know the truth. The Widder Rowell's bound I shall marry her, and I'd rather be a dead corpse.'

"'She can't marry you if you never asked her,' I says to him, and he screamed at me: 'She can't, eh? You don't know her then.'

"Then I up and asked him if he did ask her to marry him, and he says he never did, never thought of it, didn't want to and would be confounded if he would."

There was a knock at the door.

Maria opened it to admit a rather round shouldered, elderly woman, whose weazened face was set in a perpetual smile that showed even rows of false teeth. Her gray hair was drawn up into a knot on top of her head, and a pink bow was pinned coquettishly over one ear.

"Well, Mrs. Rowell," greeted the captain as she entered the sitting room and shook hands with me, "how goes everything?"

"Beautifully!" exclaimed the bride to be, her smile widening. "I came over to ask Maria's advice. I suppose they have told you, Miss Telham?" she simpered.

"Yes, and you must allow me to wish you happiness," I said.

"Thank you, dearie," she said sweetly. "Ananias is certainly a rare man."

"He is indeed," I replied.

"But shy," went on the widow thoughtfully, fixing one of her little dark eyes on me while the other squinted obliquely at Captain Barnabas. "Why, he says, says he: 'Dear Hettie, I'd ruther be walking to my own funeral than to be going up the aisle of the church to my wedding,' says he. 'It affects me that way.'"

"He will recover his nerve at the last moment," I cheered her.

"He's got to get over it," she said, with such deadly sweetness in her tone that I began to feel rather sorry for Ananias.

Maria came into the room fresh and tidy from her dishwashing. She picked up some knitting, and her needles clicked busily.

"What you going to wear, Hettie?" asked Maria practically.

"White," replied Mrs. Rowell calmly. "I've thought it all out, Maria. I wore white for my first bridal when I married Jasper Jones. Then, being a widow, I wore gray when I married Henry Rowell. Now I feel like I've swung back to first place again, and so I've concluded I'll wear white.

"And now, captain, how about you standing up with Ananias at his wedding?" She smiled playfully at him.

From nowhere in particular came a hollow voice that answered the widow's question.

"Pallbearer!" was its ominous suggestion.

The Widow Rowell screamed and closed her eyes. The captain glanced wildly around, and I confess that I was startled. Only Maria knitted on calmly, unconcernedly.

"Why, what was that?" I asked.

"What was what?" asked Maria in a surprised sort of way.

Mrs. Rowell sat up, and sparks flashed from her eyes in all directions. Her rather hooked nose almost appeared to meet her sharp upcurving chin.

"I thought I heard something," she said, still smiling.

"I heard a tree toad outside in the lilock bush, ma'am," said the captain innocently.

"Go on with your story, Hettie," urged Maria.

"I'm rather upset," confessed the widow, after a moment's hesitation. "I kinder thought it sounded like the warning voice of Henry Rowell. Henry was a very jealous husband, though he had no cause to be," she added hastily.

"Most husbands are jealous of their handsome wives," said the captain gallantly.

The widow simpered sweetly at him. "You are a case, Barnabas Fish!" she chided archly. "I was asking you if you would stand up with Ananias Wednesday, be his best man?"

"Pallbearer!" croaked the hollow voice.

"Will you?" persisted the widow, but her face was pale.

"Of course," said the captain in a hearty voice. "I'll stand by the bridegroom."

"Corpse!" rattled the hollow voice.

But the widow was undaunted as yet. She had set her heart on surprising Quince Harbor by her unexpected wedding to the porter in the bank, and she was not to be frightened out of it by the spiritual warnings of a dead and gone spouse or a tree toad, but the widow had leanings toward spiritualism. It was a cult that attracted her romantic nature.

"We will drive around after you and Maria," went on the widow doggedly. "We're going to have Al Murray's hack"—

"Hearse!" interpolated the hollow voice.

"And I've bought the wedding ring"—

"Casket!" came the interruption.

"Ah-h-h-h-h-h-h!" screeched the Widow Rowell, and she went at once into violent hysterics.

Maria and I flew around, applying remedies to her nose, while the captain tiptoed out to the kitchen stairway that led to the loft overhead, and I heard his deep voice rumbling. Sometimes it was broken by chuckles and again by another voice disagreeably high pitched.

At last the widow came to, looking yellower than ever, but there was a new light in her shifty eyes. They blazed with excitement, and her toll worn hands trembled.

"Maria," said she solemnly, "I've had a warning. I shan't marry Ananias—not yet, maybe not at all. I'll wait, and you'll bear in mind that when it happens you and Barnabas 'll stand up with us just the same"—

"Pallbearers!" came in a hoarse whisper.

Mrs. Rowell trembled, but her wide smile did not relax. It was fixed as though painted there.

"You see, Maria and Barnabas and Miss Telham," she said almost pathetically, including all three in a swift zigzag glance, "I'm considerable shook up now, and I want to study up on this spirit business before I go ahead."

"Cheer up, Hettie," said the captain, grasping her hand warmly. "By next June you and Ananias will be signing papers and setting sail on a pleasant sea of—er—matrimony!"

"Maybe!" The widow's tone was enigmatic. As she opened the door to depart she added in her customary manner: "I'm glad I didn't announce it to any one else, and I guess I'll go home and stir up some cornmeal griddle-cakes for Mr. Sline's breakfast. I've got to do something to make up to him for his disappointment."

"And a man's heart being by way of his stomach, why, you're taking the right track," approved Maria.

When we were alone Maria fixed her bright eyes on her husband's twinkling blue ones.

"How long has Ananias been up in the kitchen loft?" she asked.

"Since before dinner," answered the captain. "He came all a-tremble, saying he'd hang himself if he wasn't saved, and I didn't know what to do about it. It so happened the widow came in tonight, and I guess Ananias' feelings got the best of him, and he jest naturally figured out a course for himself and sailed into a safe harbor. He's gone back to the widder's now, feeling pretty secure that she won't marry him yet awhile."

"By the way, Maria," he added, "Ananias says he found a punkin pie and a pitcher of lemonade up in the loft, and he et 'em up. I wonder how they came up there?"

"I took 'em up myself after dinner," smiled Maria triumphantly, and I did not blame Captain Barnabas when he kissed her warmly.

ACCEPTANCE REQUIRED

Successful Candidates Must Visit State House or Write

One of the provisions of the new election law provides that parties who were nominated for office at the recent primaries, by having their name written on the ballot, must appear at the office of the secretary of state and accept the nomination in person or write a letter to that effect. Unless this is done the name will be dropped and will not appear on the official ballot for the State election. This provision was made known by Secretary Donahue, Friday, in response to several requests for the information.

BASKET BALL RECORD.

An advance copy of the Reach Official basket ball guide has been received at the Daily Ledger office and the rules as played by the professional and amateur basket ball teams of the United States includes complete rules for women. One of the most pleasing features of the book, and one of singular importance to Quincy, is the record of the Quincy High school team of last season, illustrated by a remarkably fine cut of the players. The record appears in the synopsis of last year's work and much other information connected with the indoor sport.

☞Some good vaudeville has been engaged for the Music hall performance tonight.

NEW VOTERS.

The Registrars of Voters met in Ward Five last night to revise the voting lists. There was but little doing at the session however as the Wollaston people had put all of their energy in registration before the primaries. During the session 13 names were added to the lists.

☞A great treat for Quincy theatre goers. Prof. Neville will lecture on a feature photoplay "Ashes of Three" that every man, woman and child should hear. Prof. Neville appears today at the matinee and evening performance at Quincy Music hall. "The Ashes of Three" was written by Stewart Edward White the well known American author.

MAYOR PROUD OF REDUCTION OF DEBT

and but defer the day of reckoning and make it all the harder when it does come.

The only thing to do is, with as just and fair a valuation as human judgment can devise, to raise by a proper tax rate the necessary amount of money.

I submit for your consideration the following items, the figures in some instances I have been obliged to approximate, but they will be found to be substantially correct.

Increase in tax rate over 1912 ..... $1.70 per $1000

OCCASIONS FOR INCREASE.

A

1. Increase in State Tax and assessments	$17,519.01
2. Increase in County Tax	4,143.03
Total	$21,662.04
Proportion of increase	$.58

B

1. First payment of refunding debt due this year	$15,000.00
2. Interest on refunding debt	6,000.00
Total	$21,000.00
Proportion of increase	$.57

The adoption of this measure was made necessary by errors and omissions of city administrations of many years ago.

C

1. Increase in maturing debt (exclusive of refunding debt) caused by short time loans and also increase in interest charges	$26.328.64
Proportion of increase	$.55
Total of above A. B. and C. items, making increase over last years tax rate	$1.70

From the foregoing it will be readily seen that the increase in the tax rate this year was inevitable and it was not in the power of the present administration to avoid it.

In this connection it may be interesting for the tax payers to know how much more the current expenses of the city were this year than they were ten years ago.

CURRENT EXPENSES OF 1913.

On basis of $12 per $1000	$422,627.43
Increase over 1903	157,328.82
This increase is divided as follows:
School Department	$77,225.00
Balance for all other departments	80,113.82
Distributed as follows:
Gypsy Moth $7,000.00
Fire Dept. 17,711.24
Police Dept. 16,443.94
St. Lighting 14,000.00
Bd. of Health 15,054.00
(principally for contagious diseases)
Misc. increase 9,904.64
(including repair of school houses)
Total	$80,113.82

I wish to call the tax payers attention to the fact that although the affairs of the city have been conducted under adverse financial conditions, we will have this year reduced the total city debt $109,851.00 if no more loans are made this year.

This is the first time in ten years that the city debt has been decreased.

ANALYSIS OF DECREASE.

1. Debt for schools, streets,etc., due Jan. 1, 1913	$711,496.46
Debt due Dec. 31, 1913 if no further loans are made	602,445.00
Decrease	$109,051.46
2. Decrease in Park Debt	2,000.00
3. Decrease in St. Improvement Debt	7,300.00
4. Decrease in Refunding Debt	15,000.00
Gross decrease	$133,351.46
Increase in sewer debt, made necessary by the extension of our sewer system	$11,000.00
Increase in water debt, occasioned by Houghs Neck stand pipe	$12,500.00
Total increase	$23,500.00
Net decrease	$109.851.46

The great burden which Quincy for years has labored under has been the steady increase in its debt, with the added increase in interest charges. The temptation to borrow money and pledge the city's credit for years ahead has been too freely indulged in during the past. Recognizing the error of such a course, I have endeavored to correct this practise with the result that today for the first time in many years there is a substantial decrease in the city debt. A fact which must be gratifying to our citizens.

It may seem to some a little hard, with the present high cost of living, for the city at this time to undertake to remedy its financial condition, but a stand had to be made sometime and while it may temporarily be unpopular, I believe that fair minded and right thinking citizens will approve the course I have adopted.

As a result of the policy inaugurated these last two years, the tax rate will next year automatically, as it were, become lower, and if future administrations will persevere in the policy of retrenchment and reduction of the city debt, now in force, in the near future our city will have a financial standing second to none in the Commonwealth.

GOING TO SOUTH AMERICA.

Prof. H. Helm Clayton, who for years conducted various experiments at the Blue Hill Observatory, including kite flying for obtaining temperatures, etc., will sail Oct. 4 for Buenos Aires to continue his work, begun three years ago there, of introducing American methods of weather observation. He will remain this time indefinitely, though his family will remain for the present at their home at Canton Corner.

WILL RUN INDEPENDENT.

J. Raphael McCoole, who was defeated by Alonzo B. Cook for the Republican nomination as Registrar of Probate at the state primaries, but received the Democratic and Progressive nominations has taken out nomination papers as an Independent Republican candidate.

MISS ANNIE C. OGLE.

Miss Annie C. Ogle, one of the most popular young ladies of West Quincy, died this morning at the home of her parents, Mr. and Mrs. James H. Ogle, of Willard street after a long illness. A singular fact about her death was that it occurred on the twenty-fifth anniversary of her birth. Miss Ogle was a graduate of the Willard school, and was a member of the Y. F. K. Girls' club and of Auxiliary 5, A. O. H. The latter organization will meet at her late home Sunday evening. Besides her parents Miss Ogle leaves three brothers, Walter, George and Joseph.

Many of the flowers used by the Day Nursery Association for Flower day were contributed by George Elcock of Copeland street. Of course they were dahlias which are his specialty, and beautiful ones too.

Revival meetings will be held at the Atlantic M. E. church beginning Oct. 5 and continuing to Oct. 19. Rev. E. C. Pollard, the pastor, will be assisted by Rev. Mr. Hall and other pastors.

William Kelly of Deldorf street, a conductor on the street railway and chairman of the Democratic Committee, is at the Quincy Hospital where he was operated upon Thursday.

Mrs. Hollis G. Rogers of Grand View avenue was hastily summoned the first of the week to Southern Pines, North Carolina on account of the serious illness of her mother Mrs. Theresa E. Wheeler.

Special meeting of the City Council Monday evening. Some of the standing committees will meet immediately after the adjournment. As there are but two matters in the call the meeting will be of short duration.

L. Lincoln Gardner of Edwards street is preparing to leave for Montreal where he will act as paymaster at the new factory of the International Braid Co. He has been employed in the above capacity at their East Braintree plant for about a year. His large circle of friends wish him every success in his new appointment.

Sunday the first evening service of the season was held in Memorial Congregational church, and although the night was stormy, the church was filled. Miss Maud E. Read sang a contralto solo, and Miss Edith Abbott a cornet solo. The choir sang two anthems.

Dr. Clarence A. Vincent, Rev. W. C. Rhodes and Samuel Usher of Boston were chosen as a committee in the Congregational House by the Massachusetts Home Missionary Society on Monday to confer with Rev. T. W. Davison and the people of Squantum to see about conducting church services in Squantum and looking into the needs of a building.

The Atlantic Improvement Association will begin its meetings Friday evening. This will be the second year of this association and many of the men who have kept out of its membership until they saw that it was going to stand will unite with it this year. There are many activities that only this organization can take up and things that require immediate attention. One thing the High school scholars need and should have is a car that would accommodate them properly to and from school. There used to be fair accommodations up to two years ago when the school car in the morning was withdrawn. Parents have asked some of the active members of the Association to look into the possibility of getting a car that would run directly from Squantum to the High school and avoid the necessity of the young people standing in the cold and storms on Hancock street bridge.

MACDONALD—THAYER.

James Lawrence MacDonald of Quincy and Miss Lizzie L. Thayer of Holbrook were married at Holbrook on Wednesday evening by Rev. A. M. Thompson of this city, assisted by Rev. Edward Evans of the Winthrop Congregational church of Holbrook. They were unattended. The bride is the daughter of Mrs. Cabel Thayer. After a honeymoon they will reside in Quincy .

DR. BROWN QUALIFIES

And Will Assume His New Duties in Baltimore

Dr. Alfred Whittemore Brown of Quincy Point and Miss Caroline Maude Merrill were married at Amesbury last evening by the father of the bride, Rev. Frederick G. Merrill, pastor of the Congregational church of that place, and formerly pastor of the North Weymouth Congregational church .

Dr. Brown recently secured an appointment as supervisor of the Baltimore, Md., playgrounds, but had to marry in order to qualify. To report Oct. 1 the ceremony had to be performed Friday. With that in view the five days law was set aside when the judge at Amesbury learned the situation. It was the original intention of the young people to be married next year. Both are well known in Quincy and are receiving the congratulations of their friends.

Mrs. Ruth Middleton, a sister of the bride, was matron, and Dr. Arthur Wright of the Cambridge City Hospital was the best man. The bride was dressed in white satin trimmed with Duchess lace and her veil caught up with orange blossoms. She carried a large bouquet of peony roses.

At the reception which followed Dr. and Mrs. Brown were assisted in receiving by Rev. and Mrs. Frederic G. Merrill, Mrs. Ruth Middleton, Mrs. Clara S. Brown of Quincy, mother of the groom, and Mr. and Mrs. Thomas A. Addison of Quincy, uncle and aunt of the groom.

Among those present were Prof. Wm. H. Dearborn, of Tufts Medical College, and Dr. Elmer S. Bagville, personal respresentative of the president of the medical fraternity, Phil Theta Chi, of which Dr. Brown is a member, Dr. J. B. Allen of Jamaica Plain and Dr. C. Montcrea of New Bedford. In the Quincy party were Mr. and Mrs. George E. Adams, Carl and Miss Helen Sherburne, Mrs. Ernest Smith, Mr. and Mrs. John Harris of Somerville.

WILL ABIDE BY DECISION

John J. McDevitt Will Not Be Independent Candidate

"I put my case in the hands of the people and I am willing to abide by their decision. In spite of the fact that the State committee and the committees in the various cities and towns in the district were opposed to me, I consider I made a very good showing in the primaries." Thus spoke Senator John J. McDevitt Friday evening in reply to a question if he intended to take out nomination papers for Senator from the First Norfolk district.

McDevitt was beaten in the primaries by David W. Murray of Hyde Park, and it is said that Senator McDevitt will support the nominee. This evidently settles all question as to McDevitt becoming an independent candidate.

There is more Catarrh in this section of the country than all other diseases put together, and until the last few years was supposed to be incurable. For a great many years doctors pronounced it a local disease and prescribed local remedies, and by constantly failing to cure local treatment, pronounced it incurable. Science has proven catarrh to be a constitutional disease and therefore requires constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, Ohio, is the only constitutional cure on the market. It is taken internally in doses from 10 drops to a teaspoonful. It acts directly on the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. They offer one hundred dollars for any case it fails to cure. Send for circulars and testimonials.

Vol. 28 No. 226 QUINCY MASS. MONDAY EVENING, SEPTEMBER 29, 1913 PRICE TWO CENTS

FR. GRADY SAYS GOODBYE

Has Cleared the Debt on St. Marys Church

Leaves a Large Fund

Rev. Fr. Henry T. Grady of St. Mary's church, whose appointment as pastor of St. Benedict's parish at Somerville has been announced by Cardinal O'Connell, delivered his "goodbye" sermon at all services Sunday, approximately 2200 people attending the masses and benediction.

Rev. Fr. Andrew J. O'Brien, D. D. professor of Dogmatic Theology at Brighton, was the celebrant of the late mass and the scene at this mass was by far the most affecting. After the services Father Grady personally received the best wishes of many of his parishioners and friends from different parts of the diocese who called at the parish house to extend their sincere wish for another successful pastorate.

Father Grady, in his characteristic way, briefly sketched his relations with his people here. His topic was "Faith" and he said: "I have had ample opportunity to see the manifestation of this faith during the past five years. It has been a source of much comfort to labor among a people thus gifted, and now, about to leave, I refer to it not as instruction but rather as commendation.

"A glance at the past will show how much was accomplished by us united with this common bond. An indebtedness of $16,000 was entirely cancelled and many improvements which I feel will prove beneficial have been made. There is now in the treasury $13,500 as a nucleus for the completion of this beautiful structure.

"This was the one hope dear to the hearts of all. It is a great happiness to me now leaving, that these hopes are so near realization which, I trust, will be the blessing for us all.

"It would not be right for me to assume all the credit for this work. Besides your co-operation I have had the blessings of an assistant whose zeal has been as extensive as his work has been efficient and I am confident that the same force will continue to be exerted in your behalf and for your good.

"I cannot be here next Sunday to introduce you to my successor, but I can tell you now that your interests and welfare will be carefully guarded in his charge. Our friendship goes back over many years. I have watched his advancement with great happiness which is now further increased in the knowledge that he is to continue my work here. May Our Heavenly Father give an abundant blessing on all your endeavors."

Rev. Fr. Thomas R. McCoy, the successor to Father Grady, was celebrant of the solemn high mass at the Cathedral, Boston, after which he received the fond farewell of a large number who wish him every success in his new pastorate.

Father McCoy was likewise receiving the farewells of his parishioners, particularly from the members of the Holy Name Society and other organizations whose director he has been since he became attached to the Cathedral.

The change took effect officially on Sunday but the final transfer will not take place until Wednesday of this week. In the meantime both clergymen are busy familiarizing themselves with their new duties.

ESCAPED FROM HOME.

Mrs. Filomena Carpenterier, and her three weeks old infant, made a sensational escape from the Quincy Home Saturday night. The woman came from Italy about two months ago to join her husband who was employed at the shipyard. She was met on her arrival by her husband and brought to Quincy. Three weeks ago she gave birth to a child and shortly after the husband deserted her. The woman remained alone for some time as she was unable to speak English and her situation was not known. Eventually however the attention of the Overseer of the Poor was called to the case and he ordered her removal to the Quincy Home for the present. She was taken two days ago. Some time Saturday night she got up and left the home and has not been seen since. It is supposed that she made her escape by way of the fire escape.

NO RUSH FOR PAPERS

Charles H. Johnson Is In the Field

Only Mayoralty Candidate

There was no great rush this morning, the opening day for nomination papers for the city primaries, and up to noon but two sets of papers had been taken out. One set of twenty papers were taken out by Charles H. Johnson as Republican candidate for Mayor and a set of pepars was taken out by Councilman Charles A. Ross for Councilman from Ward Three.

City Clerk Crane however expects a grand rush for papers tonight as there is a special meeting of the Council and members of the present council who will try for renomination and election will probably get their papers tonight.

It has been stated that some years ago that Mr. Johnson was a candidate for the mayoralty nomination, this statement however is incorrect as he was never before a candidate, although his name has been mentioned in connection with the mayoralty at different times.

OFFICER REWARDED.

Officer Henry Thorne of the Quincy Police department received a reward of $200 this morning from the United States government for the arrest and conviction of a Polander who had broken into the post office at Quincy Point last fall. The office is in the store of H. H. I. Smith, 664 Washington street. When Officer Thorne discovered the burglar he was trying to open the safe containing the receipts of the station and had finished rifling a cash drawer of stamps and envelopes. The man was armed with a cleaver but made no attempt to attack the officer when he saw the muzzle of a gun pointed in his direction. He was convicted by the Federal court and is now confined to the Federal prison at Atlanta to which he was sentenced for two years.

FATHER AND DAUGHTER

Roughly Handled by Guests at Sunday Gathering

A little dinner party, Sunday, at the home of Carlo Alberto 22A Granite street ended in a row during which Alberto received a stab wound in the abdomen and is now at the City Hospital and his daughter, Virginia aged 9 years received several cuts on the hands and legs while trying to separate the guests from her father.

The dinner guests were Alberto and Guiseppe Marinelli and a man known as Tony, all of whom are said to be track walkers for the New Haven. The guests live at 59 Canal street and all went well until after dinner when an argument started, during which the guests drew a knife and two razors and closed in on the host. Seeing her father in danger Virginia, the daughter rushed between the men to separate them and received a cut on the left leg below the knee and a cut on the fleshy part of her right hand as well as having her fingers slashed somewhat. Alberto the father got a stab wound in the abdomen and a cut on the left arm below the elbow. Mrs. Alberto says she took the knife away from one man and then grabbed the hands of the man who held the razors, and during her scuffle she was dragged to the door of the kitchen and part way down stairs.

A boy who happened to be passing the house at the time and hearing the row ran to City Square where he found Inspector Goodhue, who after calling the patrol wagon, rushed to the house. When he arrived however the visitors had gone.

Dr. Sargent, who was called, ordered the injured man removed to the City Hospital. He also treated the wounds received by daughter Virginia.

FUNERAL OF JOSEPH SHEPARD.

The body was taken to the St. Mary's church where services were conducted by Rev. Fr. William J. Duffy. Burial was in St. Mary's cemetery. This morning a high mass of requiem was celebrated at St. Mary's church by Rev. Fr. Andrew J. O'Brien, D. D. of Brighton.

SUNDAY GOLF ISSUE

Wollaston Club Has Rescinded Its Vote

Playing Enjoyed Sunday

The question whether Sunday golf playing is a violation of the Lord's Day act is one that is puzzling the police and others who are interested in the proper observance of the law. Some days ago when the matter of Sunday tennis playing came up, the Wollaston Golf club directors voted to eliminate Sunday golf playing on its links. This resolution however, it is understood, has been rescinded and on Sunday all members who desired played golf.

According to Chief Burrell it is an open question whether a man walking over the links and knocking a ball about is violating the law, that is if that man is participating in a game. If two members were going along together it might not be as difficult to establish a case but in golf it would be difficult to prove that a man at one T was playing a game with a man half a mile away.

Saturday night some of the directors came to Quincy and had a conference with Mayor Stone and Chief Burrell, during which it is said legal opinion was offered as to how far the police could go in interfering with a man walking about the links in pursuit of a small white ball. Some of the members volunteered to play the game Sunday in order that the police might make a test case of it in court, as to whether it was in violation of the law. The police however would not agree to any such proposition just for the sake of testing the law, so this offer was not accepted.

At this same conference it was denied that playing had not been carried on in Milton, for according to what some of the members said, they played in Milton on Sunday just as they had been doing in Quincy, and without molestation.

It was argued that Sunday automobile driving, and the driving of carriages for pleasure was just as much of a violation of the Sunday law as was golf, yet no one ever thought of preventing people riding for pleasure on the Lord's day in an automobile or carriage. It was also stated that more noise and disturbance was made by joy riders than by any number of men in going over the links, where there was absolutely no noise or disturbance of any kind.

Thus the conference ended, and Sunday no attempt was made on the part of the police to interfere with anyone playing golf at Wollaston or to take their names.

The outcome is awaited with interest by tennis players who say that there is no more noise or disturbance in a game of tennis than there is in a game of golf.

VISIT OF STATE INSPECTOR

Is Investigating Local Cases of Infantile Paralysis

Dr. Linemthal, state inspector of health for this district, is in town today making an investigation of the infantile paralysis cases, trying to find the source of the disease. He is being accompanied on his inspection by Dr. Fred E. Jones, secretary of the Board of Health. Every case that has appeared has been investigated without the source of the germ being discovered, and the special cases under investigation today are those at South Quincy.

VISITORS SHUT OUT

Quincy A. A. Win First Game of Season

On Merrymount Oval

The football field on the new Merrymount Oval was formally christened Saturday afternoon by the Quincy A. A. who defeated their old rivals, the Roslindale A. A. 26-0. The game was attended by many who took advantage of the natural grand stand facilities. All spectators however should stand outside the track.

The field was a trifle soft in spots, but by the end of the season will be one of the best in the state for fast football. The general surroundings had the proper influence on the players and the game was free from rough house tactics. Wide open plays and the ball in sight of the spectators was the rule Saturday and the appreciation of those present was expressed frequently by loud cheering, the tribute being paid to men on both teams for their good work.

The real feature was the playing of Boyle who comes from Lynn to don a Quincy A. A. jersey. Three of the touchdowns were made by him and he figured in every play. His clean cut, aggressive work immediately gained him the approval of the fans, and they called continually for him to "shoot over" when the ball was in the visitors territory.

THE PROMINENCE OF ATHLETICS.

To many social moralists, the athletic field looms too big in the American horizon. The pages of sporting news and gossip fed out daily by the press seems not merely froth, but a positive obstruction to all serious thought.

They complain that formerly interest in sports began to die down when the baseball season ended. Now October first brings the pigskin to the front of the stage, all winter the sporting page is full of basketball, bowling, boxing and advance "dope" for next baseball. To the serious man, this diverts the popular mind from interest in politics, social reform, and all weighty subjects.

A Socialist Demosthenes gave his point of view about it the other day. He says athletic sports were originally patronized by the barons of the middle ages, to divert the people from thinking about their wrongs. A city that became excited over the old jousts and tournaments did not worry much about high taxes of forced military service.

Similarly today, he said, "capitalism" encourages sports to divert the people from thought about their wrongs and the need of social reconstruction. Apparently he would have people stop enjoying themselves and secure happiness through making themselves miserable.

The afternoon in the ball park or football field may give as much pleasure as the millionaire finds in his new motor car. And to many men whose work does not permit them to see many games, the newspaper provides the luxury of a theatre in print.

Through the graphic work of the sporting reporter, illustrated by the box score, he sees the game almost as clearly as if he were on the bleachers. Many tedious hours thus pass, while the titans of the ball field are struggling before his mind's eye. It must indeed be a lugubrious philosophy that would deny this diversion to the workingman.

SIR EDWARD CARSON

He Reviews His Army of Volunteers In Belfast

The unionist conference in Belfast, Ireland, agreed to raise a fund of $5,000,000 to indemnify members of the Ulster volunteers, the militiamen now being drilled. From this fund it is proposed to pay men and their families for property loss, injury and death if fighting occurs in the efforts to gain home rule for Ireland. Sir Edward Carson, a leader of the movement, aided in framing the articles governing the fund. A statement was issued saying the provisional government had been approved.

CARSON REVIEWS HIS ARMY

Eleven Thousand Ulster Volunteers March With Dummy Rifles

Belfast, Ire., Sept. 29.—The review of 11,000 Belfast volunteers belonging to the "Army of Ulster," by Sir Edward Carson, leader of the Irish Unionist party, attracted thousands of people from the surrounding districts and from every part of the province of Ulster.

Besides the four Belfast regiments, each of them commanded by a retired army or militia officer, the "Ulster war staff," consisting of General Richards, two retired colonels and two retired captains, paraded.

The volunteers were armed with dummy rifles, as the carrying of firearms by unlicensed persons is prohibited in the British isles.

Sunbury, Pa., Sept. 29.—Mrs. Amelia C. Fisher celebrated her 100th birthday at her home here. She took part in a family reunion held in her honor, at a turkey dinner, scolded her 68-year-old son for smoking and not going to bed at 9 o'clock, and sang a solo.

Mrs. Fisher is the widow of Rev. Dr. Richard A. Fisher, who died in 1857. She reared a family of ten children, four of whom are living. She has spent her whole life in the house where she now lives, and is happy and well preserved.

"Husband" of Colorado Girl Proves to Be a Woman

Meeker, Col., Sept. 29.—"Handsome" Jack Hill, who for two years has been the ideal of masculinity in the eyes of the young women of Meeker, and was known to the men as "the chap who married the prettiest girl in the White River country," is a woman.

She has been bound over to the October term of the district court charged with impersonating a man.

Miss Anna Slifka, whom "Jack" married, supplemented her "husband's" confession with one in which she stated that she knew before the "marriage" that her "husband's" name was Helen Halstead, and that the two arranged the affair so that they might work together in earning money to take them through an eastern college.

AS REFORM CANDIDATE

Peters May Head Anti-Fitzgerald Forces For Mayor of Boston

Washington, Sept. 29.—Representative Andrew J. Peters has been offered, and is considering the reform nomination for mayor of Boston. Influential anti-Fitzgerald forces have tendered Peters support, and it was for this reason that Peters declined a nomination to be resident commissioner in the Philippines, and previously the appointment as assistant to Governor General Harrison.

The congressional delegation from Massachusetts generally believes he will become a candidate, and looks for his official announcement soon.

Wounded Boy Afraid to Go Home

Portsmouth, N. H., Sept. 29.—Charles Skarudes, 11 years old, wandered about this city all day with a bullet in his shoulder which had been fired by one of his companions while they were playing hunting in the woods. The boy was afraid to go home, so he wandered about the streets until he collapsed.

SULZER PLANS TO TAKE STAND

Is Said to Have His Entire Defense Written Out

COVERS HIS POLITICAL CAREER

Will Claim Belief That Contributions Made During Campaign Were Personal Ones—Spent Thousands of Dollars In Tours of Which He Made No Accounting

Albany, Sept. 29.—That Governor Sulzer will not only take the witness stand in his own behalf at the trial of his impeachment for high crimes and misdemeanors but will outdo the prosecution in his revelations of unrecorded campaign contributions, telling of at least 300 "gifts" which have never received publicity, was the report here following conferences between the governor and his advisers.

It is now understood that Sulzer's chief defense will be that he considered the contributions personal gifts and their use a personal matter, not covered by the corrupt practices act and not necessitating any public accounting. This contention, it is understood, will be supported by a candid recital of his financial affairs, backed by innumerable details. By telling of many gifts as yet unrecorded, but similar to those revealed by the prosecution, it is hoped that the implication of evidence already in that the governor wilfully and corruptly sought to hide these transactions will be lessened.

Startling revelations of political graft in the state government and an intimate and candid recital of Sulzer's twenty-three years of public service are expected to lend weight to this recital.

How the governor can overcome the admitted opinion that his is a losing fight his counsel refuse to say. Sulzer himself is anxious to tell the story, and only the strict injunction of his lawyers has kept him from talking before this.

The story that Sulzer is to tell to the court of impeachment will be sensational. He has his entire defense written out, and it is his intention to read it to the impeachment court when he goes on the witness stand. For several weeks he has been busily preparing the facts concerning his political career, and it is said that in his recital of it he will spare none.

There are still thirty witnesses on the program for the prosecution. The governor himself, if his story is admitted by the court of impeachment, will be on the stand for two days. He will say that at the time of his nomination he was not only a poor man but that he was under obligations to the extent of from $40,000 to $50,000, and, acting on the advice of friends, he accepted all contributions made during his campaign. He will assert that he was of the belief that the contributions were personal ones, and because of this he did not consider it his duty to mention them in his campaign statement.

Sulzer, it is said, will tell of his alleged dealings with Charles F. Murphy, and after that the Tammany leader will be called to either corroborate or deny the story of the accused governor.

The friends of Sulzer say that he spent thousands of dollars during his up-state tours of which he has made no accounting, and that when he gives his testimony before the court of impeachment the charges against him will fall flat.

WOMAN SHOOTS HUSBAND

Vermont Man May Not Recover From Serious Wounds

St. Johnsbury, Vt., Sept. 29.—Ray Cheney, 35 years old, was shot by his wife, Elizabeth L. Cheney, as the result of a family quarrel.

The man is in a critical condition, with a bullet from a .32 automatic revolver in his neck, near the jugular vein, and wounds in his head, arm and breast. Mrs. Cheney is in jail here, where she was brought by Hardwick officers.

It is said quarrels were frequent with the couple and they had separated several times.

BREWER'S TRUNKS SEIZED

Customs Officers Charge Failure to Declare Gowns and Jewels

New York, Sept. 29.—Twelve trunks belonging to Henry Nicholaus, a wealthy St. Louis brewer, and his wife and daughter were seized by the customs officers.

It was charged the owners failed to declare dutiable gowns and jewelry valued at $4000. Nicholaus and his family returned from Europe on the steamship Kaiserin Auguste Victoria. It was asserted that the jewels were bought in this country and therefore not dutiable.

Worcester Man Electrocuted

Worcester, Mass., Sept. 29.—Eli Anger, 48, was electrocuted, receiving 13,000 volts from a transformer at the works of the Morgan Spring company.

THREE MEN DROWN

Carried Down to Death as Schooner Sinks Motorboat

Gloucester, Mass., Sept. 29.—Trapped in the cabin of the twenty-six-foot motorboat Abbie E., three Beverly men were drowned in the outer harbor when the Gloucester fishing schooner Rhodora ran down the motorboat, striking her amidships with such force that she sank almost instantly.

Only one of the three men in the cabin had an opportunity to make the fight for his life. Charles Bonney managed to struggle to the companionway, and was just on the point of throwing himself into the water when the Abbie E. was engulfed by the sea.

Only two of the party of five in the motorboat survive. They were on deck at the time the Rhodora's prow crashed through the motorboat's frail sides.

The dead are William Goss, 37; Charles S. Bonney, 38, and Spencer Abell, 40. They all lived in Beverly.

SHERIFF IS DETERMINED

Says He Will Raid Bangor Liquor Sellers Who Reopen Bars

Bangor, Me., Sept. 29.—Believing they will in the future be immune from jail sentences, because of the action of Justice Haley in the supreme court in refusing to confirm those given in the lower tribunal, several liquor dealers here have announced their intention of attempting to reopen their bars this week.

Sheriff O'Connell, in answer to these announcements, declares he will raid every saloon which attempts to do business, and will, if necessary, strip them of bars and furnishings, as he is allowed to do under the Maine law.

The sheriff is in no wise disconcerted over the failure of the supreme court to jail men against whom appealed liquor cases were pending, and will, he says, continue his past policy of rigid enforcement.

PORFIRIO DIAZ IS CALLED TO MEXICO

War Department Needs Services of Ex-President

Mexico City, Sept. 29.—General Porfirio Diaz, ex-president of Mexico, has been summoned by the war department to return to Mexico for active army service.

A cablegram sent to Diaz brought a non-committal reply from the ex-president, asking the war minister to await the arrival of a letter which he would dispatch immediately.

Diaz is now at Biaritz, France. It is recognized here that he is too old to render service except possibly in an advisory capacity, and it is assumed that such will be expected of him.

The last words of Diaz when he left Mexico were to the effect that he would return only if the country needed his services in the event of a foreign invasion.

CAR HITS MOTORCYCLE

Woman Is Fatally Crushed and Her Brother Badly Injured

Haverhill, Mass., Sept. 29.—Miss Lillian H. Lee, aged 25, riding in the basket attachment of the motorcycle driven by her brother, Harry F. Lee, aged 23, was fatally injured when the machine crashed into an electric car in the Bradford district last night.

Lee is in a serious condition at the Hale hospital. His sister died there within half an hour of the accident.

Lee is believed to have lost control of his bicycle and shot across the street directly into the path of a car. His sister was thrown beneath the car and badly crushed. Lee was tossed down a ten-foot embankment. He has a wife and 2-days-old baby at Sargentville, Me.

TWO POLICEMEN STABBED

Had Warned Foreigner Against Annoying Girl In Car

New York, Sept. 29.—When warned that he must cease annoying a young woman sitting near him in a Second avenue elevated railroad train last night an unidentified foreigner became infuriated at the interference of Sergeant McEanery and Patrolman Deen, and drawing a knife stabbed both officers in the abdomen.

McEanery probably will die. Deen was less seriously wounded and was able to grapple with his assailant until help arrived and the man was made a prisoner.

POLICE RIDE INTO CROWD

Persons Watching Providence Parade Trampled Upon by Horses

Providence, Sept. 29.—So great a crowd was massed around the cathedral watching a parade of the Holy Name society Sunday that a score of persons were trampled upon by the horses of the mounted police who were trying to make room for the marchers. Nobody was seriously hurt.

Eighteen thousand were in line, representing seventy-six societies throughout the state.

QUINCY CO-OPERATIVE BANK.

By a recent ruling of the Bank Commissioners it is ordered that shareholders must live up strictly to certain regulations regarding payments and deposit books.

First:—Money will not be received under any circumstances unless the book is presented at the same time.

Second:—Payments cannot be delayed a single day without incurring a fine.

There has been very little trouble hitherto in the Quincy Co-operative from careless or dilatory shareholders, but the commissioners have found by long experience that it is best for all concerned to enforce the rules to the very letter.

And, besides, our bank is growing larger all the time, which fact alone calls for more careful attention to the rules.

The assets of the bank are now nearly $700,000, and the shareholders number about 1700. The greater part of the funds are conservatively invested in near-by homestead mortgages; but an increasing number of shareholders are availing themselves of the co-operative privilege of borrowing temporarily the money that they have on deposit; which they are allowed to do by paying the regular rate of interest and keeping up their monthly payments in the meantime.

The officers of the bank take this opportunity of urging again the merits of the co-operative system. A large part of the community understand its workings pretty well already, but there is a new crop of young men coming onto the stage of action every year who would do well to begin a course of systematic saving on the co-operative at once.

Your payments come once a month, and you can put in any even number of dollars, from one to twenty-five. Shares mature and become payable when they come to be worth $200 each, which takes about twelve years.

If you are a young man, just beginning to earn fairly good pay, you can lay aside $10 a month easily if you make up your mind to it; and it will be like finding money at the end of a dozen years to draw out $2,000 in cold cash, or perhaps find that you have a nice little house all paid for.

Do not begin your business life by watching stock quotations, and calculating how much you might have made if you had had a hundred thousand dollars, and had guessed right on a certain "deal." Just put in a few real dollars of your own earning into the Co-operative every month, and watch them grow; and when in the course of years your fortune gets too big for the Co-operative, you will find that the safe and sound business habits thus acquired will naturally put on the safe side of other investments, and when you arrive at middle life you will find yourself far ahead of the game as compared with most of the fellows who have been piling up hot-air fortunes, and living on the interest of their debts

WOLLASTON BAPTIST.

"Bearing your burdens bravely," was the subject for the discourse at the Sunday morning service. "There are passages very commonly quoted which have to do with burden bearing. The first which we might call the most popular is Ps. 55:22. "Cast thy burdens on the Lord." There are some burdens which we ought not to bear—disappointments, losses, worries, sins—all these should be left to Him at His own invitation.

"The second of these passages is called the most practical. Gal. 6:2. "Bear ye one another's burdens." Though there are some burdens we cannot bear for others, there are many that we may share and thus "fulfill the law of Christ," as laid down by Him and exemplified in His life.". "Though he was rich, yet for your sakes he became poor, that ye through his poverty might become rich."

The third passage is also in Gal. 6:5. "Every man shall bear his own burden." 1 To show his mettle; 2 It is God who ordered or permitted the burden to bring us closer to Him; 3 There are promises for such "Underneath are the everlasting arms."

It was review Sunday in the Sunday School.

Junior Endeavor at 3.30 in the chapel was in charge of Mrs. Walther.

Song service at 7.00 in the Auditorium. Subject of the sermon "Citizenship, Sonship, Workmanship." Eph. 2 19-20.

Y. P. S. C. E. met at 7.00 in the Congregational Chapel. There were about 45 present, the attendance being almost equally divided. Miss Marion E. Russell, East Norfolk Union delegate to the Sagamore Institute, spoke of her visit there.

Wednesday evening at 7.45 a reunion of the Albee class will be held in the new class room.

Thursday evening at 7.45 the monthly covenant meeting of the church will be held in the chapel. Subject: "What is the Church for?" "What has the Church a right to expect from us?" "What have we a right to expect from the church?" Choir rehearsal.

Thursday evening at 8.30 the deacons will meet at the close of the prayer meeting.

The addition to the chapel will be dedicated Sunday, Oct. 12, and on Wednesday evening, Oct. 15, the church supper in connection with the dedication will be served.

WOLLASTON UNITARIAN.

At the Sunday morning service of worship Rev. Carl G. Horst, preached an excellent sermon upon "What science has done for religion." He said: "The old notions of the world no longer fit in with the knowledge modern science has given us. We of the twentieth century accept the doctrine of evolution. Evolution is God's way of doing things. It traces the development of life, but does not explain the cause of life. Modern science has enlarged our conception of the universe; has shown us the ascent of man, and has demonstrated the reign of law. There is no conflict between science and religion, except when either forgets its ignorance of what the other alone can know. Religion says 'in the beginning God created the heaven and the earth' and then leaves it to science to tell us when and how it was done."

The music included a solo by Mrs. Royal L. Turner, and an anthem by the girls choir.

The General Conference of Unitarian churches of this country and Canada will be held at Buffalo, Oct. 6-9. The delegates from Wollaston are Eugene H. Sprague, Wm. H. Boynton and Rev. Carl G. Horst.

The Sunday school sessions will be resumed Sunday noon, Oct. 5. In our graded course running through twelve years it is absolutely necessary for the student to attend every session so as to be able to keep up with his class.

The Kindergarten class meets Sunday mornings at 10.45 o'clock. Miss Evelyn Cummings a trained kindergartner has charge of this department. All children three years old and over, irrespective of creed, color or nationality are invited to attend. This enables parents to bring their children with them to church.

The Ladies' Aid Alliance will hold its first meeting of the season in the vestry, Wednesday, Oct. 1, at 2.30 o'clock. Mrs. George H. Root of Winchester will speak on "The result of co-operation in an Alliance Branch." The Alliance will have a course of four luncheons during the season.

The Choir Guild will meet with Miss Gretchen C. Horst, Friday evening, Oct. 3, at 7.30 o'clock.

The first meeting of the season of the Wollaston Unitarian Club will be held Tuesday evening, Oct. 14. Dinner at 6.30 o'clock. The officers are: President, Louis F. R. Langelier; Vice President, Arthur W. Rohn; Secretary, John E. Simmons; Treasurer, Charles P. Loring. This club was organized Oct. 23, 1900, and is the oldest church club in the city.

This winter will probably see definite steps taken to erect a parish house, which is so much needed for all the social activities of the parish. Many of the church people feel that not only the church auditorium should be used for worship only, but that the vestry should be used only for the religious meetings of the Sunday school, the Young People's Religious Union, the Alliance and the Choir Guild.

A normal course in religious education will be given in Channing Hall, 25 Beacon street, Boston on Saturdays in October, November and December. There will be two periods each day. In the first period, which will be devoted to the principles of teaching, a lecture will be given by Professor Edwin .D. Starbuck, Ph. D., psychologist and an educator of the first rank. In the second period, Rev. Wm. I. Lawrance will give readings from the Prophets, with the two fold purpose of making these scriptures familiar and of promoting acquaintance with the prophetic movement in its relation to Hebrew history. The lectures begin at 10 o'clock and are free. All interested are invited to attend.

MAY TAX FOR HOSPITALS.

In response to a request from the special committee of the House which is investigating means for the prevention of tuberculosis, Attorney-General Swift has given his opinion. He says that: "Incurring debt within the limit of indebtedness for the acquiring of land for, and the construction and original equipment of, a building to be used for a tuberculosis hospital is authorized by this provision of the statute.

"The purposes for wich cities and towns may incur debt outside the limit of indebtedness prescribed by the statute are enumerated in the act, and they clearly do not include the establishment of tuberculosis hospitals."

Another question was submitted by the committee regarding the isolation of tuberculosis patients in city hospitals against their will. To this the Attorney- General replies:

"It is my opinion that if the Legislature intends it to be the law that a tuberculosis patient may be removed to a public hospital even against his will, further legislation should be enacted to make that inent clear and unmistakable."

MEN RECEIVING THE $337,000

Must Tell How They Got It From New Haven Road

SUGGESTION OF THE GOVERNOR

Public Service Commission Will Carry It Out Fully, Compelling Sharers In Mysterious Fund to Testify—Many Object to Airing Private Affairs In Open Hearing

Boston, Sept. 29.—Every lawyer, lobbyist, politician and newspaper man who got money from the New Haven railroad under the cover of "other expenses" will be summoned before the public service commission, and this is what will happen to him:

1. His bills for services to the New Haven will be compared with the New Haven books.

2. His bank book and his check book will be asked for and closely examined.

3. He will be asked to tell under oath what he got the money for, who hired him and who paid him.

4. He will be asked whether his services to the New Haven were not in violation of the corrupt practices act and whether he is not liable to prosecution for not registering as the lobby acts require.

5. He must tell in detail what his "legal services" consisted of.

The public service commission has notified the governor that a searching investigation will be made, and public opinion demands that the hearing of those who got slices of the $337,000 shall be open to the public.

Tremendous influence is being brought to bear upon the public service commission to hold the hearing behind closed doors.

The New Haven railroad is supposed to return its legislative expenses, but this vast sum of money was concealed under the heading "other expenses."

The public service commission, under the act of 1913 creating it, is given extraordinary power to investigate such a situation as this under section 11.

What section 11 was meant to do was to give the commission authority to secure the books and papers of the railroad, but the feature, that those who have taken railroad money will discover, is that they can be forced by the commission to testify and to explain every detail of their business with the railroad.

Chairman Macleod of the public service commission declared:

"We have been asked by the governor to get to the bottom of this matter, and we are going to do it. We shall exercise every power given us by the public service commission act. At this time we are considering the $67,000,000 bond proposition, and the details of the investigation into the publicity and other expense accounts have not been arranged."

Some of the politicians and lobbyists declare they will not air their private affairs in an open hearing, and they will go to the supreme judicial court for relief.

They all point to the clause which says that if any employe or agent of the commission betrays evidence except under an order of the court he is to be punished, and they argue from this that except on public questions, such as rates and service, no private citizen can be forced to testify publicly.

The advocates of a public hearing declare that this hearing will not be "an annual audit," which alone is to be kept secret by the agents of the commission.

EARLY WINTER EXPECTED

Gray Squirrels Are Already Preparing For Long Siege

Adams, Mass., Sept. 29.—New England farmers say winter will begin a month earlier this year and will be very severe, because gray squirrels are already building their winter nests. The nests are heavier this season and the leaves are being knitted closer together.

It has been years since the squirrels have made their winter homes so early or have been storing up their supply of nuts and acorns so far in advance of the first snow.

PICKEREL TOO PLENTIFUL

Lake Being Pumped Nearly Dry to Get Rid of Them

Wausaukee, Wis., Sept. 29.—Pumping an inland lake nearly dry to facilitate the killing of the pickerel that inhabit it is the scheme being worked out by the Peshtigo River Hunting and Fishing club here.

The club found the lake abounded with pickerel and that brook trout were scarce. There were too many of the undesirable fish in the little lake to attempt fishing them out.

WHY SMELTS ARE SCARCE

Illegal Fishing and Pollution of Waters the Great Cause

The complaints of smelt fishermen all through Dorchester and Quincy bays that the fish are far more scarce this year than ever before within memory, are not the result of poor fishing and a vivid imagination, according to Louis L. Mowbray, director of the Aquarium at South Boston. They are based on fact.

Furthermore, says the Globe, the reasons for a very noticeable decline in the number of smelts are cited by Dr. George W. Field, chairman of the Massachusetts Fish and Game Commission. Dr. Field declares that all the breeding places on the South Shore, with the exception of Weymouth Back river, have been polluted and the eggs of the smelts destroyed in such numbers as to greatly reduce the size of the schools. Seining during the early Spring, while the fish are still spawning, has had a not inconsiderable influence in reducing the supply of smelts, he says.

Mr. Mowbray's claim that the smelts are scarce in Dorchester bay comes as the result of an attempt made this week to produce some good specimens for the South Boston Aquarium at Marine Park. He was one of the two men who were accosted by the Quincy police and threatened with arrest for seining until their identification cards were produced.

"We dropped our seine 12 or 14 times in the same place," said Mr. Mowbray "and in all that time we succeeded in capturing practically no smelt at all. The only place where we had any luck was near the half-tide rocks. There we made some good catches, and got the specimens desired. We were but a short distance from the so-called fishing grounds, and no less than 150 boats were scattered about us, all filled with smelt fishermen. You can imagine their luck in view of ours with a seine.

"I have never seen the smelt so scarce. There must be some good reason for it. I'm sure lack of bait is not the cause, for we could have caught gallons and gallons of shrimp in that vicinity."

The reason for the scarcity was not hard for Dr. Fields to explain, when questioned about the matter.

"For years and years," said Dr. Field, "we have had our hands full enforcing the law on smelts in the small rivers about Weymouth and Braintree which are regularly used by the smelt for spawning purposes. The law permits one person to take about three dozen a day during a certain part of the Spring, providing they are caught in the regular way. But the sight of thousands and thousands of smelt in the water during the breeding time is too much for the natives down there, and they continually disregard the law. We have frequently caught men down there seining at night who had more than 1000 smelts in their possession. There has been so much difficulty about enforcing the law in these two towns that we have been forced to watch the rivers ourselves.

"The pollution of the waters is perhaps a greater cause for scarcity of smelts. I know of no good river but the Weymouth Back River. The Mill Cove which runs up into Braintree and Weymouth by Wyman's Hill used to be a good place for spawning, as did the Fore River, But now sewage from both towns has made its way into these rivers, and other debris and refuse has been thrown into the water. The result is that a slime forms on the bottom of the river, destroys the oxygen, and the eggs and young fish are killed. This is a serious matter and must be stopped or we will have no smelt at all."

Toll Uses in Sales Campaigns

SUCH testimonials as the following from J. E. SOPER COMPANY, wholesalers of grain and feed at 206 Chamber of Commerce, Boston, furnish unimpeachable testimony of the value of the telephone, especially the toll lines, in sales campaigns.

We quote a paragraph of a letter to the Company from this concern:

"We find that the telephone takes the place, in a large degree, of men on the road, and that our business is done in a much more satisfactory way by having a man sell our goods from the office, as he then knows everything a salesman should know concerning the quality, location and other features of the goods, whereas a man on the road does not always have his information and is frequently induced to guess it, which does not work at all."

We would not suggest this rule in every case. The advantages of face-to-face salesmanship and the magnetism of a personality, coupled with the importance of showing many lines of goods, are not to be depreciated. On standard lines, however, once the salesman's personality is established, the telephone is an efficient auxiliary and especially helpful to the salesman in making advance appointment.

TRAVELING MEN interested in little stories of the advantages of the telephone as a business auxiliary, are invited to send for "Modern Methods of Money-Making." In Metropolitan Boston call the Contract Department, Fort Hill 7600.

FALL HATS AND FIXINGS.

Small Hats Lead—Larger Shapes Promised—Velvet First Favorite—Niniche Shapes in Lace—Upstanding Garnitures—Girdles and Contours.

School girl or grandmother, debutante or matron, of home making taste, or business capacity, every woman is at this time of year interested in the subject of new headgear. Velvet shapes are generally seen early in September, even though torrid temperatures prevail, and so accustomed have we become to this fad that a velvet hat topping a lingerie frock has ceased to seem incongruous.

NEW SHAPES.

Small hats lead, some of them so small that they are just sufficient to form a base for the towering trimmings of wired net, tulle, lace, or upstanding butterfly feathers which are the favorite garnitures shown. While soft crowns are most worn there are many shapes stiffly modelled, some of the prettiest, with little, or no brim except at the left side where the brim turns up high above the top of the crown, with a gauze butterfly, or antennae like feathers poised at the top of this flare, in a way that adds much to the height of the wearer. Flat niniche shapes, in shirred silk or transparent lace, as well as in velvet, are built up with high trimmings at the back, where they turn up to display the coiffure. These and many other models are very often fastened with the "Tommy Atkins" chin strap, which is gaining ground, and is a boon to the woman whose chin needs help, though, truth to tell it's the very young contingent who use this device most. The strap gives a very saucy air when attached to one of the high, drum shapes that are almost or quite brimless, and a rather prim demure look where the hat has a drooping brim.

For auto wear, and general knock-about use, shapes of plush made up without stiffening, and which pull down well over the ears, are prime favorites. A very smart hat of this genre seen recently was of purple taffeta silk, cut in strips and braided like a straw, then sewed in a shape half hood, half hat, but altogether smart looking and comfortable.

NEW GIRDLES.

The Turkish sash that, going twice about the waist, droops well over the hips, and ties at the left side, is still with us and, strange to say is successfully worn even where the girth of the figure would seem to preclude its use. Newer however are girdles of leather or satin that start a bit below the natural waistline and go up to a height of eight to twelve inches. These are especially attractive in soft suede leather, dyed in all modish colors, and often form the sole contrasting color note in the dress, though this is apt to be repeated in hosiery, parasol and in hat or its trimmings.

CORSET LINES.

Corset lines change somewhat each season to keep pace with the new models launched by fashion leaders. No woman who aspires to appear well turned out can afford to neglect this fundamental, structure which molds and holds the figure correctly if the right style is selected. Fortunately for the woman whose dress allowance is limited the American corsets just launched for the Fall of 1913 can be had at reasonable figures, and one is as sure that the outlines are up-to-date in a Warner's rustproof as in the most expensive French stays, more sure in fact, because these are modelled to suit not the French but the American type of figure.

NEW BLOUSES.

There is no change in the liking for transparent fabrics for waists and bodices. Full flowing lines are employed, even for tailor-made wear, but materials are so soft and clinging that the lines of a neat figure are quite as well defined in these, as in the old-time tight-fitting bodice. Vest blouses, which simulate a man's vest only that the front and back are built of the same material, come nearest to the old time fitted bodice which is threatened by designers but which still lingers in the background. These "Vestee waists," have sleeves of thin material, silk, lace, chiffon or marquisette, which usually contrast in color as well as in fabric. Very smart models of this type show the vest of brocade and the sleeve repeating one of the colors of the figured stuff. These are especially good, with the cut away coats, which require a vest to complete their effect.

COLONIALS WIN IN NINTH

Defeat All Stars of West Quincy in Annual Game

The annual game between the Colonials and the All Stars of West Quincy on the Ward Four playground Saturday afternoon was one of the fastest of the season and resulted in a 6 to 5 win by the Colonials. It was witnessed by a large and enthusiastic following.

In the ninth, West Quincy shoved across two runs dissolving a tie. When the Colonials went to the bat two men were speedily put out and the winning tallies were scored after that.

The innings started with a single by Hebert, who stole second as Thompson fanned. Shea singled and DeCoste was safe on a fielders choice. Hebert was thrown out at home. With two out Bradley hit to Mulligan who relayed to Joe Desmond at first. Confident that the last out had been made he juggled the ball and it rolled along the base line. With the bases full, Markham hit through short stop, and Berry in trying to cut off the tieing runner threw wide and three men toppled over the plate.

The game had its anxious as well as sensational moments and several times it looked as though it was going skyward, but the up-to-the-air feeling would no sooner get started than coaching and the confidence of victory calmed the players.

Hebert did the box work for the Colonials, coming from Cohasset to do the honors, while Dick Williams chauffeur for Chief Litchfield, performed for the losers. Hebert allowed five hits against seven made off Williams, but the Colonials had but one error while the Stars made four.

The work of Williams was spectacular. Last season he pitched but two games and this was the first this year, but with his old time speed, good control and good base ball judgment he shot them at all angles and in such a manner that good hits were a rarity. Both pitchers tied at five for strikeouts and Williams passed but one while Hebert walked three.

Several of the Orients were in the lineup of the winners, and all played good ball. Bradley who had been scheduled to pitch played the outer garden and was ready to relieve Hebert if necessary. The score by innings:

TO LEARN CONV.CT LIFE

Head of New York Prison Board to Serve Term In Auburn

Auburn, N. Y., Sept. 29.—Thomas M. Osborne entered Auburn prison today to serve a sentence. In a talk to the convicts at chapel yesterday, Osborne, as chairman of the New York state commission on prison reform, astonished the gray brotherhood by announcing that he would begin today to serve a self-imposed sentence for the purpose of psychological research.

Osborne's commission, named by Governor Sulzer last summer, is investigating reform and its studies are expected to result in legislation on the subject next year.

In the present experiment Osborne will receive the same treatment as a convicted felon.

SIGNS OF FRICTION IN KAISER'S FAMILY

Royal Newlyweds Have Parted For the Present at Least

Berlin, Sept. 29.—The rumors of the existence of serious differences between the houses of Hohenzollern and Cumberland, which have been in circulation for some time past, received fresh impetus from the announcement that Princess Victoria Louise, the German emperor's daughter, who was recently married to Prince Ernest August of Cumberland, will take an extended trip for the benefit of her health, probably to Corfu or the Riviera. She will be accompanied by the empress.

Ernest August has left for Gmunden, Austria, on what is reported to be a month's hunting trip. It was explained that Victoria Louise was not well enough to take such a long trip, but the trip announced is much longer.

NO DELAY BY FELKER

Thaw Will Probably Know His Fate Within Ten Days

Concord, N. H., Sept. 29.—Governor Felker said last night that he would probably render his decision on the question of Harry G. Thaw's extradition about twenty-four hours after the briefs have been filed. The governor has given Thaw's counsel until Oct. 6 to file their papers, but it is understood that all the briefs will be in the chief executive's hands by Saturday.

William T. Jerome was expected here yesterday, but he did not arrive. Jerome has not asked the governor for a further delay on the extradition question, and as the chief executive is determined to act quickly in the matter, Thaw probably will know what is to happen to him within ten days.

MEEMER LOSES CHAMPIONSHIP

Committee Decide Against Her in Early June Races

The executive committee in the Inter club Yacht Racing association has made its final report on the standing of the yachts of the association as a result of the season's racing.

In class A, the championship will not go to the Meemer of John T. Cavanagh, for the reason that it was decided by the committee that the Meemer had not been regularly entered previous to the June 17 race, so that the race of the previous Saturday would not count in her favor. Up to the final meeting of the committee, the Meemer had led with a percentage of 113, but taking out the nine points of the disputed races she drops back into third place.

In class D, composed almost wholly of Quincy boats, the championship as previously stated goes to the Dartwell of ex-Commodore Ira M. Whittemore, with the Clara second.

In class S, also composed of Quincy boats the championship goes to the Maritza.

The standing of the class A, D and S boats is as follows:

CLASS A.

WALNUTS WIN BY 10 TO 8

Atlantics Charge Favoritism by the Umpire

Base ball war in Atlantic is on in earnest as a result of the first game of the championship series between the Walnuts and the Atlantics Saturday afternoon, which was won by the former 10 to 8. One of the features of the game was a triple play between Chaisson, Nelson and Duggan.

Manager Duffy of the losers, because of an injured knee, could not play and halved the umpiring with Duggan. Obliged to make several close decisions Duffy soon got into hot water, because the Walnuts claimed favoritism. Duggan the other umpire did well, escaping without any criticism.

The Walnuts aggregation was Chaisson, Gregory, Duggan, Pitts, Spinney, J. Chaisson, Nelson, Murphy and Kelliher. The Atlantic team included Donnelly, Johnson, Creedon, McNally, Jack Duffy, O'Connell, Cullen, Curtin and Nyhan.

WEYMOUTH TROT.

Some of the best racing of the season was seen Saturday afternoon at the matinee meet of the Old Colony Gentlemens Driving club. The winners in the several events were: class A, Benjamin; class B, Edith R; class C, Boxer; class D, Charm P; class E, Nellie Herr; class F, Doubtful; class G, Queen McGregor.

There was quite a bad accident during the racing but fortunately no bodily harm was done to either horse or driver. As four horses were going to their positions at the head of the home stretch, Mr. Pool with Lightfoot, came down the stretch at a good pace and ran into Charlie Morgans sulky with such force as to break one wheel. Mr. Green the driver was thrown to the ground but managed to hold onto the reins and stopped his horse and escaped without a scratch.

VISITORS SHUT OUT

The playing of Shiano, the old Powder Point favorite was exceptional and his run of 60 yards after taking the kickoff in the fourth period was a pretty piece of football work. Together with Sullivan of Bowdoin college, who played quarter, he shared the honors of the visitors.

Manager Flynn marched onto the field with 18 players, most of them members of his last season champion team. He played most of his men and even when the substitutes were sent in no change in the defense or offensive work was perceptible. Naturally the old boys showed the most strength and aggressiveness, but the makeup of the team is such that managers worry and a season's showing need give Flynn no anxiety because he has the "goods" in his players.

To mention each player individually would be no more than is due since all played star football. Ed Bennett had the fans asking how he managed to get into every play and Webb McDonald exhibited his fine quarterback judgment. He had better luck than Sullivan since Boyle picked one of his out of the air and crossed the line but none of the visitors were able to pick Wells for any such display.

Captain Cummings aside from carrying the ball was conspicuous in the tackling, and McCarthy did well at full. Carlson, succeeded him in the third period and showed that as a blocky athlete and snappy player he had all the characteristics of his race developed to where they were of value to him.

No penalties for offside playing were imposed and none of the players really wanted to mix it, although one of the visitors acted as though he had dreamt he was lightweight champ the night before and wanted to prove it. Umpire Peter M. Sullivan warned him that his chances of winning his bout were poor so he took a strangers advice and was good for the balance of the game.

The weak spots noticeable now and then, will be brushed up this week and Captain Cummings will troop across the field next Saturday with a bunch trailing him that should take the championship in football this year as quickly as they did last year.

IS QUINCY SATISFIED?

The Evidence Is Convincing. The Testimony Open to Investigation.

Before a statement can be accepted here, it must be supported by local testimony—by the evidence of someone residing in Quincy. Statements from unknown people in remote places may be true, but we cannot prove them. Here is a statement by a Quincy resident:

C. P. Russell, 37 Washington Street, Quincy, Mass., says: "My kidneys were weak and acted irregularly. I also suffered from pains in my back. I used Doan's Kidney Pills, and the first box relieved me. I intend to continue taking this medicine."

"When Your Back is Lame—Remember the Name." Don't simply ask for a kidney remedy—ask distinctly for Doan's Kidney Pills, the same that Mr. Russell had—the remedy backed by home testimony. 50c all stores. Foster-Milburn Co., Props., Buffalo, N. Y.

A Gamin's Romance

It Illustrates the Adage "A Bad Beginning Makes a Good Ending."

By ELIZABETH WEED

Little Tim Cosgrove was a newspaper boy. Tim had a very indistinct memory of his antecedents—a vague picture of a comfortable home with a woman who cared for him, putting him to bed, dressing and undressing him and now and again lulling him to sleep in her arms. But by the time he was ten years old all remembrance of her features had passed away from him, and there was no well defined link between that period and his selling papers whereby to make a living.

One day when the weather was hot Tim succumbed to the heat and fell on the sidewalk. There he lay, his newspapers scattered about him, till a policeman came along and, calling for an ambulance, sent him to a children's hospital. Tim came out of his collapse and one day was put on a steamer with a lot of other invalid children and sent off on the water. Beside him on the boat sat a little girl about his own age who fell to talking with him. Like Tim, she could remember a pleasant home, and more distinctly. She could recall an old fashioned house, with four pillars before it, in the center of beautiful grounds. One thing was indelibly stamped on her mind—her father being carried out to a cemetery. She did not know the reason why, but she and her mother left the big house, and then her mother was carried to a cemetery too. Later transitions came so rapidly that she could not remember them all, but her clothes were wearing out, and she did not get new ones. She was often hungry and did not have pennies to spend for candy. She was now living at an orphan asylum, but she longed to get away from it, for she was kept shut in most of the time, she said, and she pined for freedom.

Presently the boat landed at an island, and the children were put ashore and permitted to wander in a wood, or, better still, on the shore. At noon a luncheon was served on tables under the trees. Tim and his new found friend—Alice, she said her name was—played together, both preferring the shore.

In the afternoon the steamer with its load of children returned to the city. Tim told Alice of the life he led and said that if she would like to join him and sell papers as he did he would give her some of his stock. He made his home with a woman named Murphy, to whom he paid what he could for his board. She was a kind woman, and he thought she would take in Alice too. The little girl, dreading to go back to the asylum, agreed when they made a landing to slip away with Tim and cast her fortunes with him as a newsgirl.

Alice was received under protest by the woman with whom Tim made his home. She strongly advised the child to return to the asylum, but Alice begged to be kept and said she would sell papers like Tim to pay for her keeping. So Mrs. Murphy consented. Being a pretty child, Alice readily gained customers and soon sold more papers than Tim. But Tim looked after the finances, and soon the two, besides paying for their necessities, were laying up money. The accumulative principle was strong in the boy, and he was destined to become rich.

One day while Tim and Alice were on a much frequented street corner selling papers a man across the street beckoned to Alice to come over to him with a paper. Several other gamins started to get ahead of her. She became reckless in the race, was knocked down by a wagon and lay insensible. Tim saw her and, throwing down his papers, ran to her, took her up in his arms and carried her to the sidewalk.

Alice was taken home—that is, to the only home she knew. The day ended, and she did not recover consciousness. Another day and another, a week, a month, went by, and still she did not awaken, for her condition seemed rather that of sleep than what is called comatose. There is recorded a case of a person lying eleven years in such a condition, and the next longest case is that of little Alice, who lay nine years in constant slumber.

Let us pass over this gap in her life as she passed it, without taking cognizance of it, to the awakening. It occurred in the morning about 10 o'clock. For some time previous, so she has said, she felt a semiconsciousness, but rather as a dream than a reality. Some one was moving about her, opening blinds, arranging things in the room, rubbing furniture with a cloth. This person, though indistinct, seemed to be a woman, a maid, though Alice then did not know this meaning of the word. Then for a time all was silent.

The awakening came by degrees. Alice remembers trying to throw off sleep, realizing that she must get up and be at her post selling papers. Finally she opened her eyes and was surprised to find herself, instead of in the little wooden box she called her room, in a large, well furnished chamber. She could not grasp the situation or, rather, the connection between it and the past. Her first idea—that natural to a child—was that a fairy had taken her out of her bed and carried her to another, perhaps in a palace.

What confused her most was a faint memory of having been in that same chamber before. She attempted to sit up in bed, but found it so difficult that she desisted. But she managed to turn on her side and looked straight into a mirror in the door of a wardrobe.

What did it mean? That reflection was not her own. It was the reflection of a young woman. She glanced at her body as it appeared under the bedclothes and saw that it was not the body of a child. It extended from the headboard nearly to the footboard. Turning again to the image in the mirror, she looked at the features. She opened and shut her eyes, moved her lips, to determine if it were her own reflection. It certainly was the reflection of the person lying on the bed, but that person could not possibly be herself, the child Alice. She was becoming frightened at these incongruities when the door opened and a maid stepped into the room. She looked at Alice with surprise depicted on every feature. Alice looked at her as one bewildered. The maid turned and ran out out of the room.

She was gone only a few moments when she returned with a woman who looked for all the world like Mrs. Murphy, though Mrs. Murphy's hair was brown and this woman's was a grizzly gray. Nevertheless she ran to the bed and folded Alice in her arms. But, seeing the bewildered expression on the girl's face, she said quickly:

"Don't excite yourself. There's been a great change, but it's all well. You have made us all happy by awakening."

"Have I been long asleep? What does it all mean? Who am I? I'm not a little girl any more."

The woman soothed her and little by little gave her enough of the story to make her aware of the fact that long before she had been knocked down by a wagon in the street and had remained unconscious for a number of years.

"But what means this other change?" asked Alice. "Where am I? This room seems familiar to me. How did I come here?"

"Tim will tell you about that. You must remember that Tim is not now a little boy any more than you are a little girl. He has grown to be a fine young man. But no more at present. The doctor told us recently that you were showing signs of awakening and said that if you did awake you must be handled very carefully."

"Where is Tim?"

"He has been sent for and will be here directly."

"Does he still sell papers?"

A smile came and went quickly over the woman's features as she replied: "Oh, no. Tim hasn't sold papers for a long time. He owns a newspaper himself. Few men of his age have ever succeeded as he has succeeded. But you must hear that from him."

There was a tap at the door, and it was pushed open, and a man who looked to be nearly thirty, though he was but twenty-two, entered the room with an expression of intense happiness on his face, which, when he saw the sleeper awakened, broke into a joyful smile.

"Alice!" he exclaimed.

She lay looking at him in wonder for awhile, then asked:

"Can you be Tim?"

"I am Tim."

"Then tell me," she added presently, "how I came here."

"It is a long story, and I have been warned to condense it. You remember the money we had saved before you were injured?"

"It was $37.42."

"It is now as many thousands. But I must be brief. I went to the asylum you left to come with me and learned there all about you, including your former home. I resolved to buy it for you and succeeded in doing so only a few months ago. You are in the home where you were born and lived till misfortune overtook your family. The second happiest day in my life was when I received the deed for it made out in your name. The happiest day is this at seeing you awakened."

She found strength to put out her hand, and as Tim grasped it he knew the love that had been growing within him for years would be returned.

MURDER REIGN BY DRUG FIENDS

Two Negroes Kill Eight and Wound Twenty In South

THEY ARE FINALLY LYNCHED

Rope Breaks as One Is Swung From Coal Shute and He Is Again Pulled Up Without Word of Protest—Strenuous Sunday Results In Mississippi Town From Shooting

Harriston, Miss., Sept. 29.—Two drug-crazed mulatto boys, brothers, began a reign of murder here Sunday that ended only after three white men, four negro men and a negro woman had been killed, twenty persons wounded and the two boys lynched. A serious clash between the races was prevented by the arrival on a special train of a company of national guardsmen from Natchez.

The trouble started at about 2 o'clock and continued intermittently until 10 a. m., when Walter Jones, the elder of the two boys who started the firing, was lynched just after the soldiers arrived. His brother, Will Jones, had been shot and killed earlier in the day.

The shooting was started by Walter Jones, aged 20, in the negro quarter, where the negro women and Thead Grayson were shot and killed. Walter then went to the home of his mother and aroused his 18-year-old brother. Together they proceeded through the main street of the town, firing at everyone in sight. Citizens peered out of the windows and then hastened to cover.

The two boys went to the home of former Constable Keinsly, and when he responded to their call to come out he was shot through the head. Keinsly's son, William, saw his father fall and reached for a gun, but before he could fire he received a bullet in one of his hands.

The Yazoo and Mississippi Valley depot is near the Keinsly home, and the two negroes walked in that direction. A train had arrived from Natchez just a few moments before, and Conductor Appleby was standing at the station talking to Flagman Bond. Without warning the two negroes fired on them and both fell. Then the negroes directed their fire at Claude Freeman, who was waiting for a train. He was instantly killed. The negroes then fired into the train, terrifying the passengers.

With the blood lust at the highest point, the two negroes made their way to a cotton-seed house near by. Frightened citizens by this time had gathered their wits and telephoned for Sheriff Hammett at Fayette. Summoning former Sheriff Gillis to accompany him, Hammett started for Harriston on horseback.

A small crowd of men were firing into the seed house, but no one had ventured to lead the posse to the place. Taking a few men with him, Hammett, heavily armed, started toward the seed house, whereupon Walter Jones went to the tall grass nearby, and as Hammett approached, the negro fired, killing him instantly. A shot from the seed house brought down Gillis.

By this time the countryside had been aroused, and farmers came pouring in from every direction. A general fusillade of shots was directed at the seed house. A call was sent to Governor Brewer for troops.

Finding his hiding place too precarious, Will Jones started to run toward a coal chute nearby, but he had gone only a few steps when a bullet ended his life. A rope was placed around the body, it was strung up to a telegraph pole near the station and became a target for every one not shooting at the seed house.

Soon after Will Jones was killed, Walter Jones picked Tom Weeks, a negro, off the coal chute by his deadly aim. Weeks fell to the ground, dead.

Not long after Weeks was killed the special train bearing the Natchez guardsmen arrived.

While the soldiers were detraining the crowd rushed the seed house. Not a shot greeted them, and as the leaders went into the place with drawn weapons they found Walter Jones completely unnerved, but not injured.

They quickly placed a rope around his neck and rushed him to the coal chute. As the negro was drawn up the rope broke and he fell heavily to the ground. Not a word or act of protest came from Jones when a larger rope was drawn around his neck and again he was pulled up. A large crowd looked on as the drug-saturated body writhed until life was extinct.

The crowd then went to the home of the Jones', where they found two negro men, whom they were about to lynch, when officers persuaded them to desist. Whether the two negroes found at the Jones home knew of any plans the Jones negroes might have had is not known. They were arrested.

Miss Robina Adeline Atkins, daughter of Captain and Mrs. Elisha Doliver Atkins of Bromfield street, and Mr. Clenerth Robert Mitchell of Sachem street, were married at the rectory of St. Chrysostom's church, Wollaston by the rector Rev. Frederick H. Steenstra at 8.30 o'clock this morning.

The bride wore a tailored suit of dark blue with a chiffon waist of the same tone, with shadow lace yoke and touches of cerise satin, her hat was an old blue shade of velvet with white ostrich plume.

Owing to the serious illness of the brides mother Mrs. Atkins, was an extremely quiet affair only the witnesses being present, the bride's sister Miss Edith Marion Atkins and paternal aunt, Mrs. George Hopkins of Port Medway, Nova Scotia.

Mr. and Mrs. Mitchell sailed from Boston at 10.30 o'clock on the Governor Dingley for St. Johns, New Brunswick. They will be at home after November first at 18 Blake street.

WILL LIVE IN FLORIDA

Miss M. Lillian Lyons Bride of David J. Heffernan

Miss M. Lillian Lyons, one of West Quincy's popular young ladies, and David J. Heffernan of Miami, Fla., were married at 2 o'clock today by Rev. Fr. William J. Duffy at the St. Mary's parish house. They will leave Boston at 5 o'clock on a honeymoon trip which will terminate at Miami, Fla., where they will make their home.

Miss Mary Heffernan, sister of the groom was bridesmaid and Charles E. Lyons, brother of the bride was best man. The bride was dressed in French crepe, trimmed with duchess lace and wore a white hat, trimmed with ostrich plumes. She carried a bouquet of Bride's roses. Her bridesmaid was dressed in pink veiling over pink messaline, with hat to match.

After the ceremony a reception was held at the home of the bride's mother Mrs. Catherine J. Lyons on Barry street, where the bridal party was assisted in receiving by Mrs. Lyons and Mr. and Mrs. William Heffernan of Grant street, Weymouth, parents of the groom.

Miss Lyons is a graduate of Woodward Institute, class of 1905 and since has been connected with the millinery department of the E. T. Slattery Co., of Boston. She is well known in this city and has a host of friends. Mr. Heffernan is a native of Weymouth and several years ago went to Florida where he studied law. He is now one of the most promising young attorneys in Florida.

During the past three weeks Miss Lyons has been the recipient of many beautiful and costly wedding gifts from her many friends and several showers were tendered her on which occasions she received innumerable articles. Sunday she held an informal reception at her home and many called to express their sincere wishes at her departure from the scenes of her childhood. A large party plan to accompany the happy couple to Boston and extend them a rousing farewell.

ARGENTINE RIFLE TEAM

Will Be Guests Tomorrow at the Shipyard

The Argentine rifle team which is now on a visit to this country to compete at Camp Perry, O., and Sea Girt, N. J., will be in Boston today and Tuesday as guests of the Boston Chamber of Commerce. It was this team which accompanied the South American party on the steamship Vasari and fired a salute in honor of Independence day on board. The reception committee of the Chamber of Commerce, of which Col. Henry L. Kincaide is the chairman, will attend a breakfast this morning given by Mayor Fitzgerald to the team at the B. A. A. after which they will take an automobile ride through the park system, and this evening a special exhibition drill will be given for them at the Armory of the First Corps of Cadets. Tuesday the team will visit the Fore River ship yard at Quincy and later will be given an opportunity to inspect the Argentine battleship Rivadavia built at Quincy. Tuesday evening they will attend a dinner of the Chamber of Commerce at the Copley-Plaza.

RECOVERS CONSCIOUSNESS.

The identity of the Finn who jumped from the train at Quincy Adams at midnight Tuesday, Sept 23, became known at the Quincy City Hospital Saturday night when he recovered consciousness and said his name was Frank West, age 23, of 44 Smith street, Quincy. When he jumped he struck head first against a signal post and was removed to the hospital in an unconscious condition. He will probably recover.

DISTRICT COURT.

James E. Tracy was fined $10 for drunkenness at Weymouth, Andrew McIntosh $10, John F. Halsan $10, and John Barkridge $5 for drunkenness at Quincy.

William Twomey was fined $6.08 costs for assault at Braintree.

Wilmott Raymond was sentenced to one month in the house of correction for drunkenness at Weymouth.

RIVADAVIA AT SHIPYARD

Returned on High Tide This Morning for Adjustments

The superdreadnought Rivadavia which has been at anchor in Nantasket roads the past week is now tied up at the Fore River yards where several minor adjustments will be made.

The passage through the draw of the Fore River bridge commenced at 10 o'clock and was fully sixteen minutes after that her stern had cleared the narrow channel. Captain Joseph Kemp who took her out to set at night negotiated her return and approximately the same time was required to go through the bridge.

The feat, one of the most difficult ever undertaken was accomplished as easily this morning but the large crowd that witnessed the departure were absent.

The ship will remain at the Fore River yards until the next high tide which occurs the latter part of October. By that time all necessary repairs will be made and a few of the trials which have not yet been completed will take place. Shortly after she will be formally turned over to the Argentine government, the representatives of that government taking charge of her at Fore River yards. Preparations are being made to transport the crew that will sail her back to Argentine and they will commence to arive about November.

ASSESSORS ARE BESIEGED

Many Taxpayers Anxious to Get Rebates

The Assessors office at City Hall proved altogether too small this morning to accommodate the citizens who desired to interview the Board, evidently in relation to their tax bills, which were sent out Saturday. There was a long string of men and women which reached from the office quite a distance down the corridor. While it is not known just what the callers desired it is presumed that they called to register a kick over their assessments and ask for a rebate.

VAUDEVILLE AT MUSIC HALL.

There was a large audience at the opening of Music hall Saturday evening when a big vaudeville show was given followed by a photo-play entitled "A"shes of Three. "The vaudeville was of unusually high order and was thoroughly enjoyed. Then came the photo-play which was a most enjoyable feature. As the several pictures were shown they were explained by Prof. Neville, or perhaps it might be better said that Prof. Neville gave a lecture on the "Ashes of Three" which was illustrated by stereopticon views. A similar entertainment is to given every Saturday afternoon and evening throughout the winter months and if the program of the opening night is a sample, the future entertainments are sure to be well attended.

ACCIDENT.

William Kesslar of 24 West street averted a serious accident at Copeland avenue and Copeland streets Saturday afternoon by applying his brakes in time to avoid striking three children that suddenly jumped into the path of his motor cycle. The momentum of the cycle carried him to where four year old J. Yyllha of 52 Town Hill street stood however and the machine and its rider toppled over on the child and knocked her to the street. Dr. Thomas J. Dion who treated the child found no serious injuries. She was removed to her home.

$3,000 FIRE AT WEYMOUTH

The Bicknell block on Sea street, North Weymouth, was badly damaged by fire this morning. It is estimated that the loss will reach $3000. The families of W. D. Cody, Samuel Fleishman and Henry Leonard were driven to the street. They saved considerable furniture. The fire was discovered at 2 o'clock in the basement. It worked up the walls and burned a large hole in the roof before extinguished. The interior was badly gutted. The loss is full covered by insurance.

Woman's World

Wonderful Likeness Found In the Czar's Daughters.

GRAND DUCHESS OLGA (ON THE LEFT) AND GRAND DUCHESS TATIANA.

Glance at this picture of the czar of Russia's two daughters, Grand Duchess Olga and Grand Duchess Tatiana, and you will at once observe the wonderful likeness that exists between the two sisters. Grand Duchess Olga, the older of the two girls, is said to be engaged to Prince Charles of Roumania, although the lady herself exclaimed, when recently shown a portrait of her suitor: "His face is enough for me. I don't want to hear anything more about him."

The czar is not anxious for the Roumanian alliance, but force of circumstances favors it. The personality of the prince is not attractive, and his education leaves much to be desired. The preference of the Duchess Olga is for her cousin, Grand Duke Dimitri Pavlovitch, whom she vows to marry at all costs.

The Grand Duchess Olga, although not quite eighteen, is developing into a very handsome woman. She cuts a particularly dashing figure in the uniform of her father's hussars, of which she is colonel. The Grand Duchess Tatiana is colonel of the Uhlans.

New Ideas For the House.

If simplicity were chosen as the watchword in furnishing the average home its occupants would be better pleased with its aspect than they often are with many a room known so well to everybody, overburdened with "things" and a hodgepodge of colorings. Fancy a lovely pink evening gown with a background of a red wall and a floor covering that sends not less than half a dozen color impressions at once to the eye.

Some big American department stores have suits of rooms set apart with furnishings, walls, coverings, etc., that suggest artistic and practical ways of remodeling rooms in one's own home. The cost of such an improvement can be made commensurate with one's pocketbook, while the idea is what one is looking for.

Decorators have exploited brown as a fundamental color note until brown rooms are very general, but nevertheless inviting. A living room in a simple country home carries out a scheme of decoration in browns well worth reproducing. The wall paper is a plain one in a warm tan that verges on a coffee color. The ceiling is not white, but perceptibly cream in tint, and the color is brought down eighteen inches on the side walls, where a small cream enameled picture molding separates it from the paper.

Curtains for the windows are made of wide scrim hemstitched and hanging only three or four inches below the sills from a small rod over which they are shirred at the top. The floor is covered with plain brown woolen "filler," costing 75 cents per yard. Rugs having some old blue and dark red in them give life to the room, as do the flowered chintz cushions and pillows. The woodwork of the room is painted light cream color.

Autumn Fashions.

Tailors have begun to arrange skirts in such a fashion as to give more freedom to the limbs while preserving the closely fitting line. Serges are still trimmed with black mohair braid in much the same way as they were last year, with this one difference, that the braiding is massed upon the back between the shoulders, and again at and below the waist. In fact, many of the new coats in other materials have this characteristic. Skirts are braided in straight lines, sometimes ending in little tassels very flatly placed.

Skirts Nearly All Short.

Practically all of the skirts are short, revealing the feet and ankles. They are so narrow at the hem that slashing is essential, and the line being thus broken is practically always uneven. A straight hem is absolutely old fashioned, says the Dry Goods Economist. The skirts may be slashed in the front or on either side or at the back. When the slashing is very high the space is filled with plaitings or draperies of transparent material.

A Frenchy Caprice.

A French nightgown seen at a lingerie shop has an ingenious contrivance for fastening a bow to it. There is a loop of buttonholed thread through which the ribbon may be drawn and tied into a bow. When the garment is to be washed the ribbon is simply untied. Since seeing this the girls have stopped sewing the made bows on their washable underwear.

NAMING A TOWN.

Concord Was Selected After Fifty Years of Controversy.

The name of Concord, N. H., was given to the town after a controversy which lasted fifty years. In 1725 the land now within its bounds was granted to the colonists under the name of Peacock by the colony of Massachusetts: This claim was disputed by the colony of New Hampshire, which two years later granted this same land to the township of Bow. 1733 Massachusetts incorporated Peacock into a township named Rumford, and for more than forty years a fierce legal controversy was carried on. No agreement could be reached, and the matter was taken to the authorities in England, but even then there was no satisfactory nor permanent settlement.

In the face of an evident leaning toward the claims of Bow, both in England and in America, the little band of colonists in Rumford fought on valiantly, and in 1765 an act of incorporation was granted to the inhabitants of Rumford. This was still highly unsatisfactory because it only made them a parish in the town of Bow.

The controversy continued until 1774, when it was finally settled and an independent town was formed under the name of Concord. It was due to the devotion of the little band of settlers to their cause and the unity which existed among them that the independent incorporation of the town was finally obtained, and it was eminently fitting that the concord which existed between them during the struggle of nearly fifty years should be memorialized in their town's name.—Ladies' Home Journal.

DODGED THE WASPS.

Simple Trick by Which the Woodsmen Escaped a Stinging.

A man on his first trip into the wilds and marshes of an unknown country with the United States drainage engineers was struck by a unique method they have to escape from the attack of wasps and hornets. The country traversed is generally covered with thick undergrowth, and a path has to be cut through this all along the line. So when a big wasp nest is reached there is very little warning, sometimes the axmen cutting into a big one with their machetes.

The person relating this experience was some sixty feet behind the axmen with the instrument when all at once the two axmen dropped in their tracks as if they had been struck by a thunderbolt. The man behind and the two chainmen did likewise. While they were lying prone on the grass and wet marsh they heard what sounded like bullets zooing over their heads. One after the other they came with angry zips. When things had quieted down a bit work was continued, and the new man found that to escape from wasps or hornets the thing to do was to drop instanter. The insects seem to be so mad that they fly in straight lines along a level and do not have time to hunt around for you.

It is said that hornets are not so prone to follow this rule as wasps, but the wasps never vary. Men have been stung to death by hornets, and horses and mules likewise.—Chicago Record-Herald.

A Record In Fletcherizing.

If they learn the art of chewing even people whose food expense is only threepence a day can make their meals last a long time. A chewer, according to dietetic experts, is one who chews all things so long as they have any taste left in them. Gladstone, we are told, used to take thirty-two bites to every mouthful of food. The modern school of chewers would regard this as dangerously rapid eating. "I have tried chewing conscientiously," writes Mr. Eustace Miles. "A banana has cost 800 bites, a small mouthful of bread and cheese 240 bites, a greedy mouthful of biscuit (while I was walking on a Yorkshire moor) over 1,000 bites. It still seemed to taste about as much as at first, but I knew that taste by then, so I swallowed."—London Chronicle.

Comforting.

"Mr. Chairman," said the orator, who had already occupied the platform for twenty minutes, amid many interjections from the audience. "Mr. Chairman, may I appeal on a point of order? There is really so much desultory conversation going on in parts of the hall that it is impossible for me to hear a word I am saying."

SHIPYARD ACCIDENT FATAL

Workman Burned to Death on Rivadavia

Was Unknown for Sometime

A man supposed to be James G. Laidlow, employed at the Fore River shipyard, as a draughtsman, was probably instantly killed shortly before noon today by an explosion in what is known as the paint room in the hole of the Argentine Dreadnaught Rivadavia.

Laidlow was engaged in making plans of parts of the vessel which had been completed and while in pursuit of this work he entered the paint room. Just before he entered he asked a fellow workman for a match and it is supposed that the gases which had escaped from the paint stored in the room came in contact with a naked light carried by Laidlow causing a loud explosion, which enveloped the unfortunate man in flames and burned his body to a crisp before he had time to even make an attempt at escape.

The report of the explosion was heard by fellow workmen and Fred Lalley, and one of the foremen and H. E. Frick, assistant general manager of the company, started for the scene. They were met by a cloud of flames and smoke which drove them back and it was some minutes before they could gain an entrance to the room.

By this time the fire had burned itself out and on entering the room at the risk of their own lives Lalley and Mr. Frick found the badly burned body of a man laying on a bench, where he had probably been sitting when the explosion took place. He was rushed to the Red Cross hospital on the grounds where Dr. Blanchard found that the man was dead.

It was some time afterward before the identity of the man was learned and even then it is not absolutely sure, although the body is probably that of Laidlow. This identification was made by a pair of cuff links and by the process of elimination.

Medical Examiner Dr. Fred E. Jones was notified and the body removed to Hall's undertaking rooms.

Laidlow was a Scotchman and had been employed at Fore River since March, 1912. He has been doing considerable work on the Rivadavia making finished plans and was on board during the recent trial trips of the vessel. He is married and leaves a widow and one child and resided on Edwards street.

SPECIAL OF CITY COUNCIL

Jurors Drawn and Polling Places Designated

Seventeen members were present Monday evening at the special meeting of the City Council, the absentees being Councilmen Boyd, Farquharson, Gilliatt, Richards and Sandberg.

There were but two matters in the call to draw jurors and to designate polling places for the state election, Nov. 4.

The Mayor and City Clerk assisted by Councilman Thompson drew the following traverse jurors: William H. Haslett, John Kennedy, Michael McGuerty, John Vogel, James W. Fletcher, William R. Corbett, Frank J. Duffy and Merton A. Turner.

Councilman Little offered an order designating the polling places for the state election Nov. 4, which was adopted.

HIS RUNABOUT TURNED TURTLE

But Dr. Linemthal Escaped Without Serious Injury

Dr. Harry Linemthal, state inspector of the Board of Health, who came to Quincy on Monday to investigate the cases of infantile paralysis, had a narrow escape from serious injury shortly after noon when his Ford runabout turned turtle on Adams street burying him beneath the wreckage.

Dr. Linemthal was coming down the hill on Adams street, and in making the sharp turn at the foot of the hill, he got too far on one side. The wheel of his car struck a piece of paved gutter, causing the car to be overturned against the stone wall. The doctor was rescued from the wreckage by some people who happened to be passing. Fortunately he was not seriously injured and was able to go to his home in the cars. The wrecked auto was taken to a garage.

NEW MEMBERS.

Three candidates were admitted to membership at the weekly meeting of the Quincy branch of the United Irish Land league in Cahills hall Sunday evening. The meeting early disposed of its business but awaited the return of President McConarty who attended the mass meeting at Faneuil hall, Boston. LETTER FROM MR. WHITON

Is Not a Candidate for the Mayoralty

Says Stories Are Untrue

Joseph L. Whiton, president of the City Council, makes his position clear relative to the Mayoralty nomination, in the following open letter. At the same time he handles without gloves the papers which have made statements relative to his candidacy:

Editor Quincy Daily Ledger:

Since reading in certain papers in regard to my candidacy for the office of Mayor, I feel that it would be well for me to state my position.

Let me say, first, Mr. Editor, that the article printed in the Quincy Telegram of Sept. 16, at least that part that referred to me, is absolutely untrue. I have not attended a political meeting of any kind this year, and as far as my being the administration choice, I will say that such a story is simply sensational and wholly without foundation as far as I am concerned.

If there was such a meeting held in City Hall as referred to ,it was wholly without my knowledge, and no one had any authority to use my name.

As far as my serving as chairman of the Progressive Party, I will say that I joined the movement as I believed the Republican party needed a severe reprimand, and I was and am now, very much in favor of certain principles of the Progressive platform.

As for my being a staunch supporter of non partisanship and a supporter of ex-Mayor Shea will say that is the only true part of the article. I believe that non-partisan politics is the best policy for our city, and my one desire politically is to do and act for the best interests of our city.

I will take the time to state, Mr. Editor, that I am not a candidate for Mayor. I deeply appreciate the kindly feeling my friends show toward me in wishing me to accept the position, but my business is such that it would be a case of sacrificing one or the other, and I would never consent to run for the office unless I was in a position to devote the time that I believe should be given in case I was elected. I believe the office of Mayor in our city has grown to considerable of a job, and requires practically all of one's time if the affairs of the city are going to be attended to as they should be.

I am willing to give my time to the city as a councilman if the voters so choose, as I can do so without much interefring with my business. Hoping you will be able to allow space in your valuable paper for this article, I am very truly yours,

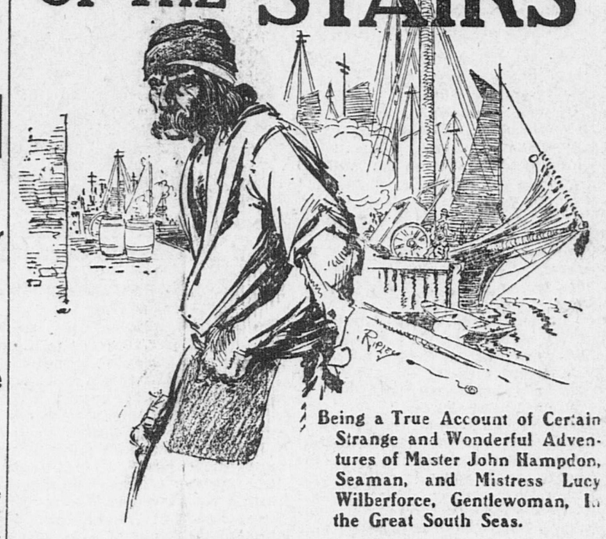

JOSEPH L. WHITON,
29 Whitney road.

WALKED TO DORCHESTER.

For the second time within a week, the lost child call has been sounded from Box 61, to summon help to search for George, the 4 year old son of Moses Chisholm, Hunt street, Monday night's call was sounded at 7.03 and it was after 8 o'clock before the recall came. The little fellow was found shortly after the alarm sounded at Station 11, Dorchester. He said that he followed a funeral from the Sacred Heart church at Atlantic in the morning, until he had got tired out, when he sat down to rest and was picked up by a Station 11 policeman, who sent him to the station where he was given food, and held pending inquiries.

PROLOGUE.

Here's a tale of the sea and the treasure isle, of long hid gems and bad men's guile, of perils on land and wave well met, 'spite storm and mutiny's awful threat.

The way of a man with a maid is told as they voyage the seas in quest of gold—the man so brave and the maid so fair. For her sake naught he will not dare.

From English fields to south sea shore their path they follow while billows roar, but it leads them safe to their goal at last, with their love and their treasure tightly clasped.

CHAPTER I.

Wherein I Bait the Duke Over the Dead.

I CANNOT say that I was greatly surprised when I stumbled across the body of Sir Geoffrey in the spinney, which is not for a moment meant to convey the impression that I was not shocked. I had expected that Sir Geoffrey would come to some such sad end; therefore I say that I was not surprised. But as I stood over him in the gray dawn, looking down upon him lying so quietly on his back with the handsome, silver mounted, ivory handled dueling pistol which had done the damage still clasped in his right hand I was fascinated with horror.

Sir Geoffrey had carefully put his bullet through his heart. It was less disfiguring and brutal, less hard on those left behind, less troublesome, more gentlemanly. His sword lay underneath him, the diamond hilt protruding.

I guessed that he was glad enough, after all, that the end had come, for there was not that look of pain or horror or fear which I have so often seen on the faces of the dead, but his features were calm and composed. He had not been dead long. As I bent over him I noticed that he had something in his left hand A nearer look showed it to be an envelope. I drew it away and saw that it was addressed to Mistress Lucy. Thrusting it in the pocket of my coat, I rose to my feet.

At that instant I heard steps and voices. Now I had nothing on earth to fear from anybody. The death of Sir Geoffrey was too obviously a suicide for any one to accuse me even if there had been any reason on earth for bringing me under suspicion. The letter which I carried in my pocket addressed to Mistress Lucy would undoubtedly explain everything there was to explain. Something, however, moved me to seek concealment. I am a sailor, as you will find out, and can act quickly in an emergency by a sort of instinct.

Sir Geoffrey lay on the side of the path through the spinney, and beyond him the coppice thickened. The path twisted and turned. From the sound of the footsteps I judged that men were coming along it. I instantly stepped across the body and concealed myself behind a tree trunk in the leafy foliage of the undergrowth. I could see without being seen and hear as well.

I did not expect that any of the guests of the castle would make their appearance at that hour. The footsteps stopped. Two men, one of whom had been pointed out to me as Baron Luftdon, in the lead, followed by another who was strange to me, suddenly appeared. A voice which I recognized as Luftdon's at once exclaimed in awestruck tones:

"By gad, he's done it! Here's a pretty affair!"

"Oh, I don't know," said the second; "it might be worse!"

"Worse for him? Great heavens, man, he's dead!"

"Worse for us."

"What d'ye mean? I don't understand."

"He might have shot himself before we plucked him."

"Oh, I see!"

The two stepped a little nearer. The first speaker, Lord Luftdon, one of the young bloods who had been having high carouse with Sir Geoffrey for the past week at the castle, bent over him.

"Well," continued the drawler nonchalantly—as for me, I hated them both, but the latter speaker the more, if possible, for reasons which you will presently understand—"this relieves me greatly."

"What do you mean? After such a night as we had to come upon this is enough to unsettled any man."

"Pooh, pooh, man; you're nervous!"

"Well, I don't know how it relieves you And after all's said and done, Wilberforce was a gentleman, a good player and a gallant loser."

"Exactly, and he lost his all like a gentleman."

"And you got it, at least most of it."

"Patience, my friend; you had your share."

"I don't know but I would give it back to have poor old Geoff with us once again," said Luftdon, with some heat

"That is a perfectly foolish statement, my buck," returned the other "Somebody was bound to get it. Wilberforce has been going the pace for years We happened to be in at the death, that's all."

"Well, how does it relieve you, then? Do you think Wilberforce would have attempted to get you to support him?"

The drawler laughed

"Of course not. This"—he pointed to the dead body—"is proof enough of the spirit that was in him But, of course, I cannot marry the girl now."

"You can't?"

"Certainly not. Her father a bankrupt, a suicide"—

"But the castle and this park?"

"Mortgaged up to the hilt. Speaking of hilts"—he stooped down and, daintily avoiding contact with the corpse, drew from the scabbard the diamond hilted sword—"this belongs to me. It's worth taking. You remember he staked it last night on the last deal."

"Good God, man," protested the first speaker, "don't take the man's sword away! Let him lie with his weapons like a gentleman."

"Tut, tut! You grow scrupulous, it seems. We will provide a cheaper badge of his knighthood, if necessary."

"And about the girl?"

"'Tis all off."

"You will have some trouble breaking your engagement with her, I am thinking."

"Not I. To do her justice, the girl has the spirit of her father. A whisper that I am disinclined to the match will be sufficient."

"Aye, but who will give her that whisper?"

"We will arrange that some way. Truth to tell, I am rather tired of the minx. She bores me with her high airs. She does not know that she is penniless and disgraced. And as for her good looks, 'tis a country beauty, after all."

"Poor girl!" began Luftdon, whose face, though bloated and flushed, still

CANDIDATES FOR THE COUNCIL

Johnson Alone Thus Far For the Mayoralty

Mayor Stone Is Undecided

There was quite a rush at the Ctiy Clerk's office Monday night for nomination papers, although it was noticed that up to the present time not many of the present members of the Ciy Council have taken out papers.

There seems to be a little misunderstanding as to nomination papers. Heretofore it has been necessary to obtain nomination papers from the secretary of the Ward Committee and the papers were opened by the City Committee on a certain date.

Under the new primary law, however, it is now necessary to obtain nomination papers from the City Clerk, with whom they must be filed on or before Oct. 25, at 5 o'clock for the Registrars of Voters.

However quite a few papers have been taken out in addition to those reported. The only Mayoralty papers however, are those for Charles H. Johnson.

Whether or not Mayor Stone is to be a candidate again this year is a matter of doubt. His honor said this morning that he was preparing a statement of his position which he would probably give out Wednesday, although it might not be ready until Thursday morning. This statement will state his position in the coming campaign and will settle the question whether or not he is to be a candidate for renomination and election.

England may retire from the Olympic games, but that will not affect the results at all.

As there is now to be a hundred million on hand from the income tax, it is believed the time is ripe to give every politician a pension.

Aviator Pegoud keeps on looping the loop, and the dispatches fail to state whether he has been disappointed in love or got on the wrong side of the stock market.

The house that Vice President Marshall rented has now been sold over his head. Mr. Marshall must be getting some good practice in putting down and taking up carpets.

Balboa discovered the Pacific ocean 400 years ago, and it never occurred to him how much trouble he was giving to succeeding generations of school children.

ATHLETIC SUPREMACY.

The United States and England have usually been accounted the foremost nations in athletic sports. Now comes the victory at golf of Francis Ouimet, only 20 years old, over two veteran English professional champions. The superiority of American over British athletes at the Olympic games still worries John Bull. Evidently Uncle Sam is some sport.

The English temperament is not favorable to the very highest results. There is a greater alertness in the American, that adjusts itself instantly to the critical exigencies of competitive sport. The Englishman thinks more slowly, and does not always see an opportunity until it passes.

Englishmen as a whole take life easy. Perhaps they get more out of it that way. But the man who locks up his office at 4 o'clock is apt to take his athletics in the same leisurely way. The American goes in to win, at either business or sport.

GOSPEL OF THOROUGHNESS.

About 35 years ago "Jim" Hill used to sit on the St. Paul levee, whittling an old wood chair and talking of buying the St. Paul and Pacific railroad. He was called the most garrulous talker of the Northwest. Few people took him seriously.

Hill and five other men put $283,000 into that railroad, and 10 years after their investment was worth $40,000,000 Today James J. Hill, who celebrated his 75th birthday at Glacier Park a few days ago, is the foremost living railroad king. The qualities that led to his amazing success are worth the study of every ambitious man.

"Little ships must keep near shore, "Larger ships may venture more."

The St. Paul and Pacific people, trusting in the growth of the country, watered their stock so that Hill used to say they had taken in all Lake Michigan. These were gambling chances which the everyday man must avoid.

Where Hill won was in thoroughness of detail. While other railroad promoters were dictating letters in comfortable office chairs, Hill was on his railroad platforms talking with engineers about valves and boilers and with passengers about the resources of the country. He knew his rolling stock and his field as a stage driver knows his horses and territory.

Hill would talk over his plans with any one from a barbor to a Wall street magnate. Every one would suggest some idea, until his schemes came out quite different, as the result of a consensus of his neighbors' common sense. Few business men in these days of government regulation will ever make so great a success. But Hill's habit of knowing every last detail of his business is something that can be imitated with amazing results by every man in his own trade.

FIRST CHAPTER TODAY

IN THE DAILY LEDGER

OF OUR NEW SERIAL

"THE ISLAND OF THE STAIRS."

CURIOUS DUELS.

Combats In Which the Weapons Selected Were Avalanches.

An extraordinary duel was fought near Mont Blanc in France. Two young men who had fallen in love with the same girl arranged to fight a duel, with nature as decider of the result.

Selecting a part of that mountainous district, many thousand feet up, where avalanches are known to fall at frequent intervals, the lovers agreed to take it in turns to stand for a given time in the most dangerous spot that could be found. The idea was that when one was killed by an avalanche the other should be free to propose to the girl whom they both loved. In this case the idea became a fact.

This is not the only instance on record of a duel by avalanche. A few years ago two Italians, named Guetta and Sorato, decided to test fate in this manner, and also for the love of a woman.

For three mornings they tempted nature, but nothing serious happened. On the fourth day Guetta was knocked down by a falling avalanche, but not much hurt. Then it was that their food supply gave out, and they returned home to get some more. By this time the police had come to hear of their strange duel, and threatened them both with imprisonment. So the undaunted rivals settled their differences in another and less adventurous way. They drew lots for their lady love. Sorato won, and after Guetta had left the village he was married to the girl of his choice.—London Answers.

STRENGTH OF A LIMPET.

Its Sticking Power Largely Due to Atmospheric Pressure.

Every one is familiar with the saying "to stick like a limpet," but there are not so many who know how it is that a limpet is able to stick as it does to the rocks upon which it passes its existence. The creature is able by means of the central portion of its body, which can be raised independently of the edge or frill which surrounds it, to create a vacuum much in the same way that a piece of soft wet leather can be made to adhere to a smooth surface by pressing out all the air. Thus the so called "strength" of the limpet is largely due to atmospheric pressure.

It is not entirely so, however, for if they are closely examined it will be seen that the shells accommodate themselves around the edges to the surface of the rock upon which the limpet is located, and if removed to another spot the edge of the shell will probably be found to be a very bad fit and the creature's power of adhesion somewhat lessened. If taken by surprise with a smart sidelong blow even a large limpet is easily enough dislodged, but if it is given the slightest warning its power of suction is instantly brought into play and very often considerable force is then necessary before it can be detached.—London Standard.

An Unburied Picture.

Rossetti secured permission in 1869 to reopen the coffin of his wife in order to secure the manuscripts of some poems which he had buried with her seven years before.

Some such incident might have occurred in connection with J. M. W. Turner if his desire to be buried wrapped up in his own painting of "Carthage" had been carried out. There was some difficulty in selling the painting, and the artist kept the canvas by him. He always said he would be wrapped in it when he was buried and even went so far as to ask Chantrey if as his executor he would fulfill his wishes on that point.

"No doubt," answered the sculptor, "I shall bury you rolled up in your picture if it is one of the conditions of your will, but I would take you up next day and unroll you!"

Found a Way.

Teacher—Now, children, try to figure just this once without counting on your fingers. How much is three and four. Peperl (looking under the bench after a long wait)—Seven. Teacher—Right. Four and six. Peperl (again peeping under the bench)—Ten. Teacher—Hold up there, you little rascal! I'll teach you to count on your fingers! (Takes Peperl's hands and clasps them behind his back. Now, then, five and three? Peperl (after another long look under the bench)—Eight. Teacher—Well, how did you manage to do that? Peperl—With my toes, teacher.—Fliegende Blatter.

The Brightness He Saw.

A man who died recently in the north of England and had been living a dishonest life under the cloak of religion, wishing to pose as a good man to the last, said to those around him:

"All is bright before me!"

"Aye," said one of those present, whom he had swindled out of a sum of money, "an' in about ten minnits theau'll be near enoof to see th' blaze!"—Manchester Guardian.

The Brighter Side.

"Well," chuckled the optimistic failure, "I've got one satisfaction."

"And what's that?" asked the sympathetic friend.

"If I had succeeded I should probably have made a nuisance of myself telling people that I was a self made man."—Detroit Free Press.

Wonderful Printing.

Bacon—They say Dauber does some wonderful work. Egbert—Yes. I understand he painted some bananas green, and in a month they all turned yellow.

Do one thing at a time, and the big things first.—Lincoln.

LODGE WAS VERY NEAR TO DEATH

Condition "as Satisfactory as Could Be Expected"

OPERATED UPON FOR ULCER

Surprise at News of Senator's Critical Condition—Every Effort Made to Keep Illness Secret at His Own Request—Not Yet Entirely Out of Danger, According to Doctors

Nahant, Mass., Sept. 30.—United States Senator Henry Cabot Lodge is in a critical condition, following an operation performed Friday to remove a gastric ulcer. There is some fear of peritonitis.

His grinding work on the tariff bill before he came to his home, ten days ago, weakened his system so that he was hardly able to withstand the effects of the operation, to which he had submitted unwillingly, and for twenty-four hours after he went under the knife his life was in jeopardy.

His physicians admit he is "not entirely out of danger." His son-in-law, Congressman Gardner, gave up his campaign engagements to ride to the Lodge home yesterday, where he remained nearly all day.

By Lodge's request, every effort was made to keep his illness secret. Two policemen kept guard at the Lodge estate, and only a chance remark by a member of his household yesterday made the news of the operation public. Many of the most intimate friends of the family were not aware of the senator's grave danger.

In the few hours that have elapsed since that time, scores of telegrams have been taken to the Lodge residence. Most came from Boston, but many were sent from New York and Washington.

Even after word of the senator's illness had leaked out, for some hours the family refused all information and the doctors were pledged to secrecy. The secretary to Lodge gave out this statement last night.

"Senator Lodge was operated on last Friday for a gastric ulcer. The senator had been suffering for some days with what was thought to be an attack of indigestion, but his condition became so critical that the physicians found an immediate operation necessary. Dr. Harrington and Dr. Winslow, who are in charge of the case, pronounce the senator's condition entirely satisfactory."

When Dr. Winslow was seen he said Lodge's condition was "as satisfactory as could be expected. He is not in any immediate danger," he added. Dr. Harrington said the time of the senator's recovery is largely a matter of his vitality in which his 64 years and the fact that he was a tired man previous to the operation must be taken into consideration.

CONVICTION IS UPHELD

"Healer" Is Found Guilty of Manslaughter by Starvation

Olympia, Wash., Sept. 30.—The supreme court of Washington has confirmed the conviction of Dr. Lina B. Hazzard of Olalla, Wash., who conducted the Hazzard institute of natural therapeutics, for causing the death by starvation of Miss Claire Williamson, a patient.

In affirming the conviction of Hazzard the supreme court reviews the strange case, pointing out that after Miss Williamson had died during a long fast under the direction of Hazzard, the "healer" had tried to induce the dead woman's sister, Dora, to commit suicide through suggestion, so as to get possession of the property of the sister.

The court's decision upholds the contention that there is such a crime as manslaughter by starvation.

TUPPER TRIAL BEGINS

Maine Man Accused of Murder Is to Plead Self Defense

Skowhegan, Me., Sept. 30.—Harlan R. Tupper was placed on trial here, charged with the murder last April of Fred McGlaughlin. In introducing its evidence the state endeavored to show the murder had been planned and alleged that Tupper had borrowed a rifle the day before McGlaughlin was shot.

Tupper pleaded not guilty. His counsel indicated that they would try to show the shooting was done in self defense.

THAW SURPRISES COUNSEL

Fails to Consult Them Before Making Statement to Reporters

Concord, N. H., Sept. 30.—Harry K. Thaw's lawyers are up in the air again. Thaw has jumped over the traces in what to them is alarming fashion. He gave out a signed statement to the newspaper men, in which he said that he would return to New York and demand trial if the Dutchess county grand jury had found an indictment against him at the time that William T. Jerome told Governor Felker that one had been secured. He did not consult any of his counsel about this statement, but took the entire matter into his own hands.

The statement came as a big surprise to some of Thaw's New Hampshire attorneys. They thought it very unusual that he should make such a statement without conferring with them.

RAILROAD SHOPMEN REMAIN ON STRIKE

Federal Commission Interested In Two-Year Contest

Chicago, Sept. 30.—The strike of 38,000 allied shopmen of the Illinois Central and Harriman railroads, which is two years old, may be the first labor trouble considered by the federal industrial commission, whose members were recently appointed by President Wilson.

A committee of the Brotherhood of Railroad Carmen last night selected a delegation to go to Washington and arrange for the presentation of evidence.

Several hundred of the strikers, who demand recognition of their union, observed the second anniversary of their strike at two meetings. It was asserted that less than 5 percent of the men who walked out two years ago have returned to work.

BALKS SELECTMEN

Suspended Chief Opens Police Safe but Keeps Important Papers

Norwood, Mass., Sept. 30.—James W. Lavers, police chief of Norwood, under suspension pending graft charges against him, executed a coup on the board of selectmen.

Lavers, who is charged with maladministration of police duties and not making a proper accounting of the funds of his department, especially in the matter of charges for policemen at weddings, was at the door of the station house when the selectmen arrived there.

"There, gentlemen, is police headquarters, the police safe and the papers you have demanded. You are welcome to the office and the safe, but as for the papers, I think they will be safer in my pocket," he stated to them. He then opened the safe for them and left the office with the payrolls and other papers in his pocket.

ADMITS KILLING BOY

O'Brien Threw Nude Body of His Little Victim Among Some Bushes

Philadelphia, Sept. 30.—Joseph O'Brien, who was arrested on suspicion of having attacked and killed 7-year-old Israel Goldman and then thrown his nude body among some bushes on the golf links of the Whitemarsh Valley Country club, confessed that he had committed the crime.

According to the police, the prisoner said he had killed the child because he had called O'Brien's mother a foul name.

Noted Carpet Man Dead

BECKER'S DEATH HOUSE STORY

Carefully Prepared to Help Sulzer Defeat Enemies

HE DEMANDED PARDON FOR IT

Men Named In "Confession" Did All In Their Power to Prevent It Being Made Public—Murphy's Knowledge of Sulzer's Debts Gave Him Whip Hand Over the Governor

Albany, Sept. 30.—Sing Sing's ghastly death house contributed an amazing chapter to the story of the impeachment of Governor Sulzer, in which it appears that Lieutenant Charles A. Becker has prepared evidence striking at the political life if not at the personal freedom of a dozen men, high in the official life of the state.

This story, alleged to be backed by such proof as a shrewd and resourceful detective might produce, has been offered by Becker in return for his life.

At the beginning of the fight upon the governor emissaries were sent to Becker at Sing Sing for the purpose of getting from him any facts he might have concerning the connection between politics and crime in the city of New York.

Becker demanded that before one line of his evidence was produced a pardon be signed which would leave him absolutely free from any chance of punishment growing out of the murder of Herman Rosenthal. In the meantime the power of Sulzer to pardon anybody has vanished.

Those men who were named in the Becker "confession" were apprised of that fact. They set to work all the wheels under their command to prevent the production of the statement. But the general character is known to too many men to permit the fact of its existence to escape the public, and there is much uneasiness in Tammany circles lest its full contents become known.

The court of impeachment has swung into a week that promises to close the testimony for the prosecution. Attorneys for the board of managers said they did not think it possible that their case would consume more than this week.

Sulzer will appear personally before the impeachment court and accuse Charles F. Murphy with having conspired to overthrow him.

The Murphy plot, Sulzer will swear, began prior to the convention at which Sulzer was nominated. The "boss" consented to his nomination and even offered to lend him money, Sulzer will allege, because he knew he was $49,000 in debt, and that in all their dealings thereafter he used the knowledge of Sulzer's financial straits as a whip to force submission.

Soon after he became governor, he will charge, Murphy began to make demands that he could not consistently grant. That caused an unpleasant condition which resulted in a serious rupture after the inauguration of President Wilson.

The governor, Senator O'Gorman, Murphy, Norman E. Mack, John H. McCooey, W. H. Fitzpatrick and Congressman Fitzgerald held a conference in Washington on the question of federal patronage. Sulzer insisted he had been selected the party leader in New York state by his election as governor. Murphy firmly opposed that idea and the fight began.

Sulzer yesterday won a triple victory over his accusers at the trial of his impeachment.

Presiding Judge Cullen of the high court barred the introduction of evidence to prove that Sulzer had made a corrupt political bargain with Assemblyman Patrie of Green county, and held that the evidence brought forward to show that he had made similar bargains with Assemblyman Sweet of Oswego county and Assemblyman Prime of Essex was incompetent.

Auburn, N. Y., Sept. 30.—Thomas M. Osborne, chairman of the state commission on prison reform, who entered Auburn prison to serve a short term, self-imposed, for the purpose of studying the effect of the present prison system on the mental and physical condition of a man, was assigned to the "idle gang."

Osborne has a cell in the south wing, and will live the life of a convict in every detail while in prison. His moustache was shaved off, but his hair, cropped closely normally, was untouched. He wears a convict's uniform.

OUTING OF BOSTON WOMEN

Entertained by Their President at Squantum

One of the prettiest social affairs to be held in Squantum this season was that Saturday evening at the home of Mrs. Mary Moran, president of the Boston Business Women's club. The occasion was an outing of the club members about seventy five being present.

The guests arrived at three o'clock in special cars and automobiles and spent the afternoon in playing all kinds of out door sports. The winners of the various sports were awarded beautiful souvenirs by Mrs. Moran.

After a sumptuous supper the ladies congregated in the large living room. An original poem dedicated to Mrs. Moran was read and a huge basket of flowers were presented to her. Their president responded in a most gracious manner.

Mrs. Moran, wife of Dr. M. W. Moran of Back Bay, who have their summer home here, is one of the organizers of this society and was elected first president and was unanimously re-elected to serve a second year.

Dancing was enjoyed in the evening until 10. The house was beautifully decorated with Japanese lanterns and parasols. Mrs. Moran was ably assisted in receiving by Mrs. T. F. Callahan and upon the departure of the guests, three rousing cheers were given the ladies.

BACK TO NEWFOUNDLAND.

Mrs. Leila O'Connell of Houghs Neck started on a six weeks' trip to Newfoundland this week. She was accompanied by her two children, William Jr., and Eugene Noble Foss. It is nine years since she left Newfoundland and she expects to see many changes. There were many friends from Cambridge, Somerville, Newton and Winchester to wish her a pleasant journey. Mr. O'Connell expects to follow for a flying visit the last week of October. Gov. Foss sent a note wishing his namesake a nice trip and while he can't read it as yet his parents will treasure his thoughtfulness in remembering him on this occasion.

THE LOVELIGHT IN HIS EYES.

He Thought That Was What Made All the People Stare.

"You have read in novels how a great emotion will transform a man's countenance, how a poet's face in the hour of inspiration sets the sparrows singing on the housetops. My own features are of the commonplace type —nobody thinks of regarding them twice—yet I, too, have had my experiences, declares a contributor to Punch.

"They occurred on the morning when I received a letter from Phyllis, which said briefly, 'Yes, I think so.' Not much in that, you may say, but when I tell you it was the delayed answer to a proposal of marriage you will understand. Shortly after reading it I stepped out into the street to walk to the office.

"What a walk that was! The light in my eyes seemed to brighten the very sun; the song in my heart was echoed from a hundred motorbuses. Never have the winds of May wooed so winningly a February morning.

"Every man I met turned his head as if loath to take his eyes from my irradiated countenance. Every girl seemed to take the keenest pleasure in my happiness and smiled at me prettily as if infected by its contagion. 'Tis well,' I thought (in blank verse), 'that Phyllis now is pledged to me or, by my troth, these flattering glances shot from beauty's eyes might make my heart unfaithful.'

"It was only when I reached the office and looked in the glass that I discovered the large black smudge on the end of my nose."

COURAGE OF NAPOLEON.

The Way It Carried Him From Aspern-Essling to Wagram.

Professor J. Holland Rose in "The Personality of Napoleon" writes of Napoleon's courage. He says that his personality "never stood forth so grandly as after a defeat." The most serious blow in the middle part of his career was that dealt him by the Archduke Charles at Aspern-Essling, northeast of Vienna. The Austrians were nearly double him in strength. The bridges over the Danube had been broken down in his rear. His great marshal, Lannes, had been killed, and, in fact, he had suffered a terrible reverse. All his generals were for retreat, but he withstood them, and Professor Rose ranks the next six weeks "among the most glorious of his military career." He secured new troops, deceived his enemy by false movements and finally defeated him at Wagram.

But a decline came to such a prodigious man. He himself said at St. Helena that he had been spoiled by success. It was natural that the victor in fifty pitched battles and innumerable smaller engagements should come to believe himself omniscient and invincible. It was this hardening of the mind that betrayed him into the Russian campaign, that caused him to refuse all compromise in 1813 and 1814 and that led him to defeat by his inferiors, Wellington and Blucher, at Waterloo, just as Hannibal was finally beaten by his inferior, Scipio, at Zama.

Putting Trees to Bed.

An interesting method of protecting peach trees from frost during the winter has been practiced for several years at the agricultural experiment station at Canyon, Colo. Early in November the earth is removed from a circle about four feet in diameter round each tree, and water is turned in to saturate the soil. When the ground has become soft the tree is worked back and forth to loosen the roots and is then pushed over on its side. The branches are brought together and fastened with a cord, and burlap covered with earth is put over them.

Thus the trees lie snug until spring, when the covering is gradually loosened and finally removed, and they are raised and propped up.—Rocky Mountain News.

But She Hadn't.

"What's the matter, old chap? You look as if you hadn't had a wink of sleep all night."

"I haven't. You see, my wife threatened never to speak to me again if I didn't come home last night before 10 o'clock, and I didn't."

"I see. You're finding out the loneliness of solitude because she kept her word, eh?"

"Not by a jugful. I wish she had."—Exchange.

"Yes, and so does father," replied the young woman.—Buffalo Express.

Economy Hints

A penny saved is a penny earned.—Benjamin Franklin.

I HEARD, said a woman recently, an amusing debate between two men. One was the father of three daughters, and the other was the proud possessor of six. The latter contended that it was less expensive for him to travel than it was for the father of three, for the father of six could buy things in quantity. When he went to the hotel he could get special rates, and in Paris he could buy hats and frocks by the half dozen and be sure that each daughter would find among them the hat or gown she wanted.

At any rate, there is economy in buying staple goods and household supplies in large quantities. Whether financial conditions necessitate it or not, it is the duty of every housekeeper to plan and buy judiciously and with the aim of quality and quantity before her always. Canned vegetables are often advertised at a slight reduction when purchased by the dozen. Flour and sugar may be bought in large sacks, and, besides the saving, the sacks will make excellent tea towels. It is wise to purchase bluing, soap, starch and like supplies in bulk. Soap positively improves with age, and other laundry supplies will keep indefinitely.

Economy in the management of household affairs is an important factor in fighting the high cost of living. It matters not whether a man furnishes little or much for his family, if there is a continual leakage in his kitchen the money runs away in spite of his income. It is the husband's duty to bring into the house and the wife's duty to see that nothing goes wrongfully out of it. The husband's interest should be the wife's care. It is not the money earned that makes a man wealthy; it is what he saves from his earnings. The greater part of his success in this respect depends upon the wife, for she can "make or break" him.

THE NEW SKIRTS.

How to Make a Fashionable Autumn Costume.

As a change from the much draped and decorated skirt come the new straight models in two and three tier effects. They keep to the silhouette effect of the earlier tight skirts and are very youthful in their effect.

Sometimes the skirt is in two sections, as was the French model noted in a shop recently, which had a plain straight plaited effect at the top, which reached to the knees and beneath that was crossed in the front and draped.

But many, many of the skirts are very straight in line, with no drapery whatever.

Another Paris idea is to have the skirt perfectly plain, somewhat high waisted and decorated with frills, two or three inches wide. One smart model had three of these frills or ruffles just at the line of the knee, but quite snugly fitting above and below that.

Still another very fetching skirt had three rows of frills at the knees and three at the hem. This was very quaint and picturesque and was composed of soft figured foulard in one of the attractive patterns.

But she is a wise woman who adopts the style that is most becoming—that gives her the best lines, regardless of whether it is the "newest" or not, for never were fashions more varied and broad, and it should be easy for a woman to find something which just suits her.

How to Make Elder Flower Water.

Did you ever use elder flower water? Even if you never have had any yourself, haven't you heard your grandmother tell how popular it was when she was young? The recipe used to be a favorite one, and it is very simple.

Strip from their stalks enough elder flowers to fill a pint measure. Over these pour two quarts of boiling water, and let it infuse for a hour. Pour it into a clean kettle and let it boil gently for a quarter of an hour, then set away to cool. When cold, strain through a piece of fine muslin into bottles and cork them up securely.

How to Freshen Delicate Ribbon.

Save the water in which pared potatoes have been cooked and when tepid carefully wash the ribbons in it. A certain amount of suds will be made, which washes the ribbons free from dirt. They must be carefully rinsed in several waters, dried and ironed between two pieces of muslin while slightly damp. Satin ribbon may be ironed on the satin side and male fresher than when ironed between muslin.

How to Make Traveler's Bag.

About three-quarters of a yard of cretonne, with cord or ribbon for a drawstring, is needed to make it. Make like any ordinary bag, fulled on to a round cardboard piece for the bottom. On the outside have a series of pockets to hold the smaller toilet articles. The inside of the bag may be used for larger articles.

How to Get Bug Out of Ear.

Have some one hold an electric light or candle or even a burning match in front of your ear and the intruding bug will crawl out.

RESULTED IN TIE.

The Mold Loftsmen league of Fore River shipyard held its opening match at the City Square alleys Monday evening. The Menhinicks lost the first, took the second and third strings and team totals were tied at 1141. Maloney with 109 and a three string total of 268 was high man. It was the first night this season for some of the bowlers and their scores were naturally low. The indications are that they will scatter the bunch for big hits before the close of the season. FORE RIVER LEAGUE OPENED

Yard Team and Government Draftsmen Take the Lead

The Fore River league, in its opening on the Coliseum alleys Monday evening, set records for individual single and total rolling.

The Yard team which defeated the Machinist Floor 4 to 0 had a team total of 1340, several of its men passing the century mark and Smith getting a three string total of 300.

Poehler set a record which will stand the greater part of the season, by hitting 118, 126, 119 for a total of 363. His team the Government Draftsmen finished pretty well down last season, but had no trouble in taking four points from the Pipe Fitters Monday evening. Aside from having the high man, they also had the low man. Blake, one of their strongest bowlers was off color and rolled 193 and it is doubtful if anyone will drop below his 59 single this season.

Rich of the Hull Draftsmen only had a total of 195 and a few other weak men gave the Machinist Gallery a 3 to 1 win.

The Blacksmiths beat the Pipe Fitters 3 to 1, their anchor man, Bergfors getting second high single of the evening with 122.

The men rolling over 100 were: Poehler, Tirrell 117, Westland 109, Bergfors 122, Akeroyd 108, Antony 104 Smith 102. Mills of the Yard team had two singles of 100.

FIGHT OVER A KITTEN

It Results In Cambridge Boy Being Stabbed to Death

Cambridge, Mass., Sept. 30.—John Scannell, 17 years of age, was stabbed to death in a fight at the corner of Portland and Bristol streets last night, and the police arrested William Kaminski, charged with the crime.

The fight which led to the stabbing of Scannell is said to have started when five men attempted to take a kitten away from Scannell.

Scannell was sitting on a hydrant at the corner with a kitten in his arms which he had picked up in the street. The men, coming from Boston, attempted to grab the animal from him. Fisticuffs were exchanged and soon a dozen were in the melee. As the combatants swayed about stones were thrown and finally Scannell was stabbed.

FIRST LANCASTER MAN THUS HONORED

Sir Thomas Bowater Elected Lord Mayor of London

London, Sept. 30.—Sir Thomas Van Sittart Bowater was elected lord mayor of the city of London and will assume office on Nov. 9. He is the first Lancastrian to attain to that high position.

Sir Thomas Rawlinson, who was lord mayor of London in 1705-6, is described on the records as "of a Lancastrian family," but this is a doubtful case, and it is safe to say that no previous lord mayor was born in the county of Lancaster.

Bowater is a Manchester man. He was born in 1862 and came to London as a young man to enter business. He is now at the head of a large firm of paper makers, agents and merchants. Every lord mayor must have served as alderman and sheriff.

Boston, Sept. 30.—Immediate action will be taken by the public service commission on the matter of the New Haven fund investigation which assumed proportions of a serious nature when Governor Foss demanded a thorough probe of the expenditure of $337,000 for "other expenses" by the New Haven railroad, as set forth in the road's report to the public service commission.

Chairman Macleod sent a communication to Foss in which he states that "the matter will have the immediate attention of the commission."

Haverhill, Mass., Sept. 30.—Harry F. Lee of North Woburn, who was badly injured in the motorcycle accident at Bradford when his sister, Miss Lillian H. Lee of Brookline, was killed, died at the Haverhill hospital.

Miss Lee was riding in a basket attached to her brother's motorcycle, when the machine collided with an electric car. Miss Lee died within half an hour after the accident. They were related by marriage to former President Roosevelt.

TARIFF BILL IS BEFORE HOUSE

Report of Conferees Is Certain to Be Adopted

MANY CHANGES IN MEASURE

No Agreement on Plan to Tax Cotton Futures—Rates on Articles In General Use Reduced—Heavy Increase In Income Taxes—$18,000,000 Surplus Predicted by Underwood

Washington, Sept. 30.—The long-awaited conference report on the Wilson-Underwood-Simmons tariff bill was formally presented to the house after perfunctory adoption.

The report was agreed to by a strict party vote, none of the minority members signing it.

The report was a bulky document of 12,000 words, accompanied by a statement of 3000 words by House Leader Underwood. The conferees reported disagreement upon only one item, that taxing speculative deals in cotton futures.

That the report will be adopted and the rates recommended by the conferees become those of the new law was a foregone conclusion. The principal changes made in the bill were:

House rates on photographic, surveying, opera glasses and similar instruments, reduced. Cement, asphalt and limestone, placed on the free list.

Pig iron, scrap iron, ferro-manganese, used in making high-priced steel, free listed. Steel products rates generally reduced. House rates on zinc increased.

Postponement of the placing of sugar on the free list was agreed upon.

All duty was removed from cattle, sheep and other food animals, wheat and its products, and eggs. House duties on oats, butter, beets, peas, currants, chocolate and cocoa were cut.

By changing classifications, rates on fancy weaves and novelty cotton cloths were slightly reduced. Cotton yarns were increased. Cheap stockings were reduced. Lace curtains were increased.

Wool rates were generally decreased, including flannels, blankets and cheaper stockings. Duties on higher priced stockings were increased.

The decreased wool schedules are not made effective until Jan. 1, 1914. Raw wool becomes free on Dec. 1, 1913. Silk ribbons, bands and narrow fabrics were increased 40 to 45 percent.

Among the sundries, fur skins, gunpowder and harness were made free of duty.

The following important additions to the free list were made:

Sugar machinery, school text books and unused moving picture films.

Countervailing duties were placed on potatoes, wheat and its products.

The principal changes in the income tax were additional taxes on incomes over $75,000 annually, ranging to 7 percent on "swollen fortunes," and taxing as low as $3000, except up to $4000.

When Underwood introduced the conference report in the house it was agreed to let it lie over until today to begin its consideration.

"The bill is eminently satisfactory as now drafted," said Underwood. "It will yield a surplus revenue next year of $18,000,000."

Underwood predicted that the house will indorse President's Wilson's compromise plan to tax cotton futures. He would not say whether he thought the cotton futures taxing plan would be struck out in the senate and postponed for separate consideration later.

"I did not sign the report," said Senator La Follette, "because I had been given no opportunity to examine its contents, not being admitted to the conferences. I did not take a position of hostility to the bill; I merely refused to vote in the dark."

Senator Penrose, who represented the regular Republicans of the upper house, said he would not know, until he had conferred with his associates, whether they would make any speeches on the report.

Both he and La Follette were inclined to believe the debate would be brief.

"Our refusal to sign the report showed our positions," said Representative Payne.

PERISHES IN FLAMES

Negro Kills Constable and Wounds Sheriff Before He Dies

McBee, S. C., Sept. 30.—J. M. King, a magistrate's constable, was shot and instantly killed, and Sheriff Douglass and Deputy Abbott were wounded by James Davis, a negro desperado, who subsequently perished in the burning ruins of his house near Middendorf.

A posse is searching for Davis' wife, who assisted him in his fight against the officers but who escaped before his house was set on fire.

Davis was wanted for shooting at Leslie Burr near Middendorf.

Mother of Eight a Suicide

Peabody, Mass., Sept. 30.—Mrs. William H. Fuller, 47 years old, wife of a leather worker and mother of eight children, committed suicide by cutting her throat. She had been in poor health for some time and had worried over her children.

"PERSONAL ESCAPADES"

Not Supposed to Come Under the Mann White Slave Law

Washington, Sept. 30.—The decision of Federal Judge Pollock of Kansas that the Mann white slave act was not intended to apply to the "personal escapades of men and women" caused much varied comment here.

It is pointed out by those who believe Pollock is right that Representative Mann, father of the law, did not, as a matter of fact, intend that "personal escapades" should be included in the prosecutions under the law.

Chairman Clayton and Representative Webb of the house judiciary committee agree that the Mann act does not cover personal morals. On the other hand, Representative Esch, a member of the majority of the committee that framed the bill, thinks it does.

When the white slave act was reported to the house Chairman Mann said:

"This legislation does not attempt to regulate the practice of voluntary prostitution, but aims solely to prevent panderers and procurers from procuring thousands of women and girls against their will and desire to enter and continue in such a life."

WOODRUFF IS STRICKEN

Suffers Shock During Speech For Fusionists In New York

New York, Sept. 30.—Timothy L. Woodruff, former lieutenant governor of New York, was stricken last night in Carnegie hall just as he concluded an addfess at the Fusion notification meeting. Physicians announced that he had suffered a stroke of paralysis and said his condition was serious.

As he was speaking Woodruff turned to John P. Mitchel, the Fusionist candidate for mayor, and complained of a pain in his knee. He continued his address, however, but as he concluded it, he reeled and would have fallen to the floor of the stage had not others on the platform supported him.

When Theodore Roosevelt organized the Progressive party, Woodruff left the Republicans and aligned himself with the colonel, subsequently assuming the Progressive leadership in Brooklyn.

RESENT ALLUSION TO WOODEN RIFLES

Unionist Leaders Say Ulster Men Are Well Armed

London, Sept. 30.—Unionist leaders in London declare that the Ulster volunteers, organized to support Sir Edward Carson's provisional government, are well supplied with modern rifles and ammunition, instead of the wooden muskets that John E. Redmond, the Nationalist leader, scornfully referred to in his Cahirciveen speech.

They say many thousands of new rifles are now strategically concealed. Customs officials recently confiscated several large shipments of rifles consigned to Ireland.

The papers are said to be securities of forty-seven bona fide companies and all drawing interest. The man is in a coma and no explanation regarding his wealth can be had.

The defeated rebels are reported fleeing in disorder toward the border, destroying towns and coal mines. American interests are suffering heavily.

Three Red Heads

Each Was Used as a Pawn by Fate

By EDWARD C. ALSTON

One day as I was entering a courtroom I met a lawyer coming out. Something in my appearance attracted his attention. I knew very well what it was, for from childhood I had been used to exciting the attention of all who saw me. It was not I, but a head of hair of a peculiar redness. Words describe only color; they seldom suggest an especial variety of color. Mine was of a variety that few persons had ever seen before. The lawyer stopped me with the words "One moment" and stood looking at me, turning something over in his mind. Presently he said:

"Your name, please."

I gave it.

"Come in here."

He led me into an office and said something to a man at a desk, who filled in a blank and read me a subpoena. I was ordered to be present that afternoon in the courtroom as a witness.

When I appeared I found that I was wanted in a trial for murder. What astonished me was that the accused, who was a very respectable looking man, possessed a head of hair the same color as my own.

I was placed beside him, and a woman who was giving testimony was called upon to say which of the two, myself or the accused, was the man she had seen kill her husband. She looked us both over with a puzzled expression and finally pointed to me.

The incident produced quite a sensation in court and naturally filled me with consternation. The lawyer at once called for the discharge of the prisoner, which was granted. As for me, I was required to prove where I had been at the time of the murder, and I had no difficulty in substantiating the fact that I was not within a thousand miles of where the deed was done.

The only feature about the man whose acquittal I had secured that fixed itself on my memory was his hair. He was between thirty-five and forty, while I was not more than twenty. Being in limbo, he had no opportunity to thank me for having saved him from the gallows, where he would have gone had it not been for the similarity of our hair, but I noticed him looking at me with great interest. I did not live in the place where he had been tried and left it as soon as I had proved an alibi. So I did not see anything more of him.

Twelve years passed, years that had not brought me success. I was thirty-two and had not a cent in the world. Neither had I wife or children or home. I think it was the color of my hair that told against me. On applying for a position the person to whom I went would look at my head and simultaneously reply, "There are no vacancies just now." And wherever I applied I received the same reception. The consequence was that from twenty to thirty-two I was most of the time out of employment.

But the end of this period brought a change. One afternoon just before the closing hours of business I entered a mercantile house and asked to see the head of the concern. A gentleman with coal black hair, in which there was, despite his fifty years, not a single gray strand, sat at a desk in a private office. So great was the contrast between his and my own top adornment that I was sure I would receive a curt refusal and was about to turn away when he lifted his eyes and saw me. His gaze was first fixed on my head, then was directed to my countenance. There was nothing for me to do but approach him and make the usual request.

"I'm hunting a job," I said. "I've been hunting one for months. Indeed, I'm so run down financially that I'm ready to work for a song."

I received no reply for awhile. The man sat staring at me with a strange look in his eyes, and I suspected that he was thinking of something else. Without waiting for his answer I was turning away when he stopped me.

"What can you do?" he asked.

"Any ordinary work."

"Your name?"

I gave it to him, and, taking up a check book, he wrote a check for $50 payable to my order and handed it to me. I looked at it dumfounded.

"I haven't earned anything yet," I stammered.

"You look tired and hungry," was the reply. "Report here tomorrow morning and you shall have a job."

I was so used to attributing my misfortunes to the color of my hair that I now laid my good luck to the same cause. I had an idea that the man's action had something to do with the contrast between the glossiness of his raven locks and the disagreeable redness of mine. Probably his had brought him good fortune as mine had brought me misfortune and made him sorry for me. At any rate, this was the only interpretation I could put upon it.

I found it very easy to cash his check and spent a part of it in buying a good dinner. The next morning I reported myself to Mr. Marston—such was his name—and after a brief conversation, during which he questioned me with a view to learning what line of work I would prefer, he said that perhaps I had better try several different departments successively in order to learn for which I was best adapted.

My advancement with the Marston company was something extraordinary. I had not been with the concern a month before I was placed in charge of a department. There were employees who represented various holdings of the stock of the company who, seeing me jumped from one position to a better one, conspired against me. But with all their machinations they found it impossible to budge me. Among other things they accused me of being the cause of the loss of one of the best customers of the concern. The very next day I received an advance in salary of a thousand dollars a year.

Though there was no satisfactory explanation of all this, I knew that Mr. Marston, who owned six-tenths of the stock of the company, was at the bottom of it. I was a hard and efficient worker, but there were other employees who worked as hard and as efficiently as I. The matter was more a mystery to me than to the others, for employees of a concern managed by one man power are used to seeing that man take very sudden and inexplicable fancies among those who serve him. While I was filled with wonder, my fellow workmen were simply playing an ordinary game to pull me down and build up themselves.

I had not been with the concern long when Mr. Marston asked me to dine at his house. It was evident the moment I appeared at his home that I was an object of great interest. Mrs. Marston's grasp of the hand, the intensity of her gaze at receiving me, would have astonished me had it not been that I had received so many surprises already. The children all gave evidence of the same interest. I was treated as affectionately as if I had been some dear relative. When I took my leave I was urged to make their home my home, coming and going without ceremony.

I became sufficiently friendly with one of the heads of departments to ask him one day what he considered the cause of Mr. Marston's and his family's kindly treatment of me. He said that Mr. Marston was a very singular man. He had been accustomed to rewarding the employees of the concern for faithful and valuable service suddenly and with no reference to what the reward was given for. It seemed to be a fancy with him, and no one ever questioned or discussed anything he did. This gave no inkling of the reason for my preferential treatment, for it had begun before I had had a chance to earn it.

In two years I was made vice president of the company, and Mr. Marston, who was getting tired of the business, began to throw a great deal of the responsibility he had theretofore taken to himself upon me. I must have developed a certain amount of business capacity or I would not have been able to bear this burden for any considerable period. It was about this time that I married, and Mr. Marston gave me a house. At the time of this gift I led the way for him to tell me why he had so favored me, but he did not avail himself of it. He turned away with a grunt, saying:

"We can't avoid fate, which is much more liable to strike than to coddle us. In the first case it does no good to grumble, and in the second it does no good to wonder. In either event we must accept what she has in store for us."

The secret came out in time. Mr. Marston was taken ill and sent for me to come to see him. I went and, when ushered into the bedroom where he lay, stood transfixed with astonishment. He had been ill two months, during which period I had not seen him. His hair had grown and for about an inch from his scalp was red and the same shade of red as my own, the rest being black. It was evident that he had been accustomed to dye it and during his illness had ceased to do so.

"It is time," he said to me, "that I let you know the reason why I have helped you. It is because some twenty years ago I would have suffered the death of a felon had it not been for you. A third person, who also had red hair like yours and mine, committed a murder. I would have been identified as the murderer had it not been for your opportune appearance with the same or a like shade of hair as the other two. You deserve no credit for having saved me from an ignoble death, but it has given me no end of pleasure and comfort to reward you as the unintentional cause of my escape. I have done it selfishly and for my own satisfaction, not yours.

"I have sent for you to tell you this and to say to you that I shall not again return to the management of the business. Fortunately for us both, you have shown yourself capable of managing a large business like that of the Marston company. I have decided to give you one-twentieth of my holdings of the capital stock of the company, for I think that the manager of a business should be interested in that business with its shareholders, and, with the holdings of my family, you will be able to keep the control. At the election which comes off next month you will be made president. I have no doubt the interests of all concerned will be well served so long as you hold the office."

Why Mr. Marston so long kept from me the cause of his preference for me he did not tell me, but I can see advantages in it. If I did not show myself worthy it would be easier for him to drop me out of the business or leave me among the lower grades of employees. But, as has been said, he was an odd man and had an odd way of doing things.

THE ISLAND OF THE STAIRS

Being a True Account of Certain Strange and Wonderful Adventures of Master John Hampdon, Seaman, and Mistress Lucy Wilberforce, Gentlewoman, In the Great South Seas.

showed some signs of human kindness.

At that point I intervened. I could bear no more. When they spoke so slightingly of my mistress it was more than I could stand. I burst out of the brush and stood before them—mad, enraged all through. I will admit that I lacked the composure and breeding of these precious two. They started back at my sudden appearance, from which he of the slow speech speedily recovered.

"Now, who may you be, and what may you want?" he said.

"Who I am matters nothing," said I, "but what I want matters a great deal."

"Ah! And what is it that you want that matters so?"

"In the first place that sword."

"This?" said the man, holding Sir Geoffrey's handsome weapon up lightly by the blade.

"That," said I.

I am accustomed to move quickly as well as to think quickly, and before he knew it I had it by the hilt, and but that he released the blade instantly I would have cut his hand as I withdrew it. He swung round and clapped his hand on his own sword, a fierce oath breaking from his lips, his face black as thunder.

"Don't draw that little spit," I said, "or I will be under the necessity of breaking your back."

I towered above both of them, and I have no doubt that I could have made good my boast. The man had the courage of his race and station. He faced me undaunted, his hand on his sword hilt.

"Would you rob me of mine own?" he asked calmly.

"I might do so, and with justice," I replied. "You had no hesitation in robbing the living or the dead."

"Zounds!" cried the first man. "It was in fair play; we risked each what we had, and Sir Geoffrey lost."

"Yes; I see," I replied. "Having paid with everything else, he had to throw away his life. I heard what you said. You wonder how Mistress Wilberforce is to learn the situation. You wonder who is to tell her. I will."

"That is good; well thought of," said the drawler with amazing assurance. "I could not have wished it better. You are doubtless some servant of the house"—

"I am no man's servant," I interrupted in some heat.

"Somebody born on the place who probably cherishes a yokel's humble admiration for the lady of the manor."

I flushed like a girl at this. I never was good at the dissimulation that goes on in polite society.

"Tell her, my man, tell her," he cried, "tell her that she is a beggar and her father a suicide and that I have all her property without her. She can go to your arms. She is not meet for the Duke of Arcester."

So this was Arcester! I had heard of him, as I had of Luftdon, two of the most debauched, unprincipled rakes, idlers, fortune hunters, gamblers, men about town, in all England. I stepped closer to him and struck him with the palm of my hand. His sword was out on the moment, but before he could make a pass I wrenched it from him, broke the blade over my knee and hurled the two pieces into the coppice.

"I can match you with swords," said I. "I have fought with men, not popinjays in my day all over the world, and I know the use of the weapon, but I would not demean myself, being an honest man though no gentleman, by crossing blades with such a ruffian."

"By God," cried the man, "I will have you flung into the unlit pond. I will clap you in jail. I will"—

"You will do nothing of the sort," said I. "There is no man on the estate who would not take my part against yours, especially when I repeat what you have said about Mistress Lucy."

"And who would believe you?" queried the duke, whose anger was at a frightful height in being thus braved.

"Don't draw that little spit."

and insulted. In his agitation he tore at his neck cloth. "'Twould be your word against mine, and"—

"For the matter of that, my word will not be uncorroborated," I interrupted swiftly.

"What do you mean?"

"This gentleman"—

"By gad," said Lord Luftdon, "you are right to appeal to me and you were right to strike Arcester. I'm sorry for the girl and for Sir Geoffrey and ashamed for my friend."

"Would you turn against me in this?" cried the duke.

"I certainly would."

"God," whispered his grace hotly, fumbling at the empty sheath, "I wish I had my sword!"

"There is Sir Geoffrey's sword," said Lord Luftdon, who did not lack courage, clutching his own blade as he spoke and making as if to draw it.

"No," said I, master of the situation as I meant to be, "there will be no more fighting over the dead body of Sir Geoffrey. You and Lord Luftdon can settle your differences elsewhere."

"On second thought, there will be no further settlement," said Luftdon, regaining his coolness and thrusting back into its scabbard his half drawn blade. "His grace and I are in too many things to make a permanent difference between us possible."

"I thought so," I replied.

"By gad," laughed Luftdon, "I like your spirit, lad! Who are you and what are you?"

"The late gardener's son."

"Do they breed such as you down here in these gardens?"

"As to that I know not, my lord. I am a sailor. I have commanded my own ship and made my own fortune. I come back here between cruises because I am devoted to"—

"The woman!" sneered the duke. And I marveled at the temerity of the man, seeing that I could have choked him to death with one hand.

"Mention her name again," I cried, "and you will lie beside your victim yonder!"

"Right!" said Luftdon approvingly.

"I come back here because I am fond of the old place; it is my home. My people have served the Wilberforces for generations. Their forbears and mine lie together in the churchyard around the hill yonder. You can't understand devotion like that," said I, turning to the duke, "and it is not necessary that you should."

"And indeed what is necessary for me, pray?" he sneered.

"That you leave the place at once."

"Without speech with my lady?"

"Without speech with any one. There is a good inn at the village. I will take it upon myself to see that your servants pack your mails and follow you there at once."

"I will not be ordered about like this!" protested the duke.

"Oh, yes, you will," said Luftdon. "The advice he gives is good. We have nothing more to do here. Don't be a fool, Arcester. You have got everything you wanted in this game, and it is only just that you should pay a little for it. What's your name, my man?"

"Never mind what it is."

"Are you ashamed of it?"

"Hampdon!"

"Hampdon, you may not be a gentleman," said Luftdon, "but by gad you are a man, and here is my hand on it!"

He had played a man's part so I clasped it.

And so they went down the path, leaving me not greatly relishing my triumph, for I had to tell Mistress Lucy all that had happened.

The scarlet of my lady's riding coat as she galloped up the tree covered road attracted my attention. I quickened my pace, and we arrived at the steps of the hall at the same instant. She was alone, for she had evidently chosen to ride unaccompanied.

I stood silent before her with that curious dumbness I generally experience when first entering her presence, while she drew rein sharply. She was a little thing compared to me—indeed, small compared even to the average woman, but in one sense she was the biggest thing I had ever confronted. I was almost afraid of her! I who feared nothing else. What she thought of me was of little moment to her.

It was Mistress Lucy's regular habit to take a morning gallop every day. It was that usual custom that caused her to look so fresh and young and beautiful, that put the color in her cheek and the sparkle in her eye.

She nodded carelessly, yet kindly, to me. It was her habit, that careless kindness. When she was a little girl and I had been a great boy we had played together familiarly, but that was long since over. Then she looked about for a groom. The steps that led to the terrace were deserted. Sir Geoffrey of late had grown slack in the administration of affairs on account of his troubles, and no one was present. Mistress Lucy stared at me, frowning.

LAWS AND CONDUCT.

A very radical contributor to the American Magazine writes in "The Interpretor's House" in part as follows:

"I am right, I think, in affirming that you would live precisely the same life you are living now if there had never been such a thing as a statute existing anywhere in the world. You have no more personal relation to the statutes, they no more affect your conduct or guide your impulses than if you were living in the moon. If they were all wiped off the books to-night you would go on living just as good a life without them as you did with them. Does the law ever consciously influence you, or do you ever think of it in a personal way, from one year's end to another?

"For you the law is practically nonexistent. So it is for me, and so it is for Smith, Jones, Brown, and everybody we are acquainted with all over the United States."

NEWSPAPER ADVERTISING

Why Newspaper Advertising Pays:

1. The newspaper advertisement is not buried—it is accessible.
2. The newspaper advertisement of a commodity continually or daily needed is read by the very people whose continual or daily need the advertiser desires to supply.
3. The newspaper advertisement may be seen thirty times a month—it is not limited to one appearance.

Through the daily newspaper the advertiser can make a local and intimate appeal to his prospective customer in his own community and in his own vernacular.

CANDIDATES FOR COUNCIL

Those to obtain papers Monday night were first of all President Joseph L. Whiton of the City Council. Mr. Whiton took out papers for Republican Councilman from Ward One, thus setting at rest the unfounded rumor circulated in certain quarters that he was to be a candidate for Mayor. Mr. Whiton said Monday night that if nominated and elected, that he should be a candidate for re-election as President of the City Council.

Other papers taken out were:

Councilman Daniel F. Corcoran for Councilman from Ward Four.

Edward A. Poland, councilman from Ward Six.

Carl A. Carlson, Councilman from Ward Six.

Angus Kerr, for School Committee from Ward Three.

Councilman Charles A. Ericson for Councilman from Ward One.

Councilman Herbert G. Beeman took out two sets of papers, one for Councilman from Ward Six, and one for Councilman at large.

As there is still plenty of time for candidates to take out papers there will probably be several candidates for the various offices at the primaries.

TWO INQUESTS.

Two inquests will be conducted by Judge Avery on Friday, one on the death of Natali Angiolini of Old Coach road whose decapitated body was found on the Granite branch railroad, and the other on the death of John Johnson of Abington whose badly mutilated body was found near the Braintree Highlands station by a track walker. Both men are believed to have been killed by trains.

FORESTERS RECEPTION

In Honor of Election of Peter J. Barry to Grand Office

Members of the Foresters of America of Quincy and vicinity tendered a reception Monday evening to Peter J. Barry of Court Roger Wolcott of this city. At the last meeting of the Grand court of Massachusetts Mr. Barry was elected to the executive, his office being that of grand junior beadle.

Forestry was instituted in Quincy on February 10, 1899, Court John Adams, No. 144, being the first court. Mr. Barry's election to the grand executive board records the first time that any Quincy Forester has been so honored.

Clan cGregor hall was filled to overflowing. The visitors included Grand Chief Ranger William Duncan of Warren, Grand Secretary, William Stafford of Lowell, Grand Senior Woodward John Finehan of Lynn and Grand Trustee Ernesto Capuccio of Boston.

Alex. W. Russell of Court John Adams, acted as toastmaster. He also made the presentation speech presenting Mr. Barry with a purse of gold to which Peter Barry feelingly responded.

The speakers included all the Grand Court officers present, also Chief Rangers Otto Gelotte of Court John Ericsson of Quincy and James Curley of Court Monatiquot, Weymouth. Many other members gave songs and stories.

Thorvald Johnsen's orchestra attended to the musical part of the program, and the selections were nicely played and well received.

About two hundred members were present and before adjourning, a rising vote of thanks was tendered to the committees having the reception in charge for the excellent entertainment.

BIG HOUSES AT KINCAIDES

Myer, Sachs & Co. Present "The Haunted House"

Crowded houses every night are now in order at Kincaide's Theatre, and the management is on the hustling line to procure talent of the highest class, totally regardless of the expense incurred to obtain the very best in musical comedy and dramatic entertainers. As manager Wardwell expresses it, the people of Quincy and patrons of his theatre know what they want, and he intends to get it, and has been doing so from the very time of the opening of this house up to the present, and will continue on the same plan, as satisfied patrons are the best advertisements and inducements for the success of any enterprise. Kincaide's Theatre is certainly a tremendous enterprise, not only for the magnificence of the theatre itself, but for the vast amount of money expended for the entertainment of its patrons.

Monday night was the same old story of attendance. More could not be accommodated than were already in attendance at the rise of the curtain.

It is a pleasure to write of Myer, Sachs & Co. with their sketch entitled "The Haunted House." Having a personal acquaintance with Henry Myer and knowing his ability as a comedian of many years experience, his reception and also that of his company was no surprise as his fame is well-known to Quincy's threatre-going public, and the "Haunted House" with Myer, Sachs & Company kept everybody in the big audience in the greatest good humor and applause. All the other acts were good.

The feature picture "The hills of Strife" was of great depth and depicted the hatred of the clans of Scotland, centuries ago. The pictures were of a grand and picturesquely scenic kind, and many words of commendation were expressed by many in attendance on the remarkable nearness to nature.

Everybody has heard of the celebrated Ward & Vokes as entertainers of renown for many years, and will welcome the opportunity to see and hear Harry Vokes with his own company of stars, beginning Thursday, October 2 at this theatre.

WINE CASES CONTINUED

Fine Points of Law Raised by the Defence

The cases of the five Italians who were charged with the unlawful solicitation for the sale of liquor were arraigned in court Monday and given a partial hearing. When court adjourned at 1 o'clock the disposition of the case went over until next week for a finding. Several fine points of law were raised by counsel for the defendants, and it was in order that these might be determined that the case was continued.

POLICE CHALLENGED.

The members of the base ball team of the police department of Philadelphia, Pa., have challenged the Massachusetts Police League to a series of games to be played in their own city and the executive committee of the league are today meeting in Chelsea to take action on the challenge. The winners of the police league this year were the Metropolitan Officers, with Lowell second and Quincy third. If the committee accept the challenge, the team sent to Philadelphia will probably be made up of the best in the league, and Quincy men will probably be in the lineup.

TODAY'S COURT.

It was an unusually quiet day at the district court this morning not a new criminal case of any kind being heard. Quite a number of continued probation cases however were called.

STRUCK BY TRAIN.

Rosaria Medaglia, the bootblack at the Quincy station was struck by a train at Quincy Adams this morning and received a fractured rib and other bruises. He was treated by Dr. W. J. McCausland.

ARGENTINE RIFLE TEAM

Guests This Morning at the Fore River Shipyard

The members of the Argentine rifle team which is in Boston for two days as the guests of the Chamber of Commerce, spent the forenoon at the Fore River shipyard today where they inspected the battleship Rivadavia and later attended luncheon given by the members of the Argentin Commission assigned to the yard.

The party arrived in automobiles and were welcomed by Captain Moneta of the commission who also presided at the luncheon. They are today being conducted by Ex-Mayor James Logan of Worcester and Capt. Stewart Wise of the Governor's staff who is the best marksman in Massachusetts. On the way to the yard they stopped at the Kincaide Furniture store where they met Col. Henry L. Kincaide who has arranged their itinerary. Colonel Kincaide was unable to accompany them to the yard.

They left about 2 o'clock for the Brockton Fair where they are the honored guests of the day, and this evening they will attend the dinner to President Howard Elliott of the New Haven at the Copley Plaza. Special boxes have been reserved and these will be decorated with the flags of Argentine Republic, Buenos Ayres and the United States.

DANCE HALL LICENSES.

The new city ordinance stating that dance halls and such shall not be conducted without a permit from the Mayor is being flagrantly violated in Quincy, and unless the owners and lessees of properties used for such purposes take immediate steps to conform to the ordinance action will be taken to properly enforce the measure.

At the present time Music and Malnati halls are the only ones that have obtained permits.

The ordinance which was passed May 5 became a law when it was published shortly after its passage by the city council. It states that no hall or building shall be used for public hire for entertainments, such as concerts, dancing parties, moving picture shows until the owner or lessee of such hall or building shall have first obtained from the Mayor a license for the same, such license to expire one year from date of issue. The penalty for violation is not less than $10 or more than $20 for each offense.

There is a general impression prevalent that aside from the halls commonly known as public dance halls, the Quincy, Squantum and Wollaston Yacht Clubs will require a license under the ordinance, because dancing parties held in their halls are within the meaning of the ordinance and specifically mentioned.

FIRST CHAPTER TODAY.

IN THE DAILY LEDGER

OF OUR NEW SERIAL

"THE ISLAND OF THE STAIRS."

ON A NEW CLUE.

William B. Watts, ex-chief of the Boston police department, who is investigating the $2500 robbery which took place several weeks ago in Quincy, has announced that a clue furnished in Quincy has started his agency hunting for a man and a woman seen in an automobile in front of the Stetson house about the time the robbery is thought to have occurred.

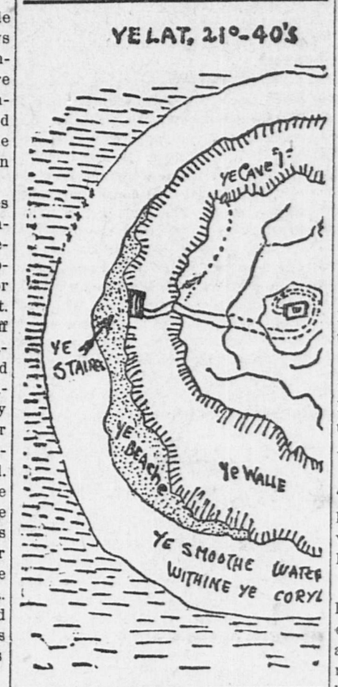

SUDDEN ATTACK.

James Johnson of the Riverside house, and an employee at the Fore River shipyard, was taken with a sudden attack of s acute appendiciti while on a street car bound for Quincy this noon. When the car arrived in City Square he was examined by Dr. W. J. McCausland who said the man's condition was serious and that an immediate operation was necessary. He was taken to the City Hospital in the police ambulance.

☞All club women should secure Wednesday's Ledger which will contain several columns of club news.

Satisfying a Customer Carried to an Extreme

By HOLLAND.

A WOMAN who bought a dress which she found was not just what she wanted went with it to one of the biggest stores in the world and said it did not suit her. She wanted her money back, but explained that she had lost the sales slip. The sum she claimed was given to her.

Two days later she found the sales slip and discovered that she had not bought the dress at the store to which she had taken it, but had bought it at a rival establishment. She went to the store and explained.

"We knew you had not bought the dress here," explained the manager, "but you were palpably dissatisfied with it, and our aim is to satisfy all our customers. If we have impressed on your mind the fact that we are more than fair we are satisfied. We covet nothing more than such a reputation as we are sure you will give us."

Many will think that this was carrying fairness too far. Perhaps it was, but it was done by the greatest retail merchant of this age, one whose name is known wherever the English language is spoken and whose expenditures for advertising run up to a million dollars a year.

Successful advertisers know that satisfied customers are an invaluable asset. You have an advantage in dealing with the liberal advertisers
